M. A. Tirumala Chariar, District Munsif of Kulitalai, in Original Suit No. 212 of 1889.

Suit to redeem a mortgage. The District Munsif passed a decree as prayed, which was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge. This second appeal was preferred by defendant No. 5.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the following judgment.

Ramachandra Rau Saheb and Narasimha Chariar for Appellant.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts of the case are as follows. In October 1877 the first defendant, the father of defendants 2 and 3 and brother of fourth defendant, borrowed a sum of Rs. 200 from Subba Naick, the brother of the two plaintiffs and of sixth defendant, on the security of certain immoveable property of which fifth defendant has since become the purchaser. Subba Naick having died, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit to recover two-thirds of the amount due on the mortgage; as the other claimant, sixth defendant, would not join, they made him sixth defendant and relinquished one-third of the amount due. During the progress of the suit the sixth defendant was, by order of the Court, made third plaintiff, but at the time his right to recover was barred. Two contentions were raised by defendants 1-5: first, that the suit [13] was not maintainable; second, that the debt had been satisfied. Both were overruled and plaintiffs 1 and 2 obtained a decree. The fifth defendant appeals.

By section 22 of the Limitation Act it is provided that "when, after the institution of a suit, a new plaintiff or defendant is substituted or added, the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party." No doubt it has been held by both the High Courts of Bombay and of Calcutta that a suit by several persons, as to some of whom the right to sue is barred, is virtually a suit by the other plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, and that if a suit so framed will not lie, as it will not in the case of a joint cause of action, there can be no other course than to dismiss the claim; but in the cases so decided, Ramsebuk v. Ramlall Koondoo (I.L.R., 6 Cal., 815) and Kalidas Kevaldas v. Nathu Bhagvan (I.L.R., 7 Bom., 219), the suit was brought by only one of the joint contractors, the other joint contractors not being parties to the suit. But in the present case the absence of the sixth defendant is satisfactorily accounted for. He was unwilling to join his brothers in the suit. They had therefore no option but to make him a defendant and to relinquish his share of the claim. There is no authority for holding that section 22 of the Limitation Act applies when the Court of its own motion acts under section 32, Civil Procedure Code, and orders that a defendant be made a plaintiff. All that was held in Krishna v. Mekamperuma (I.L.R., 10 Mad., 44) was that "the procedure of the District Judge in transforming certain defendants into plaintiffs was under the circumstances of the case irregular." No doubt the whole of the mortgage debt is due to the persons claiming under the original mortgage jointly and not severally and a person entitled to a moiety of the mortgage debt cannot demand to be paid that moiety [Bishan Dial v. Manni Ram (I.L.R., 1 All., 297)] but that ruling does not apply to a case like the present, where all the parties are before the Court and the matter can be finally dealt with by the decree in the suit.

On the merits also the second appeal must fail. The Judge has found as a fact that the debt was not discharged and it is not contended that he has misconstrued the evidence.

The second appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

NOTES.

[The transfer of a person from one side to the other as a party does not affect the question of limitation:—(1910) 38 Cal., 342 : 13 C. L. J., 3; (1899) 27 Cal., 540 : 4 C. W. In Starling on Limitation v Edn. (1911) p. 150 it is pointed out that the explanation of this case in (1894) 18 Mad., 189 at 192 "must have been made in consequence of some misreading of" this case.

[15] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 11th March and 23rd April, 1892.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE WILKINSON.

Manasing and others.....(Plaintiffs) Appellants

Succession Certificate Act—Act VII of 1889, ss. 4, 17—Probate issued from Native Court in Cutch—Certificate of Political Agent—Suit in British India.

A suit in British India by the executors of the will of a native of Cutch was dismissed, on its appearing that the plaintiffs were furnished only with probate issued from a Native Court, of which they produced a copy certified by the Political Agent of Cutch, and since stamped in accordance with the Court Fees Act, 1870 :

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree without taking out probate or letters of administration in British India under Act V of 1881 or a certificate under Act VII of 1889, but instead of dismissing the suit, the Court should have allowed time for the plaintiffs to have so completed their title to sue.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of L. Moore, District Judge of South Malabar, in Appeal Suits Nos. 109 to 113, confirming the decrees of A. N. Anantha Rama Ayyar, Additional District Munsif of Calicut, in Original Suits Nos. 54 and 77 of 1889 and Nos. 306, 349 and 350 of 1890.

Suits brought by the plaintiffs claiming to represent the estate of one Singjo Rayasi Sait, deceased, to recover debts due by the defendants to that estate.

The testator was a native of Cutch, but the District Munsif found that he carried on business and left property within the jurisdiction of the District Court of South Malabar.

The plaintiffs were the executors appointed under his will and had obtained probate of the will in the Native Court of Bhuj, and they now produced and filed as Exhibit E a true copy of the probate signed and sealed by the Political Agent at Cutch. The plaintiffs had presented this document to the District Court of South Malabar and paid stamp fees to the amount of Rs. 1,032 upon it. Both the lower Courts held that Exhibit E did not [15] establish the defendants' right to maintain the suits, which they accordingly dismissed.

The plaintiffs preferred these second appeals.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson) and Rama Rau for Appellants.

Bhashyam Ayyangar, Sankaran Nayar and Govinda Menon for Respondents.

* Second Appeals Nos. 1219 to 1223 of 1891.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs (appellants 1 to 5) are the executors of the will of one Singjo. Rayasi, a native of Cutch, and they sue through their agent Purushottaman Amarasi Sett to recover a debt due to the estate of the deceased.

By section 4 of Act VII of 1889 it is enacted that no Court shall pass a decree against a debtor of a deceased person for payment of his debt to a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person, except on the production, by the person so claiming of (i) a probate or letters of administration evidencing the grant to him of administration to the estate of the deceased or (ii) a certificate granted under this Act and having the debt specified therein.

The Lower Courts have found that the plaintiffs are not entitled to sue, inasmuch as they have produced neither probate nor letters of administration, nor a certificate granted under Act VII of 1889.

It is contended by the learned Advocate-General that the executors having obtained probate of the will and letters of administration granted by the Judge of Varisht Court of Bhuj, and being unable to claim probate in India are entitled, on proof of the will and of their status as executors of such will, to recover debts due to the estate of the deceased.

The Court of the District Judge of South Malabar having been, by the notification published at page 253 of the Fort St. George Gazette, dated 30th April 1889, authorized to receive applications for probate or letters of administration under Act V of 1881, it was open to the plaintiffs (appellants) to obtain under section 5 of the Act letters of administration with a copy of the will annexed.

"In regard to the title of executors and administrators," says Story (Conflict of Laws, 8th Edn., § 512) "derived from a grant of administration in the country of the domicile of the deceased, it is to be considered that that title cannot, de jure, [16] extend, as a matter of right, beyond the territory of the government which grants it. It has hence become a general doctrine of the common law that no suit can be brought or maintained by an executor or administrator in his official capacity in the Courts of any other country except that from which he derives his authority to act, in virtue of the probate and letters testamentary or the letters of administration there granted to him. If he desires to maintain a suit in any foreign country, he must obtain new letters of administration and give new security according to the rules of law prescribed in that country before the suit is brought."

The probate or letters of administration referred to in section 4, clause (i) of Act VII of 1889, must be probate or letters of administration granted under Act V of 1881, and as the plaintiffs have not obtained such, they were not entitled to a decree. Then it is argued that the provisions of Act VII of 1889 have been substantially complied with, as a certificate in the form, as nearly as circumstances admit, of the second schedule has been granted to the plaintiffs 1 to 5 by the Political Agent of Cutch, and such certificate has been stamped in accordance with the provisions of the Court Fees Act of 1870.

We think the Lower Courts were right in holding that the copy of probate produced by plaintiffs and marked Exhibit E is not a certificate granted by a British representative in a foreign state within the meaning of section 17³ of Act

*[Sec. 17:—Where a certificate in the form, as nearly as circumstances admit, of the second schedule has been granted to a resident within a Foreign State by the British representative accredited to the State, or where a certificate so granted has been extended in such form by such representative, the certificate shall, when stamped in accordance with the provisions of the Court-fees Act, 1870, with respect to certificates under this Act, have the same effect in British India

as a certificate granted or extended under this Act.]

VII of 1889. "There is nothing to show that the Political Agent when he affixed his signature to the true copy of the probate intended to grant such a certificate as is required by Act VII of 1889. If he had no such intention, but merely affixed his signature with reference to the provisions of section 86* of the Evidence Act, the payment of the Court fees required by the Court Fees Act, 1870, although it proves the bond fides of the plaintiffs, will not validate the grant of letters of administration as a certificate.

We think, therefore, that the Lower Courts were right in holding that plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree, but were wrong in dismissing their suit. They should have allowed time for the plaintiffs to take out probate or letters of administration or to produce such a certificate as is required by the Act.

We set aside the decrees of the Courts below and remand the suit to the Court of First Instance, which will grant the plaintiffs [17] a reasonable time within which to comply with the provisions of Act VII of 1889, failing which the suit must be dismissed.

All questions of costs must stand over until a final decision is given.

premises in default of payment. A second mortgagee, who was not a party to the suit, intervened in execution, alleging that the land was not liable to be attached and sold by reason of his mortgage, and the Court made an order recognising the priority of the decree-holder's lien and giving to the second mortgagee the opportunity of discharging it. No suit was brought to question this order. The first mortgage was not paid off and the mortgage premises were brought to sale. The purchaser, who was the first mortgagee, now sued for possession of the land and his claim was resisted by the second mortgagee :

Held, (1) that the non-joinder of the present defendant in the suit on the mortgage constituted no bar to the present suit ; (2) that the second mortgagee was estopped from now re-asserting his claim.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of C. Gopalan Nayar, Subordinate Judge of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 472 of 1887, reversing the decree of J. A. deRozario, District Munsif of Pynad, in Original Suit No. 178 of 1886.

Suit instituted in April 1886 to recover certain land with mesne profits.

In Original Suit No. 124 of 1875 one Koyotti obtained a decree for the redemption of a kanom on the land now in question. To enable him to effect the redemption, he borrowed Rs. 3,000 from [18] the present plaintiff in 1879, and to secure this amount, executed in his favour a mortgage of the same land, undertaking to hand over possession but possession was not delivered. Koyotti having redeemed the kanom, mortgaged portions of the land as security for various loans to defendant No. 1 and four others, and placed them respectively in possession. The plaintiff brought a suit (Original Suit No. 18 of 1883) against his mortgagor to recover the amount due on the mortgage and obtained a decree for the amount sued for and for sale of the mortgage premises. The subsequent mortgagees were not joined as parties to that suit. They intervened in execution and orders were made recognising the priority of the plaintiff's mortgage, but giving them the opportunity of discharging it. The plaintiff's mortgage, however, remained undischarged, and the land was brought to sale in execution of the decree and purchased by the plaintiff on 11th December 1884. The order made on the intervention of the present first defendant was dated October 1884 and no steps were taken by him to have this order vacated or the sale cancelled.

The District Munsif passed a decree for ejectment as prayed, holding, inter alia, that the claim of defendant No. 1 was barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed this decree on the ground that defendant No. 1 should have been made a party to the suit of 1883, holding that Civil Procedure Code, ss. 278 and 283 were inapplicable to the case on the authority of Deefholts v. Peters (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 631), and that the omission to join him in the suit of 1883 was fatal to the present case on the authority of Venkata v. Kannam (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 184).

The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Bhashyam Ayyangar and Govinda Menon for Appellant.

• Ryru Nambiar for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—There are two questions for determination in this second appeal, first, whether the provisions of sections 278—283 of the Code are applicable to the case, and, secondly, whether the failure of plaintiff to make first defendant, the puisne mortgagee, a party to his Suit No. 18 of 1883 is fatal to his present suit.

The facts are as follows :—In July 1879 plaintiff advanced Rs. 3,000 to one Koyotti to enable him to pay off the kanom and [19] value of improvements which, by the decree in Original Suit No. 124 of 1875, he had been ordered to pay to the tenants in possession. As security Koyotti, executed in favour of the plaintiff a mortgage deed of the land, agreeing to pay interest at 12 per cent. until he put plaintiff in possession. Although Koyotti, in execution of his decree in Original Suit No. 124 of 1875, obtained possession early in 1880, he failed to put plaintiff in possession and mortgaged the lands with possession to first defendant and others. In 1883 plaintiff instituted a suit against Koyotti for the recovery of the Rs. 3,000 with interest from Koyotti personally and by sale of the property in the schedule. He obtained a decree and attached the properties. Thereupon the defendant No. 1 and the other subsequent encumbrancers advanced their claim to hold the land, alleging that they had enabled Koyotti to pay off the amount of the decree in Original Suit No. 124 of 1875 and that they had made improvements.

The Subordinate Judge allowed their claim for improvements, but refused to reserve their mortgage right on the ground that the plaintiff's mortgage being prior in date must prevail. The property was then put up for sale and purchased by plaintiff, who now sues for possession.

The case relied on by the Subordinate Judge, Deefholts v. Peters (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 631), is not in point. There a decree had been obtained under sections 86—88* of the Transfer of Property Act and the Court held that proceedings by way of claim under section 278 only applied in cases of money decrees where the property of the judgment-debtor had been attached. But Original Suit No. 18 of 1883 was a suit brought by plaintiff under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act to recover the money due to him by Koyotti who had failed to deliver the property to him. He obtained a decree for money recoverable either from Koyotti or by sale of the property in schedule. Koyotti having failed to satisfy the decree, plaintiff attached the land and a proclamation of sale was issued. Thereupon defendant No. 1 preferred a claim on the ground that the property was not liable to attachment, as he held it on mortgage. His claim was, after due inquiry, rejected under section 281*, and that order not having been questioned in a regular suit, defendant No. 1 is now estopped from [20] setting up the same claim in the present suit—Velayuthan v. Lakshmana (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 506).

With reference to the second question, we do not think the case of Venkata v. Kannam (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 184) is an authority for holding that because defendant No. 1 was not a party to Original Suit No. 13 of 1883, plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. As he was no party to the decree obtained by the plaintiff, he is not bound by it. But all that he can ask as puisne mortgagee is that he shall be allowed an opportunity of redeeming—Radha Pershad Misser v. Monchur Das (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 317), Naru v. Gulabsing (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 83), and Radhabai v. Shamray Vinayak (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 168). The first defendant's later-created right was subject to the right of the plaintiff, the prior mortgagee. The plaintiff had a right to maintain a suit for the sale of the land to satisfy his mortgage, but having notice of the first defendant's possession as mortgagee, ought to have made him a party to the suit. It was competent to Koyotti to deal with the interest remaining in him after the mortgage to plaintiff, and the result of the transfer to first defendant was that first defendant acquired as against plaintiff the rights of the mortgagor ; in other words, the right of redemption. As defendant No. 1 was no party to plaintiff's suit for sale, he would have been entitled to be afforded an opportunity to redeem had not his right been barred by his having taken no steps to set aside the order passed on his claim petition.

The decree of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed and the appeal remanded for the decision of the appeal on its merits. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court, and the costs in the lower Appellate Court will abide and follow the result.

NOTES.

[The relative rights of the prior-mortgagee-purchaser at an execution sale and the puisne mortgagee who had not been impleaded in the former suit are very exhaustively dealt with in the Full Bench decision of (1911) 21 M. L. J., 213. See also 10 I. C., 83; (1900) 23 All., 1; 25; 13 All., 315; 20 Bom., 390; 10 Bom., 224.]

insolvent, dated December 1891, It appeared that the insolvent had been adjudicated in 1888 and had received her personal discharge in 1890 and had obtained the house in question under a deed of gift in April 1891, and had died intestate in May 1892, having never obtained a discharge under section 59. The mortgagees took their mortgage with notice of the insolvency of the mortgagor. The Official Assignee did not become aware that the insolvent had acquired the property in question till September 1892, when he intervened and claimed the property free from the mortgage :

Held, that the Official Assignee was entitled to the mortgaged property free from the mortgage.

APPEAL against the judgment of COLLINS, C. J., as Commissioner of the Insolvent Court, in Insolvent Case No. 21 of 1888.

Application by the Official Assignee under Insolvent Act, s. 26, that a certain house and the furniture therein be delivered up to him as constituting part of the estate of an insolvent who had died without obtaining a final discharge. The house had been conveyed to the insolvent after she had obtained her personal discharge and was now in the possession of mortgagees under a mortgage from her which comprised also the furniture in the house.

Mr. K. Brown for Official Assignee.

Mr. R. F. Grant for the Mortgagees.

Collins, C. J.—This was an application by Mr. Kenworthy Brown on behalf of the Official Assignee under section 26 of 11 Vic., cap. 21, for an order directing Messrs. Champion and Short, Attorneys of the High Court, to deliver over to the Official Assignee certain property alleged to be the property of one [22] Annie Smith, an insolvent debtor. The facts of the case are as follows :—

Annie Smith, in February 1888, filed a petition in the Insolvent Court and was duly adjudged an insolvent. She received a personal discharge in February 1890, but no final discharge was granted. No assets were realized under the estate by the Official Assignee.

On the 3rd day of April 1891 one McLintock, by a deed of gift, conveyed to Annie Smith a certain house and land situated in the district of Chingleput and called "River Ville". The deed of gift to Annie Smith was duly registered. Annie Smith was also possessed of certain articles of furniture in and about the said house. In December 1891 Annie Smith executed a deed of mortgage to Messrs. Champion and Short, Solicitors of Madras, mortgaging the said house and land and furniture for the sum of Rs. 3,500. The mortgage deed contained a power to sell "the said mortgaged property upon giving to the said mortgagor, her heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, or leaving on the said premises a notice in writing to pay off the said mortgage, and if default shall have been made in such payment for three calendar months after such notice." It is stated that Annie Smith died on the 31st day of May 1892 intestate. The Administrator-General was cited to appear on this application, but took no part in the argument, and makes no claim to the property, and no administration appears to have been taken out to the estate of the said Annie Smith. It appears that Messrs. Champion and Short on the 1st June 1892 took possession of the said house, premises and furniture, and have, since June, let the house for short periods to tenants. There is no evidence before me under what authority they so took possession, or that they have given at any time to the said Annie Smith, her heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, or left on the premises the notice in writing referred to in the mortgage deed.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown contends that as Annie Smith had not received her final discharge from the Insolvent Court, any property that she might have acquired subsequent to her insolvency by section 7 of 11 Vic., cap. 21, vested in the Official Assignee absolutely, and any mortgage or other encumbrance on such property executed by the said Annie Smith was void against the Official Assignee. It is further contended that Messrs. [23] Champion and Short were aware of Annie Smith's insolvency and knew that she had not obtained her final discharge. In support of the former proposition Kerakoose v. Brooks (8 M. I. A., 339) is relied on. Mr. Robert Grant for Messrs. Champion and Short submits that a summary order under section 26 of the Act should not be made, but that the Official Assignee should be referred to a regular suit [Umbica Nundun Biswas in re (I.L.R., 3 Cal. 434), and he contends that after-acquired property of an insolvent may be dealt with by such insolvent until the Official Assignee intervenes, and if such transaction be bond fide and for value, the Official Assignee is bound by such transaction, and he cites Kristocomul Mitter v. Suresh Chunder Deb (I. L. R. 8 Cal., 556), Fatima Bibi v. Fatima Bibi (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 452), Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965), Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262).

I find the following facts to be proved:—that Annie Smith was duly adjudicated an insolvent in 1888 and had not received her final discharge from the Insolvent Court. That on the 3rd day of April 1891 an absolute deed of gift of the property in question was made to Annie Smith. That in December 1891 a mortgage of the property in question was executed by Annie Smith to Messrs. Champion and Short, that such mortgage was executed bond fide and for valuable consideration. That Messrs. Champion and Short were aware that Annie Smith had been adjudicated an insolvent and had reasonable means of knowing that she had not obtained her final discharge from such Court. That the Official Assignee did not intervene in any manner until 8th September 1892.

Upon these facts the question arises what are the respective rights of the Official Assignee and the mortgagees to the property in question. I agree with the observation of GARTH, C.J., in Umbica Nundun Biswas, in re (I.L.R., 3 Cal., 434) that a case in which difficult questions of law and fact are involved, should not be summarily decided by an Insolvency Commissioner under section 26 of the Insolvent Act, but the questions should be decided in a regular suit. It appears to me, however, that in this case the facts are simple, and the question of law is one that an Insolvent Commissioner should decide, more especially as his decision is subject to an appeal to a Division Bench.

[24] Kerakoose v. Brooks (8 M. I. A., 339) is not in point; the only question there decided was that an insolvent's after-acquired property was, under the circumstances of that case, subject to the lien of the person who had advanced to the insolvent money to purchase that property; and the judgment of Lord KINGSDOWN as to the rights of an Official Assignee to after-acquired property of insolvents cannot be said to be exhaustive on the subject, I agree with WILSON, J., that that case is, however, clear authority that the Indian statute, 11 Vic., cap. 21, is to be construed on the same principles as those contained in the various English decisions as to the rights and claims of the Official Assignee to insolvent's after-acquired property—Kristocomul Mitter v. Suresh Chunder Deb (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 556).

The cases reported in the Indian Law Reports on this subject are few, and the only cases referred to at the Bar are decisions of single Judges. In Christocomul Mitter v. Suresh Chunder Deb (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 556) WILSON, J., held that subject to the right and claim of the Official Assignee, and so long as he does not interfere, an insolvent who has not obtained his final discharge has power, with respect to after-acquired property, to do all acts which he could have done before his insolvency, and in Fatima Bibi v. Fatima Bibi (I L. R., 16 Bom. 452) FARRAN, J., does not dissent from the Calcutta case. It will be necessary to examine the English decisions on this question. It has always, since 5 Geo. II, cap. 30, been held that after-acquired property passes to the Assignee in bankruptcy, and that no new assignment was necessary [Kitchen v. Bartsch (7 Est. 58)], yet it has also always been held that after-acquired property continued in the bankrupt until the Assignees interfered to claim it, and a bankrupt could, for valuable consideration, part with his after-acquired property so as to give a good title to his alienee, see Drayton v. Dale (2 B. & C., 293). The case relied on by the counsel for the Official Assignee [Meggy v. Imperial Discount Company (L. R., 3 Q. B. D., 711)] is the decision of a single Judge sitting at nisi prius, and that case in the opinion of Lord Esher, M. R., does not touch the point in question. In Cohen v. Mitchell the Court of Appeal reviewed the principal authorities on the respective rights of an Official Assignee and bankrupt over after-acquired property, and decided that until [25] the Trustee intervenes, all transactions by a bankrupt after his bankruptcy with any person dealing with him bonâ fide and for value in respect of his after-acquired property, whether with or without knowledge of his bankruptcy, are valid against the trustee.

I hold, therefore, that the English decisions are applicable to cases arising under 11 Vic., cap. 21 [see Kerakoose v. Brooks (8 M. I. A., 339)], and I agree with the judgment of the Master of the Rolls and the Lords Justices in Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q.B.D., 262). I, therefore, order that Messrs. Champion and Short do deliver up to the Official Assignee as being part of the estate and effects of the insolvent Annie Smith, upon payment to them of their mortgage debt amounting to Rs. 3,500 and interest to the 8th September 1892 amounting to Rs. 301-12-10 and a further sum of Rs. 37 agreed to be paid by the Official Assignee, the hereditaments and premises and other property mentioned in the mortgage deed of the 17th December 1891, and I do further order that Messrs. Champion and Short pay to the said Official Assignee the sum of Rs. 103-8-0, rents and profits of the said premises received by them up to the 8th September 1892.

I make no order at present as to costs.

The Official Assignee preferred this appeal.

Mr. K. Brown for Appellant.

Mr. R. F. Grant for Respondents.

Best, J.— The question for decision in this appeal is whether the mortgage of a house and land made by an adjudicated insolvent with regard to whose property a vesting order had been passed under section 7 of the Insolvent Act, 11 and 12 Vic., cap. 21, prior to the acquisition of the property by the insolvent, is binding on the Official Assignee so that the latter can only get possession of the property (under section 26 of the Act) on paying to the mortgagees the mortgage amount with interest.

The findings are that one Annie Smith was duly adjudicated an insolvent in 1888 and had not received a final discharge (under section 57 of the Act) up to the time of her death (which is said to have taken place in or about May 1892); that on the 3rd April 1891 she acquired the property in question under an absolute deed of gift; that in December 1891 she mortgaged the [26] same to the respondents; that such mortgage was executed bonâ fide and for valuable consideration; but that the respondents were aware that their mortgager had been adjudicated an insolvent, and had reasonable means of knowing that she had not obtained her final discharge.

The learned Commissioner of the Insolvent Court has, on the above findings, held the mortgage to be valid as against the Official Assignee. He has so held on the authority of the English Court of Appeal in Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262), in which the following proposition was laid down and adopted, viz., "Until the trustee intervenes, all transactions by a bankrupt after his bankruptcy with any person dealing with him bona fide and for value in respect of his after-acquired property, whether with or without knowledge of the bankruptcy, are valid against the trustee." Our attention has, however, been called by appellant's counsel to a more recent English case In re New Land Development Association and Gray (1892) L. R., 2 Ch., 138, in which the Court of Appeal concurred with CHITTY, J., in thinking the proposition laid down in Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262) to be inapplicable to real estate. However this may be, the proposition as laid down in Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262) is admittedly in terms "wider than appears to have been laid down before." See per Lord ESHER, M.R. In fact, in Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965), which is cited in support of the above proposition, it was merely held that the bankrupt "acquires property, and contracts for the assignees, who may, whenever they please, disaffirm his act; but until they do so, his acts are all valid."

As observed by FRY, L. J., in the proposition as laid down in Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262) the word 'intervene' is substituted for the words 'disaffirm his acts' in the rule as stated in Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965), the object of the alteration being admittedly to deprive the trustee who intervenes of the "power retrospectively to disaffirm what has otherwise been validly done by the bankrupt."

The facts of Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B., 262) were as follows:—One Arthur Cohen became bankrupt, and subsequently, and before he obtained his discharge, carried on business in buying and selling agricultural machines, and, to enable him to do so, obtained advances of several sums of money from Hyam Cohen. One [27] Foale seized some of the machines, and the bankrupt brought an action against him for a wrongful conversion of the machines so seized. The bankrupt, having no money with which to carry on the action, assigned the cause of action to Hyam Cohen in consideration of the money already due to him and the further sum necessary to carry on the action. The action resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff. The trustee in bankruptcy of Arthur Cohen then intervened and demanded the money of Foale as part of the property of the bankrupt. Hyam Cohen also claimed the amount under an assignment. Foale consequently interpleaded and paid the money into Court, whereupon the issue was tried between Hyam Cohen as plaintiff, and the trustee as defendant. It was with reference to these circumstances that the Court of Appeal laid down the proposition quoted above "in terms wider than it had been laid down before" in order to preclude the trustee from disaffirming retrospectively what had "otherwise been validly done by the bankrupt."

It was held by the Privy Council in Kerakoose v. Brooks (8 M. I. A., 339) with reference to the property acquired by an insolvent subsequent to his adjudication as an insolvent and prior to his final discharge that the assignee's right under 11 & 12 Vic., cap. 21, is subject to the following two qualifications: (i) property acquired subject to liens and obligations remains subject to those charges and equities even when taken by the assignee; and (ii) if the insolvent carries on trade with the assent of the assignee, the property acquired in such trade will be subject to the charge of the creditors in that trade in priority to the claim of the Official Assignee.

The second of these qualifications requires that the trade shall have been carried on "with the assent of the assignee." It was the want of this assent, I imagine, in Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 252) that necessitated the adoption of the proposition there laid down, the object being to prevent an "otherwise valid" claim being defeated, and as remarked by CHITTY, J., in the more recent case "it is a fair observation to make on all dicta of this kind that they are enunciated with reference to the particular question then before the Court." The reason for the rule as recognized in Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965) is stated by the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas [28] to be that "otherwise there would be no protection to persons dealing with an uncertificated bankrupt; not only would they acquire no title by purchases from him, but payments for such purchases and for all other debts due to the uncertificated bankrupt would be invalidated."

The question for decision in Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965) was merely as to the right of the bankrupt to maintain a suit as indorsee of a bill of exchange, and all that was then decided was that he had such right "except as against the assignees"; and this is all that was decided in Fowler v. Down (1 Bos. & Pul., 44) and the other cases cited in Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965). So also in Drayton v. Dale referred to by the learned Commissioner and in Fatima Bibi v. Fatima Bibi (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 452). As remarked by KAY, L. J., in the recent case of In re New Land Development Association and Gray (1892) L. R., 2 Ch., 138—the rule was only applied in Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262) for the purpose of protecting persons who had been "trading with the bankrupt and dealing with personal estate."

The only case brought to our notice in which the rule has been applied to real estate is Kristocomul Mitter v. Suresh Chunder Deb (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 556), in which WILSON, J., upheld as against a subsequent purchaser from the Official Assignee the claim of a prior purchaser from an undischarged insolvent, of the latter's share in family property which presumably was or at least included real property. This decision purports to proceed on the authority of Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965), but, as already observed, the only question in that case was the right of the bankrupt to maintain a suit in the absence of the trustee. It was, however, expressly held in Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965) that all acquisitions and contracts made by an adjudicated bankrupt were made for the trustee and subject to disaffirmance by the trustee.

On a consideration of the various cases that we have been referred to, the conclusion at which I arrive is that in order to be binding on the Official Assignee a charge on after-acquired property created by an adjudicated insolvent, who has not obtained his final discharge, must come within the scope of one or other of the two qualifications stated in Kerakoose v. Brooks (8 M. I. A., 339) and that [29] Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262) is merely authority for the proposition that when an insolvent is allowed to carry on trade or other business, the Official Assignee's assent thereto [required under the second of the two qualifications mentioned in Kerakoose v. Brooks (8 M. I. A., 339)] will be presumed up to such time as he may intervene.

As the mortgage to the respondents in the present case does not come within either of these qualifications, I would allow this appeal and set aside so much of the order of the learned Commissioner of the Insolvent Court as directs the Official Assignee to pay to the respondents the mortgage amount and interest thereon.

Respondents must pay the Official Assignee's costs both in this Court and in the Court below.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I come to the same conclusion, though not upon the same ground. The facts of the case are shortly these :—In February 1888 Annie Smith was declared an insolvent and a vesting order was made under 11 and 12 Vic., cap. 21, s. 7. In April 1891 she obtained under a deed of gift a house and land called River Ville and she was also possessed of certain articles of furniture in and about the house. In December 1891 she mortgaged the said property to Messrs. Champion and Short for a sum of Rs. 3,500 with a power of sale. In May 1892 Annie Smith died intestate, and she had never obtained her final discharge under section 59 of the Insolvency Act. In June 1892 Messrs. Champion and Short took possession of the house, land and furniture, and they have since let the house from time to time to tenants for short periods. The learned Commissioner has found that the mortgagees were aware that Annie Smith had been adjudicated an insolvent and had reasonable means of knowing that she had not obtained her final discharge. The Official Assignee stated in his petition that on the 7th September 1892 he saw a notice in the Madras Times whereby the house in question was advertised for sale as the property of the late Mrs. Annie Smith. On the 8th September 1892 he intervened and claimed the property free of the mortgage. The question arising for determination upon these facts was whether the mortgage was binding on the Official Assignee, and the learned Commissioner determined it in the affirmative, the ground of decision [30] being that the decisions on a similar question arising under the English Bankruptcy Acts are applicable to cases arising under 11 and 12 Vic., cap. 21, that according to those decisions the after-acquired property continued in the insolvent until the Assignee interfered to claim it, and that meanwhile the insolvent could, for valuable consideration, part with it so as to give a good title to his alienee. Hence this appeal.

For the appellant it is contended (i) that the English decisions relied on by the learned Commissioner do not apply to cases arising under the Indian Insolvency Act; (ii) that assuming that they are applicable, the decision under appeal is at variance with the case of re New Land Development Association and Gray (1892, L. R. 2 Ch. 138), and (iii) that according to the true construction of 11 and 12 Vic., cap. 21, s. 7, and to the decision of the Privy Council in Kerakoose v. Brooks (8 M. I. A. 339) property acquired by the insolvent subsequent to the vesting order and prior to his final discharge vests at once in the Official Assignee, whether he intervenes or not, and that it is not competent to the insolvent to mortgage or otherwise alienate it.

The main question for decision is, what is the true interpretation of 11 & 12 Vic., cap. 21, s. 7, as regards the mode of vesting in the Official Assignee of property acquired by the insolvent subsequent to the vesting order and prior to his final discharge. The language of the section throws no light on the point beyond the fact that the word 'vest' is used both with reference to property already in existence and to after-acquired property. There is no doubt that property which is in existence when the insolvent files his petition vests at once in the Official Assignee, and no one but the Assignee is since competent to alienate it. In the case of subsequently-acquired property however there is this peculiarity. The insolvent being the acquirer, it must vest in him at least for an instant and then vest in the Official Assignee. The exact point for consideration is, as stated by the learned Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, this :—"Is it the intention of the Legislature that such property should vest in the insolvent as acquirer but for an instant and then vest in the Official Assignee, or is it the intention that the Official Assignee should have the beneficial interest and the insolvent should acquire such property for his benefit in the capacity of an agent [31] so as to be competent to deal with it subject to the intervention of the Official Assignee?"

The latter is declared to be the real intention of the Legislature in cases decided under the English Bankruptcy Acts. Herbert v. Sayer (Q. B. 965) and Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262) are the leading cases on the subject. The reasons for adopting the latter intention as the real intention are lucidly explained in the first-mentioned case by the learned Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas in the following terms:—"The effect of the statutory enactments may be either to transfer immediately such property or contracts from the bankrupt to the assignees, vesting the property in the bankrupt for an instant only, or to give the assignees the beneficial interest and to make the bankrupt acquire property or contract for their benefit only in the nature of an agent. The cases accord with the latter construction of the statute, and it is most consistent with convenience; for, otherwise, there would be no protection to persons dealing with an uncertificated bankrupt. Not only would they acquire no title by purchases from him, but payments for such purchases, and for all debts due to the uncertificated bankrupt would be invalidated. The Legislature, by several statutes, have protected all such payments by and to, and all dealings and transactions with, the bankrupt bona fide made or entered into without notice of the act of bankruptcy before the fiat; but there is no provision by the statute law for such payments, dealings or transactions, after the fiat; and the only way by which they can be rendered valid and great confusion, inconvenience and hardship prevented, is by adopting the latter construction, and holding that the bankrupt acquires the property, and contracts, for the assignees, who may, whenever they please, disaffirm his act, but until they do so, his acts are all valid." It is thus clear that the English cases deal with the question as one of reasonable construction, and it appears to me that the whole of the reasoning is applicable under the Indian Insolvency Act. I see no substantial difference on the point now before us between the Indian Insolvency Act and the English Bankruptcy Acts, viz., 6 Geo. IV, cap. 16, ss. 63 and 127, 1 & 2 Will. IV, cap. 56, s. 25, and the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, ss. 44, 58 and 118. The provisions as to vesting are similar. [32] I agree with the learned Chief Justice that they are applicable under 11 and 12 Vic., cap. 21, especially as the question is one of reasonable construction to be put on similar provisions. I also agree in the opinion that the decision of the Privy Council in Kerakoose v. Brooks (8 M. I. A., 339) is not an authority against their applicability, and that, on the other hand, it is a clear authority in favour of their applicability. In that case, the uncertificated insolvent borrowed money for the purpose of purchasing goods to carry on a business; and in order to secure the advances, gave a bond and agreed in writing to execute a mortgage of the goods so purchased to the lender to secure repayment. He afterwards executed an assignment of the goods for that purpose. The business was carried on with the knowledge of, and without any objection by, the Official Assignee. The lender had never possession of the goods assigned to him by the insolvent and the same remained in possession of the insolvent until his death. The Privy Council held that the insolvent's after-acquired property was subject to the lien of the lender and that such lien was paramount to any claim of the Official Assignee under the insolvency. In their judgment the Lords of the Privy Council said: "The Assignee's right to the subsequently-acquired property is subject to two qualifications. In the first place, if the insolvent has acquired property subject to liens and obligations, then any property taken by the assignee under that state of things is taken subject to those charges and equities which affect the property in the hands of the insolvent. The second qualification is this, that if the insolvent carries on trade at a subsequent period with the assent of the assignee of the estate under the Act, in the first instance the property which is acquired in the subsequent trade will be subject in equity to the charge of the creditors in that trade, in priority to the claim of the assignee under the first insolvency." These qualifications are enunciated with reference to the particular facts of the case, and I agree in the opinion of the learned Commissioner that they are not exhaustive.

The substantial question is whether according to the recent case of the New Land Development Association and Gray (1892, L. R., 2 Ch. D., 138), the rule laid down in Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965) and Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262) [33] is applicable to immoveable or real property and is not limited in its scope to moveable property.

This case was decided in April 1892 and does not appear to have been cited before the learned Commissioner. The facts of that case were that a testatrix devised her real estate to her nephews, William Shurley and Joseph Shurley, as tenants in common. The nephews purported to convey the estate to a land company, who, in May 1891, entered into a contract for its sale to a purchaser. The purchaser discovered before completion that in 1888 William Shurley had been adjudicated bankrupt and that he was still undischarged. The trustee in bankruptcy then intervened and claimed to be entitled to a moiety of the estate. The question for decision was whether an undischarged bankrupt could, even before the intervention of the trustee in bankruptcy, convey real estate acquired after the bankruptcy, to a bona fide purchaser for value, so as to give a good title to the purchaser as against the trustee. Whether the rule laid down in Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262) was not limited to goods was considered by Chitty, J., and by the Lords Justices on appeal. They all held that it was so limited. CHITTY, J., referring to the argument that after-acquired real estate vests in the bankrupt and remains vested in him till the trustee intervenes and claims it, said:—"I see no justification in the statute or the authorities for holding that the legal estate will first vest in the bankrupt and then shift to the trustee when he intervenes."

On appeal the Lords Justices expressed the same opinion. Lord Justice KAY considered that "where a bankrupt is carrying on business and dealing with personal property, such dealing will to some extent consume it. And if the trustee looks on and does not intervene, then the consumption of the property goes on as a consequence of the carrying on of the business by the bankrupt." He thought that it had nothing to do with real estate. Lord Justice LINDLEY said, "there is some sense in the doctrine as to personal estate. But I have never heard it suggested by anybody that it had the slightest application to real estate which passes by conveyance and not by delivery." This case clearly limits the rule in Herbert v. Sayer (5 Q. B., 965) and Cohen v. Mitchell (L. R., 25 Q. B. D., 262) to personal estate. Though there was also another ground on which [34] the decision was supported, I feel myself bound to adopt the proposition laid down in that case by the Court of Appeal, even assuming that it was in the nature of a dictum.

The property in the case before us being what is known to English law as real property, I concur in the order proposed by my learned colleague.

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND

Koolappa Naik.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Koolappa Naik and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.¹

Limitation—Adverse possession—Hindu Law.

The holder of an impartible zamindari died in 1822, leaving two widows and a daughter. The widows entered on the estate and having successfully resisted a suit for ejectment brought by the rightful heir (the present plaintiff's great-grandfather) in 1824, they and the survivor of them retained possession till 1870, when the last surviving widow died, and the daughter entered. She or the Court of Wards, on her behalf, retained possession till her death, in 1882, when the first defendant came in as the nearest then surviving sapinda of the last male holder. The plaintiff, who was the son of the elder undivided brother (deceased) of the first defendant, now sued in 1891 to recover the zamindari from him :

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation.

APPEAL against the decree of T. Narayanasami Ayyar, Subordinate Judge of Madura West, in Original Suit No. 26 of 1891.

Suit for possession of an estate.

The facts of this case are stated sufficiently for the purposes of this report in the judgment of the High Court.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Rajagopala Ayyar for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

Judgment.—The question in this appeal is whether the suit is barred by limitation. Vijayagopal, the last undisputed male [33] holder of the impartible zamindari of Sundayur, died in 1822, leaving no sons, but only two widows and a daughter. His rightful successor in the enjoyment of the zamindari was Kuppayasami Koolappa and, in 1824, he brought a suit against the two widows Ettakkammal and Krishnammal, but without success, and so the zamindari remained in the possession of the widows and the survivor of them till the death of Ettakkammal in 1870. The plaintiff is the great grandson of Kuppayasami and, in 1891, claims in virtue of the same right as was asserted by him in 1824. His suit having been dismissed, it is now contended in appeal that the suit is not barred by limitation, and that, although otherwise it would so be barred, the circumstances under which the defendants came into possession give the plaintiff a right of action against them. This latter point may be disposed of first. It is said that the defendant who belongs to the same branch of the family with the plaintiff, being his father's younger brother, recovered the zamindari after the death of Vijayagopal's daughter in 1882 as a member of the undivided family and for the family. Having recovered it on this footing, he is bound, it is contended, to deliver it up to the plaintiff, who, as the son of an elder brother of the defendant, has the preferential claim. It is true that if the zamindari had descended in the ordinary course and had not been usurped by the widows of Vijayagopal, the plaintiff is the member of the family who would be entitled to hold it; but assuming that the law of limitation does not allow the plaintiff to put forward this claim on its own merits, his Vakil relies on the alleged conduct of the defendant. The claim does not appear to have been put on this footing in the plaint, and there is, in fact, no foundation for it. The defendant's claim to the zamindari was based on the fact of his being the nearest sapinda entitled after the death of Ettakkammal's step-daughter, and there is no evidence to show that he assumed possession as trustee for the family or otherwise than in his title of heir.

Apart from this contention, it is argued that the suit is not barred by limitation, because in 1870, when Ettakkammal died, the right of the other branch was not barred, and since that date the zamindari has not been held adversely by any one person or by persons claiming in succession to each other for more than twelve years. The fact is that since Ettakkammal's death the zamindari has been in the enjoyment, first, of her step-daughter [36] till 1882 and subsequently of the defendant. The respondents' Vakil relies on the case of Vijayasami v. Periasami (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 242) and contends that the suit is barred by limitation, time having begun to run in 1822, and nothing having since occurred to revive the plaintiff's right of suit. In the case cited the Zamindar Gouri Vallabba Tevar died in 1829, and thereupon, according to the plaintiff's case, his father ought to have succeeded. The latter's claim was, however, ignored, there was litigation between other claimants in which Kathama Nachiar, a daughter of the late zamindar, was victorious; she was in possession till her death in 1877, and since that date, the defendant, the son of her elder sister. It was held that the suit brought against him in 1881 was barred by limitation, because time began to run in 1829 and continued to run without interruption as against the descendants of the zamindar by his alleged wife the plaintiff's mother. An attempt is made to distinguish this case from the present by pointing out that, whereas Kathama Nachiar died in 1877 after the Limitation Act of 1871 came into force, Ettakkammal died in 1870 before the Legislature had laid down, in express terms, the rule which is contained in section 29* of the Act of 1871. The judgment in the reported case does not, however, rest on this circumstance and does not refer to section 29 or the principle embodied in it. Nor do we understand how the supposed alteration of the law in 1871 could affect the rights of the parties either in this case or in the reported case. The difficulty of the plaintiff's position is to explain how, when time once began to run against his lineal ancestors and their right of suit had become barred, it can be said that time has ceased to run or the right of suit been revived. No question of the plaintiff's right to be restored to his original title arises, because he has not succeeded in recovering possession. It is hardly necessary, therefore, for us to express an opinion with regard to the view held in Bengal with reference to the question whether under the Act of 1859 the right was extinguished by an adverse possession exceeding twelve years, see Gossain Dass Chunder v. Issur Chunder Nath (I. L. R., 3 Cal. 224), Gunga Gobind Mundul v. The Collector of The Twenty-four Pergunnahs (11 M. I. A. 345) and cases cited in Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant Deshpande (I.L.R., 9 Bom. 228). In our opinion, the case cannot be distinguished from Vijayasami v. Periasami (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 242). The plaintiff's land or hereditary office.

claim [37] cannot, like the defendants' title, be reconciled with the lawfulness of Ettakkammal's possession. Her holding of the zamindari was adverse to the plaintiff's ancestor, and from the date of its commencement when his cause of action arose, time began to run, and it has continued to run without intermission. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 1167 of 1892, modifying the decree of O. V. Nanjundayyar, District Munsif of Masulipatam, in Original Suit No. 19 of 1890.

The facts of the case were stated in paragraphs 2 and 3 of the District Judge's judgment as follows :—

"This is a suit by four Hindu residents of Masulipatam town against the Superintendent of Police of the Kistna district, who interfered with a procession in the streets of Masulipatam on October 3rd, 1889. Plaintiffs ask for a declaration that they may pass in procession through the streets 'with dress, music, symbols and other accompaniments,' and they claim Rs. 100 as damages [38] for the interference. The District Munsif gave plaintiffs a declaratory decree, but refused to give any damages. The District Munsif, at the same time, ordered the Superintendent of Police to bear all the costs of the suit. Against this decision the defendant appeals, and an objection memorandum is lodged on behalf of respondents claiming the damages that were asked for in the suit and asking that the declaratory decree be made more definite.

"The facts in this case are few and simple. Certain Muhammadans of Masulipatam informed the Superintendent of Police that there was a bad feeling among some Muhammadans in the town, because of an idea that the Hindus in the procession at the Hindu festival caricatured Muhammadan emblems: an anonymous petition to the same effect was sent to the District Magistrate, and he sent this petition to the Superintendent of Police with the following note :—'I suppose you are keeping your eye on the Dasara performances to prevent any differences with the Muhammadans, vide the enclosed.' On this paper the Superintendent wrote an order to the Town Inspector, directing him to give notice by beat of tom-tom that persons were not to imitate Muhammadan disguises without a licence from the Superintendent. On the same day a Hindu procession was stopped in the streets by the Town Inspector and Station Officer. They sent word to the Superintendent, and he at once came to the spot. The Town Magistrate, a Brahman, was also present. The Superintendent inspected the Sivamandiram and decided that it did not resemble a Muhammadan taboot and, therefore, let it pass. He caused a flag to be unrolled on its staff, so that it should no longer resemble a Muhammadan 'pir.' He took possession of two banners which bore on one side the device of the crescent and the star. He turned out of the procession some singers who were clad in tinsel caps and robes. He then permitted the procession to proceed. On the following day he refused to reconsider his decision and to grant licences to plaintiffs except on conditions."

The District Judge held that the defendant had acted bona fide.

The District Munsif passed a decree as follows :—

"It is decreed that the plaintiffs' right to celebrate in the public streets of Bandar town the festivals with jundas (flags) and Ramabajana as it was done in the year 1889 is established, [39] that the said festival be allowed to be celebrated on proper occasions and in a proper manner without causing obstruction either to the worship of people of other religions or to the festivals relating to them and that the defendant or his subordinates do refrain from causing obstruction at any time except when there may be breach of peace."

The District Judge modified this decree by striking out the words which are printed above in italics.

The plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar and Sriramulu Sastri for Appellants.

The Acting Government Pleader (Subramanya Ayyar) for Respondent.

Collins, C. J.—This was a suit brought by four Hindus against a Police Superintendent of the Kistna district, asking for a declaration that they have a right to celebrate a festival in the public streets of Masulipatam with such music, garments, ensigns, etc., as the plaintiffs may like, for an injunction restraining defendant and his subordinates from interfering with such procession and for damages for taking possession of certain banners and removing certain caps, &c., from some of the processionists. Both the lower Courts agreed in granting the plaintiffs a declaration that they had a right to celebrate in the public streets a certain festival, but an injunction was refused and no damages awarded for taking possession of the banners.

The only point that was argued in second appeal was that the plaintiffs were entitled in all events to nominal damages for the wrongful act of the Police Superintendent in taking away the plaintiffs' banners. It was not disputed that the banners were taken away by the orders of the defendant, but it was contended that the defendant acted in good faith, that he was justified in so doing, as he believed these particular banners were obnoxious to the Muhammadans, and, if carried, would produce a breach of the peace.

It is not disputed by the Government Pleader that the plaintiffs had a right to pass in procession through the streets of Masulipatam, and the only question that arises is, was the defendant justified in taking possession of the banners which undoubtedly he removed from the procession. I carefully guard myself in this judgment by stating that it is the powers of the Police in this district alone that I am dealing with, and both Mr. Patta-[40] bhirama Ayyar, the vakil for the appellants, and the Government Pleader admit that the powers of the Police over processions are defined by the Madras Police Act XXIV of 1859. Section 49 of that Act defines the powers of the Police—they may direct the conduct of all assemblies and processions in the public streets, prescribe the routes by which and the time at which such processions may pass, keep order in the public streets and prevent obstructions; they may also regulate the use of music in the streets on the occasion of native festivals and may direct crowds of twelve or more persons to disperse when they have reason to apprehend any breach of the peace. The powers thus given to the Police are large and set out with particularity, but I fail to see that the Superintendent of Police has any power to remove from the procession any banners belonging to the processionists and to order those banners to be taken to the Police station. I am of opinion, therefore, that the respondent, in taking possession of the banners committed in law a tortious act, but under the circumstances I give only nominal damages, viz., one rupee: in fact, only nominal damages have been asked for. The decree must be modified accordingly, and in other respects I would dismiss the appeal.

It is also alleged that the defendant turned out of the procession certain persons wearing tinsel caps and robes. Whatever right of action these persons may have against the defendant, it is impossible to say that the plaintiffs are entitled to damages. The action was really brought for a declaration and also an injunction against the defendant. The plaintiffs have succeeded in obtaining a declaration against the Superintendent of Police, and no question was raised before us whether such a declaration was a proper one or whether the four plaintiffs could jointly bring such an action. The District Munsif has found that the plaintiffs preferred a seriously false allegation that their procession was entirely stopped, and taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case, I would direct that each party bear his and their own costs throughout.

Shephard, J.—As is observed by the District Judge, this case is really a simple one. It has been unnecessarily complicated by the nature of the relief asked for and by the defence set up by the defendant. The simple question is whether the plaintiffs have suffered any wrong at the hands of the defendant, and, if so to [41] what damages they are entitled. That is the only question that ought to have been tried, for the case is not one in which a declaration or injunction is either necessary or proper. On the contrary, such relief is obviously futile, for it could bind only the defendant personally. There is, however, no appeal filed on his behalf, and it is only necessary to mention it as a reason for dismissing the appeal so far as it seeks to obtain any relief of that character for the plaintiffs.

We must take the finding of fact as recorded by the District Judge in paragraph 3 of his judgment. There it is found that the defendant took possession of two banners, and that he turned out of the procession some singers, and then permitted the procession to proceed. It is of these acts that the plaintiffs complained in the 9th paragraph of the plaint. It is not explained how the plaintiffs come to treat these acts of the defendant as torts for which they have a joint right of action. No objection, however, was taken on that ground. The District Judge holds that the defendant was justified in doing what he did, because there was danger of breach of the peace and the action was taken in good faith to prevent it. It is this ruling which is questioned in the appeal before us.

Prima facie the act of the defendant in taking away banners from the hands of the plaintiffs and keeping them is wrongful. That is the only act of which the plaintiffs personally complain. Such an act constitutes a trespass, and however laudable the motive may have been, the injured person is entitled to damages. The defendant can only be excused from liability if it is shown that, as a Superintendent of Police, he was by law justified in doing what otherwise would have been wrongful.

The 49th section of the Madras Police Act gives the Superintendent power, as occasion requires, to direct the conduct of all assemblies and processions, and prescribe the routes by which they may pass. It also gives him power to regulate the use of music in the streets on the occasion of festivals and ceremonies, and lastly to direct all crowds of twelve or more persons to disperse when he has reason to apprehend any breach of the peace.

Section 21 of the same Act declares the general duties of Police officers including that of using their best endeavours to preserve the peace. It is argued on behalf of the respondent that these provisions of the Act justified him in taking away the banners [42] from the plaintiffs, and that, although an express power to do such acts is not given by the Act, it must be taken to be included in the larger powers which are conferred. It may not unreasonably be said that on occasions serious inconvenience and risk of disturbance is likely to occur if the Police does not possess the power of depriving persons of banners, emblems or other objects which are calculated to provoke a breach of the peace on the part of persons to whom they are obnoxious. We must, however, see whether such a power is conferred by the Legislature. With regard to processions, express provisions are made of a particular character, and under certain conditions power is given to disperse crowds. The latter provision does not, in my opinion, relate to processions. With regard to processions, the Superintendent may, as occasion requires, do certain things, but the Act does not say he may take away flags or obnoxious devices carried by members of the procession, and I do not see on what principle it can be said that the Legislature intended to give this power by implication. On the contrary, the mention of specific things which may be done is unfavourable to any inference in favour of measures which are not mentioned.

In my opinion the respondent has failed to show that his acts are rendered legal by the provision of the Police Act, and it is not said that there is any other statute under which he can claim immunity. Chapter XIII of the Criminal Procedure Code gives the Police certain powers in the way of preventive action, but the present case cannot be brought within its provisions. It follows that the District Judge was wrong in refusing to give damages, but having regard to the other findings of the District Judge and the finding of the District Munsif on the question of damages, I think that nominal damages only should be awarded.

I would modify the decree of the District Judge by giving the plaintiffs one rupee damages. In other respects I would dismiss the appeal, and I would direct each party to bear his own costs throughout.

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

* Siriparapu Ramanna.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Rent Recovery Act (Madras)—Act VIII of 1865, ss. 4, 7, 11—Enhanced rent on irrigated land—Customary contribution to a temple—Implied contract.

A zamindar tendered to raiyats on his estate pattas providing (inter alia) for the payment of (1) certain fees to a Hindu temple, (2) rent in which the land assessment was consolidated with a water-cess in respect of certain land irrigated under the Kistna anicut. There was nothing to show that the former of these items constituted a charge on the land and the latter had not been sanctioned by the Collector under Rent Recovery Act, s. 11, † but it was found

* Second Appeal No. 557 of 1891.

Rules for deciding disputes as to rates of rent.

† [Sec. 11 :—In the decision of suits involving disputes regarding rates of rent which may be brought before Collectors under sections 8, 9 and 10, the following rules shall be observed :—

All contracts to be enforced.

(i) All contracts for rent, express or implied, shall be enforced.

(ii) In districts or villages which have been surveyed by the British Government previous to 1st January 1859, and in which a money assessment has been fixed on the fields, such assessment is to be considered the proper rent when no contract for rent, express or implied, exists.

(iii) When no express or implied contract has been made between the landholder and the tenant, and when no money assessment has been so fixed on the fields, the rates of rent shall be determined according to local usage, and when such usage is not clearly ascertainable, then according to the rates established or paid for neighbouring lands of similar description and quality. Provided that if either party be dissatisfied with the rates so determined, he may claim that the rent be discharged in that both had been paid by the raiyats for many years. The Court of first appeal held on this finding that there were implied contracts on the part of the raiyats to pay both items :

Held, (1) that the temple fee was prima facie voluntary and should not be treated as a payment which the zamindar could compel a raiyat to make and consequently that the patta tendered to him was an improper patta ;

(2) that the finding as to the existence of an implied contract to pay the second of the above items was a finding of fact and must, therefore, be accepted on second appeal ; and was a correct finding, in accordance with the ruling in Venkatagopal v. Rangappa (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 365).

The first proviso to Rent Recovery Act, s. 11, is not restricted in its application to rates of original rent as contradistinguished from its enhancement on account of improvements.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 176 of 1889, reversing the decision of S. H. Habibuddin, Special Assistant Collector of Kistna, in Summary Suit No. 2 of 1889.

Suit by a tenant to set aside a distraint.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Appellant.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondent.

[44] Judgment.—This is a second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Kistna, disallowing appellant's claim with costs. Respondent is the zamindar of Devarakota and appellant is a jirayati raiyat in his zamindari. A patta was tendered for fasli 1297 by the former, but the latter refused to accept it. The zamindar then distrained the raiyat's property for arrears of rent which he claimed for 1297 and the tenant sued to set aside the distraint as being illegal. The question for determination was whether the patta tendered, Exhibit I, was one which appellant was bound to accept and the requirement kind according to "the warum," that is, according to the established rate of the village for dividing the crop between the Government or the landlord and the cultivator. When "the warum" cannot be ascertained, such rates shall be decreed as may appear just to the Collector after ascertaining if any increase in the value of the produce or in the productive power of the land has taken place otherwise than by the agency or at the expense of the ryot.

(iv) In the case of immemorial waste land and of lands left unoccupied, either through default or voluntary resignation, it shall be lawful for landholders to arrange their own terms of rent, provided that nothing in this rule shall be held to affect any special rights which by law, or usage having the force of law, are held by any class or person in such waste or unoccupied lands.

Provided always that nothing herein contained shall affect the right of any such landholder, with the sanction of the Collector, to raise the rent upon any lands, in consequence of additional value imparted to them by works of irrigation or other improvements executed at his own expense, or constructed at the expense of Government, and for which an additional revenue is levied from him. Provided also that no puttahs which may have been granted by any such landholder at rates lower than the rates payable upon such lands, or upon neighbouring lands of similar quality and description, shall be binding upon his successor, unless such puttah shall have been bona fide granted for the erection of dwelling houses, factories, or other permanent buildings, or for the purpose of clearing and bringing waste land into cultivation, or for the purpose of making any permanent improvement thereon, and unless the tenant shall have substantially performed the conditions upon which such lower rates of assessment were allowed.]

of section 7* Act VIII of 1865, was thereby complied with. Appellant objected to two items in Exhibit I, viz., the rate of Rs. 9-8-0 per acre charged on dry land irrigated under the Kistna anicut, and the fee entered as payable to a temple at Sivaganga. The Special Assistant Collector considered that the consolidated wet assessment of Rs. 9-8-0 per acre was too high and that the usual dry rate of Rs. 2-2-0 plus a water rate of Rs. 4 per acre was the proper charge. As to the contribution claimed for the Sivaganga goddess, he thought its inclusion in the patta to be unobjectionable as he found it to be a charge warranted by established usage. On the former ground he held that appellant's refusal to accept the patta was justifiable and decreed his claim with costs. On appeal, however, the District Judge found that the patta tendered for 1297 was similar to pattas tendered in previous faislis, that they all contained the fee payable to the Sivaganga temple and imposed a consolidated wet rate of Rs. 9-8-0 per acre on lands irrigated with Kistna water, and that the consolidated rate and fee had been paid for twelve years or more. He concluded that payment of rent at a particular rate and of a fee for a series of years created a presumption of a contract and that the tenant did not rebut the presumption. Adverting to the evidence that appellant had twice asked the zamindar to reduce the rate, the Judge observed that it was not sufficient that the raiyat murmured against the rate now and then, but that it was incumbent upon him to get it lowered by the Revenue Courts. In the result, he reversed the decree of the Special Assistant Collector and dismissed respondent's suit with costs. Hence this second appeal.

For the appellant, it is contended (1) that the Collector's sanction not having been obtained for enhancing the rent, the patta tendered was not a proper patta, (2) that in the circumstances of [48] this case there was no presumptive evidence of a contract to which Courts can give effect, and (3) that the fee entered in the patta for the Sivaganga goddess was unauthorized. As regards the fee payable to the temple at Sivaganga, it can only be included in the patta under section 4† of Act VIII of 1865 on the ground that it is payable with rent according to established usage or law. A duty to contribute to the expense of a temple is not an ordinary incident of the relation of landlord and tenant, nor has it any connection with the jirayati tenure on which the raiyat holds his land. Prima facie, the contribution is voluntary and unless the fee is shown to be a charge on the land, it cannot be treated as a payment which the zamindar can legally compel the raiyat to make. Suppose the raiyat to be a Muhammadan or a Christian, it is obvious that in no sense would he be bound to make it. Moreover, a tenant tenancy, shall be sustainable unless puttahs and muchilkas have been exchanged as aforesaid, or unless it be proved that the party attempting to enforce the contract had tendered such a puttah or muchilka as the other party was bound to accept, or unless both parties shall have agreed to dispense with puttahs and muchilkas. Such tender shall be sufficiently evidenced by such proof of service as is provided for by section 39 in the case of notices. But it shall not be necessary to send duplicates of such documents to the Collector.]

† [Sec. 4:—The puttah shall contain the names of the contracting parties; the local description and extent of the land; the amount and nature of the rent, according as the same may be payable in money, or in kind, or by a share of the produce including any fees or charges payable with it according to established usage or to

Law; the period at which payments are to be made; the date of the contract; and all other special terms by which it is intended that the parties shall be bound. The muchilka shall, at the option of the landholders, be a counterpart of the puttah, or a simple engagement to hold according to the terms of the latter.]

may, at his pleasure, discontinue a voluntary payment although he may have made it for several years, and there is nothing in this case to show that the fee is a charge on the land. We do not agree in the opinion of the Judge that appellant was under a contractual obligation to pay the fee claimed for the goddess at Sivaganga.

As regards the consolidated wet rate on land irrigated with Kistna water, there can be no doubt that before imposing it on the tenant against his will, the zamindar ought to obtain the sanction of the Collector under the first proviso of section 11 of Act VIII of 1865. That section provides that nothing contained in it shall affect the right of any landholder, with the sanction of the Collector, to raise the rent upon any land in consequence of additional value imparted to it by works of irrigation or other improvements executed at his own expense or constructed at the expense of Government and for which an additional revenue is levied from him. Ramesam v. Bhanappa (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 182) and Narasimha Naidu v. Ramasami (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 44) are authorities for the proposition that the addition of water-cess to land assessment is an enhancement of rent within the meaning of the proviso and that the addition, in whatever form it is made, whether as a consolidated wet rate or as water rate in addition to the prior rent, requires the sanction of the Collector. The principle is that land assessment and water-tax are designated revenue when they are paid to the Government, whilst they are [46] called rent when paid to the zamindar. In the case before us, it is conceded that no such sanction has been obtained and the real question therefore is whether a contract can be inferred from the facts found to pay a consolidated wet rate for the future. In this connection two subsidiary questions arise for consideration, viz., (1) whether the first proviso in section 11 is restricted in its application to rates of original rent as contradistinguished from its enhancement on account of improvements, and (2) whether in the circumstances of this case, the Judge properly inferred a contract to pay the consolidated wet rate. As to the first, we see no reason why a contract between the landlord and tenant should not bind them in the case of enhancement of rent, whilst it is binding when it relates to the original rent. Having regard to the words of the proviso "Nothing herein contained shall affect the right to raise the rent," etc., we think the intention was not to preclude the parties from regulating the enhancement as well as the original rent by contract, but to constitute the Collector's sanction as conclusive evidence that the enhancement is proper in cases in which there is no contract. Further the sanction of the Collector is prescribed for protecting the tenant against undue or excessive enhancement, and when there is a binding contract the tenant needs no such protection as he is a party to the contract.

The second question is whether upon the facts found a contract can be lawfully implied. Those facts are (1) that the tenant has paid the consolidated wet rate for twelve years or more, (2) that he has accepted pattas in the previous faslis providing for payment at that rate and that though the raiyat asked the zamindar to reduce the rate twice without success, he has taken no action in the Revenue Courts in order to get the rate lowered during the long interval of twelve years or more. It is also in evidence that the sharing system was in force in this village till fasli 1278, that fixed money rents were introduced in fasli 1279, and that the raiyat, since paid the rates mentioned in the patta tendered up to fasli 1296. On the other hand, the usual dry rate is Rs. 2-2-0 per acre and if Rs. 4 are added to it for water rate, the total charge would amount to Rs. 6-2-0 per acre, whereas the consolidated water rate is Rs. 9-8-0, Rs. 3-6-0 in excess of the revenue which raiyats have to pay in Government villages. The Judge's finding amounts in substance to this, viz., when a [47] consolidated rate had been paid for seventeen years, a contract to pay at the same rate in future years may be reasonably inferred and such contract precludes an enquiry how far that rate is excessive in comparison with the rates paid by raiyats in Government villages. Again, the question whether there was an implied contract or not is one of fact and we are bound to accept the finding. In the Full Bench case, Venkatagopal v. Bangappa (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 365) it was held that a contract was properly implied from payment of the same rate of money rent for a period of fourteen years. In that case the history of rent law as to rates of rent was considered by the Full Court, and it was pointed out in what cases a contract to pay a particular rate may be presumed and how the presumption may be rebutted. In the case before us no change of circumstances and no special causes are shown which may be accepted as rebutting the presumption of an implied contract. The decision of the Judge that there was a contract to pay the consolidated wet rate entered in the patta is correct.

We are, however, constrained to hold that the patta tendered was not a proper patta, as it contained the fee payable to the temple at Sivaganga, and reversing the decree of the District Court, we set aside the distraint.

As the appeal has failed in regard to the consolidated rent, which is the most important item in dispute, we direct that each party bear his own costs throughout.

[48] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 15th November, 1892 and 24th July, 1893.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Malla Reddi and another.....(Defendants Nos. 2 and 1) Appellants
* versus

Padmamma and another.....(Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2) Respondents.*

Hindu law—Ullatom son-in-law—Inheritance—Survivorship.

The father since deceased of the second defendant took into his family an ullatom son-in-law, who died, leaving a son. After the death of the son, one of his two daughters (who were his only children) sued to recover a one-fourth share of the property left by the second defendant's father :

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, in the absence of proof of a custom by which the rights of the plaintiff's father should have passed by survivorship to the second defendant

* Second Appeal No. 1945 of 1891.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of C. Ramachandra Ayyar, Acting District Judge of Nellore, in Appeal Suit No. 62 of 1889, confirming the decree of T. Ramachandra Rau, District Munsif of Nellore, in Original Suit No. 282 of 1887.

The first plaintiff was mother of the second plaintiff and sister of the first defendant, and they were the sole descendants of the illatom son-in-law (deceased) of the second defendant's father. The second defendant was the husband of the first defendant, and he was in possession of the property left by his father. The present suit was brought to recover a one-fourth share of the property.

The second defendant claimed to have become entitled to the whole estate, as the last surviving member of a Hindu coparcenary, on the death, without male issue, of the first plaintiff's father, the son of the illatom son-in-law above referred to.

The lower Courts held that the first plaintiff and the first defendant were jointly entitled to a moiety of the property in question and passed decrees as prayed.

[49] The defendants preferred this second appeal.

Seshagiri Ayyar for Appellants.

Ramachandra Rau Saheb for Respondents.

Order.—The father of Lakshmi Narasa Reddi (grandfather of the first plaintiff and the first defendant) was taken into the family of the second defendant's father as illatom son-in-law. Lakshmi Narasa Reddi died without male issue, leaving two daughters, the first plaintiff and the first defendant. The first plaintiff and her son claimed both by virtue of wills said to have been executed by Lakshmi Narasa Reddi and his wife and also by Hindu law.

As no evidence was adduced on either side the claim so far as it was based upon the alleged wills failed, and the only question now is whether the first plaintiff is entitled to one-fourth, i.e., half of the half share of her late father. Both Courts have decreed in her favour and defendants have appealed.

For the purposes of the present appeal it may be taken that the property was the property of the second defendant's father's family in which plaintiff's grandfather was an illatom son-in-law. He was, therefore, entitled to equal rights therein with the second defendant's father, and the question is whether, on the death of Lakshmi Narasa Reddi, these rights passed by survivorship to the second defendant. Ordinarily under Hindu Law the relation of coparcenary, of which the right of survivorship is an incident, is only possible between descendants of a common paternal ancestor. In Hanumantamma v. Ram Reddi (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 272) it was considered unsafe (p. 283) to infer that the affiliation by illatom is analogous to adoption in any other respect save in the circumstance that the illatom son-in-law is regarded for purposes of inheritance as a member of the family into which he is admitted. In Chenchamma v. Subbaya (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 114) an issue was sent as to whether there can be coparcenary between an adopted son and an illatom son-in-law, but no evidence being produced it was held that in the absence of proof that the right of survivorship is an incident of custom it cannot be treated as such. The decision of SCOTLAND, C. J., and INNES, J., in Mopur Ademma v. Dhamararapu Subba Reddi (Appeal No. 103 of 1868, unreported) is [50] no doubt in conflict with the later decisions, but no evidence was taken in that case, and it was inferred that there was coparcenary, because the illatom custom was a mode of affiliation.

We think it is not safe to attach to the usage all the incidents of adoption without specific evidence. We shall, therefore, ask the District Judge to try the following issue:—

“Whether according to illatom custom the second defendant excluded the daughters of Lakshmi Narasa Reddi from succession, and whether their father's undivided interest survived to the second defendant?”

The finding is to be returned within two months from the date of the receipt of this order; and seven days, after the posting of the finding in this Court, will be allowed for filing objections.

The finding of the District Judge was as follows:—

“I am of opinion that the evidence adduced is not sufficient to find upon the issue sent down by the High Court for the second defendant.”

This second appeal having come on again for final hearing, the Court delivered judgment as follows.

Judgment.—We accept the finding and dismiss the appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th March and 26th April, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Mallikarjuna Prasada Nayudu.....(Plaintiff) Appellant •

Rent Recovery Act (Madras)—Act VIII of 1865, ss. 9, 11—Sanction by Collector of enhanced rates of rent—Implied contract to pay rent at a certain rate.

In a suit brought by the Collector of a district, as receiver of a zamindari, against a tenant on the estate to enforce the exchange of patta and muchalka, it appeared that the rent demanded was assessed at an enhanced rate, and comprised a consolidated wet rate imposed on account of irrigation. To the enhancement of the rent by the addition of the water rate the sanction of the Collector required by the Rent Recovery Act, s. 11, first proviso, had not been obtained :

Held, that such sanction could not be implied from the fact that the Collector, as [51] such receiver, had caused the provision in question to be inserted in the patta, and now sought to enforce it by suit.

Upon the question whether from the fact that the tenant had paid the water rate in question for some years previously, an implied contract to pay it for the future could be inferred, Held upon the facts of the present case that no such contract could be inferred.

With reference to the Full Bench decision in Venkatagopal v. Rangappa (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 365), the Court stated what was the principle to be kept in view in considering whether an implied contract to pay enhanced rent could be inferred.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 762 of 1890, modifying the decision of C. Venkata Jagga Reddy, Assistant Collector of Kistna, in summary suit No. 107 of 1890.

* Second Appeal No. 1695 of 1891.

Suit to enforce the exchange of patta and muchalka.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the following judgment of the High Court.

Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Respondent.

Judgment.—These second appeals arise from suits brought by the receiver of the Devarakota estate to enforce the acceptance of pattas for fasli 1298 by raiyats in the jirayati village of Nidumole. The raiyats objected to three items in the pattas tendered to them, viz., Nayakvadi fees, tax on palmyra trees, and consolidated wet rates imposed on lands irrigated by the anicut channels from the Kistna. As regards the first two items, both the Courts below decided in favour of the zamindar, and the raiyats have not appealed from their decision. As for the wet rate, it is conceded no sanction has been obtained from the Collector as required by the first proviso to section 11, Act VIII of 1865; but it is contended that such sanction was not necessary, and that, even if necessary, it must be taken to have been accorded, the wet rates being inserted in the pattas under the orders of the Collector, who was the receiver. The first proviso to section 11 expressly prescribes the sanction of the Collector as a condition precedent to a valid enhancement of rent on account of improvements, and the intention is to protect the raiyats against excessive rates by requiring sanction by an officer competent to hold the balance even between the zamindar and the raiyats. Nor do we consider the institution of these summary suits by the Collector in the [32] capacity of receiver to be equivalent to such sanction, the sanction contemplated by section 11 being one judicially accorded upon consideration of the rights of both parties to what is deemed a fair and equitable rate. In Ramesam v. Bhanappa (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 182), it has been held that the addition of water-cess to the prior rent is an enhancement of rent within the meaning of the section. We consider, therefore, that the Judge was right in holding that, in the absence of a contract, the sanction of the Collector was indispensable, and that no such sanction, as is contemplated by Act VIII of 1865, has been given in the cases before us.

The next contention is that the Judge was in error in refusing to infer from the facts found a contract to pay the wet rate, and we do not think that it is tenable. The leading case on the subject is Venkatagopal v. Rangappa (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 365). The general rule laid down in that case is that payment of rent in a particular form, or at a certain rate for a number of years, is presumptive evidence of a contract to pay rent in that form or at that rate for future years so long as the relation of landlord and tenant may continue. It was also there held that the presumption may be repelled by proof (1) that the rate in question was paid under a mistake, (2) that it was intended to be paid only for a certain term of years, and that, on the expiration of that term, the parties meant to revert to their original rights, (3) that there has been a diminution in the extent of the holding, (4) that its value has diminished by the deterioration of irrigation or other works which the landlord was bound to maintain, and (5) that there was some change of circumstances which would entitle the parties to the agreement to an alteration in its terms without necessarily putting an end to the relation of landlord and tenant. The Court also observed that when there is no proof of such special cause for alteration of the terms heretofore subsisting between the parties, it must be decided that so long as the tenant elects to retain the holding he is liable to the obligations in respect of rent which, it is to be inferred, from his past conduct that he has accepted. With reference to the general rule, the Judge considers that it is vague so far as it does not mention a specific number of years as sufficient to raise the inference of a contract and draws attention to Narasimha v. Ramasami (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 44), wherein it was held that no contract as to future years [53] could be inferred from a single lease extending over the brief period of five years. Again, in Apparau v. Narasanna (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 47), it was considered that the fact that the tenant paid rent at a certain rate for six years was not sufficient to establish an implied covenant to continue to do so for the future. The Judge appears to have ruled in some cases that a period of three years was sufficient as under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and observes that he is inclined to hold in the cases now under consideration that nothing less than seven years will be long enough to satisfy the principle laid down in Venkatagopal v. Rangappa (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 365). In the case last mentioned, which was a Full Bench case, a contract was implied, as money rent was found to have been paid for not less than fourteen years. We do not think that, in the absence of an express enactment applicable to this Presidency, the Judge is right in fixing three or seven years as the period contemplated by the Full Bench case. The decision whether a contract can be implied must depend on the circumstances of each case. The principle, which ought to be kept in view, is that the distinction between an express and an implied contract consists only in the mode of proof, and that the circumstances from which a contract may lawfully be implied must be such as will satisfy a reasonable mind that the real intention of the parties was that the particular rate in question should be the rate in future years so long as the relation of landlord and tenant may subsist between the parties, unless there is some special circumstance, such as is indicated in the Full Bench case rebutting the presumption. It may be that payment of rent at the rate in dispute for five or six years is not sufficient where such payment is the only fact in evidence. It may also be that even when a particular rate has been paid for a longer period, there may be other circumstances which repel the presumption. In the cases now before us, however, there is no sufficient reason to doubt that the Judge has arrived at a correct finding. Apart from the fact that the wet rate in dispute has been paid in no case for more than seven years, in many cases for four or five years only, and in some even for one and three years, it is found that the raiyats paid the rate with reluctance and much protest. It is found, further, that the areas over which it has been paid are in many cases small and have varied from year to year. Moreover, [54] it does not appear that the zamindar has incurred any expenditure in connection with works of irrigation.

We are unable, therefore, to uphold the contention that the Judge was in error in holding that it was not the intention of the raiyats that they should continue to pay the wet rate in dispute in all future years.

The appeals fail, and we dismiss them with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th and 21st March and 21st April, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Bhupathi.....(Defendant) Appellant

Rajah Rangayya Appa Rau.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Rent Recovery Act (Madras)—Act VIII of 1865, ss. 1, 11—Sanction granted by Head Assistant Collector—Procedure—Customary rent—Restraint on building.

* A Head Assistant Collector is competent to grant a sanction for the enhancement of rent under Rent Recovery Act, s. 11.

The granting of such sanction is a judicial and not a merely administrative act and such sanction should not be granted without first giving notice to both the landlord and the tenant, and hearing, and considering the contentions of both parties.

In a suit by the landlord to enforce the exchange of a patta and muchalka, the tenant objected to the rate of rent imposed on part of the land, which was dry land converted into wet. Held that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that there was an implied contract to pay rent at such rate was not open to any legal objection :

It appeared that the patta tendered contained a stipulation for the payment of rent at a special rate for garden (jarib) lands watered by wells which had been constructed by the raiyat at his own cost, and also comprised a stipulation that the raiyat should not build on his holding. The Court of first appeal held that the special rate of rent above referred to was customary and had been followed for many years :

Held, that there was no ground for interference on second appeal with the lower Appellate Court's decision regarding the former of the stipulations above referred to, but that the latter should be so modified as to prevent the raiyat only from raising any building incompatible with an agricultural holding.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 520 of 1888, modifying the [55] decision of L. M. Wynne, Head Assistant Collector of Kistna, in Summary Suit No. 761 of 1887.

Suit by the landlord to enforce the exchange of patta and muchalka.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the following judgment of the High Court.

The defendant preferred this second appeal.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Appellant.

Subramanya Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—Plaintiff, respondent, is the zamindar of Nuzvid and appellants are raiyats in the Jeroyati village of Mantena comprised in his zamindari. The contest between them is whether the pattas tendered for fasli 1296 were such as the raiyats were bound to accept. The first objection urged by them was that the land taken up for excavating Uppaleru drainage channel was not deducted from their holdings on the ground that the Government had paid no compensation for the land so taken up to the zamindar. Both the Courts below allowed this objection, and the zamindar has not appealed from their decision.

The next item to which the raiyats object is the rate per acre imposed on dry land converted into wet. The rate claimed by the zamindar was Rs. 9-2-8 per acre, and the raiyats contended that the proper rate was the rate which had prevailed at the time of permanent settlement in 1802. The Head Assistant Collector and the Judge inferred, from the facts which they accepted as proved, a contract to pay every year Rs. 9-2-8 per acre. The contention on appellants' behalf is that no contract can be lawfully implied, the rate of Rs. 9-2-8 having been paid not voluntarily, but under protest and with remonstrance.

The finding that there was an implied contract being one of fact, the question we have to consider on second appeal is whether it is open to any legal objection. The Judge considers it proved that there has been a continuous payment of Rs. 9-2-8 per acre from the year 1871 to 1885, and in the Full Bench case of Venkatagopal v. Rangappa (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 373) in which it was held that there was an implied contract, the same rate had been paid for fourteen years. It is then argued that the management of the Nuzvid estate has always been oppressive and that the raiyats [36] protested against the rate of Rs. 9-2-8 in 1871 and in 1880. We think that the expression of discontent now and then was not sufficient and that the omission to resort to the Revenue Courts for redress for so long a period is significant. Again, the Judge observes that the same rate had been paid down to 1885 and subsequent to the dates of the alleged remonstrance, and that the reasonable inference is that the matter was settled between the parties. In this there is no error of law to justify our interference with the finding. Moreover, there was a similar question raised with reference to the pattas tendered for the previous fasli, viz., 1295, and it was also decided against appellants. Further, the Judge observes, and we think, very properly, that if it is reasonable for the raiyats to seek to revert to the faisal rate which prevailed in 1802, the zamindar may as reasonably go back to the sharing system which is not agreeable to them. We are of opinion that the objection to the inference of a contract to pay at the rate of Rs. 9-2-8 cannot be supported.

The next question is whether the Judge was right in treating as valid the sanction given by the Head Assistant Collector, Ramachandra Rau, for enhancing the rate to Rs. 9-2-8 for fasli 1296 in the cases from which Second Appeals Nos. 681 and 682 of 1891 arise. In connection with the patta tendered for 1295, appellants in those cases objected to the rate and contended that, as they had excavated a distribution channel at a cost of Rs. 115, the zamindar was not at liberty to enhance the rent without the sanction of the Collector. The Head Assistant Collector upheld their objection and directed in his judgment that the costs of excavating the sub-channel be deducted from the sist payable to the zamindar. After this deduction had been made, the zamindar applied for sanction to raise the rent to Rs. 9-2-8 per acre on lands under the channel, and on 23rd June 1887 the Head Assistant Collector granted the sanction, but without sending notice to the raiyats and calling upon them to show cause why sanction should not be granted. Appellants in Second Appeals Nos. 681 and 682 of 1891 questioned the validity of the sanction on three grounds, viz., (1) that the Head Assistant Collector was not competent to grant the sanction, (2) that the increase sanctioned was unreasonable, and (3) that the sanction was given without notice to them; but the Judge disallowed these grounds of objection. The term Collector as defined in section 1,* [57] Act VIII of 1865, includes the Head Assistant Collector and the first objection therefore is entitled to no weight. As regards the omission to give notice, it was clearly an irregularity, for the act of giving sanction is a judicial act intended on the one hand to protect the raiyat against excessive enhancement and on the other to secure to the zamindar what may be considered a fair and an equitable increase. A sound decision can, therefore, only be arrived at after hearing both parties and considering what is urged in the interest of each. The sanction prescribed by the proviso in section 11 has the force of a binding contract not only for any particular fasli, but also for future years, and the power to give such sanction is vested in the Collector as the officer competent to hold the balance evenly between the zamindar and the raiyat. In our judgment, it can only be properly exercised after hearing both sides and after consideration of the rights of both parties under Act VIII of 1865. We are unable to accede to the contention on behalf of the zamindar that the granting of sanction under section 11 is an administrative act and not defective by reason of the raiyats not having been heard. We agree, however, with the Judge that in the present case the irregularity was not material since the Head Assistant Collector had heard what the raiyats had to say in the suit of fasli 1295. There is the further fact that the cost of excavating the distribution channel has been deducted from the sist payable by the raiyats to the zamindar, and that the rate charged in the case of those raiyats, who had incurred no similar expenditure was Rs. 9-2-8 per acre.

Another item to which exception is taken in all the second appeals is the rate charged for garden lands watered by wells sunk by the raiyats at their own expense. The Head Assistant Collector found that the jarib rates now claimed were customary and that they had been paid for a long series of years, and the Judge has accepted the finding. In the case of Venkatagiri Raja v. Pitchana (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 30), it was held that while in the case of lands watered by wells newly constructed by a tenant at his own expense he cannot be deprived of the benefit of the improvements made at his own expense, he cannot, on the other hand, insist on a reduction of the assessment in the case of old garden lands which had paid a [58] mamul garden rate. There are no grounds for interference in second appeal.

The next objection taken by the raiyats is as to the stipulation that the raiyats shall not build houses on the land, and the Judge has allowed the stipulation to stand. The question whether a tenant can build on his lands was discussed in Ramanadhan v. Zamindar of Ramnad (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 407), and the decision arrived at in that case was that the tenant was not at liberty to turn land originally let for cultivation into a house site without the consent of the zamindar, and that he is only entitled to raise such buildings as are not incompatible with the character of his holding as an agricultural holding. The stipulation in the patta should be so modified as to prevent the raiyat from raising any building incompatible with an agricultural holding.

The last objection taken is as to the tenant's right to cut down trees, and on this point the Judge has decided in accordance with the decision of this Court in Appa Rau v. Ratnam (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 249).

Interpretation clause.
Collector.

* [Sec. 1 :—The word "Collector" shall be taken to denote every Officer who, for the time being, is authorized to exercise the powers of a Collector.]

We modify the decrees of the District Judge so far as they relate to building on the land as indicated above and confirm them in other respects. The appeals having substantially failed, appellants will pay respondent's costs in Second Appeals Nos. 681 and 682. The respondent not being represented in the other appeals, we make no order as to costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 31st January and 1st February, 1893.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE HANDLEY.

Rangasami Chetti.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, s. 273—Dismissal of an application for execution—Attachment of a decree—Execution of attached decree.

The holder of a decree dated 1885 applied to execute it, but his application was dismissed in March 1887 on the ground that "no further steps had been taken." [59] It did not appear that any notice was given to him before the order of dismissal was made. Nevertheless the decree-holder proceeded to execute a decree of the judgment-debtor attached by him and brought to sale certain property which was in question in the present suit, and it was purchased bona fide by the present defendant who obtained a sale certificate from the Court. The present plaintiff claimed as assignee from the holder of the attached decree to execute it against the same land and now sued for a declaration that it was liable to be brought to sale by him and that the defendant's purchase was void as against him,

Held, (1) that under the circumstances of the case the attachment in execution of the decree of 1885 was subsisting at the time of the purchase by the defendant,

(2) that a judgment-creditor who attaches a decree is competent to execute it.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of C. Venkoba Chariar, Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 382 of 1891, confirming the decree of A. Kuppusami Ayyangar, District Munsif of Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 193 of 1890.

*Second Appeal No. 555 of 1892.

In June 1887 the father (since deceased) of the plaintiff became the assignee of a decree passed by the District Munsif of Kumbakonam in 1881, and in execution he attached certain land as property of the judgment-debtor. The present defendant objected that the land was his property. The plaintiff now sued for a declaration that the land in question was not the property of the defendant and was liable to be attached in execution of the decree of 1881.

It appeared that a suit was brought in 1885 against the assignor of the above-mentioned decree and that the plaintiff therein obtained against him a decree which was subsequently assigned to one Ramachandra Rau. In execution of the last-mentioned decree Ramachandra Rau attached the decree of 1881 under Civil Procedure Code, s. 273, and having proceeded to execute it he brought to sale the land in question in this suit and the present defendant became the purchaser and obtained a sale certificate in 1888.

Ramachandra Rau's application to execute the decree of 1885 was dismissed by an order made on the 19th March 1887 on the ground that "no further steps had been taken," but it did not appear that any previous notice had been given to the execution-creditor before that order was made, and it was found that the defendant was a bonâ fide purchaser.

The plaintiff contended that the order of 19th March 1887 put an end to the attachment and that for that reason the defendant acquired no title by his purchase at the subsequent Court-sale. [60] Both the lower Courts overruled this contention and the suit was dismissed.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Sankaran Nayar and Panchapagesa Sastriar for Appellant.

Sankara Narayana Sastri for Respondent.

Judgment.—We think the order appealed against is right. Both Courts considered that the attachment in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 75 of 1885 of the decree in Original Suit No. 252 of 1881 was subsisting at the date of the purchase by defendant at the Court-sale on 5th July 1888. It is contended that an order was made on 19th March 1887 to the effect that the application for execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 75 of 1885 was dismissed on the ground that no further steps had been taken and that this order put an end to the attachment; whether the attachment ceased at the date of this order or continued to subsist is a matter to be decided with reference to the circumstances of each case as observed by the Privy Council in Pudlomonsee Dossee v. Roy Muthooranath Chowdhry (12 B. L. R., 411; s. c., 20 W. R., 133).

We observe that up to 16th March 1887 some steps had been taken and the application was dismissed on 19th March, and it does not appear that any previous notice was given to the execution-creditor before the order of 19th March was made. Moreover, defendant was a bonâ fide purchaser at a Court-sale of the lands in question, and any irregularity in the proceedings which led to the sale cannot be relied on as a ground for setting aside the sale after it had been confirmed and a certificate issued. See Reva Mahlon v. Ram Kishen Singh (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 18) and Mothura Mohun Ghose Mondul v. Akhoy Kumar Mitter (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 557). Another contention for appellant is that under section 273 of the Civil Procedure Code the decree-holder in Original Suit

*[Sec. 273:—If the property be a decree for money passed by the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed, the attachment shall be made by an order of the Court directing the proceeds of the former decree to be applied in satisfaction of the latter decree.

If the property be a decree for money passed by any other Court, the attachment shall be made by a notice in writing to such Court under the hand of the Judge of the Court

No. 75 of 1885 was not competent to execute the decree in Original Suit No. 252 of 1881 attached by him. Section 273 expressly authorizes the Court in such a case to apply the proceeds of the decree attached in satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed. This direction clearly implies that the attaching decree-holder is entitled to take all steps necessary for the realization of the proceeds of the attached decree by the Court. The same view is taken by the Calcutta [61] High Court in Peary Mohun Chowdhry v. Romesh Chunder Nundy (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 371). In the view of the case which we take, it is not necessary to consider whether article 12* or 11 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act governs the case.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

NOTES.

[As regards execution at the instance of the attaching creditor, see also C. P. C., 1908 O. 21 r. 53.

which passed the decree sought to be executed, requesting the former Court to stay the execution of its decree until such notice is cancelled by the Court from which it was sent. The Court receiving such notice shall stay execution accordingly, unless and until

- (a) the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed cancels the notice, or
- (b) the holder of the decree sought to be executed applies to the Court receiving such notice to execute its own decree.

On receiving such application, the Court shall proceed to execute the decree and apply the proceeds in satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed.

In the case of all other decrees the attachment shall be made by a notice in writing, under the hand of the Judge of the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed, to the holder of the decree sought to be attached, prohibiting him from transferring or charging the same in any way: and, when such decree has been passed by any other Court, also by sending to such Court a like notice in writing to abstain from executing the decree sought to be attached until such notice is cancelled by the Court from which it was sent. Every Court receiving such notice shall give effect to the same until it is so cancelled.

Decree-holders to give information. The holder of any decree attached under this section shall be bound to give the Court executing the same such information and aid as may reasonably be required.]

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Gnanasammanda Pandaram.....(Plaintiff) Petitioner

Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, s. 25—Date from which time runs.

A registered lease provided that the rent should be paid on 30th Masi Tharana. The month Masi in the year Tharana ended on the 29th day, which corresponded with 11th March 1885. A suit to recover the rent was filed on 12th March 1891 :

Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation.

PETITION under Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, section 25, praying the High Court to revise the proceedings of T. M. Ranga Chari, District Munsif of Trichinopoly, in Small Cause Suit No. 538 of 1891.

Suit for rent. The District Munsif dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. He said:—"The rent sued on was payable within 30th Masi Tharana according to the rent deed. Now, there was no such day as 30th Masi in the year Tharana, the month having ended with 29th Masi. Therefore time began to run from 29th Masi Tharana, equivalent to 11th March 1885. See on this point Migotti v. Colvill (L. R., 4 C. P. D., 233), quoted in Mitra's Limitation, 2nd Edition. The rent deed being registered, plaintiff had six years from 11th March 1885. Plaintiff should have launched this suit on 11th March 1891, whereas the plaint was put into Court only on the succeeding day, namely, 12th March 1891. The suit is then time-barred. On this ground the suit is dismissed with costs."

Krishnasawmi Ayyar for Petitioner.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar and Srirangachariar for Respondent.

Judgment.—The question is whether the claim is barred by limitation. If there had been thirty days in Masi of the year Tharana, the suit would not be barred ; but in the year Tharana there happened to have been only twenty-nine days in Masi. Following the decision in Almas Bance v. Mahomed Ruja (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 239), we hold that the suit brought on the 12th March 1891 is not barred. The decision in Migotti v. Colvill (L. R., 4 C. P. D., 233), referred to by the District Munsif, relates to computation of a sentence on a prisoner and is not in point.

We set aside the decree of the District Munsif and remand the suit for disposal on merits.

The costs hitherto will abide and follow the result.

Narayana Rau.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.*

In March 1881 A purchased certain land and, in the same month, mortgaged it to B. In June the land was attached in execution of a decree. In August A discharged the judgment-debt with money borrowed from C, and he hypothecated the land to him to secure repayment of the loan.

In 1882 B brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree, in execution of which the land was brought to sale and purchased by him: C was not a party to this suit. In 1886 B sold the land to D under an instrument, which recited that out of the purchase-money Rs. 760 were retained by the purchaser for payment of prior incumbrances, and the finding was that the purchaser undertook to pay the debt owing to C. C now sued A and D to enforce his hypothecation:

Held, that C was entitled to a decree for sale.

[68] A stipulation in a bond that if the sum secured is not repaid with interest at 12 per cent. on a certain date, the interest shall be at 18 per cent. from the date of the bond is not unenforceable.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of C. Venkobachariar, Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 69 of 1891, modifying the decree of T. Ramasami Ayyar, District Munsif of Tiruttarapundi, in Original Suit No. 219 of 1889.

Suit to recover principal and interest due on a hypothecation bond. The instrument sued on was dated 29th August 1881 and it provided for the repayment of the amount secured "with interest at Rs. 1 per cent. per mensem within 30th August 1883 and in default with interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond."

The further facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the following judgment of the High Court.

The District Munsif passed a personal decree only. The Subordinate Judge on appeal passed a decree for sale of the property hypothecated.

Defendant No. 3 preferred this second appeal.

Bhashyam Ayyangar, Desika Chariar and Tiruvengkata Chariar for Appellant.

Subramaniya Ayyar for Respondent.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—The parties to this appeal are prior and subsequent mortgagees of the land in dispute, which is 17 maws and odd in extent. The land in question originally belonged to Saminatha Bosalai and his coparceners. On the 10th March 1881 they sold it, together with other property, to first defendant for Rs. 1,500 (Exhibit J). The purchaser mortgaged it and other property to one Vengusami for Rs. 3,000 under Exhibit I, dated the 19th March 1881. The mortgagee instituted Original Suit No. 84 of 1882 and obtained a mortgage decree, in execution of which he purchased the seven velies mortgaged to him (including the land in dispute) and other land and obtained possession of the same on the 2nd October 1885. On the 20th January 1886 the purchaser at the execution-sale sold the lands to appellant's father for Rs. 3,750 by Exhibit H. This document recites that out of the purchase-money, viz., Rs. 3,750, Rs. 760 were retained by the purchaser for payment of prior encumbrances. Thus appellant's claim as the purchaser at the Court-sale in Original Suit No. 84 of 1882 has to be traced to the mortgage executed to [64] Vengusami on the 19th March 1881. The plaintiff-respondent's hypothecation bond A was executed by the first defendant in plaintiff's favour on the 29th August 1881 about five months subsequently to the mortgage in favour of Vengusami. This hypothecation was executed to pay off the debt under the decree in Original Suit No. 185 of 1872 on the file of the Additional Munsif of Tanjore, in execution of which the land now in dispute and other lands were under attachment since the 7th June 1881. Thus, respondent's claim is derived from the mortgage of the 29th August 1881. To Original Suit No. 84 of 1882 the plaintiff-respondent was not made a party, and he is not, therefore, debarred from enforcing his charge. Upon these facts the lower Appellate Court held that respondent had a right to redeem the prior mortgage or to bring the mortgaged property to sale, and decreed, inter alia, that unless appellant paid the sum due to respondent and redeemed the mortgage in six months, the mortgaged property be sold in satisfaction of respondent's claim. For appellant it is contended that there ought to be no decree for sale, and that a puisne encumbrancer's remedy as against a prior encumbrancer is limited to a right to redeem and does not include a right to bring the property to sale. I do not consider this contention to be tenable. That a second mortgagee has a right to redeem a prior mortgage is not disputed, the real question being whether he can also claim a direction that the property be sold so as to throw the burden of redemption on the prior instead of the subsequent mortgagee. He is certainly entitled to say that the mortgage property is sufficient for payment of both debts, that if sold on account of them there will be a surplus after satisfying the prior mortgage, and that that surplus should be appropriated in payment of the second mortgage. The only ground on which the prior mortgagee could resist such demand is that the property in question was not sufficient to satisfy both mortgages, and that it was exhausted in satisfying the first mortgage which has a priority of claim to payment. Upon the finding that Rs. 760 was reserved out of the purchase-money for payment of prior encumbrances, this defence is not available to the appellant. In Perumal v. Kaveri (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 121) no portion of the purchase-money was reserved for paying off the prior encumbrances, and there was no [65] undertaking to pay the second mortgage as in this case. Moreover, the second transaction in this case was a hypothecation which created a charge on the property, and there is no reason why the charge should not be satisfied when a portion of the purchase-money was retained for meeting prior encumbrances. As regards interest, the Subordinate Judge's decree is in accordance with the decision in Basavayya v. Subbarazu (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 294).

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Best, J.—The finding of the Subordinate Judge is that the third and fourth defendants (it should be third defendant's father and fourth defendant) undertook to pay plaintiff's debt, "and retained money for that purpose." On this finding there can be no question as to the propriety of the decree, which makes the debt a charge on the property mortgaged of which third defendant is now the sole owner.

The case is distinguishable from Gokuldoss Gopaldoss v. Rambux Seochand (L. R., 11 I. A., 126), because, according to the Subordinate Judge's finding, the appellant's father when purchasing from Vengusami bound himself to pay off the plaint debt and retained Rs. 760 of the purchase-money for the purpose of paying off the debt. For the same reason this case is also distinguishable from Perumal v. Kaveri (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 121) to which our attention was called by the appellant's vakil.

As to the contention that Exhibit M has been misconstrued by the Subordinate Judge, it appears from M that third defendant's father and fourth defendant then ignored Subbammal's debt and expressly denied the liability of the plaint property for that debt, whereas their present plea is that the Rs. 760 were retained for the payment of that very debt.

The only other objection urged on behalf of appellant is as to the interest awarded at 18 per cent. It is objected that this is a penal rate and therefore not enforceable. The bond, which is dated 29th August 1881, stipulates for payment of the principal amount on the 30th August 1883 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum, and provides that in default of payment on the above date, the interest shall be at the enhanced rate of 18 per cent. from the date of the bond. The question has recently been considered by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Banke [66] Behari v. Sunder Lal (I. L. R., 15 All., 232) and the conclusion arrived at is that such stipulations in contracts substituting in a given state of circumstances a higher for a lower rate of interest cannot be treated as penalties, but must be interpreted—as other parts of a written contract should be interpreted—according to the expressed intention of the parties. To the same effect also is the decision of this Court in Appa Rau v. Suryanarayana (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 203), where the true principle of decision is stated to be that a Court “should not interfere to protect persons who, with their eyes open, choose knowingly to enter into even somewhat extortionate bargains, but that it is only when a person has entered into such a bargain in ignorance of the unfair nature of the transaction, advantage having been taken of youth, ignorance or credulity, that a Court of Equity is justified in interfering.” See also Basavayya v. Subbarazu (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 294) and the decision of the Privy Council in Balkishen Das v. Run Bahadur Singh (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 305).

As observed by the Privy Council in Dimech v. Corlett (12 Moo. P. C. Cases 229) “the hinge on which the decision in every particular case turns is the intention of the parties collected from the language they have used.” In the present case the language is clear enough, and there is no reason for supposing that the executant of the bond when he expressly stated that in default of paying the principal with interest at 12 per cent. on the date agreed upon for the payment, the interest should be payable “from the date of the bond” at the higher rate of 18 per cent. did not understand or intend what he said.

I would, therefore, uphold the Subordinate Judge's decree in its entirety and dismiss this appeal with costs.

[67] APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE, MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE HANDLEY.

Sattappa Chetti and another.....(Defendants Nos. 2 and 3) Appellants

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 53, 245, 647—Amendment of execution petition—Appeal—Limitation.

One, being entitled under a decree of 1809 to a share in the income of a zamindari, obtained a decree in a suit of 1887 against certain recent purchasers of the zamindari, declaring that he had a valid charge on the estate and awarding to him, besides his costs, the amount due in respect of one year. He now applied in execution of the latter decree for payment of the amount due in respect of five years as well as his costs. An application to amend the petition for execution by inserting a reference to the former decree was made after the right of the petitioner in respect of some of the years in question had become barred by limitation.

This application was refused by the Court of First Instance :

Held, that under the circumstances of the case the amendment should have been allowed to be made.

APPEAL against the order of T. Weir, District Judge of Madura, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 34 of 1891, reversing the order of P. Narayanasami Ayyar, Subordinate Judge of Madura, West, made on Execution Petition No. 94 of 1891.

Petition for execution of a decree. The petitioner was entitled to a share of the income of a certain zamindari under the terms of a compromise entered into in a suit of 1809. The respondents purchased the zamindari in 1885 and resisted the claim of the petitioner, who accordingly brought a suit against them in 1887. In that suit a decree was passed declaring the right of the present petitioner to a charge on the zamindari in respect of his claim and awarding to him payment on account of one year and also costs. By the present petition execution was sought in respect of the payments due for five years and for costs. The petition was made in the suit of 1887 only. It was objected that the relief sought could not be obtained under the decree in that suit, and the [68] Subordinate Judge upheld this objection and refused an application to amend the petition by inserting a reference to the decree of 1809. On appeal the District Judge allowed this amendment to be made, and directed the Subordinate Judge "to restore the application to the file and proceed to dispose of it according to law."

The judgment-debtors preferred this appeal.

Desikachariar for Appellants.

Subramana Ayyar and Sundara Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—The application for execution was certainly defective, the error being not merely one of form. So far as respondent's claim to one-fourth, of the future profits of the zamindari was concerned, the decree in Original Suit No. 16 of 1887 was only declaratory and therefore incapable of execution, except for the mesne profits for fasli 1295. The decree that was capable of execution, as regards the mesne profits for other faslis claimed in the proceedings the subject of this appeal, was the compromise in the Suit of 1809 which has been treated as a decree from its date. This, therefore, was the decree which should have been mentioned in the application as the decree sought to be executed as regards the faslis subsequent to 1295. The substantial question is whether, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, the amendment ought to have been allowed.

We cannot agree with the contention of appellant's pleader that section 245* of the Civil Procedure Code is a bar to the amendment. That section is, in our opinion, analogous to the provisions of section 53, which directs the Court to return plaints before filing for amendment in certain particulars. It does not, therefore, take away the power of the Court under section 647,† by analogy to section 53‡ to amend the application for execution at any time before disposal.

* [Sec. 245 :—The Court, on receiving an application for the execution of a decree, shall the application be not so amended, it shall be rejected.

Attestation of amendment.

When a plaint is amended, the amendment shall be attested by the signature of the Judge.]

The next contention is that the amendment ought not to be allowed, because at the date it was applied for the right to profits for some of the faslis—the subject of the original application—was barred. No doubt the ordinary rule is that an amendment should be allowed only if it can be without prejudice to the rights of the opposite parties as existing at the time of the application for amendment. But this principle is to be applied with reference to [69] the special circumstances of each case. See Weldon v. Neal (L. R., 19 Q. B. D., 395). In the present case we are of opinion that there are peculiar circumstances which take it out of the ordinary rule. The object of the application was perfectly clear, although there was an error in the reference to the decree, an error not unnatural, considering the complicated nature of the previous proceedings. We also observe that even execution for fasli 1295 to which respondent was clearly entitled on his application as it stood, was not granted by the Subordinate Judge. Four objection petitions were presented by appellants, and it was not until the last of them was presented, nearly a year after the application for execution was first made, that the present objection was taken. We are of opinion that the general principle laid down by the Privy Council in Bissessur Lall Sahoo v. Maharaja Luchmessur Singh (L. R., 6 I. A., 233) should be followed unless its application is precluded by express provisions of the Legislature. Looking, therefore, at the substance of the application and the prior proceedings which are of a complicated character, we think that the decision of the District Judge was right, and we dismiss this appeal, but under the circumstances each party will bear his own costs.

[70] parties were Mapillas. The defendants pleaded (i) that the property had been given to them and their mother jointly ; (ii) that their mother was not governed by Marumakkatayam law. The Court of First Instance found the first-mentioned plea to be good and dismissed the suit, and also found that the family was governed by Marumakkatayam law. The Court of first appeal dissented from the above finding as to the first plea, and, without deciding the second point, remanded the case for the trial of a general issue as to the mode of devolution of self-acquired property in Marumakkatayam Mapilla families in North Malabar, and ultimately it dismissed the suit, ruling that in Marumakkatayam Mapilla families the self-acquired property of a female descends to her children and does not lapse on her death to her tarwad :

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of A. Thompson, District Judge of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 359 of 1891, confirming the decree of A. Venkata-ramana Pai, District Munsif of Tellicherry, in Original Suit No. 329 of 1890.

The plaintiff sued as karnavan of a Mapilla tarwad in North Malabar to recover property acquired by his late sister and now in the possession of her children.

The further facts of this case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the following judgment of the High Court.

Ryru Nambiar for Appellants.

Sankaran Nayar for Respondents Nos. 2 to 5.

Judgment.—The suit is brought by the karnavan of a tarwad, alleged by him to follow Marumakkatayam law, to recover property acquired by the plaintiffs' late sister, Mamotti. The defendants, who include the children of Mamotti, raise, among other defences, two pleas, either of which is a complete answer to the plaintiffs' claim. They say that Mamotti did not follow Marumakkatayam law, and that it was not to her only, but to her and her children that the property sought to be recovered was given. On the latter plea the defendants succeeded on the trial of the suit by the District Munsif, though he also found that the family was governed by Marumakkatayam law. There was, as he observed, no evidence to the contrary. Against the District Munsif's decree dismissing the suit, the plaintiff appealed, and he was successful in obtaining a reversal of the finding as to the title of Mamotti. The District Judge found on the first issue in the plaintiff's favour, and that finding we are bound to accept. Instead, however, of proceeding to consider the other issue and expressing [71] his agreement or disagreement with the District Munsif thereon, the District Judge—whether on his own motion or at the instance of the defendants does not appear—framed a new issue and directed the District Munsif to take fresh evidence and return a finding thereon. The issue so framed was as follows:—Whether in Marumakkatayam Mapilla families in North Malabar the devolution of self-acquired property is governed by ordinary Muhammadan law, or whether on the death of the acquirer it lapses to the tarwad ?

If this issue had been one of mere fact, the procedure of the District Judge might not have been open to exception ; it would have been a question whether the issue was raised by the pleadings, and whether the District Judge had exercised a wise discretion in giving an opening for a fresh inquiry ; certainly his reasons for allowing a new case to be set up are not satisfactory. But the issue raised by the District Judge was not a mere issue of fact. It was not even a question as to the custom prevailing in a particular family, but, as he himself says, a question as to what is the ordinary customary law in Mapilla families. The cases Vishnu v. Krishnan (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 3) and Vaidinada v. Appu (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 44) are authorities for the proposition that such an inquiry is allowable under certain circumstances. In those cases too, among others, the tests and the standard to which the evidence adduced to support an alleged usage should conform are given. In the present case, however, it does not appear that the Judge had before him a particle of evidence (excepting the opinions of two text writers) to justify an inquiry into the law regulating Mapilla families. In our opinion, therefore, the order of remand is one which ought not to have been passed under section 566 of the Code, and the proceedings taken under it are wholly irregular. Mr. Sankara Nayar has referred us to decisions of this Court in support of his contention that the conclusion at which the Judge has arrived is the right one. In Panangatt Unda Pakramar v. Vadakkal Suppi (Second Appeal No. 576 of 1883, unreported) this same question, viz., as to the descent of self-acquired property in a Mapilla family was raised. There was an inquiry, and it was found that Mapillas are governed in that respect by the ordinary Marumakkatayam law as declared in Kallati Kunju Menon v. Palat Erracha Menon (2 M. H. C. R., 162). That finding was accepted by the [72] High Court. In 1886 [Kunhi Pathumma v. Mama (Appeal No. 125 of 1885, unreported)], the question was raised again, an inquiry was again directed, and the finding was this time in favour of the deviation from Marumakkatayam law. The High Court accepted that finding so far as it concerned the particular family, holding that there was, as regards it, sufficient evidence of a special custom. As far as we are aware, the question has not been raised since in this Court, although there have been cases in which the contention now made would be relevant. In Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 201), the question referred to a Full Bench was as to the nature of the interest taken by a Mapilla woman and her children in a gift made to them. If, by the ordinary law of inheritance, the children, and not the tarwad generally, would succeed to the mother, the probability is that the gift would be made simply to her; but however that may be, the fact that such was the rule would have been strong to indicate that the tarwad took no interest under the gift. The evidence taken in the present case, so far as it is discussed in the judgments, certainly does not convince us of the existence of the alleged custom. The District Munsif gives good reason for holding it to be vague and uncertain, and the District Judge overruling that finding does not explain how evidence almost exclusively composed of recent documents can suffice to prove an ancient custom; nor indeed does he profess to hold that it is of a character to prove a custom in the manner required by a series of decided cases. Being of opinion that the order of remand was improperly made, and seeing that both the defences set up by the defendants have failed, we must hold that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment. We must accordingly reverse the decrees of the Courts below and remand the case to the Court of First Instance for trial on the seventh issue.

Respondents to pay costs of this appeal: other costs to be provided for in the revised decree.

NOTES.

[In (1909) 32 Mad., 351: 19 M.L.J., 350 F.B., it was held that the separate property of a member of the tarwad lapsed to the tarwad, while in (1912) 24 M.L.J., 240 F.B., it was held that this did not apply to the self-acquisitions of a female member of the tarwad. [73] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 21st March and 26th April, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Lakshmana.....(Defendant) Appellant

Rent Recovery Act—Madras Act VIII of 1865, s. 11—Implied contract as to rates of rent—Customary fees—Prohibition of buildings.

In order to support the inference of a contract under the Rent Recovery Act, Madras, section 11, from payment of the same rent for a given number of years, the intention that the same rent is payable in future years must be clear and unequivocal : it is unsafe to imply such a contract from a single lease for five years.

A patta is not unenforceable by reason of its providing for the payment of fees to village artisans in a case when such fees are customary, or by reason of its prohibiting the tenant from erecting buildings on his holding, if such prohibition is limited to erections not compatible with the agricultural character of the holding.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 405 of 1890, modifying the decision of L. M. Wynne, Acting Head Assistant Collector of Kistna.

* Suit by a zamindar against a tenant on his estate to enforce acceptance of a patta. The Head Assistant Collector directed certain alterations to be made in the patta tendered and his decision was modified by the District Judge.

The further facts of the case appear sufficiently for purposes of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

The defendant preferred this second appeal.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Appellant.

Subbamanya Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—These second appeals relate to suits brought by the zamindar of Nuzvid to compel the raiyats in the village of Kuyur to accept pattas for fasli 1297. The raiyats are the appellants and the zamindar is the respondent before us. The items in the pattas to which appellants object in second appeal are (i) the consolidated wet rate ; (ii) the fees to village artisans ; (iii) the tax on trees ; (iv) the condition that no land should be cultivated without first obtaining a patta ; (v) that no building [74] should be erected on lands in appellant's possession ; (vi) that no remissions are to be allowed, and (vii) that interest shall be paid on instalments of rent from the dates on which they fall due according to the kistbundi.

The first item is the most important and the history of the rates which prevailed in the village from fasli 1265 is given by the Head Assistant Collector in his judgment. It will be observed that the sharing system was in force till fasli 1264, that the money rates varied from faslis 1265 to 1292, and that from faslis 1292 to 1296 the raiyats accepted a five-years' lease. The rates mentioned in the patta tendered are those for which five-years' leases were accepted, but the appellants objected to those rates on the ground that they had executed the leases upon respondent's promise to repair certain channels and that the promise had not been kept. Their contention was that they should revert to the rates which prevailed at earlier periods, even as far back as the date of the permanent settlement. But it was in evidence that the rates paid from faslis 1285 to 1291 were Rs. 2-11-4 for dry land, Rs. 10 for mamul or old wet, and Rs. 8 for dry converted into wet, whereas from faslis 1292 to 1295 they were raised to Rs. 3 for dry land, Rs. 9, including water-tax, for dry converted into wet, and Rs. 10 for mamul wet land. Though appellants denied that there was any mamul wet land in the village, the Head Assistant Collector found, and the Judge agreed in the finding, that their allegation was not true, and that the mamul wet as entered in the pattas from faslis 1285 to 1291 extended to acres 358'32. The Head Assistant Collector refused to infer a contract from the five-years' lease and considered that Rs. 10 per acre for mamul wet, Rs. 2-11-4 for dry land and Rs. 2-11-4 plus the water-rate of Rs. 4 an acre for dry converted into wet were the proper rates to be inserted in the pattas. On appeal, the Judge inferred a contract from the five-years' lease, and rejected as not trustworthy the evidence produced by appellants to show that they took the lease for five years because the zamindar promised to excavate the channels. The Judge also expressed it as his opinion with reference to appellant's wish to revert to the rates which prevailed at the permanent settlement, that the rates paid from faslis 1285 to 1291 were at all events binding upon appellants if not the rates mentioned in the five-years' lease. The contention before us on appellant's behalf is that no contract can be lawfully implied [75] from the facts found, that no sanction was obtained from the Collector under the first proviso of section 11, Act VIII of 1865, for enhancing the rates, and that the lower Appellate Court acted illegally in enhancing the rates in these cases in which no memoranda of objections were filed by the zamindar.

We are of opinion that the decision of the Judge that there was an implied contract cannot be supported. In order to sustain the inference of a contract from payment of the same rate for a given number of years, the intention that the same rate is payable in future years, must be clear and unequivocal. Neither should the period be very short, nor should there be any other circumstance in the case inconsistent with such intention. The presumption is a matter of positive law under the Bengal Tenancy Act but under Act VIII of 1865 it is one of fact. In Apparau v. Narasanna (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 47) it was pronounced to be unsafe to imply a contract from a single lease extending to five years. It appears from later cases decided by the Judge that he considered nothing less than seven years was long enough to support the presumption. In the Full Bench case, there had been a continuous payment of the same rate for a period of not less than fourteen years. Again, the presumption arising from the duration of payment should also be tested by the other circumstances in evidence. In Siriparapu Ramanna v. Mallikarjuna Prasada Nayudu (see ante, p. 43) we have pointed out that in the absence of a contract, the sanction of the Collector is indispensable. The decision of the Judge must be set aside and that of the Head Assistant Collector restored in so far as it relates to the rates.

As regards the fees to village artisans the Judge finds that they are customary and there are no grounds for interference in second appeal. As regards the condition about building, the tenant is clearly not entitled to build a house except for purposes not incompatible with the character of the holding as an agricultural holding. With respect to the other considerations the Judge has followed the decision of the High Court in the Mustabad Mantena suits, dated the 29th October 1889 and 3rd March 1890.

The decree of the Judge will be set aside so far as it relates to rates of rent and that of the Head Assistant Collector restored, [76] and as regards the prohibition to build, the words "except for purposes not incompatible with the character of the holding as an agricultural holding" will be inserted, and in other respects the decree of the Judge is confirmed. The appeal has succeeded in part and failed in part, and we direct each party to bear his own costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 16th October, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Samia Pillai.....(Defendant No. 2) Appellant

Chockalinga Chettiar and another.....(Plaintiffs) Respondents.*

Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 179—Step in aid of execution—Defect in application for execution.

Where there has been in fact an application for execution made by the party entitled to make it, it is to be regarded as a step in aid of execution within the meaning of the Limitation Act, art. 179, although by mistake a deceased judgment-debtor is named as the person against whom execution is sought.

APPEAL against the order of T. Ramasami Ayyangar, Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 628 of 1891.

This was an application made on the 20th August 1891 for execution of a decree obtained by the petitioner in Original Suit No. 30 of 1883 against three defendants. In February 1891 a petition was filed praying for execution of the decree against defendant No. 1, who was then in fact dead. The Subordinate Judge held that the petitioners were at that time aware of the death of defendant No. 1 and that his name was inserted in the petition through a bona fide mistake. In this view he held that that petition should be treated as a step taken in aid of execution for the purposes of limitation, and he accordingly directed that execution should issue.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Appellant.

* Appeal against Order No. 84 of 1892.

Judgment.—The question for decision in this case is whether the last application for execution made on the 6th February 1891 was in accordance with law within the meaning of section 179 of schedule II of the Limitation Act so as to amount to a step in aid of execution sufficient to prevent the present application being time-barred.

That the application was presented by the party entitled to execute the decree and in order to obtain execution is not denied, but it is contended that as first defendant who was dead at the time was named as the party against whom execution was sought, the application must be treated as a nullity and consequently the present application held to be time-barred.

The Subordinate Judge observes that the mention of the deceased first defendant's name in column 9 of the application was probably a mistake made by the vakil's gumastah. It was no doubt a bona fide mistake. Where there has been in fact an application for execution made by the party entitled to make it, the mere fact of a mistake having been made in giving the particulars required by section 235* of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot, we think, have the effect of rendering the application a nullity. This is also the view adopted in Ramanadan v. Periatambi (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 250) and Fuzloor Ruhman v. Altaf Hossen (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 541). In this view the application of 6th February 1891 is sufficient to save limitation both against first defendant's legal representatives and also against his joint judgment-debtors.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Contribution, suit for—Joint tort-feasor—Adjustment of a loss arising from an illegal contract.

A deed of partition between A and B, members of an undivided Hindu family, provided that A, who took over all the debts due to the family, should bear the loss, if any, incurred in the appeal then pending in a suit brought by the family on a bond. The bond was held to evidence a fraudulent transaction, and the appeal was dismissed with costs. The decree for costs was executed against B and satisfied by him : he now sued the son of A (deceased) to recover the amount paid by him :

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, the claim not being barred by the rule against contribution between joint tort-feasors.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of V. Srinivasa Charlu, Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suit No. 350 of 1891, modifying the decree of T. M. Audinarayana Chettiar, District Munsif of Mannargudi, in Original Suit No. 169 of 1890.

The plaintiff and the father of the defendant were undivided brothers, and, in 1884, they brought a suit to recover Rs. 6,000 on the footing of a hypothecation bond. This suit was dismissed, and an appeal was preferred to the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal they entered into a partition, by which it was provided, inter alia, that the defendant's father should take over the debts due to the family and should bear alone the cost of the litigation above referred to. The appeal to the High Court was dismissed with costs on the ground that the bond in suit was supported by no consideration. The decree for costs was executed against the present plaintiff, and having satisfied the decree he now sued the infant son of his brother, since deceased, to recover, with interest, the amount so paid by him. The District Munsif passed a decree, as prayed, and this decree was upheld except as to the rate of interest by the Subordinate Judge.

[79] The defendant preferred this second appeal. *

Mr. R. F. Grant for Appellant.

Krishnasami Ayyar for Respondent.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—Appellant and respondent are the sons of two brothers. On the 25th October 1887 the latter and the father of the former, entered into a partition. An appeal was then pending in the High Court from the decision of the Subordinate Court of Negapatam in Original Suit No. 63 of 1884, which had been brought by them on a hypothecation bond executed in their favour by one Chokkammal Annee of Kulikarai. The partition deed provided, inter alia, that appellant's father should take for his share all the debts due to the joint family including the amount of the hypothecation bond, and that, if the appeal then pending was decided against them, appellant's father should pay all the costs of that litigation both in the Original and

* Second Appeal No. 1414 of 1892.

Appellate Courts. The appeal was dismissed in January 1889, and both the appellant's father and respondent were directed to pay Chokkammal's costs. One of her judgment-creditors took out execution against the judgment-debtors in Original Suit No. 63 of 1884, and recovered the costs from the respondent. The respondent's case was that he was entitled to recover the money paid by him from the appellant, and both the Courts below decreed the claim. It is urged in second appeal that the decree for contribution recognizes a claim contrary to public policy, and that the present suit is in the nature of a suit for contribution brought by one wrong doer against another. Original Suit No. 63 of 1884 was dismissed on the ground that the hypothecation bond was executed without consideration, and that it evidenced a fraudulent transaction. It is no doubt a clear proposition of law that one tort-feasor cannot recover contribution from another, but it is subject to this important qualification, viz., that where the loss arising from the illegal contract is adjusted, so that the adjustment is equivalent to a payment, the adjustment cannot be disturbed. It was so held in Owens v. Denton (1 C. M. & R., 712). In that case, the price due for malt illegally sold by plaintiff was included in an account stated and settled between the parties, and it was held by Lord Abinger that the adjustment was equivalent to payment in cash, and that it came within the rule that money paid in pursuance of [80] an illegal contract shall not be claimed back again. No contribution is allowed between joint tort-feasors because the community of wrong between them is the foundation of the action, but the same community of wrong precludes the defendant from recovering what he has paid in consequence of the illegal act. If the loss arising from the wrongful act is adjusted by an account stated between the parties or by a partition deed, as in this case, it is equivalent to payment since it is no longer necessary for the plaintiff to rely on the community of wrong in support of his claim.

The same community of wrong that would prevent the plaintiff from claiming contribution if there were no adjustment by partition likewise prevents the defendant from disturbing the adjustment which is equivalent to payment. The loss arising from the decision in Original Suit No. 63 of 1884 was a loss which devolved on the coparcenary family, and the partition deed under which the party who took all the debts due to the family agreed to bear the loss, if any, arising from the failure of the suit brought by the family to recover one of those debts is an adjustment which the defendant is not at liberty to go behind for raising a defence from the community of wrong in which he participated. The fact that the partition was made pending the decision of the appeal makes no difference in principle.

No other question is argued on appeal, and I would dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Best, J.—The point urged before us is that plaintiff's suit is not maintainable, as the agreement sued on is opposed to public policy and therefore void.

The agreement sued on is part and parcel of the partition deed, under which plaintiff and his uncle, the father of the appellant (defendant) divided the family property.

This division took place pending Original Suit No. 50 of 1887 in this Court.

That was an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Nega-patam, which dismissed a suit brought by plaintiff and his uncle (the father of defendants) for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 4,000 and interest as due under a hypothecation bond executed by one Murugattal Annee. This Murugattal Annee (as first defendant) admitted the then plaintiff's claim, but one Chockkammal Annee, who was the second defendant, denied the [81] executant's right to encumber the property, and pleaded that the hypothecation bond was fictitious. The finding of this Court was that the hypothecation sued on was a colorable transaction. The appeal was therefore dismissed with costs.

As already observed, it was, while that appeal was pending, that this plaintiff and the father of defendant effected a partition of their family property; and in the deed of partition after mentioning the pending appeal, and after allotting the debt in question to this appellant's father exclusively, it is stipulated that the latter shall pay the entire costs of that suit in both Courts in case the appeal should fail, and it is further stipulated that "if Naranappien (appellant's father) does not pay the same, and if any sums are collected from Ramasawmi Iyen (present respondent) in execution proceedings, those sums shall be collected from Naranappien by Ramasawmi Iyen amicably or through the Court." It is this contingency that has happened; and the question is whether plaintiff is debarred from recovering the costs paid by him by reason of the same having been incurred in a suit brought on a bond which was found to be a colorable transaction.

This is not a suit for "contribution" like Manja v. Kadugochen (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 89), and Suput Singh v. Imrit Tewari (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 720); but for the enforcement of one of the terms of the partition deed, appellant's father would have been exclusively entitled to the whole of the amount then sued for had the appeal succeeded, and he could not have been allowed to disclaim his liability for the costs merely because the appeal failed. The contract is part and parcel of the partition deed from which it is inseparable, and, unless the partition can also be set aside, it is not open to the appellant to deny his liability for the amount now sought to be recovered from him.

This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

was joined as second defendant. The suit was dismissed in the Court of First Instance, but the Court of first appeal passed a decree as prayed in the plaint : and in execution the principal amount of the rent claimed, which had been paid into Court by the first defendant with the request that it should be paid out to the person entitled to it, was paid over to the plaintiff. The first defendant preferred a second appeal against the decree, so far as it awarded interest and costs : this second appeal was dismissed. The second defendant, however, preferred against the entire decree a second appeal which was successful, and the High Court dismissed the suit throughout. On an application by the first defendant for refund of the money paid by him as stated above :

Held, that the applicant was not entitled to the refund claimed.

APPEAL against the order of W. C. Holmes, District Judge of South Canara in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 51 of 1891, confirming the order of U. Babu Rau, District Munsif of Udipi, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 493 of 1891.

In 1886 a suit was brought by a plaintiff, since deceased and now represented by the respondent to the above petition, to receive from J. Luis, the present petitioner, a sum of money on account of rent accrued due on certain land in the defendant's possession. The plaintiff claimed to be the mortgagee of the land in question from the late trustee of the Puttigi Mutt. The trustee who had succeeded to office at the time of the suit, and who had been included in the suit as the second defendant, disputed the validity of the mortgage and claimed to be entitled to the rent in question. The Court of First Instance passed a decree dismissing the suit, but this decree was reversed by the District Court and in execution of the appellate decree, the [83] plaintiff received out of Court a sum, which had been paid in by Luis as the principal sum with the request that it should be paid out to the party entitled to it. Against the decree of the District Court, however, Luis preferred a second appeal, on the ground that he was not liable to pay interest and costs : and the second defendant preferred a second appeal against the appellate decree in its entirety impleading both the plaintiff and Luis. Luis' second appeal was dismissed, but on the second appeal preferred by second defendant, the High Court restored the original decree in the suit by which, as above stated, the suit was dismissed.

The present petition was preferred by Luis to recover the sum paid by him under the circumstances appearing above. Both the lower Courts held that he was entitled to the refund claimed. The representative to the plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

The further facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the judgment of Mr. Justice BEST.

Narayana Rau for Appellant.

Ranga Rau for Respondent.

Best, J.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge, directing the appellant, who was plaintiff in the suit, to refund to the respondent, who was the first defendant, money paid by the latter on account of rent admittedly due on the land, of which respondent was tenant. The land belongs to the Puttigi Mutt at Udipi, and had been mortgaged to the appellant by Sumatindra Swami as trustee of the Mutt. The validity of Sumatindra's appointment to the trusteeship was under litigation at the time of the mortgage, and was eventually decided against him. The rent, in question, was claimed also by Sudindra Swami, who was eventually declared the rightful trustee. He was consequently included as second defendant in the suit. The money was deposited in Court by the respondent with the request that it might be paid to whichever of the claimants might be found entitled to it. The Court of First Instance dismissed the plaintiff's, i. e., appellant's suit, but on appeal that decision was reversed, and thereupon the money was paid to appellant. But in second appeal preferred by Sudindra Swami, the second defendant in the suit, this Court reversed the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restored that of the District Munsif. Hence the application out of which the present appeal has arisen, for restitution to first defendant of the money wrongly paid to plaintiff. The District [84] Court has upheld the order of the District Munsif in favour of the respondent, and from that order this second appeal is preferred by the plaintiff.

It is contended on behalf of appellant that respondent is not entitled to restitution under section 583* of the Code of Civil Procedure, as there is no decree in his favour, he not having been an appellant, but merely a respondent (jointly with the present appellant) in the Second Appeal No. 657 of 1889, in which was passed this Court's decree dismissing the present appellant's suit; whereas the appeal (Second Appeal No. 778 of 1889) preferred by this respondent from the same decree (which appeal was dismissed) related only to interest and costs.

The contention on behalf of appellant is that the respondent "was not declared entitled to any benefit under any decree so as to claim restitution." I do not understand this contention to mean that restitution can only be made under section 583 of the Code, in cases in which it is expressly directed by the decree; such a contention would clearly be bad. Balvantrav Oze v. Sadrudin (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 485). I understand the contention on behalf of appellant to be that respondent is not entitled to the restitution sought, as there is no decree whatever in his favour. This contention is, I think, valid. The decree in Second Appeal No. 657 of 1889 was a decree in favour of the second defendant in that suit; and if, as the result of that decree, it happens that the money was wrongly paid to the present appellant, it is for that second defendant to ask the Court to get it back and pay it to himself as the party entitled to the same, it having been paid into Court by this respondent for payment to whichever of the two claimants before it in the same suit might be found entitled to the same.

Respondent having paid the money into Court in a suit to which both the claimants were parties, is fully discharged from all liability; and in the absence of a decree in his favour, he is entitled to no refund from the appellant. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, and, setting aside the order of both the Courts below, dismiss respondent's application with costs throughout.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I agree. The payment was not made into Court under chapter XXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure, for such payment presupposes an admission of the plaintiff's [83] claim to the extent of the payment. In the present case the payment was made with the request that the money should be paid out to the party really entitled to the rent. It is a payment made under the impression that the suit though brought by the plaintiff might be treated as being in the nature of an interpleader proceeding under section 490,* Civil Procedure Code. The Munsif was wrong in ordering the money to be paid out to the plaintiff without security before the decision of the second appeal, and the party entitled to put him in motion in order to rectify this error, and to call for a refund is the second defendant. The first defendant is, therefore, not entitled to ask for a refund, and I concur in the order proposed by my learned colleague.

Judgment.—It is urged on petitioners' behalf that the document sued upon is not a negotiable instrument but an instrument of pledge. It is in these terms :—"On deposit of title-deeds I promise to pay you or order Rs. 160 for value received." The words 'or order,' show that the intention was that the promissory note should circulate from hand to hand, and the question therefore is, whether the terms 'on deposit of title-deeds' control its operation and restrain its negotiability. Deposit of title-deeds as a collateral security does not make a promissory note the less a negotiable instrument, and it was so held in Wise v. Charlton (4 Ad. & E., 790). Do the words 'on deposit of title-deeds,' import in the case before us more than that a collateral security is also given, or in any way restrain the operation of the promissory note as a negotiable instrument? We do not think an allusion to the mere deposit of title-deeds makes the payment contingent or otherwise qualifies the operation of the document as a negotiable instrument. In our opinion it is not material whether the words occur in the same sentence which expresses the promise, as in this case, or in an additional sentence as in Wise v. Charlton (4 Ad. & E., 790). The language of the instrument in its plain ordinary sense only signifies that a loan was made and that title-deeds were deposited as a collateral security, and there is nothing to show that the intention was to qualify the operation of the note as a negotiable instrument or to [87] regard the pledge as the primary transaction and the promissory note only as a further security. This is the only point argued, and we dismiss this petition with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 11th, and 13th April 1893.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE DAVIES.

Raman Nayar.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Subramanya Ayyan.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Defamation—Privilege of Judge.

An action for defamation cannot be maintained against a Judge for words used by him whilst trying a cause in Court even though such words are alleged to be false, malicious and without reasonable cause.

APPEAL against the order of A. Thompson, District Judge of North Malabar, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1892, rejecting a plaint under Civil Procedure Code, s. 4 (c), on the ground that the suit was barred by the provisions of Act XVIII of 1850.

The plaintiff had been a party to certain suits pending in the Court of a District Munsif, and it was averred in the present plaint that when the suits came on for hearing, the District Munsif used certain expressions "in connection with me wilfully and unnecessarily with a malicious intention of putting me to disgrace and without reasonable cause." The above-mentioned words, it was averred, were used neither in the judicial capacity of a Judge who was going on with the trial nor for the purpose of the suit under trial. The plaintiff now sought a decree for damages against the defendant, the said District Munsif, on account of the defamation above referred to. The plaint having been rejected as above stated, the plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Mr. Wedderburn for Appellant.

The Acting Government Pleader (Subramanya Ayyar) and Sundara Ayyar for Respondent.

[88] Judgment.—This was an action for slander, and it was alleged in the plaint that the words complained of were uttered by the defendant, who is the Munsif of Payoli, during the hearing of a suit to which the plaintiff was a party.

The District Judge rejected the plaint under section 54* (c), Civil Procedure Code, holding that the suit was barred under a positive rule of law, and that Act XVIII of 1850 applied.

The real question for our decision is, can an action for slander be maintained against a Judge for words used by him whilst trying a cause in Court even though such words were alleged to be false, malicious and without reasonable cause.

This question has long been decided in the negative by the Courts in England on the grounds of public policy, and we think that the English law is applicable to Courts in India. In Scott v. Stansfield (L. R., 3 Ex., 220), the facts were very similar to the present case, and the Court of Exchequer consisting of KELLY, C.B., and MARTIN, BRAMWELL and CHANNELL, B.B., unanimously decided that such an action would not lie; the reasons given were that it is essential in all Courts that the Judges who are appointed to administer the law should be permitted to administer it under the protection of the law, independently and freely without favour and without fear. This provision of the law is not for the protection or benefit of a malicious or corrupt Judge, but for the benefit of the public, whose interest it is that the Judges do exercise their functions with independence and without fear of consequences. In Dawkins v. Lord Rokeby (L. R., 8 Q. B., 255), the Court of Exchequer Chamber consisting of ten Judges held that the authorities are clear, uniform and conclusive that no action of slander lies against Judges . . . for words spoken in the ordinary course of any proceeding before any Court or Tribunal recognised by law. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that the English authorities on this subject apply to Judges and Courts in India. See Sullivan v. Norton (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 28).

When plaint shall be rejected. * [Sec. 54 :—The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases :—

- (c) if the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any positive rule of Law.
- (d) if the plaint, having been returned for amendment within a time fixed by the Court, is not amended within such time].

Act XVIII of 1850 quoted by the District Judge does not appear to apply in a case like the present.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Veerasami and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.

Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, arts. 137, 138—Purchase at Court auction—Suit for possession of land—Date of cause of action—Construction of enactment.

In a suit for possession of land instituted on 1st April 1891, it appeared that the land in question had been purchased by the plaintiff in a Court auction held in execution of a decree on 20th June 1878, and that the sale to the plaintiff was confirmed on 31st March 1879, which was the date upon which the certificate issued. The plaintiff failed to prove that the judgment-debtor was out of possession at or subsequently to the date of the sale :

Held that the suit was governed by Limitation Act, sch. II, art. 138 ; that " the date of the sale " in that article means the date of the actual sale not the date of the confirmation of the sale, and that accordingly the suit was barred by limitation.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of B. Sundara Rau, Subordinate Judge of Ellore, in Appeal Suit No. 433 of 1891, confirming the decree of V. Krishnamurthi Pantulu in Original Suit No. 109 of 1891.

Suit for land. The property in question was brought to sale in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 654 of 1873 and had been purchased at Court auction by the present plaintiff on 20th June 1878. The sale was confirmed and certificate issued on 31st March 1879. Delivery of the property, however, was not made through the Court or otherwise, and the auction purchaser now sued to recover the property in question. The plaint was filed on 1st April, 1891, and the defendants raised a plea of limitation. This plea prevailed in the lower Courts. The Subordinate Judge observed that an averment in the memorandum of appeal filed in his Court to the effect that the defendants had been out of possession for four years after the sale did not appear in the plaint and appeared to have been made as an after-thought in order to bring the suit within Limitation Act, sch. II, art. 137.

[90] The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

* Second Appeal No. 1441 of 1892.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Sriranga Charyar for Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts of this case as found by the Courts below are shortly these :—Appellant purchased the land in dispute at the Court-sale held in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 654 of 1873 on the file of the District Munsif of Narsapur. The property was put up to sale and knocked down to appellant as the highest bidder on the 20th June 1878. It was, however, on the 31st March 1879 that the sale was confirmed. The sale certificate bears that date whilst this suit was brought on 1st April 1891. The question for determination is whether the Courts below are right in holding that the suit was barred by article 138 of the second schedule of the Act of Limitation. For appellant (plaintiff) it is urged first, that there is no evidence to show that the judgment-debtor was in possession of the property in dispute at the date of the Court-sale, and that even if that article applied, the sale referred to in the third column is not the actual sale but the sale which has been confirmed and became absolute.

Article 137 * premises an execution sale at the time when the judgment-debtor is out of possession, and article 138 † presupposes a case in which the judgment-debtor is in possession of the property sold. According to the former the time from which the period begins to run is when the judgment-debtor becomes first entitled to possession, and according to the latter time runs from the date of the sale. Referring to appellant's contention that defendants were out of possession for four years after the sale, the Subordinate Judge observes that the plaint did not state so, and that the allegation in the memorandum of appeal was an after-thought. The first issue fixed in this case was whether the suit was barred, and it was thus open to appellant to have proved that the judgment-debtor had been out of possession for four years after the sale, but he tendered no evidence on the point. The onus of proof was on appellant, and we cannot say that the Subordinate Judge was in error in considering his allegation as untrustworthy, especially when the plaintiff himself stated before the District Munsif that he asked the defendants to quit the land in dispute until four or five years after taking the certificate and not subsequently.

The next question is whether assuming that article 138 is [91] applicable to this suit, the claim is barred. If the word sale in the third column of that article means actual sale, the claim is clearly barred; but, if it means the sale which is confirmed, the suit is in time. In its plain ordinary meaning the word sale means the auction-sale itself, and it is used in article 166 in that sense. Article 12, which refers to a sale that is confirmed, indicates also that the Legislature intentionally used the word without any qualification.

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.

But it is argued that under section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure the title to the immoveable property purchased vests in the purchaser from the time when the sale is confirmed and not before, and as no purchaser can sue for possession before the property passes to him, the term sale in column 3 of article 138 must be taken to signify, as in article 12, the sale which is confirmed. The direction in section 316 of the Code of Civil Procedure concerning the date on which the title to immoveable property purchased at a Court-sale vests is not to be found in Act X of 1877, of which the corresponding section provides for the grant of a certificate, stating "the name of the person who, at the time of sale, is declared to be the purchaser and the date of such sale." With reference to that section it has been held that when the sale is confirmed it relates back to the auction-sale, and the property vests in the purchaser from the date of such sale. It was so held by the High Court at Calcutta in Kishori Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Chunder Nath Pal (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 644), and by a Full Bench of the same Court in Bhyrub Chunder Bundopadhya v. Soudamini Dabee (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 145). It was by Act XII of 1879 that the clause "title shall vest in the purchaser from the time when the sale is confirmed" was introduced into section 316. Though it was then open to the Legislature to have altered the word sale in the third column of article 138 of the Limitation Act, yet they have not done so. The same word cannot mean the actual sale in one place and the sale which is confirmed in another place in the same Act. The omission to alter the word sale into sale which is confirmed may be due to oversight, but the result of the grammatical interpretation must in law prevail when there is no ambiguity. We observe also that the sale in this case took place in June 1878, whereas section 316 was not modified till 1879.

[92] We are of opinion that the Courts below are right in holding that the suit is barred by article 138 of the Indian Limitation Act, and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

NOTES.

[See also (1900) 25 Bom., 275; the C. P. C. 1908, in view of the previous conflict of cases makes explicit provision to the effect that the sale operates from its date and not from its confirmation.]

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 12th July, 1893.

PRESENT:

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Venkatasubbu and another.....(Defendants) Appellants

Appusundram..... (Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, s. 20—Suit for money—Payment on account of principal within the period of limitation—Evidence of such payment by writing made after period expired.

The obligee of a registered mortgage bond, dated 30th January 1875, sued in February 1891 to recover from the obligor the principal and interest remaining due thereunder. In bar of limitation the plaintiff relied on entries of part-payments from time to time in an account written by the defendant. These part-payments were made at such times as to keep alive the obligee's right of suit up to the date of the last of them. The last of those payments was made on a date which was less than six years (the period of limitation for the suit) before the date of institution of the suit, but it was not entered in the defendant's accounts until after the date when the claim would otherwise have been barred by limitation:

Held, that the provisions of Limitation Act, section 20*, were satisfied, and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

APPEAL against the judgment of Mr. Justice BEST sitting on the Original Side of the Court in Civil Suit No. 32 of 1891.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for purposes of this report from the judgment of Mr. Justice BEST.

Best, J.—The suit is for Rs. 4,442-5-6, balance of principal and interest due to plaintiff under the registered mortgage bond A, dated 30th January 1875, executed by first defendant for a sum of Rs. 9,100. Second defendant is the son of first defendant. Defendants pleaded that they were entitled to credit for a further sum of Rs. 191-4-11, being amount of assessment and quit-rent [93] paid by them on account of plaintiff's property. They further pleaded that the suit is time-barred, in that it is merely for a personal decree against the defendants for a debt payable so far back as 31st December 1877.

* Original Side Appeal No. 30 of 1892.

Effect of payment of interest as such. ?[Sec. 20:—When interest on a debt or legacy before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt or legacy, or by his agent duly authorized in this behalf,

Effect of part-payment of principal. or when part of the principal of a debt is before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorized in this behalf.

A new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the payment was made.

Provided that, in the case of part-payment of the principal of a debt, the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same.

Effect of receipt of produce of mortgaged land. Where mortgaged land is in the possession of the mortgagee, the receipt of the produce of such land shall be deemed to be a payment for the purpose of this section.]

It must here be noticed that plaintiff has explained in the plaint his reason for asking for a simple money decree, viz., because the defendants have from time to time taken from the plaintiff all the title-deeds of the properties mentioned above and mortgaged them with others using the money so raised for a deposit with Messrs. DeClosets and Co., where the second defendant was employed as a Dubash.

The following are the issues recorded on the above pleadings:—

I. Is the suit barred by limitation?

II. Are defendants entitled to a credit of Rs. 191-4-11 as in paragraph 1 of the written statement mentioned?

Plaintiff now admits that defendants are entitled to credit for Rs. 191-4-11 as claimed by them. This disposes of the second issue.

The only point for consideration is, therefore, whether the suit for a merely money decree is time-barred.

Plaintiff has produced the account B as containing in the handwriting of first defendant himself admissions of part-payments sufficient under section 20 of the Limitation Act to keep alive the claim for a simple money decree. This account B, plaintiff swears, was given to him by second defendant. It begins with an entry of Rs. 7,050 as due on the 31st December 1881 which amount is gradually reduced by payments made from time to time, on several occasions in each year from 1882 to 1888, leaving on the 31st December 1888 a balance of Rs. 2,073-14-10; to which a sum of Rs. 1,995-2-1 is added, as the total of interest due, calculated up to that date. Plaintiff swears that the entries up to 15th June 1888 are in the handwriting of first defendant, and it is contended that, as the suit is brought within six years from that date, Exhibit A being a registered document, it is not open to the objection of the limitation bar.

On the other hand it is contended on behalf of defendants that in order to be of use under section 20 of the Limitation Act, the handwriting of the person making the payment referred to in [94] the proviso in section 20 must have come into existence before the expiration of the prescribed period, within which the part-payment must be made. To hold thus would be to import into the proviso (clause 4) words that are not to be found in it. It seems to me that if the fact of the part-payment having been made within the prescribed period appears in the handwriting of the person making it, the mere fact of this handwriting coming into existence after the period prescribed for the payment will not render such handwriting useless for the purpose of saving a claim from the limitation bar. The payments entered in B were made either on account of principal or on account of interest. If the latter, the mere fact of the payment would be sufficient for the purposes of section 20. But as it does not appear from B that the payments were made on account of the interest as such, they must be taken to have been made as part-payment of the principal amount; and the fact of such payment appearing in the handwriting of first defendant as proved by plaintiff (and not rebutted by the defendants), I find that this suit is not barred.

I give plaintiff a money decree, therefore, for the amount claimed less the Rs. 191-4-11 referred to in the second issue, and less a further sum of Rs. 112-10-0 which plaintiff admits has been paid to him subsequent to the institution of this suit.

Defendants are directed to pay the above amount to plaintiff with further interest on the same at 6 per cent. per annum from date of suit to date of payment, as also plaintiff's costs on the above amount, and plaintiff will pay defendants' costs on Rs. 191-4-11.

The defendants preferred this appeal.

Sundaram Sastri for Appellants.

Bhashyam Ayyangar and Sivagnana Mudaliar for Respondent.

Judgment.—We think the learned Judge was right. The section does not require that the writing should be made before the expiration of the period. It only requires a writing as the mode of proving the fact of payment. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Religious Endowments Act--Act XX of 1863, s. 14—Applicability of the Act.

In a suit, brought with the leave of the District Court under Act XX of 1863, to remove the trustees of a Hindu temple, it did not appear that the trustees were nominated by or subject to the confirmation of the Government or any public officer :

Held, that Act XX of 1863 was not applicable to the temple unless it was admitted or proved by evidence that the endowment was one which would have fallen under the provisions of Regulation VII of 1817.

APPEAL against the decree of J. A. Davies, District Judge of Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 3 of 1891.

The plaintiff sued for a decree removing the defendants from the office of trustees of a temple at Alagumangalam, having previously obtained the sanction of the District Court under Act XX of 1863. The first issue framed raised the question whether that Act was applicable to the temple in question. The District Judge held with reference to Fakurudin Sahib v Acken Sahib (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 197) that he had jurisdiction in the case and he passed a conditional decree in the form employed in Sivasankara v. Vadagiri (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 6).

Venkatasubba Ayyar for Appellants.

Sivagnana Mudaliar for Respondent.

* Appeal No. 40 of 1892.

Judgment.—The first contention raised by the appellants, both at the grant of sanction and at the hearing of the suit, was that the provisions of Act XX of 1863 do not apply to the plaint temple. The District Judge overruled this objection, on the ground that it was not denied that the public have a right of service in the plaint temple.

The suit was disposed of without taking any evidence, and we can find no note of the Judge or anything else on the record to show [96] that any such admission was made. On the contrary, the second paragraph of the written statement commences with a denial that the temple is a common place of worship, either for plaintiff or other Kammalas or for other Hindu castes. It does not appear that the trustees were nominated by or subject to the confirmation of the Government or any public officer. Unless, therefore, the endowment was one which would have fallen under the provisions of Regulation VII of 1817, it will not fall under the provisions of Act XX of 1863. See Fakurudin Sahib v. Acken Sahib (I. L. R., 2 Mad, 197) and Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundal (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 32). We do not think this case can be disposed of without recording evidence. We must, therefore, set aside the decree of the District Judge and remand the suit for rehearing. The costs will follow the result.

Transfer of Property Act—Act IV of 1882, ss. 92, 93—Decree for redemption—Mortgagor's failure to pay amount due within period fixed—Subsequent suit, no order under section 93 having been made—Res judicata.

A decree under section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act becomes a final decree on the expiry of the time limited thereby, although no order is passed under section 93: accordingly, no subsequent suit for redemption can be maintained.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of C. Venkobachariar, Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 365 of 1892, affirming the decree of T. M. Adinarayana Chettiar, District Munsif of Mannargudi, in Original Suit No. 66 of 1891.

* Second Appeal No. 241 of 1893.

Suit for redemption of a mortgage executed in 1886 by the plaintiff's vendor to the predecessor in title of the defendants under which it appeared that possession had passed to the mortgagee. [97] The plaintiff had previously brought Original Suit No. 241 of 1886 on the file of the District Munsif of Mannargudi for the redemption of the same mortgage, and on 30th September 1887 a decree was passed which directed that "on the plaintiff paying to the defendants Nos. 2 to 7 or depositing in Court within three months from this date Rs. 67, he will be entitled to take possession of the plaint items Nos. 1 to 6, and in default, he will be debarred from redeeming them thereafter." This decree was affirmed on appeal and in 1889 the plaintiff applied in execution for an order that possession be delivered to him on payment of the amount specified. He obtained the order sought and gained possession of the land, but the High Court reversed the order and dismissed his application on the ground that it was too late.

The prayer of the present plaint was for a decree "directing the defendants to receive from plaintiff the mortgage debt and to return to him all the documents relating to the mortgage, and holding that the mortgage has been redeemed and for such other relief as the nature of the suit may admit." The third issue framed in the suit was as follows:—"Whether the plaintiff's right of redemption has been extinguished by the decree in the former Suit No. 241 of 1886?" The plaintiff's contention was that the equity of redemption was kept alive by reason of the fact that no order had been made under Transfer of Property Act, s. 93.

The District Munsif decided this issue in favour of the defendant pointing out that the mortgage in question was not in his view a usufructuary mortgage and also expressing the opinion that the Transfer of Property Act was inapplicable to the suit, and he accordingly dismissed the suit.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal affirmed this decree concurring in the opinion that the Transfer of Property Act was inapplicable, and observing "the deed of mortgage is not on record and it is not easy to say what the real nature of the mortgage is, but as it is merged in the decree, the latter is the proper guide for determining the question."

Narasimha Chariar for Appellant.

Krishnasami Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—We consider that the decree in Suit No. 241 of 1886 on the Mannargudi Munsif's file was a final decree inasmuch as it decreed according to the last clause of section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act, that in case of default in payment [98] within the stipulated time, the plaintiff was to be debarred of his right of redemption. Orders passed under section 93 are, in our opinion, merely supplementary to the decree under section 92, showing whether the terms of the decree have or have not been fulfilled. It is clear that in this case when the three months' time allowed in the decree had elapsed without payment being made, no extension of time for payment having been granted, the decree became a final decree without any further orders being required. That decree then being a final one after confirmation in appeal, the present suit being based on precisely the same cause of action as that suit is, of course, barred as res judicata.

The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act—Act IV of 1882, ss. 108; sub-s. (e), 117—Agricultural lease—Lease of a coffee garden—Destruction of plants by fire—Voidability of lease.

The plaintiff was the assignee of the right and title of the lessor and the defendant was the lessee of a coffee garden, under an instrument which was held to constitute a lease of the coffee plants only. In a suit to recover the annual payment reserved under the lease, it appeared that the coffee plants had been destroyed by fire and the garden had been consequently abandoned by the defendant before the period to which the claim related :

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

Per cur : We are clearly of opinion that a lease of a coffee garden is not an agricultural lease within the meaning of Transfer of Property Act, s. 117.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of E. K. Krishnan, Subordinate Judge of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 823 of 1891, reversing the decree of J. A. DeRozario, District Munsif of Vytri, in Original Suit No. 41 of 1891.

The plaintiff sued as the assignee of the title and interest of [99] defendant No. 1 by whom as it was alleged a portion of coffee estate held on kulikanapattam had been leased to defendant No. 2 in consideration of an annual payment which had fallen into arrears. The defendant No. 2 alleged that he had been admitted as a partner in the first defendant's share in the estate and that he was liable only for a proportionate part of the jenmabogam assessed thereon. This, he averred, he had paid up to 1883, when a conflagration occurred destroying all the coffee bushes on the estate, which had since been overgrown with thick jungle. The District Munsif held that the defendant No. 2 was nevertheless liable to the plaintiff and accordingly passed a decree as prayed. This decree was reversed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge and the plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Sankaran Nayar and Ryrn Nambiar for Appellant.

Sankara Menon and Govindan Nambiar for Respondent.

Judgment.—We are clearly of opinion that a lease of a coffee garden is not an agricultural lease within the meaning of section 117 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is argued that section 108 does not apply, because the money sought to be recovered is not rent and the property was not destroyed. Looking at the plaint and the karar B, we think the relation of lessor and lessee was asserted and in fact existed. It is rent which the plaintiff seeks to recover. It is not disputed that the whole of the plants situated in the part included in the karar was absolutely destroyed, and the second defendant in consequence abandoned the garden. If, as a matter of fact, the land only had been the subject of the demise it might be doubtful whether section 108, Transfer of Property Act, applied. But that is not the case. As far as we can gather from karar B the lease was of the coffee plants only. We think, therefore, the Subordinate Judge is right and accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Letters Patent of the High Court, s. 15—Appeal—District Municipalities Act (Madras)—Act IV of 1884, ss. 53, 59, 60—Profession tax—Trader—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act—Act IX of 1887, ss. 25, 27.

A petition for revision preferred under Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, s. 25, was heard and dismissed by one of the Judges of the High Court acting under the rules of Court framed under s. 13 of the Charter Act. The petitioner preferred an appeal under Letters Patent, s. 15 :

Held, that the appeal was not barred under Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, s. 27 and was maintainable.

One who makes it his business to sell the produce of his own land for profit is a trader within the meaning of Madras Act IV of 1884, provided the sales are conducted in a shop or place of business.

Held by PARKER, J., that one who has paid profession tax as a Sheristadar in one municipality is not on that account exempted from paying a further tax in respect of a trade carried on by him in another municipality under Act IV of 1884, Madras.

APPEAL under Letters Patent, s. 15, against the judgment of Mr. Justice PARKER on Civil Revision Petition No. 27 of 1892.

That was a petition under Provincial Small Cause Courts Act IX of 1887, s. 25, praying the High Court to revise the proceedings of K. Somayajulu Pantulu, District Munsif of Sompeta, in Small Cause Suit No. 133 of 1891.

The plaintiff was the Taluk Sheristadar, and as such had paid profession tax under Act IV of 1884 (Madras) to the Municipality of Chittoor. Subsequently he was assessed to pay a further tax as a trader in Parlakimedi. He paid the amount demanded under protest and brought the present suit against the Chairman of the Municipal Council of Parlakimedi to recover the amount so paid. The suit was dismissed by the District Munsif and the plaintiff preferred the petition above referred to. The [101] petition was dismissed by Mr. Justice PARKER, who delivered judgment as follows :—

* Letters Patent Appeal No. 8 of 1893

Parker, J.—The petitioner is a Taluk Sheristadar at Chicacole and has paid one rupee profession tax in that municipality. He has now been assessed as a grain merchant at Parlakimedi and sues to recover from the Chairman of that municipal council the amount which has been levied from him.

It is first urged that petitioner does not carry on trade in grain since the paddy which he sold was grown on his own lands. I am unable to accede to this contention. The petitioner contends that he cannot be said to trade in grain unless he bought the grain before he sold it. If this be so, no owner of a tea or coffee estate could be said to trade. The term 'trade' is not defined in the Act, but the meaning of the term as given in Wharton's Law Lexicon includes the exchange of goods for other goods or for money. I am of opinion that the petitioner does trade in grain.

The next contention is that as petitioner has paid profession tax at Chicacole, he cannot be taxed at Parlakimedi for the same year under section 60, Madras Act IV of 1884. In support of this contention I am referred to decisions in Tuticorin Municipality v. South Indian Railway (I.L.R., 13 Mad., 78) and Municipal Council of Tellicherry v. Bank of Madras (I.L.R., 15 Mad., 153). In the first of these cases it was held that a railway company having paid profession tax at Negapatam was not liable to be assessed for the same half year at Tuticorin. In the second case it was held that the Bank of Madras having paid profession tax at Negapatam was not liable for the same tax at Tellicherry. But in both these cases it was the same business that was carried on, though in two different places. In the present case the petitioner carries on one business at Chicacole and another at Parlakimedi. He does not carry on grain trade at Chicacole or his work as Sheristadar at Parlakimedi. He cannot, therefore, be taxed in either municipality under section 59 upon his aggregate income from both sources, nor can he be assessed under section 53 upon more than one source of income in each municipality. Section 60 exempts a person from paying in a second municipality the tax which has been assessed under section 53 in another municipality. But petitioner has not been assessed, nor could he be assessed as a [102] trader in grain at Chicacole under section 53, and therefore he is not exempted by section 60 from paying at Parlakimedi.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

The petitioner preferred the present appeal under Letters Patent, s. 15. Mr. Anderson and Sriranga Chariar for Appellant.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson) for Respondent.

Judgment.—The preliminary objection is taken that the petitioner's remedy is exhausted by the order passed by Mr. Justice PARKER under section 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act, from which it is contended no appeal is allowable by reason of section 27, which declares the decrees or orders of the Small Cause Court to be final, subject to the provisions of that Act. We observe that the revision contemplated in section 25 is by the 'High Court'. Mr. Justice Parker exercised such revisional jurisdiction under the rules of this Court framed under section 13 of the Charter Act. The judgment is, therefore, subject to the appeal provided by section 15 of the Letters Patent.

The preliminary objection must consequently be disallowed.

Passing on to the merits, we see no reason to differ from the learned Judge in holding that any person who makes it his business to sell for profit is a "trader" within the meaning of the Municipal Act IV of 1884. We do not think the fact of what he sells being the produce of his own land makes him the less a trader, provided the sales are conducted in a shop or place of business as in this case. The other point is not pressed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Penal Code—Act XLV of 1860, s. 224—Escape from custody of village officers — Regulation XI of 1816, s. 5.

On a charge under Penal Code, s. 226, it appeared that the accused had been apprehended on a hue and cry being raised as he was running away after committing robbery, and that he was handed over to the village magistrate and was by him placed in the charge of taliaries for detention till the next morning when he was to be taken to the police station, and that he escaped from the custody of the taliaries :

Held, distinguishing Queen v. Bojjigan (I. L.R., 5 Mad., 22), that the accused was rightly convicted of the offence charged.

CASE referred for the orders of the High Court under Criminal Procedure Code, s. 438, by the District Magistrate of Bellary.

• The case was stated as follows :—

"One Korchha Fakira alias Donga Hanuma took to his heels on 8th November last after robbing two Marwari merchants on the tank bund of Hanisi, a village in Kudlighi taluk. He was pursued, arrested and brought to the village chavadi by a washerman, who made him over to the village magistrate. Korchha Fakira was illegally tied to a post of the chavadi and two taliaries and two madigas were placed to watch him with a view to make him over to the police. Before sunrise, while it was still dark, the accused Fakira, on the pretence that he wanted to go out for purposes of nature, was loosened and at once ran away. He was thereupon charged before the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Kudlighi, under section 224, Indian Penal Code. The Sub-Magistrate convicted the accused and sentenced him to undergo imprisonment for four months.

* Criminal Revision Case No. 487 of 1893.

"The custody of the taliaries and madigas in this case does not constitute lawful custody, inasmuch as the offence of dacoity was not committed in their presence. Queen v. Bojjigan (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 22).

[104] Under these circumstances the conviction appears to be bad in law, and I respectfully recommend that it may be reversed."

Counsel were not instructed.

Best, J.—It appears that the accused had been apprehended on a hue and cry being raised as he was running away after committing a robbery. He was handed over to the village magistrate and was by the latter placed in charge of the taliaries for detention till next morning, when he was to be taken to the police station. Early in the morning, he asked to be allowed to go and ease himself, and availing himself of this opportunity, made his escape. He has been convicted under section 224 of the Penal Code and sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment. The District Magistrate has referred the case under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure with a view to the conviction being set aside as illegal on the authority of Queen v. Bojjigan (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 22).

In that case the accused had escaped from the custody of a taliyari and a toti by whom he had been arrested on suspicion. The custody was held to be not lawful, because the taliyari and toti, not being police officers, could not legally make the arrest for an offence not committed in their presence.

The present case is distinguishable, in that the prisoner on being arrested on the hue and cry was handed over to the village magistrate and was in custody of the taliaries under his orders with a view to being handed over to the police. See Queen-Empress v. Potadu (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 480).

I do not think the conviction is illegal

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I am of the same opinion. By section V, Regulation XI of 1816, heads of villages are authorized and directed to apprehend all persons charged with committing crimes and to forward them to the police officer of the district. The arrest being legal and the detention at night being necessary to his being forwarded to the police officer, the principle laid down in Queen v. Bojjigan (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 22) is not applicable. There it was the village taliyari and toti who arrested the accused, and the arrest and therefore the subsequent custody were unlawful.

SIR ARTHUR . J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE SHEPARD.

Srinivasa Ayyangar.....(Counter-Petitioner) Appellant

Letters Patent, s. 15—Appeal to two Judges—Sanction to prosecute granted by one Judge.

§ 324 Where one Judge exercising the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court,* in reversal of an order of a First-Class Magistrate, had granted sanction under Criminal Procedure Code, s. 195, for a prosecution under Penal Code, s. 182, an appeal was preferred from his judgment under Letters Patent, s. 15 :

Held, that no appeal lay, that section of the Letters Patent being inapplicable in cases of criminal jurisdiction.

APPEAL under Letters Patent, s. 15, from the judgment of Mr. Justice BEST in Criminal Revision Case No. 152 of 1893.

In that case his Lordship, in exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, reversed an order of the First-Class Sub-divisional Magistrate of Mannargudi and granted sanction under Criminal Procedure Code, s. 195, for the prosecution of the counter-petitioner for an offence under section 182, Penal Code. The counter-petitioner preferred the present appeal under Letters Patent, s. 15.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Appellant.

Judgment.—The clause of the Letters Patent to which the petitioner refers has nothing to do with criminal jurisdiction. It does not, therefore, justify the appeal. The case of Navivahoo v. Narotamdas Candas (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 5) has been cited. This point, however, is only mentioned incidentally and does not seem to have been considered. We are unable to agree with the decision. Section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code is also inapplicable.

The petition is therefore dismissed.

[106] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 30th August, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Gangaraju and others.....(Defendants Nos. 1, 4, 5 and 6) Appellants.

Kondireddiswami and others.....(Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2,

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, s. 13—Res judicata—Rent Recovery Act (Madras)—Act VIII of 1885—Decision of a Revenue Court—Second Suit in Civil Court—Question of title.

In a suit for land it appeared that the defendant had obtained, under the Rent Recovery Act, a judgment that the present plaintiff should accept from him a patta for the land in question and deliver to him a corresponding muchalka, and subsequently an order for ejectment, which was executed. The present plaintiff did not appear when the above orders were made. The defendant relied on these proceedings as constituting a bar to the present suit :

Held, following Rama v. Tirtasami (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 61), that the decision of the Revenue Court was no bar to the suit.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of M. B. Sundara Rau, Subordinate Judge of Ellore, in Appeal Suit No. 197 of 1892, confirming the decree of V. Krishna-murthi Pantulu, District Munsif of Tanuku, in Original Suit No. 95 of 1891.

Suit to recover land with mesne profits. It appeared that on the 6th May 1890 the first defendant, who was the father of the other defendants, brought a Summary Suit against the present plaintiff under Rent Recovery Act (Madras), 1865, to enforce the exchange of patta and muchalka for the land in question. The present plaintiff did not appear before the Head Assistant Collector who passed an ex parte judgment against him. The decision of the Revenue Court was not complied with, and the present first defendant obtained and executed a warrant of ejectment. The present plaintiff moved the Revenue Court to set aside his decision, but this application was rejected on the ground that the summons had been duly served before the case was disposed of. The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit, alleging that he [107] was the owner of the property in question and that the summary decision of the Revenue Court had been obtained in fraud of his rights.

The District Munsif passed a decree as prayed overruling the contention of the defendant that the decision of the Revenue Court was a bar to the suit. He referred to Rama v. Tirtasami (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 61), Chunder Cormar Mundal v. Numeer Khanum (11 B. L. R., 434), Debi Prasad v. Jafar Ali (I. L. R., 3 All., 40), Boistub Churn Sein v. Trahee Ram Sein (15 W. R. 32), Manappa Mudali v. McCarthy, (I. L. R., 3 Mad., 192), Venkatachalapati v. Krishna, (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 291).

On appeal the Subordinate Judge affirmed this decree. The defendants preferred this second appeal.

* Second Appeal No. 63 of 1893.

Srirangachariar for Appellants.

Venkatarama Sarma for Respondents.

Judgment.—Assuming that the suit was maintainable, there can be no doubt that the decision is correct on the facts found.

It is contended, however, that the suit is not sustainable by reason of the decree in Summary Suit No. 72 of 1890 on the file of the Head Assistant Collector and of the order for ejection under section 10 of Act VIII of 1865 (Madras).

The first plaintiff did not appear to defend that suit and a subsequent application of his to have the ex parte decree set aside was dismissed. Hence the present suit on title.

As was held in Rama v. Tirtasami (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 61) the decision of a question of title by a Revenue Court is merely incidental, and no bar to a fresh suit on title in a Civil Court. Our attention has been called to the decision in Ragava v. Rajagopal (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 39). The learned Judges who decided that case held that the decision and order of a Revenue Court under section 10 of Act VIII of 1865 would bar a subsequent suit on title in the Civil Courts. But it does not appear that the decision in Rama v. Tirtasami (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 61) was brought to their notice. We are of opinion that the principle laid down in Rama v. Tirtasami (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 61) is correct.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Contract Act—Act IX of 1872, ss. 45, 263—Suit by surviving member of a firm alone—Succession Certificate Act—Act VII of 1889, s. 4—Suit by surviving partner and heir of deceased partner.

In a suit on a promissory note made by the defendant in favour of two Hindus carrying on business in partnership, it appeared that one of the partners was dead, and no succession certificate or letters of administration had been obtained. The plaintiffs were the surviving partners and the undivided sons of the deceased partner :

Held that a surviving partner can sue alone for the recovery of a partnership debt :

Held, further, that such a suit may be maintained by a surviving partner jointly with the heir of the deceased partner, in which case a certificate of heirship will be necessary, unless it appears on the face of the document sued on, that the debt is a coparcenary debt.

CASE referred for the orders of the High Court by P.Srinivasa Rau, Second Judge of the Presidency Small Cause Court, under Civil Procedure Code, s. 617.

The case was stated as follows :—

“ This is a suit for the recovery of Rs. 91-14-6 on a promissory note alleged to have been executed by the defendant to a mercantile firm, of which the first plaintiff and one T. Viswanatha Ayyan were the partners.

“ The said T. Viswanatha Ayyan having died, the suit is brought by his representatives and the first plaintiff.

“ It is admitted that the said representatives have not obtained letters of administration or a certificate of succession. The defendant has allowed the suit to go ex parte. Nevertheless, as under section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act VII of 1889, no decree can be passed in plaintiff's favour unless he produces letters of administration or a certificate of succession, in cases where such production [109] is required by law, I feel myself bound to consider whether this is a case in which the production of the letters or certificate is necessary.

“ The plaintiff's vakil, Mr. K. Krishnamachariar, contends that such production is not necessary on two grounds :—firstly, the deceased person and the first and other plaintiffs being members of an undivided Hindu family, the plaintiffs, upon the death of the deceased member, became possessed of the estate by right of survivorship, and not by succession, so that the Succession Certificate Act does not apply to this case; and secondly, the first plaintiff and the deceased person were carrying on business as partners, so that, on the death of the latter, the former, as the surviving partner, can alone maintain the suit, without joining the deceased's representatives as parties to the suit, and without obtaining letters of administration or certificate in favour of such representatives. I entertain serious doubts as to the validity of these two grounds. As to the first ground, I was under the impression that the matter was concluded by the authority of the ruling of the Madras High Court in Venkataramanna v. Venkayya (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 377); but I am told that there are other decisions of our High Court to the contrary. These decisions are not reported; and it seems pretty clear that the aforesaid decision in Venkataramanna v. Venkayya (I. L. R. 14 Mad. 377) remains still unsuperseeded. Nevertheless, I consider that it would be highly presumptuous on my part to take upon myself to decide the point one way or the other, when the existence of conflicting decisions of our High Court is brought to my notice. And, as to the second ground advanced by the plaintiff's Vakil, the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Gobind Prasad v. Chandar Sekhar (I. L. R., 9 All., 486) is quite opposed to that of the Calcutta High Court in Ram Narain Nursing Doss v. Ram Chundar Jankee Loll (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 86), and I find no ruling of our own High Court on the subject in the published reports. Under these circumstances, I consider it very desirable to obtain a decisive ruling of the High Court upon the points in question, especially as such points arise in numerous suits in this Court. I, therefore, respectfully submit the following questions for the opinion of the High Court :—

in the suit has devolved upon him by right of survivorship. [110] (and not of succession) upon the death of an undivided member of his family.

“(2) Whether upon the death of one of the partners of a trading firm, the surviving partners can sue for the partnership debt, without joining in the suit the representatives of the deceased, and without obtaining letters of administration or a certificate in favour of the representatives:—firstly, in cases where they sue as members of the old firm, engaged in winding up the Partnership business; and secondly, in cases where they take a new partner and bring the suits in their own names and in the name of the new member.

“In regard to the first question, I think the Succession Certificate Act applies to the case of survivorship as well as to the case of succession. The Act makes no distinction between those cases in section 4. It is true that in section 1 the Act is called the Succession Certificate Act, and the preamble sets forth that one of the objects of the Act is to facilitate collection of debts on succession; but I do not think that the word ‘succession’ is used there in the sense in which it is technically used in the English translations of the Hindu laws, as distinguished from a right of survivorship. As the Act is applicable to all classes of Her Majesty’s subjects in British India, the Legislature seems to have chosen the word ‘succession’ as applicable to all the classes, without reference to the peculiar character of the estate which one takes upon the death of another.

“Further, the language used in section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act is too comprehensive to include cases of survivorship as well as those of succession. For the right of survivorship arises only upon the death of some one, and that right is inseparably coupled with the idea of property in which the deceased had an interest; so that when a person brings a suit on the ground of his right of survivorship, claiming the money lent by or in the sole name of the person who is since dead, he is practically claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased person within the meaning of the said section. It cannot be otherwise; he cannot say that he is claiming his own money; for this would not be true.

“In the foregoing views, I am confirmed by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Mussamut Josoda Koonwur v. Gourie Byjonath Sohae Sing (6 W. R., 139), passed in 1866 (only a few years after [111] the passing of the old Act XXVII of 1860, the wording in which is the same as that in section 4 of the Act now in force). There the Court observed:—‘We attach but little weight to the argument that, if the estate were joint, Gouri Byjonath took any debts outstanding in the sole name of Joy Kurran (the deceased), like the rest of the joint estate by survivorship, and therefore a certificate was unnecessary and could not be granted. We are of opinion that whether the nephew takes his uncle’s share by mere survivorship or by inheritance, if he takes on the ground of their being joint in estate, he succeeds to and becomes entitled to the effects of the deceased within the meaning of Act XXVII of 1860.

“That this is the correct interpretation of the law is also evident from the main object of the law, namely, the protection of the debtor against liability to pay debts twice over. For, if a certificate is needed for the protection of a debtor, in the case in which the person who demands payment happens to be one who has succeeded to the deceased creditor’s estate, it is equally needed where the claimant is one who has acquired a right of survivorship; the result in both the cases being the same; in both the cases the plaintiffs seek to recover money lent by the deceased; and in both the cases the defendants run the risk of paying the debts twice over, if not properly protected by the law.

"The case, however, would have been different if one of the objects of the Succession Certificate Act were to establish the exclusive right of any person to recover the moneys lent by a deceased person ; but such does not seem to be the case. For, although some inquiry is made for ascertaining whether the applicant for a certificate is entitled to have it or not, yet no question of title is judicially determined as the result of such inquiry. In administering the provisions of Act XXVII of 1860 (the Act which was in force prior to Act VII of 1889), it was observed by the High Court of Madras that "it has not been the practice of the Courts to enter on the determination of intricate questions of law or fact"—Surfoji v. Kamakshiamba (1. L. R., 7 Mad., 452). Similarly the High Court of Allahabad are of opinion that "it is clear that the issue of joint certificates (to two or more persons) would ordinarily defeat, instead of subserving both the objects of the Act"; the duty of the Judge is to determine [112] which of the applicants has the better right—Madan Mohan v. Ramdial (1. L. R., 5 All., 195). Then according to the Calcutta High Court the person who has the largest interest in the estate is entitled to a certificate—Azeem Khan v. Mussamut Ameeroon (12 W. R., 38). For, says the same Court in another case, "the Court has by the law a discretion as to whom it shall entrust with this important duty, out of the several heirs who have a right to it"—Abdool Ali v. Abidunnissa Khatoon (W. R., 1864 Misc., 41). The reason for granting the certificate to any one of the heirs and not necessarily to all who have a right to recover the debt is to be found in another judgment of the same High Court where it is observed that "the objects of the Act are to enable debtors to get sufficient acquittances when they pay money due to the estate of a deceased ; and to preserve that estate from loss by giving some one the right to collect the debts, lest they should be lost, e.g., by the operation of the Law of Limitation or otherwise. This latter object is also contemplated by the provision that security is to be taken from the person who obtains the certificate. In effect the holder of the certificate is a trustee, liable to account for moneys received by him, to the legal heir or representative of the deceased,"—in the matter of the petition of Nobodip Chunder Biswas (1. L. R., 8 Cal., 868). The spirit of all these rulings is embodied in clause (3), section 7 of the Succession Certificate Act VII of 1889, which is now in force, and which provides that "if the Court cannot decide the right to the certificate, without determining questions of law or fact, which seem to be too intricate and difficult for determination in a summary proceeding, it may, nevertheless, grant a certificate to the applicant if he appears to be the person having prima facie the best title thereto."

"Under these circumstances, it seems to me that in granting a certificate under the Act in question, it is quite unnecessary to consider whether the applicant is one upon whom the estate has devolved by right of survivorship, or is one who has succeeded to the estate. All that the Court has to do is to invest one person as a trustee, as it were, for all who may be interested in the matter, with the power of collecting debts and giving complete discharges to the debtors.

"Looked at in this light, the question whether the plaintiff in [113] any suit claims the money by right of survivorship or of succession becomes quite irrelevant, and the liability of the debtor to pay the debts only to the person who holds the certificate and not to others becomes quite apparent.

"Furthermore, it is worthy of notice that the objects aimed at by the Legislature in enacting the Succession Certificate Act appear to be two, viz., the facilitation of the collection of debts, and the protection of debtors against all future liability. These two are coupled by a copulative conjunction and not separated by a disjunctive one in the Act, so that, unless effect is given to both those objects, the provisions of the Act are not satisfied. If we hold that a person who relies upon his right of survivorship is not bound to obtain a certificate, we are only dealing with one of the two objects of the Act, viz., the object which is in favour of the creditor; but the other object, which has reference to the protection of the debtor would remain unsatisfied, unless we insist that the plaintiff shall obtain a certificate and afford good protection to the defendant thereby. This is what the Madras High Court held in Venkataramanna v. Venkayya (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 377): their Lordships observe that 'though Act VII of 1889 applies only to cases of succession, it states in the preamble that it is intended to afford protection to parties paying debts to the representatives of deceased persons. It would naturally impair the protection intended to be afforded by the statute to throw in every case on the debtor the obligation of making an inquiry at the time of payment, whether the person claiming to recover the debt claims by right of survivorship or of inheritance. Our answer, therefore, is that defendant is entitled to insist upon the production of a certificate under Act VII of 1889, unless it appears on the face of the bond that the debt was due to the joint family consisting of the father and son.'

"The unreasonableness of throwing upon the debtor the duty of making inquiries as to the particular nature of the estate taken by the representative of the person with whom he dealt would be quite evident when we consider the most complicated nature of the Hindu law of inheritance. The descent or devolution of property differs materially not only with reference to the status of the members of the family, as divided or undivided, and as sons [114] of the body or sons adopted, but also with reference to the mode in which the acquisition of the property was made, e.g., whether it was acquired by the forefathers, or by any individual member himself; or whether it was inherited from a person related to all the members in an equal degree, or related to one of them only in particular. It would be impossible for a stranger like the debtor to ascertain all such intricate matters; and even supposing that he found it possible to make the inquiries, and believed conscientiously that such and such member of the family was entitled to collect the debt from him; or going a step further, even supposing that a Court of Justice, in a suit brought by one of the members of the family, determines that he is entitled to recover the debt, this would not in any way tend to exonerate the debtor from liability to pay the debt once more, if another member of the family, who was not a party to the first suit, and upon whom therefore the judgment was not binding, sues the debtor for the same debt, and proves that he, and not the plaintiff in the former suit, was the rightful party to recover the debt. *

"This hardship would be much greater when the debtors happen to be corporations or companies, in which the really interested parties are not the managers, but others who may be far away from the scene of the transactions and utterly unacquainted with persons dealing with their firms—as fairly illustrated in the case of Muttammal v. The Bank of Madras (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 115). There a Hindu widow sued the Bank for the return of certain Government promissory notes deposited by her deceased husband, and the Bank declined to return the deposit to the widow, unless she obtained letters of administration. The High Court was of opinion that there was no reasonable doubt as to the plaintiff being a party entitled to recover the deposit; and yet allowed the Bank's objections to prevail with the following observations:—
"The circumstances are that the money in question, and no doubt very much larger sums are in the charge of the Bank, on behalf of shareholders and depositors, in whose interest the Directors and Secretary act. It is their duty to see that any moneys they pay out are paid to the parties legally and rightly entitled thereto, and to obtain proper receipts and discharges therefor. The Directors do not individually owe such moneys but are mere trustees. They have [115] large claims to pay constantly to representatives of deceased shareholders and depositors. If any such payments are made to persons not properly qualified to give discharges, the interests of the shareholders and possibly of the depositors may suffer."

"Thus, it seems to me that it is clear that the protection which is intended, to be given to debtors by the Succession Certificate Act would be lost, if, for any reason whatsoever, they be compelled to pay debts to persons who have not obtained certificate or letters of administration; and thus one of the objects of the Act is defeated.

"Nor, is the other object of the Act, viz., the facilitation of the recovery of debts, gained if the creditor, under any circumstances, fails to obtain a certificate or letters of administration in respect of outstandings due to a deceased person. For he will be under the necessity of proving his title to recover the money in every suit which he might institute against the several debtors of the deceased person; and chances are that judgments will be in his favour in some cases and not in others, for the quantity and quality of the testimony may not be the same in all the cases.

"The only thing that facilitates the collection of the deceased person's debts on one hand and gives protection to the debtors on the other is the certificate or letters of administration; and if this is dispensed with, both the creditor and debtor would suffer, and the highly beneficial objects of the Succession Certificate Act frustrated.

"It is contended that section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act of 1881 is against granting of letters of administration to a person who has the right of survivorship. But I do not think that this section has any such effect. It provides for the vesting of the property in the person who possesses the right of survivorship in preference to the one who holds letters of administration; and I have shown above that the granting of letters or certificate does not alter the line of succession or affect the existing rights in any way. It simply enables its holder to collect debts as a trustee for the benefit of himself and others who may have a right to participate therein, giving proper acquittances to the debtors at the same time. This is evident from section 23 of the said Act, which (second clause) provides that "when several such persons (i.e., representatives) apply for administration, it shall be in the discretion of the Court to grant it to any one or more of them." This shows that the grantee of the letters of [116] administration is not necessarily the only person entitled to the effects of the deceased; or in words it shows that he is simply a trustee for self and others in the same way as the holder of a certificate is. Hence I am of opinion that section 4 of the Probate and Administration Act is no bar to the granting of a certificate to any one of the representatives without reference to the character of the estate he takes.

"As to the second question:—In this Court we have always acted upon the principle of the English law, that in trading partnerships although the right of the deceased partner devolves on his executors, the remedy survives to his co-partner, who alone must enforce the remedy by action, and who will be liable on recovery to account to the executors or administrators for the share of the deceased.' Williams on Executors, 8th Edition, page 850, referred to in McClean v. Kennard (L. R., 9 Ch. App., 346). This is in consonance with the Indian Contract Act, which provides (section 253, clause 7) that by death of one of the partners, the partnership is dissolved as between all other members by the operation of law, and that (section 263) after such dissolution, the rights of the partners continue in all things necessary for winding up the business of partnership; so that it is quite competent for the surviving members to sue in their own names for the recovery of the partnership debt, and it seems to me that section 45 of the Contract Act, which provides that when a promise is made to two persons jointly, the right to claim performance rests with them jointly, and after the death of one of them, with his representatives and the survivor, does not apply to partnership transactions, which are governed by special rules as already indicated. These views are supported by the ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Gobind Prasad v. Chandar Sekhar (I. L. R., 9 All., 486), where all the authorities upon the subject have been reviewed; and the inconvenience of insisting upon the representatives of the deceased partner being joined with the surviving partner in bringing the suit has been fully pointed out. But this judgment of the Allahabad High Court has been dissented from by the High Court of Calcutta in Ram Narain Nursing Doss v. Ram Chunder Jankee Loll (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 86), in which it is held that the representatives of the deceased are necessary parties in a suit brought by [117] the surviving partners for the recovery of a partnership debt; and that such representatives should obtain certificate of succession. I find no reported decision of the Madras High Court on this point.

"Further, it seems to me very doubtful whether, even according to the decision of the Allahabad High Court, the surviving partners of a firm can alone sue for the partnership debt in cases where they take new partners and constitute in fact a new firm altogether. The new firm has no claim against persons who owed moneys to the old firm, and the representatives of the deceased partners of the old firm can have no right to compel the new firm to account for moneys due to them by the old firm. It would in such cases be, I think, necessary to protect the interests of the representatives of the deceased partners by making them parties to the suit.

"The fact of the partnership firm in this case being composed of the members of a Hindu undivided family does not, I think, make much difference. These members possess a double character, their firm being carried on as the creature of relationship and of contract as well. Their rights and obligations are different in each of these two conditions; and they cannot take advantage of the privileges common to one of the said two capacities when dealing under the capacity."

Sadagopachariar and Krishnasami Ayyangar for Plaintiffs.

The defendant was not represented.

Opinion.—There can be no doubt that a surviving partner can sue alone for the recovery of a partnership debt, and, in that case, no certificate will be necessary. On this point we agree with the Bombay High Court in Motilal Bechardoss v. Ghellabhai Hariram (I. L. R., 17 Bom., 6).

We are also of opinion that the suit is maintainable if brought by the surviving partner conjointly with the heir of the deceased partner. In the latter case a certificate of heirship will be necessary, unless it appears, on the face of the document sued on, that the debt is a coparcenary debt—compare Venkataramanna v. Venkayya (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 377).

The above is, we think, a sufficient answer to the questions referred to us

Indian Ports Act—Act X of 1889, ss. 6, 8,—order purporting to be made under the Act by Conservator of port—Public body authorized by Legislature to make rules, powers of.

The Conservator of the Port of Negapatam, purporting to act under the Indian Ports Act, s. 8, made and published an order that when a certain flag was flying at the signal station, all boats returning from the sea should cast anchor and not come inside the river. The Local Government had made a rule with reference to sec. 6 (k) of the above Act requiring boat owners to "carry out at all times all orders issued by the Conservator in connection with the plying of their boats and which are not inconsistent with the regulations issued by Government." A charge was brought against two persons, being the owners and tindals of licensed cargo boats for neglecting to obey the aforesaid order, and they were convicted under Indian Ports Act, s. 8 (2), by the Conservator in his capacity as Special First-class Magistrate :

Held, that the order was ultra vires and the conviction was accordingly illegal.

Per cur.—A public body, whether the Executive Government or a Corporation, being entrusted by the Legislature with the duty of making rules, cannot relieve itself of the responsibility and depute other agencies to discharge the duty.

CASE referred for the orders of the High Court by H. M. Winterbotham, Acting District Magistrate of Tanjore, under Criminal Procedure Code, s. 438.

Together with this case was taken up for disposal a petition preferred by the accused persons under Criminal Procedure Code, ss. 435 and 439, praying for the intervention of the High Court in revision.

The case was referred as follows :—

"The two accused are owners and tindals of two licensed cargo boats plying at the Negapatam port. They have been convicted under section 8 (2) of the Indian Ports Act, 1889, of wilfully and without lawful excuse neglecting to obey a lawful direction of the Conservator, and have been fined Rs. 30 and [119] Rs. 40, respectively. The facts proved against them are that they brought their boats from the sea into the river while a certain flag marked W was flying at the port signal station. On April 23rd, 1891, the Port Officer appears to have published a notice in Tamil, of which a copy is with the record of the case. I also enclose a translation. This notice directs that when a flag marked W is hoisted at the signal station, all boats returning from the sea should cast anchor and not come inside the river. The notice purports to lay down a standing rule applicable to all boats at all times. The object of the rule (apart from the question of its legality) is not clear, but however laudable its object may be, it appears obviously improper to apply one and the same restriction to all boats, whether loaded or unloaded, and irrespective of the depth of water they draw.

"As to the legality of the rule, the judgment states that it was framed and published under section 8 of the Indian Ports Act. There is nothing in this section which confers on the Conservator the power to frame rules, and if the Conservator had the power, it would not be necessary specially to invest the Local Government therewith as is done in section 6.

"Rule 16 of the boat rules sanctioned by Government empowers the registering officer 'to prevent any registered boat from leaving the shore when in his judgment danger would be incurred by so doing.' Rule 17 forbids any registered boat to ply 'in rough weather' if loaded with passengers or cargo greater in number or quantity than that 'authorized for the occasion' by the registering officer, but it is, I think, beyond the Port Officer's authority to lay down a general rule that no boat shall enter the river when a certain flag is flying, and I think the punishment of the accused for disobeying the rules is illegal.

"On general principles it appears objectionable that the special magistrate should try persons for an offence committed in contempt of his own authority, but in respect of offences punishable under the Indian Ports Act, there appears to be no legal prohibition similar to that in section 487, Criminal Procedure Code. The interest of a magistrate in enforcing obedience to an order issued by him in another capacity is, I think, not a personal interest within the meaning of section 555, Criminal Procedure Code.

[120] "The two accused ought not to have been tried jointly, but with reference to section 61 of the Indian Ports Act this is not a material irregularity.

"The special magistrate has not been empowered to try cases summarily (vide notification No. 387, Fort Saint George Gazette, December 16th, 1890, page 1041, Part I). He should, therefore, have observed the directions of sections 243 and 364, Criminal Procedure Code."

Mr. W. Grant and Narayana Ayyangar for the Accused.

The Acting Public Prosecutor (Subramanya Ayyar) in support of the conviction.

Judgment.—The act charged as an offence is the bringing a boat into the Negapatam river in disregard of a general order passed by the Port Conservator to the effect that boats should not be brought in while the flag W is flying. This act is said to be punishable under section 8 of the Ports Act. That section authorizes the Conservator to give directions for carrying into effect any rule passed under section 6 of the same Act, and goes on to make it penal to disobey any such lawful direction. It has therefore to be seen whether the Conservator was carrying into effect any valid rule passed under the Act. The rules to which we have been referred are those numbered V and VIII, being rules passed with reference to clauses (f) and (k) of section 6 respectively. In our opinion there is clearly no connection between the former of these rules and the direction which in this case has been disobeyed.

Rule VIII is a rule of wider scope, for it requires boat owners to "carry out at all times all orders issued by the Conservator in connection with the plying of their boats and which are not inconsistent with the regulations issued by Government."

In order to put an interpretation on the rule VIII, and to see whether it covers the present case, we think that the rule must be read with the clause of the Act under which it is framed and the other clauses specifying the matter in respect of which rules may be made by the Government. It must be presumed that the Government intended to pass a rule which they were authorized to pass by the terms of clause (k) of the section, and a construction which has the effect of extending the operation of the rule to matters not covered by clause (k) ought, we think, if possible to be avoided. Now when it is seen that by clause (a) of the [121] section the Government is empowered to make rules for regulating the time at which vessels are to enter or leave any port, it seems tolerably clear that the rules to be framed under clause (k) were not intended to regulate the entry or exit of vessels in the matter of time. This being so, we do not think that the rule VIII passed with reference to the latter clause can be taken to refer to such matters. Accordingly the direction of the Conservator not to bring boats into the river when a certain flag is flying cannot be a direction for carrying into effect the rule in question, and therefore no lawful direction was disobeyed. In referring to clause (a), we do not overlook the fact that boats may go out of the river without leaving the port. That may be so. We should still be disposed to think that the regulation intended by clause (k) was a regulation different in kind from that intended by clause (a).

There is however another reason why the conviction cannot be supported. The charge is not based immediately on an alleged breach of rule VIII; indeed no rule at all is mentioned in the charge. The conviction can only be supported on the ground that the direction of the Conservator which was disobeyed was a direction lawfully given in pursuance of an authority lawfully conferred on him by rule VIII or some other rule. To support the conviction it has to be shown that the Government is by section 6 of the Act authorized to empower other persons to make rules such as the one which has been disobeyed in the present case. In our opinion, the contention cannot rightly be maintained, and if rule VIII or any other rule purports to give the Conservator authority to make such rules, that rule is to that extent ultra vires and therefore void. In the case of power being by statute given to the Government or other public body to make rules having the force of law, the maxim delegatus non potest delegare must, we think, be applied. When the Legislature entrusts to some public body, it may be the Executive Government or a Corporation, the duty of making rules, such public body cannot, in our judgment, relieve itself of the responsibility and depute other agencies to discharge the duty. The authority to make rules must remain in the hands to which it was entrusted. It is absurd to suppose that the Legislature intended this important authority to be exercised by any person whom the Government might choose to select. The rule laid down by the Conservator [122] may be a perfectly reasonable one, and it may be one which the Local Government may make under section 6. On this we offer no opinion. At present it is enough to say there is no such rule having the force of law, and therefore the conviction as for breach of it must fall to the ground.

For these reasons we think the conviction should be set aside and the fine, if paid, refunded. We would add that in these cases where the charge in effect relates to an alleged breach of a rule passed under an Act, care ought to be taken to specify the particular rule said to have been infringed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th September and 31st October, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Ramayya and another.....(Defendants Nos. 1 and 2) Appellants
Venkataratnam.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Hindu law—Liability of son for father's debts—Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1862, ss. 43, 244—Suit for money—Non-joinder of plaintiff's undivided brother—Suit against sons of a deceased judgment-debtor—Decree for money against father to be discharged by instalments—Previous execution proceedings—Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, arts. 120, 122.

A personal decree on a mortgage was passed against a Hindu (the mortgagor), and his two sons on 19th October 1877. The decree provided for payment of the secured debt in various instalments by May 1895. The mortgagor died in 1883 having discharged part of the debt. The decree-holder having attached certain family property in execution, the mortgagor's two younger sons, who had not been born at the date of the above decree, objected that their shares were not liable to attachment. This objection prevailed, the Court expressing the opinion that the matter in controversy should be determined in a regular suit. The other defendants in the suit of 1877 had both died in the interval, one of them leaving infant sons.

The decree-holder (in whose sole name the mortgage stood) now sued the sons of the mortgagor and their infant nephews in 1891 and obtained a decree for the payment out of the family property of all the unpaid instalments. A plea of non-joinder was raised (inter alia), on the ground that the plaintiff had an undivided brother :

* Held, (1) that since the plaint (as amended) showed that the plaintiff sued as [123] managing member of his undivided family, the omission to join his brother was a merely formal error and was not fatal to the suit :

(2) that the plaintiff was not precluded from maintaining this suit against the sons of the mortgagor by Civil Procedure Code, s. 43 or s. 244 ;

(3) that the period of limitation applicable to the suit was six years, and that time began to run for the purposes of limitation from the date when each instalment would have become due from the deceased judgment-debtor ;

* Appeal No. 91 of 1892.

(4) that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for payment out of the family property of all such instalments as would have so become due at the date of the suit, and for a declaration only as to the subsequent instalments.

APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Original Suit No. 7 of 1891.

In Original Suit No. 5 of 1877, the plaintiff brought a suit on a mortgage of 1873 against Chidambarayyar and his two sons and obtained a money decree of which the amount was made payable by instalments. Part only of the judgment-debt was discharged and Chidambarayyar died in 1883, two more sons having been born to him since the date of the decree. In 1888 the decree-holder applied for execution against his four sons and attached part of their family property. The two younger sons objected to the attachment so far as it affected their shares: their objection prevailed in the District Court and the attachment was accordingly raised. On an appeal by the decree-holder the High Court upheld the order of the District Judge in the view that the matter in controversy was one that should be determined in a regular suit and not in execution proceedings. In the meantime the other defendants in the previous suits had died, one of them leaving two minor sons.

The decree-holder now sued the two younger sons who had objected to the attachment, and also the infant sons of their brother, for a decree "declaring that the defendants are bound to pay at once on the liability of the entire family property including the defendants' property already caused to be attached by the plaintiff, the amount with interest of the past instalments due up to date and the amounts of the future instalments according to their respective instalments, etc."

The defendants raised various pleas which are stated in the following judgment, including a plea that the suit was bad for non-joinder of an undivided brother of the plaintiff. This was the subject of the fifth issue which the District Judge decided in favour of the plaintiff on the ground that the mortgage sued on in 1877 was executed in favour of the plaintiff only. The third issue [124] raised the question when the younger sons of Chidambarayyar were born, and the District Judge found that they had not been born at the date of the decree in the previous suit. There was no plea or evidence that the secured debt had been incurred for immoral purposes, although it was averred that it had not been contracted for the benefit of the family. As to the question whether the suit was maintainable, the District Judge in paragraph 14 of his judgment (which is expressly referred to by their Lordships) said:—"I have no hesitation in deciding that the suit will lie. This was a debt incurred for family purposes by the father of the first and second defendants, the grandfather of the third and fourth defendants. The defendants have by survivorship taken the family property. I can see no reason why this is not a good suit. The Bombay cases cited—Merwanji Nowroji v. Ashabai (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 1) and Bhavanishankar Shevakram v. Pursadri Kalidas (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 292)—refer to decrees which could be executed, but this previous decree cannot be executed against these defendants."

The District Judge passed a decree against all the defendants for payment out of the family property of all the instalments down to May 1895. The two defendants, who had objected to the attachment as above stated, preferred this appeal.

Pattabharama Ayyar and Venkatarama Sarma for Appellants.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson) for Respondent.

Judgment. - Appellants' father, Maddi Chidambarayyar, was judgment-debtor and respondent Venkataratnam was execution-creditor in Original Suit

No. 5 of 1877 on the file of the District Court of Kistna. Besides the minor appellants, who are twins, Chidambarayyar had two other sons, named Veerayya and Rama Murti, and subsequent to the decree in the above suit, the former died in coparcenary without issue and the latter died leaving him surviving two minor sons, the third and fourth defendants in the present suit. Prior to 1873, Chidambarayyar had dealings with Venkataratnam for several years, and on the 19th March of that year the former executed in favour of the latter the mortgage Exhibit A as security for the sum of Rs. 8,000 then found due by the one to the other. It was upon this mortgage, Original Suit No. 5 of 1877 was brought against Chidambarayyar and his two elder sons Veerayya and Rama Murti, but only a money decree [125] was obtained against them. The decree directed them to pay respondent Rs. 9,677-2-5 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date of suit to date of decree, Rs. 6,000 odd in three specified instalments in 1877 and 1878 and the balance Rs. 4,250 by yearly instalments of Rs. 250 commencing with the 1st May, 1879. The decree was passed on the 19th October 1877 and Chidambarayyar died on the 28th December, 1883, after having paid part of the debt. On the 19th April, 1888, respondent applied for execution against Chidambarayyar's four sons, viz., Veerayya and Rama Murti, who were parties to the decree, and against appellants who, as alleged by respondent, are twins born subsequent to the suit, and in pursuance of this application he attached some of the property belonging to Chidambarayyar's family. On appellants objecting to the attachment so far as it affected their shares, the District Court raised it on the ground that the younger sons were not parties to the decree under execution and that a fresh decree should be obtained against them before the property which passed to them by survivorship could be proceeded against in execution. The District Court made its order on the 18th September, 1889, and on appeal preferred from that order under section 244, Civil Procedure Code, the High Court confirmed it on the 21st October 1890. Hence this suit.

In his plaint, respondent prayed for a decree declaring that defendants are bound to pay at once on the liability of the entire family property including their interest and already caused to be attached Rs. 1,792, the amount of six past instalments from 1st May, 1885 to 1st May, 1890 and Rs. 1,250, the amount of five future instalments when they become due with the condition of paying interest in default of payment on the due date as per terms of the decree in Original Suit No. 5 of 1877. The plaint prayed also for an injunction, for costs of the suit and for such other reliefs as the Court may deem it proper to grant.

Respondent's case was that, as sons taking ancestral property by survivorship on the death of their father, appellants were liable for the debt sued for. The sons resisted the claim on the following grounds, viz., (1) that the suit is bad for non-joinder of respondent's brother, (2) that at the date of the former suit, appellants were alive and the suit is therefore barred by section 43, Civil Procedure Code, (3) that the claim is time-barred, and (4) that the debt in question is not binding upon them. The District [126] Judge gave judgment for respondent with costs and directed that defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 do pay plaintiff Rs. 1,792 (the six past instalments and interest thereon), together with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date of plaint to date of payment from the property of the family in the hands of the defendants and ordered further that the defendants do pay the five future instalments on the respective dates on which they fell due with interest at 6 per cent. from those dates from the property in their hands. Against this decree, first and second defendants have appealed and they reiterate the grounds of defence in support of their appeal and also urge that the suit is either not maintainable at all or at least in its present form. On the merits, there can be no doubt, that appellants are liable to pay their father's debt. Respondent deposed that the debt in dispute was contracted on account of the trade which Chidambarayyar carried on and of the cultivation of his lands. Appellants offered no evidence to show that the debt was either illegal or immoral, nor did they allege either that no ancestral property came to them by survivorship or that such property as so came was not sufficient to satisfy respondent's claim. The contest in appeal has reference in the main to several preliminary objections urged against the claim and the first of them is the non-joinder of respondent's undivided brother as a co-plaintiff. This formed the subject of the fifth issue, and the Judge determined it in respondent's favour observing that no evidence need be brought on that issue. It appears that appellants and respondent's undivided brother asked that the latter should be included in the suit, but that their application was refused on the ground that he was not a necessary party. The procedure followed by the Judge cannot be reconciled with the policy of section 32, Civil Procedure Code, as explained in Vydiaanadayyan v. Sitaramayyan (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 52), and with the principle that, when the debt sued for is due to a joint Hindu family, the debtor is entitled to insist that all the joint creditors, from whom he can claim a discharge, ought to be parties to the suit in order that the decree which may be passed therein may effectually discharge him as against all. It appears, however, that respondent amended the plaint by describing himself as managing co-parcener and representative of the joint family. The omission, therefore, to make respondent's brother a party [127] to the suit is by reason of the amendment a mere formal error by which appellants cannot be prejudiced. As regards the second preliminary objection that this suit does not lie, the Judge very properly disallowed it for the reasons mentioned in paragraph 14 of his judgment. The right which respondent seeks to enforce that of the creditor to recover the debt of a deceased Hindu father from his sons to the extent they take ancestral property by survivorship, and the ground of action is that by Hindu law it is the pious obligation of the latter to discharge, so far as ancestral property permits, the debt which the former died without paying. The present suit is not a suit to enforce the original mortgage because it has merged in the money decree in Original Suit No. 5 of 1877. Nor is it a suit to enforce the decree in that suit which can only operate inter partes. It is a suit to enforce an obligation imposed by Hindu law on the son to pay upon his father's death his debt in certain contingencies, an obligation which was not adjudicated upon in the previous suit and which can only be enforced by a fresh suit. In Arunachala v. The Zamindar of Sivagiri (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 328), and Natasayyan v. Ponnusami (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 99), this Court allowed such obligation to be enforced by a new suit. In Hanumantha v. Hanumayya (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 232) the Full Bench observed that, to enforce the liability of ancestral property in the hands of sons to satisfy their father's debt, the holder of a money decree must have recourse to a separate suit.

The third preliminary objection is that the question whether ancestral property is liable or not for the father's debt in the present suit is one which relates to execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 5 of 1877, and that the order whereby this attachment was raised was an order made under section 244, Civil Procedure Code, and that no fresh suit can be brought. This contention is however at variance with the order of this Court passed in an appeal preferred under section 244 on the 21st October 1890. It must also be observed that this order is in accordance with the principle laid down by the Full Bench in Hanumantha v. Hanumayya (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 232). It may also be noted here that, under section 234, Civil Procedure Code, an execution-creditor can only proceed against the property of a deceased debtor in the hands of his representatives and not against the property of the representative. It is loosely said at times that joint ancestral property [128] in the hands of a son is under the Mitakshara law assets for the payment of the father's debt, but it is not so per se, but assets only when the debt is either admitted to be binding or when in case of a bona fide dispute, it is finally adjudicated in a fresh suit to be neither illegal nor immoral.

Another preliminary objection is that the order passed by the Judge on the 18th September, 1889 and confirmed by the High Court on the 21st October, 1890 was an order made under section 280 of the Civil Procedure Code and that a declaratory suit is the only one which can be maintained under section 283 for the purpose of rendering that order inoperative. That was clearly not an order made under section 280. It purported to be made under section 244, and there was an appeal to the High Court and the final adjudication there was to the effect that the matter then in controversy was one which ought to be dealt with not in execution, but in a regular suit.

The fifth preliminary objection is that appellants were in existence before the date of Suit No. 5 of 1877, and that the present suit against them is consequently barred by section 43 of the Civil Procedure Code. We are not prepared to attach weight to this objection for two reasons, viz., (1) because the cause of action in the present suit is not the same as in the previous suit and (2) because we concur in the Judge's finding that appellants were born subsequent to the former suit. We adopt the reasons mentioned in paragraph 8 of the lower Court's judgment.

Two more objections are argued in support of this appeal. It is urged that the plaint asked only for a declaratory decree and that the Judge passed a decree for payment not only of instalments which had accrued due prior to suit but also those which had not then become due. So far as it relates to future instalments, the decree should have been merely declaratory, and it was not competent to the Judge to direct payment of a debt in respect of which the cause of action had not arisen at the date of suit. The clause in the plaint which prays for a decree declaring that defendants are bound at once to pay Rs. 1,792, the amount of the past six instalments, is ambiguous, but it prays also for such relief as the Court may deem proper and a direction that the instalments which had become due be paid awards only such as are properly claimable on the facts of the case. However imperfect the wording of the clause may be, there is reason to think [129] that the intention was to claim consequential relief in respect of past instalments. The payment of the full institution fee, the words 'are bound at once to pay' and the prayer for such other relief as the Court may grant show that a reasonable construction has been placed on the plaint and that the decree is substantially correct in so far as it relates to past instalments.

The last preliminary objection is that the suit is time-barred. The Judge holds that time began to run from the date on which each instalment fell due and that the period of limitation is twelve years under article 122, schedule II of the Act of Limitations. But it is clear that article 122* is not applicable, for this is not a suit upon a judgment, and under the Civil Procedure Code no second suit will lie upon a previous judgment, the remedy provided being its execution in the manner therein prescribed. As was observed in

Description of suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
Upon a judgment obtained in British India, or a recognizance.	Twelve years	The date of the judgment* or recognizance.]

Natasayyan v. Ponnusami (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 99), it is article 120* that governs the suit and the statutory period is six and not twelve years as considered by the Judge. According to article 120, time begins to run from the date when the right to sue accrues, and applying this principle to the case before us, we agree with the Judge that time begins to run from the date on which each instalment becomes due. To this view, appellants' pleader objects first on the ground that the son's obligation to pay the father's debts arose immediately on the father's death, which in this case occurred on the 28th December 1883, whereas the present suit was not brought till the 3rd February 1891. But this objection is not sound inasmuch as the father's obligation was only inchoate at the date of his death and the words 'right to sue' presuppose the existence of an obligation which is no longer inchoate, but is perfected and clothed with a right of action. It is not correct to say that the obligor's death perfects all his inchoate obligations which devolve on his heir and renders them enforceable at once without reference to the contract or rule of law which originated them. Suppose that the father executed an instalment bond for Rs. 10,000 payable in ten yearly instalments and died before the first instalment became due, leaving considerable separate property for his son to inherit, may the creditor demand the whole debt saying that the father's death perfected all his inchoate obligations as against the heir? The general principle is [130] that the son succeeds to the father's assets and liabilities as they are at the death of the latter and that the father's death does not alter either the nature or extent of the rights or liabilities transmitted to the son. Why should the case then be otherwise where the obligation attaches to ancestral instead of separate property in the hands of the son? The theory of the son's pious obligation rests on this basis, that the non-payment of a debt is a sin and that so long as it remains unpaid it is a source of torment to the manes of the father, ~~which~~ it is the son's duty to relieve him against. The object is to afford relief to the father, by discharging his debt when it becomes due, and not to benefit the creditor by making the debt more onerous against the son than it was against the father. The answer to the question when an obligation ceases to be immature and becomes actionable must depend upon the contract or the rule of law which is its cause, and not upon any new contract to be made by the Court for the parties concerned. In the case of a pious obligation devolving on the son under Hindu law when ancestral property survives, the obligation devolves on the son in the condition in which it would be enforceable against the father if he had been still alive. It is no doubt correct to say that the father's debt is binding on the son when ancestral property survives to him upon the father's death, but it is not correct to hold that the debt becomes always payable at once on the father's death. In most cases the debt may be, and is, one due at the date of the father's death, but cases may arise in which it may fall due some years after that event. It is, no doubt, stated in Natasayyan v. Ponnusami (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 99) that time runs from the date of the father's death, but it should not be forgotten that in that case the debt was overdue when the father died. We are therefore of opinion that the suit is not time-barred.

The result is that the decree of the Judge will be modified by omitting the direction about the payment of future instalments and by substituting for it a declaration that appellants are liable to pay future instalments as they fall due, and the decree is confirmed in other respects. The appeal having substantially failed, appellants will pay respondent's costs.

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE,

Transfer of Property Act—Act IV of 1882, ss. 67 (a), 68 (a)—Mortgagee's right to sue for mortgage-money and for sales—Usufructuary mortgage—Covenant to repay mortgage-money.

The first defendant executed a usufructuary mortgage of certain land in favour of plaintiff's deceased husband. It contained a covenant to pay the mortgage-money in Chittrai Kalavadi of the year 1883. This covenant was followed by these words: "If I fail to pay the mortgage amount in the said Kalavadi, then you shall receive the said mortgage amount in the Chittrai Kalavadi of whatever year I may pay it, deliver the said lands to my possession having cleared off the arrears of Government revenue, and also give back the bond." The plaintiff sued to recover the money secured from the defendant personally and also by sale of the mortgaged property:

Held, by a Full Bench, that the bond contained a covenant to pay, and that, therefore, the suit was maintainable.

APPEAL against the decree of H. H. O'Farrell, Acting District Judge of Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 26 of 1889.

The first defendant executed a mortgage of certain land in favour of plaintiff's deceased husband. The instrument, after describing the property in question and giving details regarding the payments comprising the mortgage sum, proceeded as follows: "As I have properly received this sum of three thousand rupees as per the above particulars, you shall yourself enjoy the said lands comprised under the mortgage, with possession in lieu of interest on the said sum and shall yourself pay the Sircar teerwah, the village Suvantiram (perquisites), Oobyam (service fees), etc. There are no arrears due to Government on the said lands up to the current fasli 87. I shall pay you the said mortgage amount of Rs. 3,000 in Chittrai Kalavadi (cultivation season of Chittrai) of the [132] year 1883 and take back this deed of mortgage with possession and the cancelled bonds mentioned above. If I fail to pay the mortgage amount in the said Kalavadi (cultivation season), then you shall receive the said mortgage amount in the Chittrai Kalavadi (cultivation season of Chittrai) of whatever year I may pay it, deliver the said lands to my possession having cleared off the arrears of Government revenue and also give back this bond."

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Mr. H. G. Wedderburn for Respondents. .

This appeal came on for hearing before their Lordships Mr. Justice PARKER and Mr. Justice SHEPHARD on Monday, the 14th day of December 1891, when the Court made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO FULL BENCH:—The District Judge has held that the mortgage executed by the first defendant in favour of the plaintiff's late husband is purely a usufructuary mortgage, and that, therefore, the suit which is brought to recover the money secured against the defendant personally and by sale of the property is not maintainable.

If the mortgage instrument contains a covenant on the part of the defendant to pay the money, we think there can be no doubt that the action lies. The clause on which the plaintiff relies is as follows:—

"I shall pay you the said mortgage amount of Rs. 3,000 in Chittrai Kalavadi of the year 1883 and take back this deed of mortgage with possession and the cancelled bonds mentioned above." The mortgage instrument is dated 10th May 1873. Clearly the clause quoted imports a covenant to pay the mortgage-money. But it is said that the clause which immediately follows shows that no covenant was intended. That clause runs thus—

"If I fail to pay the mortgage amount in the said Kalavadi, then you shall receive the said mortgage amount in the Chittrai Kalavadi of whatever year I may pay it, deliver the said lands to my possession having cleared off the arrears of Government revenue and also give back the bond."

We are unable to see that the clause is in any way inconsistent with the preceding one.

By the first clause, the mortgagor covenants to repay the money in the cultivation season of 1883: by the second clause, it is stipulated that on the mortgagor's default to pay the money in 1883, the mortgagee shall accept payment of the same in any late [188] cultivation season. In other words, this second clause, which, like the first, is for the immediate benefit of the mortgagee, limits the discretion of the mortgagor to repay the money and redeem the land.

Naturally the mortgagee was anxious not to be called upon to give up his security except at a season when the land could not, in the nature of things, be bringing him in any profit.

In our opinion the covenant to pay is not affected by the clause, but inasmuch as in the case cited (Appeal No. 4 of 1891,) the Chief Justice and WILKINSON, J., have taken a different view of the manner in which a similar document (the terms of which we are unable to distinguish) should be construed, we refer to a Full Bench the question, "Whether plaintiff is entitled to sue for sale under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act"?

In pursuance of the above reference, the case came on for hearing on Friday, the 24th November 1893, before a Full Bench, consisting of the Honourable the Chief Justice, Justice Sir T. MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and Mr. Justice SHEPHARD, when the Court expressed the following Opinion:—"We are clearly of opinion that the mortgage contains a covenant to pay and that therefore a suit for sale lies."

This appeal came on for hearing this day, when the Court delivered the following

Judgment.— We must reverse the decree (see Full Bench decision) and remand the suit for disposal. Costs to be provided for in the revised decree.

Raja Goundan(Plaintiff) Appellant

Raja Goundan and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Sale of mittah for arrears of revenue—Purchase by Government—Subsequent sale by Government—Suit by owner of a share in the mittah for cancellation of second sale—Revenue Recovery Act—Madras Act II of 1864, ss. 38, 59—Limitation—Admissibility of horoscope—Indian Evidence Act—Act I of 1872, ss. 17 and 18

The plaintiff was the owner of a share in a mittah which was sold on 15th February 1886 for arrears of revenue and bought by Government, who, on 16th June 1886, sold it to the first defendant, notifying the resale in the form prescribed under Madras Act II of 1864. The first defendant subsequently resold portions of the mittah to defendants 3 and 5 to 8. The plaintiff sued for cancellation of the second sale so far as his share was concerned, instituting a suit for this purpose on 31st March 1890;

Held, (1) that the sale of 16th June 1886 was not a sale under section 38 of Act II of 1864, although the notification of the sale was in the form prescribed by that Act, but a sale by Government of property that had become its own by reason of the purchase at the prior sale of 15th February;

(2) that even assuming the sale of 16th June 1886 to have been a sale under section 38 of Act II of 1864, the suit was time-barred under section 59 of that Act, since it should have been brought within six months from the date of plaintiff's majority, viz., 29th November 1888, as proved by his horoscope, which had been a public record from a period ante litem motam, was relied upon by the defendants in the present suit, and was put in as an 'admission' under the Indian Evidence Act, ss. 17 and 18. Ram Narain Kallia v. Monee Bibee (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 613) and Satis Chunder Mukhopadhyaya v. Mohendra Lal Pathuk (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 849) distinguished;

(3) that the limitation prescribed by section 59 of Madras Act II of 1864 is applicable to sales which are illegal by reason of contravening some express law, as well as to sales which are irregular. Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 70) relied on.

* Appeal No. 24 of 1892.

APPEAL against the decree of P. Dorasawmy Aiyar, Subordinate Judge of Bellary and Salem, in Original Suit No. 6 of 1890.

The facts of the case are stated sufficiently for the purposes of this report in the judgment of the High Court. The decree [133] of the lower Court was for the defendants. The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Sadagopachariar for Appellant.

The Acting Government Pleader (Subramanya Ayyar), Bhashyam Ayyangar, and T. Subramanya Ayyar for Respondents.

Best, J.—The appellant was plaintiff in the lower Court, his suit being (1) for cancellation, so far as his share of the Puthur mittah (in Salem district) is concerned, of a sale held on the 16th June 1886 by which the entire mittah was sold; or (2) in case it is found that the sale is not liable to be set aside, for a declaration that defendants hold the plaintiff's share as trustees and for a decree directing them to convey to plaintiff his share of the mittah and of the income thereof since the date on which defendants got possession of the same.

The Subordinate Judge has found that plaintiff's suit was not barred by limitation, and that if the suit had been for the purpose of setting aside the first sale held in February 1886, plaintiff would have been entitled to a decree, but that the second sale (of June 1886) is not one that is open to question by the plaintiff, as it was a sale of property no longer belonging to plaintiff, but belonging to Government as purchaser at the sale of February 1886.

As is seen from Exhibit I, the mittah in question was put up for sale, for arrears of revenue, on 15th February 1886, when there being no other bidders, it was purchased on behalf of Government for Rs. 1,000 and this fact was reported to the Board of Revenue on the following day (see Exhibit T); and orders were also issued at once to the treasury to credit this sum of Rs. 1,000 towards the arrears of the said mittah (see Exhibit XXXIX, also Exhibits XL and III). The mittah was again sold, on 16th June 1886, on the Collector's recommendation contained in his letter to the Board of Revenue which is filed as Exhibit H (dated 11th March 1886), the resale being sanctioned by the Revenue Board's Proceedings, dated 2nd April 1886 (see Exhibit I).

The Collector's letter H is as follows: "Since reporting the result of the sales of the Puthur and Tammakurichi mittahs, I have the honour to inform the Board that I have received two offers, one for Rs. 35,000 for the two mittahs that have been sold. As only a certain number of the villages of each mittah (though not separately registered) belongs to the minor proprietors for whose default they were sold, and as the owners of the other villages have regularly paid their share, I would strongly [136] recommend a resale to enable Kylasa Goundan who has offered the Rs. 35,000 or some other co-sharers to secure these old-standing mittahs and thus arrange among themselves to clear off all encumbrances. This, Kylasa Goundan proposes to do. Government can in no case be loser."

It must here be noticed that Tammakurichi mittah was also sold on the 15th February 1886 when Puthur was sold, and bought like Puthur on behalf of Government for Rs. 1,000, but plaintiff does not appear to claim any interest in that mittah, his case being (vide paragraph 2 of the plaint) that there had been a partition between his branch of the family and that of defendants 1 and 3 to 8, though the registry continued joint. By 1 "the resale of the mittahs is sanctioned as recommended" with the proviso that "Kylasa Goundan's offer should be fixed as the upset price."

The mittahs were accordingly resold on the 16th June 1886, when first defendant became the purchaser: this is the sale that is now sought to be set aside, and which the Subordinate Judge has held to be not a sale under section 38 of Act II of 1864, but a sale by Government of property that had already become its own by reason of the purchase at the prior sale of 15th February.

The first question for consideration in this appeal is whether the Subordinate Judge is right in thus holding? The answer to this question must, I think, be in the affirmative. As pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, no order passed by the Collector cancelling the sale of February, with reference to the provisions of section 38 of Act II of 1864 as amended by Act III of 1884, has been produced. On the contrary, it is admitted that no such order was passed; but the Collector's letter H (above set out in full) is referred to as being equivalent to such an order. Neither in this letter however nor in the Revenue Board's Order thereon (Exhibit I) is there anything said about setting aside the previous sale, and the mere use of the word resale clearly implies nothing more than a second sale. It is clear also from Exhibits II and V that the resale was with reference to Standing Order No. 111 of the Board of Revenue which deals with lands bought in by Government. No doubt the notification of this resale was issued in the form prescribed under Act II of 1864 for sales on account of arrears of revenue; but it is explained on behalf of the respondents, that no form had then been prescribed for sales under Standing Order No. 111. Be this as it may, the circumstance [137] that in the notification A (clause 2) the current revenue payable by the purchaser is entered as nil, when compared with the corresponding entry in B, the notification of the sale of 15th February (in which the sum is stated to be Rs. 8,532-1-7) places beyond doubt the fact that the 'resale' was not on account of arrears of revenue, but of property that belonged to Government as purchasers at the previous sale. Such being the case, the order (Exhibit O) is of no weight. This suit which is for setting aside the sale of 16th June 1886 for irregularities in such sale must therefore fail.

But even if the suit did not fail on this ground, it must do so as time-barred in so far as cancellation of the sale is sought. The period of limitation for a suit of this kind is six months from the date of the sale, see section 59 of Act II of 1864 and Venkata v. Chengadu (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 168). The appellant's contention that the limitation prescribed by the above section is inapplicable to sales which are open to the objection of illegality (as distinguished from mere irregularities) by reason of their contravening some express law—such as Regulation X of 1831, as alleged in the present case, is opposed to the recent ruling (dated 8th July 1893) of the Privy Council in Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 70), where a similar contention in the case of a sale under Act XI of 1859 was disallowed on the ground that "a sale is a sale made under the Act within the meaning of the Act, when it is a sale for arrears of Government revenue, held by the Collector or other officer authorized to hold sales under the Act, although it may be contrary to the provisions of the Act either by reason of some irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, or in consequence of some express provision for exemption having been directly contravened."

It was therefore incumbent on appellant to have brought his suit before the expiration of six months from the date of his attaining majority. If it were a fact, as alleged in the plaint, that plaintiff was a minor till October 1889, this suit, which was brought on 31st March 1890, would be in time. But the Subordinate Judge has found—and no doubt rightly—that plaintiff was born on 29th November 1870 and consequently attained his majority on the 29th November 1888, which is sixteen months prior to the institution of this suit.

[188] The fact of plaintiff's birth having taken place in November 1870 is proved from his horoscope (Exhibit XXV), which was produced by his mother before the Tahsildar in November 1880. It is initialled by the Tahsildar with the addition of the date, 10th November 1880, and in the deposition VII of Kaliyammal (appellant's mother), dated 9th idem, she is found to have stated that there was a copy of the horoscope with Rama Krishnier and that she would "send a person and get it this night." Rama Krishnier has been examined as defendants' third witness and identifies Exhibit XXV as the copy which he then gave to Kaliyammal. It is now produced from the public records where it appears to have been kept ever since its production in November 1880. Moreover, there is no room for doubt as to its identity with the horoscope produced before the Tahsildar, for in his report (X) to the Collector, which is dated 12th November 1880, he gives the plaintiff's age as 9 years 11 months and 11 days on the 18th idem, and in the Collector's letter VIII (of 13th December 1880) to the Board of Revenue the plaintiff is stated to be a minor 'now aged 10 years.' As at the time of the deposition VII and production of XXV there was no reason for misrepresenting the age of plaintiff, the evidence thus afforded may be safely relied on. It is also in accordance with the age of the plaintiff as stated in Exhibits V and LIII, the former of which is a deposition of Kaliyammal, dated 22nd March 1879, when she stated the plaintiff's age to be eight years, and the latter a petition of the same Kaliyammal, dated 7th December 1879, in which her son's age is given as nine years. This petition is proved by defendants' eighth witness Ramalinga Aiyan, by whom it was presented on behalf of Kaliyammal under the vakalat (Exhibit LII). These documents give support to the evidence of defendants' fourth witness Ramasawmi Aiyan, who was manager under plaintiff's father from Akshaya (1866-67) till his death in Iswara (1877-78). He states that plaintiff was born in the year Pramoduta (1870-71). It has been contended on behalf of appellant that the horoscope is inadmissible in evidence and in support of this contention we have been referred to the rulings of the Calcutta High Court in Ramnarain Kallia v. Monee Bibee (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 613) and Salis Chunder Mukhopadhyaya v. Mohendro Lal Pathuk (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 849). Those cases are not on all fours with the present one. In both the Calcutta cases [189] the horoscopes were produced then for the first time and by the parties relying on them; whereas in the present case defendants are relying on a horoscope produced by plaintiff's mother and which has been a public record from a period ante litem motam. It is not put in here as evidence admissible under section 32 of the Evidence Act, but more as an 'admission,' to which sections 17 and 18 of that Act are applicable. The date of plaintiff's birth is found to be 29th November 1870 and this finding is well supported by the evidence. The suit so far as it seeks for cancellation of the sale is consequently time-barred under section 59 of Act II of 1864.

It is therefore unnecessary to consider the alleged illegalities or irregularities in the conduct of the sale.

But it is further contended on behalf of appellant that, even if plaintiff is not entitled to a decree setting aside the sale, the first defendant should be held to have purchased as a trustee on plaintiff's behalf and a decree should be passed awarding to plaintiff his share of the zamindari. First defendant was in no sense a trustee for the plaintiff, and there is no reason whatever for holding that the sale was brought about by fraud on the part of the defendants. As is seen from the Collector's letter (Exhibit II), the arrears of revenue on account of which the mittah was sold were entirely due on the villages which constituted the share of plaintiff's branch, and the shares of defendants 3 to 8 were sold only because they were also liable in consequence of their not being separately registered. It was because the revenue due on the other shares had been 'regularly paid' that the Collector recommended the resale "to enable Kylasa Goundan or some other co-sharer to secure these long-standing mittahs and to arrange among themselves to clear off all encumbrances." There is therefore no ground for presuming fraud from the circumstance of first defendant having, subsequently to his purchase on 16th June 1886, resold portions to defendants 3 and 5 to 8 respectively under Exhibits G and F.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs (two sets).

Abdul Rahiman Saheb.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

versus.

Anna Pillai.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Rent Recovery Act, (Madras)—Act VIII of 1865, ss. 9, 10—Suit to enforce acceptance of pattah—Bona fide denial by defendant of plaintiff's title—Jurisdiction of Revenue Court.

The plaintiff obtained a permanent lease of inam lands attached to a mosque from the four owners thereof. The defendant was a cultivating tenant on the lands, and the plaintiff duly offered the defendant a pattah. The defendant refused to execute corresponding muchilka on the ground that the plaintiff was not his landlord, since the first of the afore-said owners had granted a lease for 35 years to a person who had sublet the land to the defendant. The plaintiff thereupon brought a suit to enforce acceptance of pattah under section 9 of Madras Act VIII of 1865. The Deputy Collector having decided the case in the plaintiff's favour, the defendant appealed and the District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the defendant's contention raised a bona fide question of title which ousted the jurisdiction of the Deputy Collector.

Held, that there is no provision in Madras Act VIII of 1865 that a bona fide denial of the relationship of landlord and tenant ousts the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts, and, with regard to section 10 of the Act, that "whenever a Court is invested with jurisdiction to determine the existence of a particular legal relation, the intention must be taken to be to authorize it to adjudicate on every matter of fact or of law incidental to such adjudication." Narayana Chariar v. Ranga Ayyangar (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 223) and Ayappa v. Venkata Krishnamarasu (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 485) cited and followed.

[141] Judgment.— This was a suit to enforce the acceptance of a pattah under Act VIII of 1865. The land in respect of which the pattah was tendered admittedly belongs to a mosque called Kazi Abdulla Asari's mosque. Appellant claimed to be respondent's landlord under a permanent lease granted to him by one Abdul Rahiman and his three sisters whom he described to be entitled to the land. He further alleged that respondent was a tenant cultivating about 4 acres of land. It was conceded that appellant duly tendered a pattah, but respondent denied that the former was his landlord. He contended that Abdul Rahiman granted a lease for 35 years to one Ragavendra Rao, who sublet the land to him. The first issue in the case was whether appellant's lessors were competent to execute the permanent lease in his favour, and the Deputy Collector decided the question in appellant's favour, observing that Abdul Rahiman, who granted the lease to Ragavendra Rao, was only one of four inamdars, whilst all the four inamdars granted the permanent lease to appellant, that Ragavendra's lease was further a benamee transaction and that it was never acted upon. On appeal, the Judge dismissed the suit and rested his decision on the ground that respondent's contention raised a bona fide question of title which ousted the jurisdiction of the Deputy Collector. It is argued on appellant's behalf that the Judge is in error in dismissing the suit for the reason that there was a bona fide dispute as to title and that he should have proceeded, as was done by the Deputy Collector, to adjudicate upon it. It is provided by section 10, Act VIII of 1865, that the Collector shall first inquire whether the party was bound to accept a pattah and give a muchilka and that, unless this is proved, the suit shall be dismissed with costs. Whilst it is thus clear that the Judge is bound to decide whether there is the relation of landholder and tenant for the year for which the pattah is tendered, there is no provision in the Act that a bona fide denial of that relation is a good defence or ousts the jurisdiction of Revenue Courts.

Whenever a Court is invested with jurisdiction to determine the existence of a particular legal relation, the intention must be taken to be to authorize it to adjudicate on every matter of fact or of law incidental to such adjudication. The Judge ought to have determined whether Ragavendra Rao's lease was acted upon, whether it was not a benamee transaction, or whether the actual relation of landlord and tenant existed as between appellant [142] and respondent, otherwise a tenant who was originally let into possession by A, and paid him rent for a series of years may collude with an adverse claimant and render his landlord's right to tender a pattah infructuous.

The decision in Narayana Chariar v. Ranga Ayyangar (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 223) proceeds on this principle. There the suit was brought by the tenant and the landlord denied the tenancy. The Head Assistant Collector dismissed the suit observing "as a question regarding the existence or otherwise of the relationship of landlord and tenant has arisen in this case, the matter must be determined in the regular way."

The District Judge concurred in that opinion, but the High Court remanded the case for trial on the merits, and the learned Judges observed: "The Judge is to try the case. The plaintiff's case is that he is a tenant and entitled to a pattah which defendant denies. To say that the Collector is to hold his hand and make no further inquiry merely because the landholder denies that plaintiff is his tenant, is to put it in the power of the landholder always to deprive the tenant of the remedy by summary suit given him by section 8."

Again, in Ayappa v. Venkata Krishnamarazu (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 485), the tenant's defence was that, though he was a tenant in the zamindari, the plaintiff was a member of an undivided family together with three other persons, that the defendant had already accepted pattah and executed a muchilka made out in the names of the plaintiff and his two coparteners. The District Judge held that the plaintiff being the registered zamindar, had a right to compel defendant to accept the pattah, and the High Court upheld the decision as correct. These are the latest decisions on the question and the principle on which they rest appears to be open to no objection.

We set aside the decree of the District Court and remand the case for trial on the merits.

Costs of this appeal will abide and follow the result.

The right to bring suits for the recovery of the property of a religious or charitable institution is vested in the trustee or manager of such institution, unless he is precluded by any special law from exercising it. The Respondent was not represented.

Judgment.—The lower Courts are in error in supposing that the present suit is of the nature of the suits which the committee are authorized to bring by section 12 of Act XX of 1863. That section relates only to the rents of property transferred by the Board of Revenue or local agents of Government to the committee, and it is not alleged that the property in question in this [144] suit was so transferred, and moreover this is not a suit for rent. The right to bring suits for the recovery of the property of a religious or charitable institution is vested as an ordinary incident of his office in the trustee or manager of such institution unless he is precluded by any special law from exercising it. There is nothing in the Act to take away such right from trustees appointed by the committee, and therefore plaintiff is entitled to maintain this suit. We reverse the decrees of the Courts below and remand the suit to the Court of First Instance for disposal on the merits. Costs hitherto incurred including costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were then sued as the personal representatives [145] of defendant No. 1. The lower Courts passed decrees in favour of the defendants and the plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Judgment.—It is argued before us that the debt contracted by the deceased first defendant was a family debt and is, therefore, binding on the respondents, and that the Subordinate Judge is in error in omitting to record a finding on this point.

The suit was originally brought against first defendant alone upon a bond executed by him. He does not appear to have been sued as representing the family, and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were only brought in after his death as his legal representatives. In the view that the debt was a family debt, the contention in the Courts below as to the effect of the attachment on survivorship was immaterial. This contention is at variance with the case on which the parties proceeded to trial in the Courts below.

As to the effect of the attachment on survivorship, it is to be observed that the attachment in question was one before judgment, and intended to protect the property from alienation by the defendant pending the decision of the suit. Till decree was passed it could not operate to render the attached property available for sale in execution. In the case before us there was no decree when the respondents' right of survivorship accrued on the death of the first defendant, and the principle laid down in Sadayappa v. Ponnama (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 554), we think, governs this case; consequently the right of survivorship took effect before the attachment became effectual for the purpose of execution. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of L. A. Campbell, District Judge of Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 62 of 1892, reversing the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Udamalpet, in Original Suit No. 136 of 1891.

The plaintiff sued for a decree establishing his right to certain immovable property and for the possession thereof; for the recovery of a sale-deed executed and registered by the first defendant in respect of the said property, and for the cancellation and delivery to the plaintiff of a sale-deed executed and given by the first defendant to the second defendant. The plaintiff having agreed to purchase certain immovable property of the first defendant, paid to him Rs. 60 for earnest money and expenses, and it was agreed between them that the first defendant should write the sale-deed and get it registered on that very day and deliver it to the plaintiff within five days, upon which the balance of the purchase money should be paid. Defendant executed and got the document registered on the day agreed upon, and thereupon he proceeded to sell the property to the second defendant, and executed and registered a sale-deed in respect of the second sale.

The District Munsif decreed the cancellation of the second sale-deed and specific performance of the contract to sell the property to the plaintiff.

[147] The District Judge set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the suit, on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to perform his part of the contract, inasmuch as he neither tendered nor paid the balance of the purchase money on the execution and registration of the document.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Bhashyam Ayyangar for Appellant.

Kothandaramayyar for Respondents.

Judgment.—We are of opinion that the registration of the sale-deed to plaintiff effected a transfer of the property to him by virtue of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. It has been held in Narain Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Dataram (I.L.R., 5 Cal, 597) that a registered transfer without delivery of possession will pass any interest in land, and we consider that registration constitutes a sufficient delivery of the deed to pass such interest, otherwise the object of registration would be defeated, that object being to let all the world know in whom the title to property lies. We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Munsif, the plaintiff still being liable for the balance of the unpaid purchase-money. The defendants must pay the plaintiff's costs in this and in the Lower Appellate Court.

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE SHEPARD.

Chockalinga Pillai.....(Defendant) Appellant

Natesa Ayyar and another.....(Plaintiffs) Respondents.*

Letters of administration—Promissory note given to a firm consisting of two undivided Hindu brothers—Decease of the brothers—Suit on note by their sons without taking out letters.

Two brothers, members of an undivided Hindu family, who traded as 'T. Iyavier and Brother', became the holders of a promissory note given to the firm. The elder brother having died, his son joined the firm in his place, and he and [148] his uncle filed a suit against the maker of the note, but before the action was heard the uncle died, and his son (a minor) was substituted as plaintiff for him, suing by the other plaintiff as his next friend. The plaintiffs had not taken out letters of administration to their respective fathers' estates:

Held, (1) that assuming that the younger brother could have sued as surviving member of the firm, on his death the necessity for taking out letters of administration could not be ~~avoided~~ ;

(2) that, if the debt was in reality due to the plaintiffs' family and not to the obligees of the bond, they could not sue upon it in their own right of survivorship without taking out letters of administration, since the promissory note did not disclose the nature of the debt, and, moreover, the other members of the family should have been joined as plaintiffs. Venkataramanna v. Venkayya (I.L.R., 14 Mad., 377) distinguished.

APPEAL against the judgment of HANDLEY, J., in Civil Suit No. 150 of 1889 on the file of the High Court, Original Side.

The plaintiffs sued to recover the sum of Rs. 3,096-10-8 due on a promissory note under the following circumstances. T. Iyavier, the deceased father of the second plaintiff, and Visvanadha Ayyar, the deceased father of the first plaintiff, were undivided Hindu brothers, who carried on business under the firm and style of T. Iyavier and Brother. In 1884, in the course of business, the firm lent the sum of Rs. 2,000 to one P. A. Chockalingam Pillai, defendant in the present suit, taking from him a promissory note for the amount and interest thereon at 12 per cent. per annum. T. Iyavier having died, his son, T. I. Vythinatha Ayyar, the second plaintiff, joined the firm in his place, and in 1887 the defendant endorsed on the note a renewal of his promise to pay. In 1889 the firm filed a suit against the defendant to recover the amount of the loan and interest, but, before the hearing, the first plaintiff died and his son, T. Natesa Aiyar (a minor) appeared as plaintiff in his stead by his next friend the second plaintiff. The plaintiffs had not taken out letters of administration to their respective fathers' estates.

Handley, J., delivered judgment for the plaintiff on the ground, inter alia, that letters of administration were not necessary for the maintenance of the suit since it was a suit by a surviving partner to recover a debt due to the firm, and not a suit to recover a debt due to a deceased person. The defendant preferred this appeal.

Branson and Branson for Appellant.

Sadagopachariar and Krishnamachariar for Respondents.

[149] Judgment.—The document, which is in the nature of a bond, is executed by the appellant in favour of Visvanadha, originally a plaintiff on the record, but now deceased, and Iyavier, who died before action brought.

The question is whether the suit is maintainable, no letters of administration having been taken out to Visvanadha or Iyavier. The learned Judge has held that letters were not required because the action was not to recover a debt due to a deceased person, but was an action by the surviving member of a firm. In saying this, however, he overlooked the fact that the surviving partner also was, at the time of trial himself, dead and that the actual plaintiff Natesa was seeking to recover a debt due to his deceased father Visvanadha. Assuming, therefore, that the latter could have sued alone as the surviving partner, we fail to see how, on death, the necessity of taking out letters of administration can be avoided. But it has been argued that the money was really owing to the family and not to the obligees of the bond, and that the plaintiffs as members of the family were entitled to sue in their own right of survivorship without obtaining letters of administration. Venkataramanna v. Venkayya (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 377) was cited in favour of this contention. What was said, however, in Venkataramanna v. Venkayya (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 377) was that, if, on the face of the document, it appeared that the debt was a family debt, the surviving member might sue in his own interest, the money being due to the family. In the present case the bond does not show the nature of the debt and therefore the decision is really not applicable.

Moreover, if it was competent to the plaintiffs as being themselves primarily and not in a representative character interested in the claim, the other members of the family ought to have been joined, and no application to join them was made though the objection of non-joinder was taken at the earliest opportunity.

It is said that the second plaintiff became a member of the firm on the death of Iyavier and that as such he is entitled to sue, but that contention is clearly unsound. The right originally vested in Iyavier might have been assigned to the plaintiffs or, on Iyavier's death, might have passed to his representative. But it certainly did not pass to him owing to the mere fact that he joined [180] the firm. In our opinion the plaintiff's suit was not properly framed and ought to have been dismissed.

If Visvanadha Ayyar and Iyavier were partners of a firm constituted in the ordinary way by contract, as appears to have been the case, for otherwise the second plaintiff would not have been said to have joined the firm on his father's death [(see Ram Narain Nursing Doss v. Ram Chunder Jankee Loll (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 86)] then it is clear that their representatives or at least the representative of the survivor must establish his character as such in the legal way by taking out letters of administration. In that case the Act clearly applies.

On the other hand, if it is said that the money was due to the family and that the plaintiffs as surviving members of the family were suing to recover it, they are met with the difficulties already mentioned.

We must reverse the decree and dismiss the suit directing the plaintiffs to pay the costs throughout.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 25th April and 20th October, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Sri Raja Rau Venkata Kumara Mahipati Surya Rau.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

*

Sri Raja Rau Chellayammi Garu.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Grant of portion of impartible zamindari—Construction of instrument of grant—Absolute grant—Creation of separate estate in favour of grantee as between him and grantor—Restriction in instrument contravening Hindu law of succession.

In a suit for the recovery of possession of an estate, it appeared that the estate in question had formerly formed a portion of an impartible zamindari, but had been granted, in the year 1845, by the plaintiff's father to his younger brother, in whose name the estate was registered in the Collector's books as a separate estate. The instrument of grant provided (inter alia) that in case of failure of self-begotten male issue in the grantee's line, the immoveable property of the grantee should be put in possession of the grantor's line. On the death of the first grantee, the [151] property passed into the possession of his two sons, and on the death of the elder son it came into the possession of the younger son. On his death, without male issue, the estate passed into the possession of his widow, defendant in the present suit. The plaintiff contended that the grant made to respondent's father-in-law was a maintenance grant; that under its terms the estate reverted to his father (now deceased) on the death of respondent's husband, when there was a failure of male heirs in his branch; and that, notwithstanding the grant, the members of the two branches did not cease to be co-parceners, and that consequently the right of survivorship of the plaintiff attached to the exclusion of the defendant :

Held, that, on the construction of the instrument of grant, the estate became, by virtue of that instrument, the separate and absolute property of respondent's branch of the family, and that the provision in that instrument purporting to create a special right of reversion in case of failure of male issue contravened the principle laid down in the Tagore case and was inoperative.

APPEAL against the decree of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Cocanada in Original Suit No. 27 of 1888.

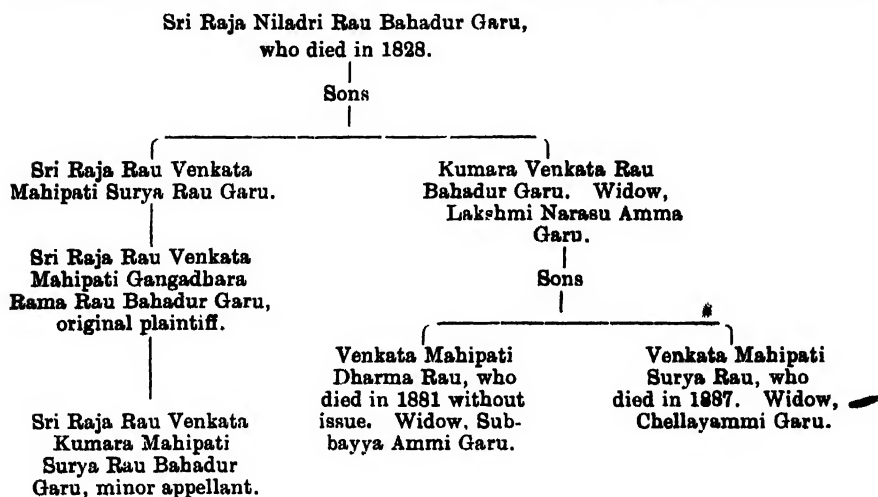

* Appeal No. 44 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the following judgment of the High Court.

Bhashyam Ayyangar for Appellant.

Subramanya Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—This was a suit brought by the late Zamindar of Pithapuram to recover possession of an estate called the Kolanka estate. The plaintiff prayed also for a decree for mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 26,400 per annum for fasli 1297 and subsequent years till delivery of possession. The appellant is the present minor Zamindar of Pithapuram, and respondent is his paternal grandfather's brother's son's widow. The subjoined pedigree shows how the parties are related to each other and to the other members of their family :—

[152] The estate of Kolanka had, prior to 1845, formed part of the zamindari of Pithapuram which is impartible property belonging to appellant's family and descending in accordance with the rule of primogeniture. Exhibit I declares that it was the ancient custom of the family for the eldest male in the eldest line to manage the zamindari, and for the other members to receive from him a periodical money allowance on account of their maintenance. On the 26th April 1845, appellant's grandfather severed nine villages from the zamindari, constituted the group into a separate estate and granted it to his younger brother who was respondent's father-in law.

Exhibit I is the instrument whereby the grant was made, and it is in these terms :—

"Kararnamah (agreement) executed on Saturday the 5th Chaitra Bahula of Visvavasu, corresponding to 26th April 1845, by (me) Sri Raja Rau Venkata Surya Rau Bahadur, Zamindar of Pithapuram, etc., in favour of my younger brother, Raja Kumara Venkata Rau.

"The conditions agreed to by us are as follows :—

"1. As from the days of the person who first acquired the said zamindari, it has been the unbroken custom in our family for the eldest to manage the raj in the eldest line, and for the rest to receive maintenance in cash from the person exercising the powers of the raj, and as the zamindari has been put in my possession this year after I ceased to be a minor, and as it is difficult for me to pay maintenance annually in cash as has been done by our ancestors, and difficult for you, too, if I should fail to pay it regularly, it appears convenient to me to give to you and your descendants, on account of maintenance, the following nine villages, viz., (i) Kolanka, (ii) Mungetooru, (iii) Veerara-ghavapuram, (iv) Raipuroo, (v) Chanduroo, (vi) Vunnapoody, (vii) Kaddavaly, (viii) Gokivanda, (ix) Jagapatirajapooram, attached to Gollaprolu Mutta acquired by your father and paying a cist of Rs.18,494 a year up to fasli 1254. You have also consented to this. I will get registered and give you, on account of maintenance, the said villages for hereditary enjoyment. From the date of this kararnamah you should conduct all the affairs of these villages for fasli 1255. The Collector of Rajahmundry should collect from you from fasli 1255, according to kistbundi, the permanent peshcush already fixed, until a permanent beriz [153] is fixed by him for the sub-division and afterwards the permanent beriz which may be fixed for it and grant receipts in your name. Henceforward, inayatnamahs relating to those villages should be addressed to you. As I have written an arzi this day to the Collector of Rajahmundry specifying the terms under which you and your descendants should enjoy those villages for maintenance, you must yourself manage hereafter the affairs of those villages for the ensuing fasli 1255, and enjoy all the profits hereditarily from son to grandson, paying to the Government the permanent beriz each year from the said fasli.

" 2. Till the said nine villages given to you by me are formed into a sub-division and a permanent beriz is fixed therefor, you should yourself from this date manage all the affairs of the villages, such as leasing them for fasli 1255, etc., and pay from the said fasli every year the permanent beriz already fixed without allowing it to fall in arrears. As I have been collecting the rents for fasli 1254, I will continue to do so to the end of the year and pay the peshcush due to Government up to the end of this fasli, paying the money due for all remaining instalments so that there may be no arrears. It is also settled that I myself should take the profit and loss for fasli 1254. You have nothing to do with it. Therefore, we must pay the permanent beriz to the Collector of Rajahmundry as stipulated above.

" 3. If while [the peshcush] is being paid to the Collector as stated above, the Government should take under its own management the said villages dispossessing you of the same, owing to arrears which may accrue since fasli 1255 by reason of adverse season or for any other reason, you should be responsible for it. I have nothing to do with it.

" 4. As referred to in the first paragraph of this kararnamah, I have sent a petition to have registered in your name the said nine villages given to you by me. We both must, therefore, submit to any amount that may be fixed as permanent beriz for the said nine villages and not quarrel that it is high or low.

" 5. If owing to your failure to pay and obtain receipts for the permanent beriz which may be fixed as stated in paragraph 4 for the nine villages which I have resolved to get registered in your name on account of maintenance, according to the instalments, or for any other reason, the said villages should be attached and [154] sold, neither you nor your heirs shall again claim from me or my heirs maintenance or make any kind of demand.

" 6. It is agreed that water should every year continue to flow through the channels issuing from Yelaru to the nine villages given to you by me and to the other villages in the manner in which it used to flow for the past up to fasli 1254.

" 7. If I should be in arrears of peshcush due to the Government on account of the zamindari of Pithapuram or if there should be outstandings due by me to people or litigation in Courts, you have nothing whatever to do with them and the like. Nor have I anything to do with the arrears due by you to Government or with the outstanding due by you to people or with any litigation in Courts and the like. As we have entered into a settlement as indicated above, we will never have any pecuniary claim against each other with reference to the above conditions.

"8. Your assets and liabilities and your property, moveable and immoveable, belong to you and to your heirs and my assets and liabilities and my property, moveable and immoveable, belong to me and my heirs. Neither of us need, therefore, be responsible for the affairs of the other.

"9. In whatever manner you may hereafter acquire property, moveable and immoveable, I will have nothing to do with it. In whatever manner I may hereafter acquire property, moveable and immoveable, you shall have nothing to do with it.

"10. As to the immoveable property belonging to us both, the said immoveable property should in case of the failure of 'aurasa' (self-begotten) male issue in either of these two lines, i.e., either for yourself or in your line of 'aurasa' sons or in my line of 'aurasa' sons, be put in possession of the other line, but it should not be alienated by making adoption and the like.

"11. We both having resolved to carry out the provisions of this kararnamah, you have this day executed to me a kararnamah with the above conditions and I too have executed this kararnamah to you

"This kararnamah has been executed of my own full accord."

Subsequent to the grant, the nine villages were registered in the Collector's books as a separate estate in the name of the grantee Kumara Venkata Rau. They were also charged with proportionate peshcush and became under Regulation I of 1819 an [155] independent permanently assessed estate. From the year 1845 to the year 1887, they had been in the possession, first of the grantee, Kumara Venkata Rau; next of his son Venkata Mahipati Dharma Rau and respondent's husband; and since the former's death in 1881, in the possession of respondent's husband alone till his death in 1887, when the villages passed into the possession of his widow, the respondent.

During this period, there occurred three events in the family which require to be noticed in this judgment. The first is another grant of three villages made in December 1869 by the original plaintiff for the maintenance of his own younger brother when the latter executed a document in favour of the former, similar in terms to Exhibit I. The next event is the litigation in the family commencing with Original Suit No. 11 of 1879 on the file of the District Court of Godavari and ending with the judgment of the Privy Council, dated the 29th September 1886 (Exhibits A, B, C, D, II, III and IV). Respondent's late husband brought that suit to set aside an adoption made by appellant's father, the late zamindar of Pithapuram, on the ground that such adoption was contrary to the ancient custom of the family and to the agreement made in 1845, which, it was alleged, precluded the zamindar for the time being from excluding by adoption or the like, the next heir male from succession. Referring to the 10th article of the agreement, the Judicial Committee observed: "It is clear that the father of Gangadhara could not bind his son, who was then in existence, not to adopt or legally stipulate that if he should adopt, the son so adopted should not inherit. The words are 'In case of the failure of self-begotten male issue.' Mr. Mayne has been forced to admit that those words meant an indefinite failure of issue; and that an adopted son should not even take by descent from his father. It appears to their Lordships that that would be entirely altering the law of descent and contrary to the principle laid down in the Tagore case. The third event is the will left by respondent's husband on the 6th January 1887 granting her authority to adopt and constituting her his successor until such authority was exercised. The testator died on the 22nd January 1887 and this suit was instituted on the 2nd July, 1888.

The appellant's case is (I) that the grant made to respondent's father-in-law was a maintenance grant; (II) that under its terms the estate reverted to his father on the death of respondent's husband when there was a failure of male heirs in his branch; [156] (III) that notwithstanding the grant, the members of the two branches did not cease to be co-parceners and by right of survivorship, the original plaintiff was entitled under Hindu law to take the Kolanka estate to the exclusion of a childless widow like the respondent. It is also contended for the appellant that on the question of subsisting coparcenary between the two branches, the adjudication in the suit of 1879 and in the appeals which arose from it, is conclusive.

On the other hand, it is urged for the respondent that by reason of the grant, the Kolanka estate became the separate property of her branch of the family; that Article 10 of the Agreement I is inoperative and does not support appellant's claim; that the two branches were since then divided in interest; and that the decisions in the suit of 1879 had reference to the zamindari of Pithapuram. The Subordinate Judge upheld respondent's contention and dismissed the suit with costs; hence this appeal.

It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the Subordinate Judge is in error in holding that the Kolanka estate was the separate property of Kumara Venkata Rau's branch and that the grant made to him in 1845 was not a mere maintenance grant. We do not consider this contention to be tenable. Our decision must depend on the legal effect of Exhibit I as to the nature and extent of the estate which was thereby intended to be granted. The object with which the grant was made was certainly a desire to assign land in lieu of money allowance which was previously paid for maintenance, but that object might legally be effectuated either by an absolute grant in full satisfaction of the claim to maintenance or by an annual grant of the income for one or more lives. The question, therefore, is one of construction as to the intention of the parties to the Agreement I. What was actually given under that instrument was a group of villages and the intention was to transfer the property therein to the grantee and not merely its income. The villages are described as 'given'; they were further constituted into a separate mitta; and the mitta was registered in the name of Kumara Venkata Rau as proprietor. Possession was also transferred to him at once and his right of independent management and his right to the whole of the profit was recognized. Moreover, the grant was declared to be hereditary from son to grandson or to be 'Putra poutra paramaryam,' which are words of inheritance and mean the grantee and his heirs.

[157] Again, there are several provisions which make the Kolanka estate independent of the zamindari of Pithapuram and the one is severed from the other as completely as it can be severed by partition. The words in Article 5 'to you and your heirs,' and 'me and my heirs' show that the agreement was intended to be in force between the future representatives of the two branches as well as between the parties themselves. Exhibit I is manifestly not a grant either for one life or a specific number of lives, but it is a permanent grant made for hereditary enjoyment. In this connection appellant's pleader argues that the grant was made for a specific number of lives, but the grant suggests no determinate number of lives. Again, he draws our attention to Article 10 of the agreement and urges that it was a grant to Kumara Venkata Rau and to the heirs male of his branch. But that article which relates to the immoveable property owned by the appellant's grandfather and by the grantee purports to create a special right of reversion in respect of such property for each branch, in case there was failure of male issue in the other and forbids its alienation by adoption and the like. It was held to be inoperative in the previous suit by their Lordships of the Privy Council so far as it prohibits adoption, and in our judgment it is equally inoperative so far as it excludes female heirs from succession. Both restrictions alike contravene the principle laid down in the Tagore case, viz., that when property is once given absolutely, the grantor is not competent to restrict its descent in accordance with the law of inheritance which is applicable to the parties concerned. The conclusion to which we come is that by agreement, property in the Kolanka estate was given to Kumara Venkata Rau and his heirs absolutely, that as between appellant and respondent it is the separate property of the latter's branch, and that Article 10 which forbids its descent in accordance with the Mitakshara law to the widow of the last male holder is inoperative.

Another ground upon which the Subordinate Judge relies is that even assuming that Article 10 is not inoperative, the intention was, upon its true construction, not to exclude the respondent from succession.

In support of this view he observes that respondent, though a childless widow in Kumara Venkata Rau's branch, was entitled to maintenance like its male representatives, and that there is, therefore, no reason to think that she is not of that class of persons for whose benefit the grant was made. Adverting to a similar provision [158] in Exhibit VIII which is a grant made by appellant's father on account of the maintenance of his own brother, the Subordinate Judge refers to an admission made by the former that the article was designed to prevent the estate passing to strangers outside the family and not to shut out from succession wives of the grantee's male heirs. So far as the inference from the object of the grant is concerned, the reasoning does not appear to be conclusive. So far as the original plaintiff's admission regarding the effect of a similar article in Exhibit VIII is concerned, it cannot be used against the appellant in favour of the respondent who was no party to it if, upon the true construction of Article 10 of Agreement I, it excludes females. The words are "on failure of a male or self-begotten male issue in either of these two lines, the immoveable property should be put in possession of the other line," and they are wide enough to bear the interpretation that the contingency contemplated is either an adoption from outside the family or the failure of male representatives. We prefer to rest our decision on the ground that Article 10 being inoperative should be expunged from the instrument and that the Agreement I when read without that article clearly evidences a permanent grant to Kumara Venkata Rau and his lawful heirs of whom respondent is one.

Another contention urged on behalf of the appellant is that when respondent's husband died, the Kolanka estate was coparcenary property and that by right of survivorship the appellant is a preferable heir. It is further stated that the decisions in the previous suit of 1879 are conclusive on this matter.

The decision of the Privy Council in the previous suit proceeded on the ground that a custom prohibitive of adoption was not made out as found by the District Court and the High Court and that Article 10 which forbade adoption was illegal and inoperative. The High Court, whilst it rested its decision on the custom not being proved, expressed also an opinion that there was coparcenary among the parties to that suit. But that opinion was expressed with reference to the zamindari of Pithapuram to which the adopted son was an heir previous to the birth of the appellant, and it is not conclusive as argued for the appellant in respect of the Kolanka estate which forms the subject of the present suit.

It may well be that the zamindari of Pithapuram is an impartible estate from which male co-parceners of a junior branch have a right to exclude a childless widow of the last male Zamindar and [159] yet with respect to all other properties the two may be divided in interest. Unlike the zamindari, the Kolanka estate is property carved out of it and made the subject of a recent grant. We have already stated our reasons for holding that under the terms of the grant, it is, as between the parties to this appeal, the separate property of Kumara Venkata Rau's branch. This does not rest on more inference for article 8 of the agreement refers to the property owned then by each branch and describes its status in relation to it in these terms—"your assets and liabilities and your property, moveable and immoveable, belong to you and your heirs, and my assets and liabilities and property, moveable and immoveable, belong to me and my heirs. Neither of us need therefore be responsible for the affairs of the other." They are words of severed interest and several liability and are inconsistent with community of interest in the absence of which no coparcenary can subsist.

Article 9 relates to after-acquired moveable and immoveable property and provides with reference to it in these terms—"in whatever manner you may hereafter acquire property, moveable and immoveable, I will have nothing to do with it. In whatever manner I may hereafter acquire property, moveable and immoveable, you shall have nothing to do with it." It appears to be a reasonable inference from these two articles that, from the date of the agreement, the parties by mutual consent determined their status as co-parceners, for from that day forward, it is clear there was to be neither unity of interest nor of enjoyment either in the Kolanka estate or in after-acquired property. In paragraph 44 of his judgment, the Subordinate Judge discusses also the conduct of the parties both prior and subsequent to the agreement and comes to the conclusion that it likewise denotes determination of coparcenary from the date of the agreement I. We do not desire to be understood as expressing any opinion regarding the zamindari of Pithapuram which is an ancient impartible zamindari, but we entirely agree with the Subordinate Judge that as regards the Kolanka estate, the after-acquired and other property of the respondent's branch, the coparcenary or joint interest of the appellant's branch has ceased from the date of the agreement I.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that this appeal cannot be supported and that it must be dismissed with costs.

[160] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 25th October, and 22nd December 1893,

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Ananthaya.....(Defendant) Appellant

Hindu law—illegitimate son—Maintenance.

Under the Mitakshara law an illegitimate son is entitled to maintenance as long as he lives, in recognition of his status as a member of his father's family and by reason of his exclusion from inheritance among the regenerate classes. The maintenance decreed to an illegitimate son may be secured on the family property.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of W. C. Holmes, Acting District Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 178 of 1891, modifying the decree of M. Mundappa Bangera, District Munsif of Mangalore.

The plaintiff, an illegitimate son of the defendant's father, a Brahmin by caste, sued to recover from defendant his maintenance as a charge on certain immoveable family property. Both the lower Courts decreed in favour of the plaintiff, and the defendant preferred this appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Respondent.

Judgment.—Both Courts have found that respondent is the illegitimate son of appellant's father Krishnaraya, who was a Brahmin by caste. As observed by the District Munsif, it is a settled rule of Hindu law that among the regenerate classes illegitimate sons are entitled to maintenance. The District Judge considered Rs. 4 a month to be a suitable provision for respondent and decreed to him future maintenance and arrears of maintenance for fourteen months before suit at the rate of Rs. 4 per mensem. From this decision the defendant has preferred this second appeal.

There can be no doubt that under the Mitakshara law, by which the parties are governed, an illegitimate son is entitled to [161] maintenance among the regenerate classes. The Smriti of Yajnyavalkya and its exposition in the Mit., chapter I, section XII, leaves no room for doubt on this point. An illegitimate son is one of that class of persons who, by reason of their exclusion from inheritance, are allowed maintenance by the Hindu law, and this is clear from the facts that among Sudras he shares his father's property together with the legitimate son. It is urged on appellant's behalf that respondent is not entitled to maintenance after he attains his age, but we are unable to accede to this contention. The Smriti of Yajnyavalkya awards maintenance to an illegitimate son not as a provision against starvation and vagrancy, but in recognition of his status as a member of his father's family and by reason of his exclusion from inheritance among the regenerate classes. As in the case of females of the family or of disqualified heirs, an illegitimate son is entitled to maintenance as long as he lives. We do not, however, desire to be understood as holding that his earnings, when he is able to earn, should not be considered in fixing the rate at which maintenance should be paid.

* Second Appeal No. 239 of 1893.

Another contention is that maintenance can only be decreed subject to the condition that he is 'docile' and our attention is drawn to the decision in Hargobind Kuari v. Tharam Singh (I L. R., 6 All., 329) and to the words in Mit., chapter I, section XII, sloka 3, "but if he be docile, he receives a simple maintenance." By docility, cited above in the text, is meant nothing more than showing such consideration and rendering such reasonable service as are ordinarily due to the head of the family by its members. It is not necessary to consider, for the purposes of this appeal, whether the text is more than directory, as there was no plea in the Courts below based on this ground.

The third contention is that the maintenance should not be made a charge on any immoveable property belonging to the family. As the maintenance awarded is the result of exclusion from inheritance, and as the Hindu theory is that family property constitutes assets from which charges in the nature of maintenance, etc., are to be met, the maintenance decreed to an illegitimate son may be secured on the family property, as in the case of a female member, by being declared to be a charge.

The fourth contention for the appellant is that respondent's [162] mother was a dancing girl by caste. But both Courts find that respondent is the illegitimate son of his father, and as this is a question of fact, the finding is binding upon us. The position of the mother as a dancing girl by caste is only important as showing that her connection with the father was casual and not continued concubinage, but in the present case the Judge referred to evidence showing that respondent's mother was the concubine of his father for a long period of years. This appeal cannot be supported and we dismiss it with costs.

NOTES.

[The illegitimate son by adulterous intercourse is also entitled to this right of maintenance, (1910) 20 M.L.J., 350.]

arrangement cannot affect a third party condemned in costs ; neither is it illegal or contrary to public policy.

APPEAL against the judgment of WILKINSON, J., sitting on the Original Side in Civil Suit No. 128 of 1891.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the judgment of Wilkinson, J.--“ This is an application to review the taxation of the defendant's bill of costs in the above suit, to set aside the allocation of the taxing officer and to lay down the mode in which and the principle on which the bill should be taxed.

“ The suit was one by a private individual against the Secretary of State. At the first hearing the Secretary of State was [163] represented by the Advocate-General, instructed by the Government Solicitor, and the suit was dismissed, the plaintiff being ordered to pay the costs of the Secretary of State.

“ The taxing officer's notes show that before him the plaintiff objected to defendant's bill of costs on the ground that defendant had incurred no costs ‘ unless for the time of their officers ’ (whatever that may mean). The Government Solicitor replied that the taxing officer was not at liberty to go behind the order to tax, that costs were given as a penalty, and that it had for more than thirty years been the invariable practice of the Court to tax Government bills of costs in the same way as other bills of costs. The taxing officer accepted the plea of the Government Solicitor and taxed the costs as between party and party.

Mr. Norton appears for the plaintiff and argues that as Government pay the Government Solicitor a fixed monthly salary to do its legal work, the Secretary of State, the defendant in this case, cannot be said to have incurred any cost ; that, as the Government Solicitor cannot recover from the Government the items mentioned in the bill of costs, Government cannot recover them from the plaintiff, and that the principle upon which the Court ought to proceed in fixing costs is to ascertain what was the actual damnification caused to the successful party and to award to him the sum which he is actually out of pocket. Mr. Norton's argument proceeds on the assumption that the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of any arrangement entered into by the Government with the Solicitor whose services the Government see fit to retain by the payment of a monthly salary. I do not think that he is. The principle applicable in cases like the present appears to be that laid down in the case relied on by the Advocate-General, Raymond v. Lakeman (34 Beav., 584). In that case the Taxing Master allowed a company which employed standing solicitors at a fixed salary such costs as the company would be bound to pay to their solicitors. It was argued before the Court that as the standing solicitors were paid a fixed salary, the company had no right to charge the unsuccessful party more than their own standing solicitors could have charged them. The Master of the Rolls maintained the order of the Taxing Master, holding that the unsuccessful party could not [164] have the benefit of any private arrangement between the solicitor and the company as to costs. The case appears to me on all fours with the present case. The unsuccessful party, the plaintiff, has been ordered to pay to the defendant the costs incurred by him. The defendant asserts that costs have been incurred by the employment of a solicitor to receive the summons, to instruct counsel, put in written statements, etc. It is not denied that the costs which the present defendant claims to recover from the plaintiff are such as any other defendant must have incurred in defending the suit and would be bound to pay to his solicitor. But it is argued that unless the Government Solicitor proves that he can recover the costs from Government, Government cannot recover them from plaintiff. This is entirely beside the question, which is one between plaintiff and defendant, not one between plaintiff and the Government Solicitor, as Mr. Norton suggests. The plaintiff has no right to assume that the defendant has not expended these sums, nor is he entitled to call upon the defendant to prove the nature of the contract between him and his solicitor. The case of Barnes v. Attwood (5 C. B., 164) is not really in point, as there the taxing officer had been induced by false affidavits to allow a larger sum as expenses to commissioners than had actually been paid. It is true that Mr. Norton's whole argument proceeded on the assumption that the bill of costs put in by the defendant in this case represents absolutely fictitious transactions as between the Government Solicitor and the Government. But it is unnecessary to consider that question. The only question is—Has the defendant incurred any, and if so, what costs. The answer is—The defendant has employed a solicitor, who has done certain acts and is entitled to charge for his time and work, and the defendant is liable to remunerate the solicitor. Whether Government chooses to do by a fixed salary and whether the costs, if recovered, go to the Government treasury or into the solicitor's pocket, is not a matter into which the taxing officer is competent to inquire.

"The petition must be dismissed with costs."

The plaintiff (appellant) preferred this appeal.

Messrs. Branson and Branson for Appellant.

[165] The Government Solicitor (Messrs. Barclay, Morgan and Orr) for Respondent.

Judgment.—It is by no means clear what are the exact terms on which contentious business is done as between the Government Solicitor and Government. Assuming, however, that the arrangement is that he should receive a salary and, in addition, the costs recoverable from third parties in those cases in which costs are awarded to Government, we are unable to see how that arrangement can affect a third party who is condemned in costs. Raymond v. Lakeman (34 Beav., 584).

The arrangement does not appear to be contrary to public policy, and there is no Act under which it is made illegal. Jennings v. Johnson (L. R., 8 C. P., 425).

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Limitation—Act XV of 1877, sched. II, art. 179—Step in aid of execution — Request for payment of money realized in satisfaction of a decree.

A request for the payment of money realized in satisfaction of a decree is sufficient to keep the decree alive, being a step in aid of execution. Venkatarayalu v. Narasimha (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 174) approved and followed.

Whether a particular act is or is not an application for, or step in aid of, execution, depends upon the nature of the act rather than the time at which it may possibly be done. Hem Chunder Chowdhry v. Brojo Soondury Dabee (I.L.R., 8 Cal., 89) qualified.

APPEAL against the order of H. G. Joseph, Acting District Judge of Ganjam, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1883.

The plaintiff, holder of a decree, dated 14th October 1884, [166] presented a petition, dated 14th April 1891, to show good reasons why the decree had not been barred by limitation. It appeared that the plaintiff applied for and was paid certain moneys through the Court under receipts dated 15th May and 28th October 1889. The District Judge held on the authority of Fazal Iman v. Metta Singh (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 549) that such an application was not a step in execution within the meaning of clause 4 of article 179†, schedule II of Act XV of 1877, and that consequently the limitation was not saved.

The petitioner preferred this appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellants.

The Respondents were not represented.

Judgment.—It must be inferred, from the Sheristadar's report on the receipts of 1889 and the Judge's subsequent order thereon, that there was a request for payment of the money realized in satisfaction of the decree, and such request is sufficient to keep the decree alive, as held in Venkatarayalu v. Narasimha (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 174).

Though the Judge considers the opinion expressed in Venkatarayalu v. Narasimha (I.L.R., 2 Mad., 174) to be a mere obiter dictum, it was certainly one of the grounds of decision in the case, and we agree with it. With reference to the observation in Hem Chunder Chowdhry v. Brojo Soondury Dabee (I.L.R., 8 Cal., 89) that the money may be drawn at any time, it seems to us that in deciding whether any particular act is or is not an application for, or step in aid of, execution, it is the nature of the act that must be looked to, and not the time at which it may possibly be done.

We set aside the order of the District Judge and direct that the execution be proceeded with.

Succession Certificate Act—Act VII of 1889, ss. 19 and 26—Appeal from an order of a District Court under section 26.

Section 26 of the Succession Certificate Act confers on the District Court the same appellate jurisdiction over an order of an inferior Court as is conferred by section 19 on the High Court over the order of a District Court. There is no provision in the Act for a second appeal in any case.

APPEAL against the decree of R. S. Benson, District Judge of South Malabar, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 63 of 1892, confirming the order of the Subordinate Judge of Palghat in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 7 of 1892.

The petitioner applied for a certificate of heirship under section 6 of the Succession Certificate Act. The Subordinate Judge rejected the petition. The petitioner appealed to the District Court under section 26 of that Act and his appeal was dismissed. He then preferred this appeal.

Sundra Ayyar for Appellant.

Krishna Menon for Respondent.

Judgment.—The preliminary objection is taken that no second appeal lies. The language of section 26 appears to us to support the contention. The intention was, we think, to confer on the District Court the same appellate jurisdiction over an order of an inferior Court as is conferred by section 19 on the High Court over the order of a District Court.

* Appeal against Appellate Order No. 5 of 1893.

There is no provision in the Act for a second appeal in any case. Both section 19 and section 26 declare that the orders of District Courts shall be final.

The material words in section 19, clause 3, are "subject to the provisions of sub-section 1 and of chapters 46 and 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure as applied by section 647 of that Code, an order [168] of the District Court, under this section, shall be final." Section 26, clause 3, is to the same effect, but the words 'subject to the other provisions of this Act,' are omitted.

It is contended that the word final is intended to preclude any other suit. This may be. But we are of opinion that it also precludes a further appeal except when such is expressly allowed.

The use of the words 'subject to the other provisions of this Act' in section 19 and their omission in section 26 is significant.

We are of opinion that the preliminary objection must prevail.

This appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

tiff, and C, as second plaintiff, brought a suit against the defendants alleging that the defendants had failed to fulfil their part of the contract during the second year of its continuance (1886) and praying (1) that all the defendants be directed to deliver to the plaintiffs the salt collected during 1886; (2) that defendants 2, 4 and 7 should be held liable for any damages plaintiffs might suffer through a fall in the price of salt. The Court of First Instance, having held that the contract contained seven separate and distinct contracts, each defendant having contracted with reference to his own [169] pans only, decreed (1) that the seven defendants should pay damages at the rate of Rs. 5-12-0 per garce for the salt collected by each during the years 1886 to 1889, leaving the quantity to be ascertained in the execution of the decree; (2) that the defendants should pay the plaintiffs' costs. On appeal the District Judge modified the decree by fixing the rate of damages at Rs. 45-10-0 for each garce of salt:

Held, on appeal (1) that A was not competent to assign his interest in the contract to the second plaintiff, since the contract was based on personal considerations, and that the assignment of it as an executory contract was invalid without the consent of the defendants. Farrow v. Wilson (L. R., 4 C. P., 744), Humble v. Hunter (12 Q. B., R. P., 310), Arkansas Valley Smelting Company v. Belden Mining Company (127 U.S.R., 379), followed;

(2) that the suit was bad for misjoinder, since the case of each defendant, as a party to a distinct contract, should be decided on its own merits;

(3) that the decrees of the lower Courts were bad in making all the defendants jointly and severally liable for costs, and for damages for other years than the year 1886, and in not ascertaining the amount of damages payable by each defendant;

(4) that the measure of damages was what the plaintiffs had lost by the breach of contract, but that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in applying the rate fixed on this principle to each defendant without ascertaining the particular nature of the breach of which each defendant was guilty.

SECOND APPEALS against the decree of T. Weir, District Judge of Madura, in Appeal Suits Nos. 225, 240 and 304 to 325 of 1890, modifying the decree of A. Ramasawmy Sastrial, Additional District Munsif of Sivaganga, in Referred Suit No. 137 of 1888.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the above and from the judgment of the High Court. The contract in question was as follows:—

"1. As we have bound ourselves to present petitions and store up in your name, for seven years, from 11th April 1885 to 10th April 1892, all the salt manufactured by us under the license, in accordance with the new excise rules, in the salt-pans of the Vattanam factory which were in our forefathers' enjoyment before and which are in our enjoyment now, we will manufacture salt for the said seven years according to the instructions given by you or your agent and, according to the Circar rules, present petitions in your name beforehand and store up salt and preserve them by putting them in heaps according to the instructions given by you or your agent, use clay for those heaps according to the Circar rules and use sand for the cracks, etc.; and within four months from the date of our giving over the salt [170] to you in the abovesaid manner you are to pay each of us at 11½ rupees per garce and take receipts from us.

"2. Either you or your agent must give to each of us a kachat then and there for the salt stored up after measurement and secured or preserved in the manner stated in para. 1.

"3. We are to execute, at our own cost, the repairs of 'kadal vaikal,' 'kanni vaikal' (channels, the water of which is used for watering the salt-pans), 'keni' (a sort of well), patti (salt-pans), panni, etc., places where salt is manufactured, and we will ourselves execute the repairs that have now to be done.

" 4. All the taxes or duties that we have to pay to the Salt department according to the license under the new system shall be paid by yourselves.

" 5. Out of the repairs that we might be ordered to execute under the rules that might be framed by the Government, you are to execute all sorts of repairs excepting those stated in para. 3.

" 6. You are not only to accept for the said seven years the salt manufactured by us according to the 'dittum' (standard or estimate, so translated by Mr. Winslow) prescribed by you, but also to exercise all the rights that we possess in the factory, as our representatives.

" 7. You are yourselves to sell the salt mentioned above. If we lay waste the salt-pans mentioned below without manufacturing salt, and if we do not show, in the matter of storing up of salt, satisfactory reasons, such as the unfavourable circumstances of the weather and the like, each of us will be responsible and pay you at Rs. 5½ per garce for the loss that might accrue to you (by the non-manufacture of salt) and the salt being below the standard or estimate.

" 8. At the end of the term, after all the salt stored up in your name has been sold away, we will sell at our pleasure the salt that we might manufacture subsequently.

" 9. This agreement, containing the above conditions, was executed by us with our free consent."

The lower Courts decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, and the defendants preferred this appeal.

Sivasami Ayyar and Krishnasami Ayyar for Appellants.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar, Bhashyam Ayyangar and Tiruvenkata Chariar for Respondents.

[171] Judgment.—The seven defendants were salt manufacturers holding pans in the factory at Vattanam, and they entered into the contract A, dated the 16th November 1884, with one Nur Mahomed engaging themselves in consideration of the said Nur Mahomed discharging the Government taxes and executing certain repairs and paying them at the rate of Rs. 11-8-0 per garce of salt, to manufacture and store in the factory in the name of, and for the benefit of the said Nur Mahomed such quantities of salt as he might require them to manufacture each season for seven years from 11th April 1885 to 10th April 1892.

It has been found as a fact by both the lower Courts on the fourth issue raised in the case that the first plaintiff Mahomed Aliar Rowther (now deceased, but represented by respondents 1 to 4) was a party with Nur Mahomed to the contract, though he is not expressly mentioned therein. The first plaintiff's share was 2 in 5½ shares; and Nur Mahomed's share was the balance 3½ shares. Nur Mahomed assigned his 3½ shares to second plaintiff (now deceased, but represented by respondents 5 and 6) under the deed of assignment Z, dated 11th January 1886.

* This suit was brought in February 1887 against the seven defendants alleging that, while the contract had been fulfilled on both sides for the season 1885 up to the 14th January 1886, the defendants had failed to fulfil their part of it for the season 1886 and praying that all the defendants should be directed to deliver to plaintiffs the salt they had collected and heaped in 1886, and that defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 7 should be specially held liable for any damages plaintiffs might suffer through a fall in the price of salt. There was also an incidental prayer that each defendant should be directed to execute a separate power of attorney to the plaintiffs as required by the Salt department in lieu of a single instrument that had been jointly executed by them, and for a general declaration of plaintiffs' rights. Several issues of law and of fact were raised at the trial, all of which have been found in favour of plaintiffs except that the agreement A was held good so far as the stamp duty was concerned only as against one of the defendants, and penalties were levied upon it in regard to the other six defendants, it being rightly held that it contained seven separate and distinct contracts, each defendant having entered into a separate engagement in regard to his own pans only. The decree of the Court of First Instance after a general [172] declaration of plaintiffs' rights including the right of the second plaintiff to sue as the assignee of Nur Mahomed and a direction for each defendant to execute a separate power of attorney as prayed in the plaint, further directed each of the seven defendants to pay plaintiffs' damages for the years 1886 to 1889 (the decree being dated 10th day of January 1890) at the rate of Rs. 5-12-0 per garce for the salt collected by each of them during those years, leaving the quantity to be ascertained in the execution of the decree, and also directed the defendants to pay the plaintiffs' costs.

It may as well at once be noted that this decree is bad in three different respects:—first, in decreeing damages for the four years 1886 to 1889, and that against all the seven defendants, when in the plaint, damages for the year 1886 alone were or could be asked for, and that against only defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 7, the claim against the others being only for the delivery of specific salt; secondly, in reserving for determination in execution what was necessary for determination by the decree itself, namely the amount of each defendant's liability to damages; and thirdly, in making the defendants jointly and severally liable to plaintiffs' costs when, as it had been found that the contract* of each was separate, they were liable only to pay costs on the amount of damages assessed against each of them separately. The decree of the Appellate Court, without remedying any of the defects noticed, perpetuates and even aggravates them. Thus another year—the year 1885—is added to the other four years 1886, 1887, 1888 and 1889 for which all the defendants are to pay damages apparently, jointly and severally, and they are again in appeal also made severally and jointly liable for the plaintiffs' costs; the amount of their liability in damages being still left for determination in execution. The Appellate Court also enhanced the rate to be paid as damages from Rs. 5-12-0 to Rs. 45-10-0 per garce.

The chief points taken in second appeal by the first six defendants are as follows:—

- (1) that the second plaintiff had no right of suit on the assignment,
- (2) that the suit was bad for misjoinder,
- (3) that the decrees are defective in regard to the matters just pointed out, and
- (4) that the rate allowed by the Appellate Court for [173] damages is opposed to the terms of the contracts between the parties.

As to the first objection, it is that Nur Mahomed was not competent to assign his interest in the contract A. It is argued that the contract was based on personal considerations and that the rights conferred upon Nur Mahomed by the contract were coupled with liabilities and that on both these grounds the contract was not assignable. In support of this contention the appellant's pleader relied on Farrow v. Wilson (L. R., 4 C. P., 744), Humble v. Hunter (12

Q. B., R. P., 310) and Arkansas Valley Smelting Company v. Belden Mining Company (127 U. S. R., 379). In Farrow v. Wilson (L. R., 4 C. P., 744) the contract in suit was an agreement whereby the plaintiff undertook to serve one Pugh as farm bailiff, the agreement being terminable upon six months' notice on either side. The question for decision was whether the death of Pugh put an end to the contract, which did not contain the word 'assigns,' and it was held that it did. The ground of decision was that, in contracts for personal service, it is an implied condition that death of either party should dissolve the contract. Mr. Justice WILLIS laid down the principle which governed the case in these terms:— "Where personal considerations are of the foundation of the contract, as in cases of principal and agent and of master and servant, the death of either party puts an end to the relation." The contract in Humble v. Hunter (12 Q. B., R. P. 310) was a charter-party signed by the plaintiff's son on the one part and by the defendant on the other, and it recited that the son was the owner of the ship. The question was whether the plaintiff might show that she was the real principal and that her son, though he signed the contract, was really agent. Two principles were discussed, viz., (1) that a principal may come in and take the benefit of a contract made by his agent, and (2) that no parol evidence shall be admitted to contradict a written contract. It was held that the evidence was not admissible, the reason being that the son gave himself a special description and asserted a title to the ship as owner, and that this circumstance took the case out of the general rule, that a principal may sue upon the contract made by his agent. Lord DENMAN, C. J., referred to the general principle that a party to a contract has a right to the benefit he contemplates from the character, credit and substance [174] of the party with whom he contracted. In the American case, the contract was to sell and deliver lead ore from time to time at the smelting works of a firm of partners, that the ore was to become upon delivery the property of the partnership, and that it was to be paid for after a subsequent assay of the ore and ascertainment of the price. The question was whether the partnership might assign the contract as to future deliveries and it was determined in the negative. The Court stated that every one has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent. It also referred to the principle mentioned by Lord DENMAN, namely, "you have the right to the benefit you anticipate from the character, credit and substance of the party with whom you contract." It referred to the rule in Pollock's Treatise on Contracts (fourth edition, page 425) that rights arising out of a contract cannot be transferred if they are coupled with liabilities or if they involve a relation of personal confidence such that the party whose agreement conferred those rights must have intended them to be exercised only by him in whom he confided. Applying that principle to the case before them the Court remarked that during the time that must elapse between the delivery of the ore and the ascertainment and payment of the price the defendant had no security for the payment except in the character and solvency of Billing and Eilers, the parties with whom he made the original contract. The defendant therefore could not be compelled to accept the liability of any other person or corporation as a substitute for the liability of those with whom he had contracted.

Now in this case it will be seen from the terms of the contract A, which are set forth in full in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, and need not therefore be repeated here, that by article 1 the defendants were to allow Nur Mahomed four months' time for payment after delivery of their salt to him, by article 4 that he was liable to pay the Government taxes and dues, by article 5 that he was to execute all but petty repairs, and by article 6 that he was to fix the quantity of salt to be delivered by defendants. There is, therefore, not only credit given to Nur Mahomed in the matter of payment, but other liabilities are thrown upon him, the discharge of which depended upon his solvency, and there is also a certain discretion vested in him in [173] regard to the quantity of salt to be demanded. Further, the assignment Z upon which the second plaintiff was suing was an assignment of an executory or continuing contract. The assignment was made on the 11th January, 1886 and the breach of contract sued upon was for a breach subsequent to that date. So that we have here all the elements which we find in the principles above laid down for holding that the contract was based on personal considerations and that the assignment of it as an executory contract was invalid without the assent of the defendants. It is not pretended that such assent was expressly given, nor is there evidence on the record of such a character as would amount to a novation of the contract such as is contemplated by section 62 of the Indian Contract Act. It is contended for the second plaintiff that after the assignment to him the defendants accepted payment from him for salt delivered as is shown by entries in the accounts C to C 4 and D. But those accounts are kept in the name of the first plaintiff as well as of the second plaintiff, so that they afford no distinct proof of a direct recognition of the second plaintiff's rights as assignee. On the grounds that have been stated we must allow the objection that the contract was one not capable of assignment to second plaintiff, and therefore that he had no right of suit under it.

The second objection that the suit was bad for misjoinder was taken with reference to the joinder of the six defendants in one suit, when the contracts of each were found to be individual and separate. The District Judge disallowed the objection on the ground that it was not taken at the earliest possible moment, namely in the written statement, and that no prejudice to the interest of the defendants from their joinder in one suit could have occurred. Enough however has already appeared in the faulty decrees that have been passed to show how much the defendants have been prejudiced by their several cases being lumped together as one, and though the plea of misjoinder was not taken in the written statement, it was taken at the settlement of issues before the trial of the suit. And it will further be shown under the fourth head of objection how the liability of each defendant to pay the Rs. 5-12-0 rate per garce for damages or a higher rate will depend entirely upon the nature of the particular default, if any, that each has committed. As the case of each defendant must be decided on its own merits without any reference to the case of another, and as the cases of each will be different (as even [176] the plaint itself shows), we are of opinion that the misjoinder has affected and must affect the merits of each man's case and cannot therefore be passed over as a mere irregularity and condoned as such under section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It must also be borne in mind that this misjoinder of defendants is now coupled with a misjoinder of plaintiffs according to our finding under the first objection, and with this double misjoinder of parties before us, we must allow the second objection also that the suit is bad for misjoinder.

The validity of the third objection, as to the decrees granting relief that was not prayed for and not granting the relief that was prayed for, cannot but be conceded by the other side. In making all the defendants liable jointly and severally for costs and for damages (as the decree of the Lower Appellate Court certainly seems to do), in awarding damages for other years than the single year 1886, and in not ascertaining in the suit and incorporating in the decree the amount of damages payable by each defendant, but leaving the matter for determination in execution, the decrees are not maintainable and must at least be reversed in these respects.

It is contended on the fourth objection that Article 7 of the Contract A provides a uniform rate of Rs. 5-12-0 per garce as the rate at which damages are to be assessed ; and that while the Munsif adopted this rate, the District Judge has allowed the difference between the contract price to be paid to defendants and the selling price in the market to be taken as the measure of damages, that is the profit the plaintiffs would have made on each garce duly delivered to them which, he finds, would have been Rs. 45-10-0. The question is whether the rate fixed in Article 7 governs every breach of the contract or only certain breaches therein specified. We are of opinion upon a construction of the clause that it was meant only to cover the special default therein mentioned, namely a short delivery or non-delivery of the amount fixed for delivery by the plaintiff, owing to failure either to manufacture or to store in the factory the quantity manufactured. The language used is not such as to cover every breach of the contract. The contract contemplates other acts than those referred to in clause 7, and they are not referred to in clause 7 either generally or by implication. The contingency of the repudiation of the contract altogether does not seem to have been in the contemplation of the parties. The contract presupposes a bona fide intention to keep it. For these reasons, we agree that in such a case as that put by the District Judge where the defendants actually manufactured salt and then sold it to others, the measure of damages would not be the liquidated rate mentioned in clause 7 of the contract, but what the plaintiffs had lost by the wilful breach of the engagement. At the same time, it has to be pointed out that the Judge was wrong in applying the rate fixed on the latter principle to every defendant in this suit and in the connected suits, without first ascertaining the particular nature of the breach of which each defendant was guilty. Those who defaulted under the terms of Article 7 only were clearly liable only to the rate therein fixed, and it is a matter of evidence in each case whether any other kind of breach not falling under that article has been committed before the measure of damages as against any defendant can be fixed. The decree of the Lower Appellate Court is, therefore, further bad in this respect also, that is, in its not determining at what particular rate each defendant according to the nature of his default, was subject to pay. And the decree of the Munsif was equally wrong in fixing the uniform rate of Rs. 5-12-0 without first determining that all the cases of breach of contract fell within the terms of Article 7. Both rates—that of the Munsif and that of the District Judge—must, therefore, be expunged from the decrees. There is another point to be considered in the cases of those defendants whose default is only under Article 7 of the contract, and that is whether they can be held liable for non-delivery or short delivery in the absence of any estimate framed or 'dittam' fixed by the plaintiffs as to the quantity of salt to be delivered by each defendant. We have no doubt that the word 'dittam' refers to the quantity. The Contention of respondents' Vakil that it refers only to quality is not only opposed to the plain meaning of the term, but is inconsistent with the provision of the uniform rate for damages fixed in Article 7. In cases where the breach was not under Article 7, the question of the dittam is not material, the defendants having contracted in Article 1 to sell to plaintiffs all the salt manufactured and stored by them.

Our judgment in this second appeal governs the judgment in all the connected Second Appeals Nos. 94 to 114 of 1892, and it only remains to pass our final orders in each of these appeals.

[178] In the present Second Appeal No. 93, we have found there was a misjoinder which does not apply to the other second appeals. On this ground, we must reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout, for it is too late now to allow the plaint to be returned for amendment.

All the other second appeals follow the judgment in No. 93 in respect to the inability of the second plaintiff to sue, the errors in the decree, and the method of determining the measure of damages, but with regard to four of them, viz., Second Appeals Nos. 94, 99, 105 and 113, special points arise which will be separately noticed. As to the remainder, that is, Second Appeals Nos. 95, 96, 97, 98, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112 and 114, the suits will be dismissed so far as the second plaintiff's suit is concerned with defendants' costs throughout; but they will be allowed to proceed so far as the first plaintiff is concerned. The decrees of both Courts as they at present stand are, however, so generally defective in respect to the practical question, that is, the consequential relief claimed, that we consider it necessary to set them aside and to order a new trial. Besides decreeing things not asked for and not decreeing what was asked for, several of the material issues have not been satisfactorily tried. We, therefore, reverse the decrees in these cases and remand them for proper trial by the light of the observations we have recorded. It will be necessary in each case to determine according to the prayer in the plaint what is exactly the relief sought for and the enquiry as to the nature of the default will be confined to the year 1886. It will further be necessary to determine by what measure of damages the default (if any) found on the part of each defendant is to be ruled. Then, when the actual total amount is so determined, it is to be reduced to what the first plaintiff is entitled to claim as his proportionate share of two shares out of $5\frac{3}{4}$ shares, and the amount so arrived at entered in the revised decree, together with any other reliefs as to declaration and so on that may be found necessary.

In Second Appeal No. 94, the Munsif dismissed the plaintiffs' suit as barred by res judicata, but the Judge reversed the Munsif's decree without apparently noticing this point. The appellant in this second appeal now urges that this suit should be dismissed on the ground stated, but we do not agree with the Munsif that [179] the case was res judicata by reason of the decision in a similar suit of the previous year (No. 447 of 1886). Not only was that a suit of a small cause nature and therefore not open to second appeal, Govind Bin Lakshman Shet v. Dhondbarav Bin Ganbarav Tambye (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 104) followed in Vithilinga Padayachi v. Vithilinga Mudali (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 111), but the simple issue therein decided was that plaintiff was not entitled to relief as he had not executed repairs. It was not decided that the contract was void or had been rescinded, and the cause of action now, though upon the same contract, being for a different year, there is no res judicata. We, therefore, disallow this objection and, as the other special objection is abandoned, this second appeal falls to be treated like the bulk of them, and will be dealt with accordingly by a reversal and remand with similar directions to find out and decree what actual amount is due by defendant to first plaintiff.

In Second Appeal No. 99 of 1892, the second defendant's name must be struck out if he is no party to the agreement sued on, as it is stated he is not, and this second appeal will be dealt with like the bulk of them with the separate issue for trial whether second defendant is liable to the suit or not.

In Second Appeal No. 105 of 1892, an exactly similar order to that just given in Second Appeal No. 99 is passed.

In Second Appeal No. 113 of 1892, the defendant signed the contract as guardian of a minor. The Judge has thereupon directed that the decree be made against the property of the minor, but as the minor was not a party to the suit, only the defendant's name appearing therein, the Judge's order was obviously wrong. Under our powers of revision (section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure), we cancel this portion of the decree and the result will be that the suit should proceed against the defendant named therein. The decree in this case will accordingly be reversed and remanded like the bulk of them with similar directions, and a separate issue should be taken as to defendant's liability.

The 23rd and 24th January, 1893.

PRESENT.

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND MR. JUSTICE PARKER.

Srinivasa Sastrial.....(Defendant) Appellant

Declaratory decree—Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 278 and 283—Termination of attachment by abandonment.

The plaintiff had an attachment against certain property. Owing to his not filing a necessary affidavit, the execution petition was struck off. Subsequently he applied for the sale of the property, and the Court directed a fresh attachment to issue. It was held that these facts did not amount to an abandonment of the first attachment by the plaintiff.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of J. A. Davies, District Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 454 of 1891, modifying the decree of S. Ramasamy Iyengar, District Munsif of Tiruvadi, in Original Suit No. 63 of 1888.

The lands in dispute in this case originally belonged to one Krishnasami Moitay, against whom the plaintiff in this suit obtained a decree in 1887 and the lands were attached in execution thereof, but the execution petition was subsequently struck off the file owing to the plaintiff's default in filing a necessary affidavit. In 1889 the plaintiff applied for the sale of the property attached in 1887, and the Court directed a fresh attachment to issue. The defendant then came forward and alleged that he had purchased the property prior to the second attachment and obtained an order in his favour. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant's sale having been subsequent to the first attachment, was not valid against the plaintiff, and that the defendant was bound by the terms of his sale to pay the plaintiff the debt decreed in 1887, and that the said debt was therefore a charge on the said property in the defendant's hands. Hence this suit.

The District Munsif decreed in favour of the plaintiff, declaring the subsistence of the attachment of 1887 of the plaintiff properties and his rights to realize his money by a sale of those properties.

[181] On appeal against the District Munsif's decree by the defendant, the District Judge delivered the following judgment :—

"The test question in these cases is has there been an abandonment of the first attachment either in fact or constructively. Now in this case there was no actual withdrawal from the first attachment, and there was no order for releasing that attachment, so there was no abandonment in fact. The delay in following up the attachment is satisfactorily explained by the plaintiff's taking of other legal proceedings, so on the score of delay an abandonment cannot be presumed. Nor can such presumption arise from the Munsif's order directing a second attachment which plaintiff accordingly, made, for that was the act of the Court and not of the party. I therefore agree with the Munsif for the further voluminous reasons given by him that plaintiff's attachment of 1887 never ceased to exist and consequently defendant's sale was subject to it under section 376 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"It is further urged in appeal that plaintiff being able upon the terms of that sale to sue defendant for the recovery of his money had no right to seek for a mere declaration that his attachment was in force, but should also have sued for the recovery of the money due to him under the sale-deed to defendant. But this is a vain contention, because plaintiff was not a party to the contract of sale, and could not, therefore, have enforced its provisions.

"The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs."

The defendants preferred this appeal, alleging that the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable under either section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, or under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act; that an appeal should have been preferred against the order of the District Munsif directing a second attachment; and that the first attachment did not continue to subsist at the time of the defendant's sale-deed.

Sivasami Ayyar for Appellant.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—We have no doubt that a suit for a declaratory decree is maintainable. The plaintiff's petition was put in under section 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure and a suit under section 283* is his only possible remedy.

[182] The next point urged is that an appeal should have been preferred against the order of the District Munsif directing a second attachment. But that order was a mere direction of the Court without notice to either party and in no case could defendant have been made a party to the appeal if there had been one.

The decision quoted in Puddomonee Dossee v. Roy Muthooranath Chowdhry (12 B. L. R., 411) lays down no general rule, but the effect of it is that it is a matter of inference in the particular case whether the striking off of an execution petition terminates an attachment. We agree with the District Judge Saving of suits to establish right to attached property.

*[Sec. 283 :—The party against whom an order under sections 280, 281 or 282 is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.]

that in this case there was no intention to abandon or to terminate the attachment. This may be inferred not only from plaintiff's subsequent conduct, but from the very terms of the sale-deed under which the defendant purchased, provision being therein made that defendant should pay off the balance of the decree debt in the suit in which the attachment had been made. No mention in terms is made of the attachment, but it is a legitimate inference that it was then regarded as subsisting.

We dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Hindu law—Succession of a daughter's daughter to her grandfather's estate.

On the principle laid down in Nallanna v. Ponnai (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 149), a daughter's daughter is, in the absence of preferential male heirs, entitled to succeed to her grandfather as a bhandu.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of V. Srinivasa Charlu, Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suit No. 7 of 1892, [183] reversing the decree of A. Ramalingam Pillai, District Munsif of Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 480 of 1890.

Suit for the possession of certain property. It was admitted on both sides that the property in dispute was originally the property of a Hindu, who dying left a widow (Kamalam) and two daughters. The plaintiff contended that, Kamalam and one of the daughters having died, the surviving daughter Meenakshi inherited her grandfather's property. Meenakshi sold the property to one Swarnum, who sold it to plaintiff, both conveyances being registered. The defendants alleged that Kamalam had previously sold the property, which in its turn was sold to defendant No. 1, both defendants being now in possession of it. Kamalam's conveyance was not registered.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit, but his decree was reversed by the Subordinate Judge, who held that Meenakshi was heir to her grandfather, and that her registered conveyance defeated the prior unregistered deed of her mother.

* Second Appeal No. 23 of 1893.

The first defendant preferred this appeal.

Sivasami Ayyar for Appellant.

The Respondent was not represented.

Judgment.—We think the case quoted by the Subordinate Judge, Nallanna v. Ponnal (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 149), is sufficient authority for holding that a daughter's daughter is a bhandu on the principle there laid down that consanguinity may be recognized as the basis of title to succession in the absence of preferential male heirs. Meenakshi was a direct relation by blood to her grandfather through her mother his daughter.

The second appeal therefore fails and it is dismissed.

Makkatayam rule of Inheritance—Tiyans—Whether compulsory partition can be effected.

The ordinary rule of Marumakkatayam against compulsory partition is equally applicable to Tiyans who follow Makkatayam, no custom to the contrary having been made out.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of E. R. Krishnan, Subordinate Judge of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 1054 of 1890, reversing the decree of A. N. Ananta Ram Iyen, Additional District Munsif of Calicut, in Original Suit No. 211 of 1890.

The defendants 1 to 4 were Tiyans following the Makkatayam rule of inheritance. The plaintiff, having obtained a small cause decree against the first defendant, in execution thereof, attached the family properties. The second defendant, karnavan of the farwad, intervened and put in a petition alleging that the properties were impartible. The claim was allowed and the attachment removed. The plaintiff brought this suit to declare that, according to the law prevailing among the Tiyans, the first defendant had a definite share in the properties, and that such share was liable to be sold for his decree. The District Munsif decreed in favour of the plaintiff, whilst the Subordinate Judge, on appeal, reversed the decree.

Sankara Menon for Appellant.

Govinda Menon for Respondent.

* Second Appeal No. 142 of 1892.

Judgment.—The plaintiff's case was that, according to the customary law prevailing among the Tiyaṇs, the first defendant was entitled to a definite share in the property. The defendants denied the alleged custom and pleaded that the properties were indivisible. The issue (fifth) on the point was too vague to direct [186] the attention of the parties to the real question which had to be tried, and the evidence adduced was inconclusive. The Subordinate Judge remarks that the witnesses were not asked the real question at issue, but on the authority of two unreported cases has come to the conclusion that the ordinary rule of Marumakatayam against compulsory partition is equally applicable to Tiyaṇs who follow Makkatayam. We do not think that a question of such general importance should have been decided in this way, and we shall, therefore, ask the present Subordinate Judge to return a finding on the following issue :—Whether, according to the customary law followed by the parties to this suit, compulsory partition can be effected according to the wish of one member of the tarwad.

Fresh evidence may be taken.

In compliance with the above order the Subordinate Judge submitted a finding in which, on the authority of Rarichan v. Perachi (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 281), he held that there was no presumption that the Hindu law rule of partibility of family property applied to the case of Makkatayam Tiyaṇs, that there was no written evidence forthcoming in support of any such custom, and that the oral evidence was quite unsatisfactory or insufficient to establish any custom followed by the parties to the suit whereby compulsory partition could be effected according to the wish of one member of the tarwad.

Judgment.—The finding is that, according to the customary law of the parties, compulsory partition cannot be effected at the will of one member of the tarwad.

This is in accordance with the finding in Regular Appeal No. 164 of 1891. Accepting it, we dismiss this appeal.

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, s. 234—A stranger to a decree against a deceased person in possession of his property—'Legal representative.'

The words 'legal representative' in s. 234 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not include any person who does not in law represent the estate of the deceased person. Consequently, a stranger in possession of property of a deceased person who was not a party to a decree against such person cannot be proceeded against in execution otherwise than by a regular suit.

* Appeal against Appellate Order No. 51 of 1892.

APPEAL against the order of R. S. Benson, District Judge of South Malabar, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 17 of 1892, confirming the order of V. Ramasastri, District Munsif of Palghat, in Miscellaneous Petitions Nos. 380 and 2325 of 1891.

The petitioner in this case had obtained a decree for money against one Edathara Valaya since deceased, and now sought to enforce the decree to the extent of Rs. 170 against his successor in stanam, the counter-petitioner, who had collected the said money for the Malikhana due to his predecessor. Both the lower Courts decreed in favour of the petitioner, the District Judge holding that, although "the term 'legal representative' in section 234, Civil Procedure Code, is not defined, there is authority for holding that in the absence, as in this case, of any claim by the next-of-kin, the words 'legal representative' will include, for the purposes of this section, the person who has taken possession of the property of the deceased."

Sankaran Nayar for Appellant.

Desika Chariar for Respondent.

Judgment.—Though the Judge says there is authority for holding that the words 'legal representative' in section 234 of the Code of Civil Procedure include any person who has taken possession of the property of the deceased judgment-debtor, he [187] has not cited any such authority. It was held in Dunput Sing Bahadoor v. Rane Rajesuree (15 W. R., 476) that property in the possession of others than the legal representative might be taken in execution of a decree; but it was so held with reference to the language of section 210* of the Code of 1859, which allowed of execution being taken either against the legal representative or the estate of the deceased judgment-debtor. But in section 234 of the present Code the words 'against the estate of the deceased debtor' are not to be found, and execution is allowed only against the legal representative and "to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of."

We do not think that the words legal representative can be taken to include any person who does not in law represent the estate of the deceased. The wording of section 234 seems to point to the intention that a stranger in possession of property who was not a party to the decree ought not to be proceeded against in execution or otherwise than by a regular suit.

We must set aside the orders of the Courts below with costs throughout.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE DAVIES.

Krishnaya Navada and others.....(Plaintiffs) Appellants
Panchu and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 562, 566 and 582—Order made on appeal to amend plaint.

On appeal from the decision of a District Munsif in favour of the plaintiffs, in a suit for the recovery of rent, the District Judge set aside the decree of the lower Court, ordered a new trial, and directed the amendment of the plaint by inserting the exact boundaries of the land on which the plaintiffs claimed the rent :

[188] Held, that the order for amendment of the plaint was bad under s. 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, since the original Court had not " disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point," and that it was likewise bad under s. 582†, since there had been no dispute as to the boundaries of the land before the original Court. If the information was necessary, the District Judge should have sent down an issue on the point for trial under s. 566 of the Code.

APPEAL against the order of W. C. Holmes, Acting District Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 233 of 1891, reversing the decree of U. Babu Row, District Munsif of Udipi, in Original Suit No. 387 of 1888.

On appeal against the decree of the District Munsif in a suit for recovery of rent given in favour of the plaintiffs, the District Judge, having set aside the decree and ordered a new trial, directed the amendment of the plaint by the insertion of the exact boundaries of the land on which the plaintiffs claimed rent, a point on which there had been no dispute in the lower Court.

The plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellants.

The respondents were not represented.

Judgment.—If the order is an order under section 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as contended for by appellants, it is clearly bad, as the original Court had not disposed of the suit on a preliminary point. The course the Judge should have adopted in order to ascertain the boundaries of the plaint land, if that information* was necessary, was to have sent down an issue on the point for trial under section 566* of the Code.

It is however contended on the other side that the order was one merely for the amendment of the plaint in the matter of boundaries and was passed under section 582 of the Code as an order that should have been passed by the original Court. But the answer is that there was no dispute as to the boundaries of the land before the original Court, and, therefore, that that Court could have had no ground for returning the plaint for amendment. We are of opinion that this fact takes the case out of the purview of section 582 even if that section is at all applicable. It follows that the remand must have been under section 562, and as such it was an illegal order. We, therefore, reverse it and direct the Judge to dispose of the appeal on its merits.

poses of limitation, and is valid not only as between the Collector and the defaulter, but as between the Collector and the purchaser at the sale. Venkata v. Chengadu (I.L.R., 12 Mad., 168) and Nilakandan v. Thandamma (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 460) followed.

The mere fact that one of the plaintiffs in a suit, brought to set aside a sale under Madras Act II of 1864, is a minor is not sufficient to save the limitation bar under s. 59 of Madras Act II of 1864, when an alleged fraud affecting the sale came to the knowledge of the other plaintiffs who are majors and are jointly interested with the minor more than six months prior to the institution of the suit, s. 8 of the Limitation Act being inapplicable to such cases.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of E. K. Krishnan, Subordinate Judge of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 513 of 1890, affirming the appeal [decree?] of P. Govinda Menon, District Munsif of Betutnad, in Original Suit No. 367 of 1889.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the following judgments of the High Court.

Both the lower Courts decreed in favour of the defendants.

The plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Subramanya Ayyar and Sundara Ayyar for Appellants.

Govinda Menon for Respondent No. 6.

This second appeal coming on for hearing before SHEPHARD and BEST, JJ., on Friday the 10th day of February 1893, the Court made the following [190] Order.—"The Subordinate Judge has not considered the question whether the sale was notified as required by the Act which was the fourth ground of appeal before him. The District Munsif considered this point and found on it in favour of the defendants.

"We must ask the Subordinate Judge to submit a finding on this issue within one month from date of receipt of this order; and seven days will be allowed for filing objections after the finding has been posted up in this Court."

In compliance with the above order, the Subordinate Judge submitted the following FINDING.—"I am directed to submit a finding on the point 'whether the sale was notified as required by the Act?'

"The Revenue Recovery Act II of 1864, s.36, cl. 2, prescribes the mode of notifying sale under the Act. A notice of the sale in English and in the language of the district shall be fixed up one month at least before the sale in the Collector's Office, in the taluk cutcherry, in the nearest police station and on some conspicuous part of the land. There is no evidence whatever to prove such publication. Instead of producing the process server's return or other record to show that copies of the sale notice were affixed to the above-mentioned four places, the seventh defendant's vakil refers me to a number of documents and to the depositions of witnesses which do not support his case. The exhibits referred to contain no evidence on the point. The evidence of the Menon and the Adhikari (eighth defendant) examined as plaintiffs' witnesses 15 and 18 is insufficient and unreliable. The Menon makes the vague statement that 'there was a regular attachment.' The Adhikari (eighth defendant) deposes that a copy of the notice of sale was affixed to a conspicuous place, though he cannot say where. Bearing in mind that this defendant, whom the plaintiff accuses to be the real purchaser, took care not to affix to the land the copy of the attachment notice, his statement that the sale notice had been affixed 'in some conspicuous place' is not entitled to weight. Defendants' second and sixth witnesses are the Revenue Inspector and village peon respectively. The former does not depose regarding the sale notice. The latter states that he served the notice by affixing a copy presumably to the plaintiffs' house. This is all the evidence referred to by the vakils.

[191] "The plaintiffs' vakil points out that the attachment was not effected in the only legal mode in which it could be effected under section 7 of the Act, viz., by affixing a copy of the notice to the land attached and by notifying it by public proclamation on the land as well as in the District Gazette. The omission to affix the copy to the land is admitted by the Adhikari, the eighth defendant. There is no evidence that it was posted on the land. Plaintiffs' vakil contends that there can be no valid notification of sale without the preliminary process of attachment, but I hardly think this objection can be considered in deciding the point referred to me for a finding, viz., whether the sale was notified as required by the Act.

"I find that the sale was not notified as required by the Act."

This second appeal coming on again for final hearing on Tuesday, the 17th ultimo, on return to the order of this Court, dated 10th February 1893, and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following judgment :—

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—This was a suit to set aside a revenue sale held under Act II of 1864. The sale was held in June 1888 and this suit was brought on the 12th August 1889. It is found that at the date of sale there were arrears of revenue due to the Government to the extent of Rs. 54-1-7, and it is clear that the Collector had jurisdiction to sell the land under Act II of 1864. It is found, however, by the Lower Appellate Court that the sale was not duly notified as required by the Act and to this extent the procedure followed by the Collector was irregular. Both the lower Courts find that the seventh defendant purchased the land benami for the eighth and ninth defendants, of whom the former is the Adhikari of the amsom wherein the land brought to sale is situated. Appellants imputed fraud to the Adhikari, but the Courts below have negatived it. It is further found that appellants were aware of the sale and its confirmation more than six months before suit. The question for decision in this appeal is whether, upon the foregoing facts, the Courts below were correct in holding that the sale was a proceeding within the meaning of section 59 of Act II of 1864 and that the suit was therefore barred by limitation. The contention in second appeal is that the sale, though valid as between the Collector and appellants, is not so as between the latter and the purchaser on the [192] ground of fraud. The decision of the lower Courts is in accordance with the principles laid down in Nilakandan v. Thandamma (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 460) and in Venkata v. Chengadu (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 168). The decision in the last-mentioned case is that of four Judges who held that the revenue sale in that case, however irregular it was, was a proceeding under the Act for purposes of limitation, as the Collector had jurisdiction to sell. It was also pointed out in that case that the decision in Nilakandan v. Thandamma (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 460) proceeded on the ground that there were really no arrears of revenue and that the sale was really without jurisdiction. Both decisions recognize the general principle that a revenue sale is a statutory sale and that when there are arrears of revenue so as to give jurisdiction to the Collector to sell, the sale, however irregular, must be treated as a proceeding under the Act. I am unable to reconcile the contention of appellants' pleader with the principle that statutory sales depend for their validity upon the pre-requisites prescribed by the statute and not on matters which lie outside its purview. I would decline to order any further enquiry whether the price realized was adequate and whether any substantial injury resulted from the sale not having been duly notified, and dismiss the second appeal on the ground that the sale in this case was a proceeding under section 59 of Act II of 1864 and that the suit is time-barred.

Best, J.—The finding on the issue sent for trial is that the sale was not notified as required by Act II of 1864. This is a finding of fact which we must accept. It is contended, however, on behalf of respondents that the suit is time-barred by section 59 of the Act. The mere fact of second plaintiff being a minor is not sufficient to save the limitation bar when the alleged fraud came to the knowledge of others jointly interested with the minor more than six months prior to the institution of the suit; for, as observed in Seshan v. Rajagopala (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 236), section 8 of the Limitation Act is inapplicable, the object of that section being the same as that of the corresponding section 4 of the English Act, 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 42, which, as remarked by Lord Kenyon in Perry v. Jackson (4 T. R., 516 at p. 519), "was introduced into the statute in order to protect [193] the interests of those persons which there was no one of competent age, competent understanding, or competent in point of residence in the country to protect." See also Vigneswara v. Bapayya (I. L. R. 16 Mad., 436). As was held in Venkata v. Chengadu (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 168), the period of limitation for a suit such as the present is six months from the date on which the fraud was discovered, and, as the present suit was brought more than six months after the alleged fraud came to the knowledge of plaintiffs' father and also of first plaintiff himself, it is clearly time-barred.

The appeal fails therefore and is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 14th July and 16th August, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE DAVIES.

Secretary of State for India.....(Defendant) Appellant

Madras Forest Act—Act V of 1882, ss. 2, 4, 10 and 14—Claim to percentage of forest income—The Pensions Act—Act XXIII of 1871, s. 4—' Civil Court '—Jurisdiction of Forest Settlement Officer— Jurisdiction of Appellate Court. *

A claim to a percentage of forest income is not a claim to forest produce under Madras Act V of 1882, nor is it a claim to a right specified in s. 4 of that Act.

A Forest Settlement Officer has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit in which such a claim is made, and such a suit brought by discharged forest karnams is barred by s. 4 of the Pensions Act.

A Forest Settlement Officer is a ' Civil Court ' for the purposes of the Pensions Act.

If a Court of limited jurisdiction exceeds its powers and adjudicates on a claim over which it has no jurisdiction, the Court (if any) which exercises appellate jurisdiction over it is bound to entertain an appeal preferred against the lower Court's decision and to correct the error.

A Court of competent appellate jurisdiction in such a case is not bound by an order made without jurisdiction by a Collector on an appeal to him in the same suit.

Submission by the parties to his jurisdiction cannot give a Forest Settlement Officer jurisdiction in a case where he has no inherent jurisdiction.

[194] SECOND APPEAL against the decree of C. Ramachendra Iyer, District Judge of Nellore, in Appeal Suit No. 241 of 1890, confirming the decision of I. Sarabhalingam Naidu, Forest Settlement Officer of Nellore and Bellary, in Claim No. 847 of 1887.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court. The Forest Settlement Officer decreed in favour of the plaintiff, and, on appeal by the defendant, the District Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, and dismissed it. The defendant preferred this appeal.

The Acting Government Pleader (Subramanya Ayyar) for Appellant.

Seshagiri Ayyar for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a claim made to a percentage of the net revenue of the reserved forest at Sriharicotta under Madras Forest Act V of 1882. The appellant before us is the Secretary of State for India in Council represented by the District Forest Officer, and respondents are two mirasi karnams who had served as such in connection with the forest till 1884, when the Forest Officer dispensed with their services. The claimants stated that from time immemorial their family had been enjoying the rusum and rendering services as karnams in relation to the forest, and that in return a commission of Rs. 5-7-6 on every 100 rupees of the net income of the forest had been paid to them. The appellant repudiated the claim, but did not object to the jurisdiction of the Forest Settlement Officer. On the 31st May 1888, the Forest Settlement Officer held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the claim, the right asserted by respondents being neither a right in and over the forest nor a right to forest produce. He further held that the claim was barred by section 4 of the Pensions Act, XXIII of 1871. The respondents appealed from this decision to the Collector of the district, who considered that the right set up by the claimants was not outside the provisions of the Forest Act, that the Forest Settlement Officer was not a Civil Court for the purposes of the Pensions Act, and that the G.O. No. 389, dated 26th May 1886, referred the claimants to the Forest Settlement Officer. The appellant denied the Collector's jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, but his objection was overruled, and in the result the Collector remanded the case for disposal on the merits. Thereupon, the Forest Settlement Officer investigated the merits [195] and decreed the claim. From his decision the Secretary of State preferred an appeal to the District Court, but the District Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and dismissed it with costs. Hence this second appeal.

The jurisdiction created by the Forest Act being a limited jurisdiction, the first question is whether, as held by the Judge, the right claimed is a right specified in section 4 of the Forest Act. That section describes the rights which the Forest Settlement Officer is authorized to deal with as rights in and over the land comprised within the limits of the forest or to any forest produce of such land. The Judge determines the question in the negative. Assuming that his decision is correct, it does not follow that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal preferred by the appellant. If a Court of limited jurisdiction exceeds its powers and adjudicates on a claim over which it has no jurisdiction, it is an error which the Court, if any, exercising appellate jurisdiction over it is bound to correct, as every Court of appeal has all the powers of a Court of revision. In the case before us, it is clear that the Forest Settlement Officer exercised jurisdiction by reason of the Collector Mr. Maclean's decision that the right in contest was not outside the provisions of the Forest Act. Under section 14 of the Forest Act, the Collector has appellate jurisdiction only when the right adjudicated on by the Forest Settlement Officer is a right excepted from the provisions of section 10 which, among other things, constitutes the District Court as the Court of appeal in regard to any right in and over the forest save the excepted rights. We agree with the Judge that the right claimed does not amount to an interest in land. It is not similar to the grant of melvaram right in land in the possession of the grantee, or of some one else as in the case of inams. But it is similar to the right to a mera to be paid to a karnam by the ryots of the village out of the produce of the lands in their possession, and it cannot be said that the right creates a joint interest on the part of the karnam in the holding of each ryot. Again, an agreement to pay a certain percentage of the profits of partnership as wages to a servant of the firm does not make him a partner. Looking to the relation of the parties as master and servant and to the character of the rusum as a money payment out of the income of the forest in the possession of the Government, it is not reasonable to impute any intention to create an interest in the lands.

[196] Another question for decision is whether the Collector had appellate jurisdiction in this case under section 14 or whether the right adjudicated on is a right to forest produce. The Judge holds that it is not, and on referring to section 2 which explains that right, we concur in his opinion. Section 2 describes the right as the right to certain specific forest products, which it enumerates, and the fact that the enumeration is not exhaustive can only justify other rights of the same description being included in the section. But the right asserted by the respondents is a right not to any specific jungle product, but to a percentage of the forest income from certain sources. In this connection, the Judge observes that he has no power to hear an appeal from the decision of the Collector. If the right claimed is not a right to forest produce and the Collector had no appellate jurisdiction, the order made by him is one made without jurisdiction, and it is not incompetent to a Court of competent appellate jurisdiction to say that it is not bound by an order made without jurisdiction by the Collector in the same suit. The Government denied his jurisdiction and cannot be said to have submitted to it. We are, therefore, of opinion that the Judge was in error in declining to entertain the appeal and that he ought to have entertained it and adjudicated thereon.

The Judge states that in his opinion the claim was also barred by the Pensions Act of 1871, though he does not rest his decision upon it. By section 4 of that Act, no Civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any grant of money or land revenue made by the British or any former Government, whatever may have been the consideration for any such grant and whatever may have been the nature of the payment, claim or right for which such grant may have been substituted. Nor was any certificate produced before the Forest Settlement Officer as provided by section 6 and the endorsement referred to by Mr. Maclean cannot be treated as a certificate within the meaning of section 6. The Judge is therefore well founded in saying that even if the right is a right in and over the land, the Pensions Act would be a bar. The Collector is in error in saying that the Forest Settlement Officer is not a Civil Court for the purposes of the Pensions Act. It is not necessary that the Forest Settlement Officer should be a Civil Court for all purposes, but it is sufficient if the jurisdiction exercised by a Civil Court over a civil right is transferred to him and he is authorized to exercise it as a subordinate tribunal in its place, though a special [197] procedure is prescribed for his guidance by a special Act. Nor can submission give jurisdiction in a case like this, in which the Forest Settlement Officer has no inherent jurisdiction, but has only a limited jurisdiction as provided by the Forest Act.

The conclusion we come to is that the District Judge should have adjudicated on the appeal and set aside the decree of the Forest Settlement Officer on the ground that the suit was barred by the Pensions Act, and also that that officer had no jurisdiction to entertain it under the Forest Act. As the question to be decided is one of law, we proceed to do what the District Judge ought to have done and accordingly we set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and dismiss the claim with costs throughout.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 5th and 6th December, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Marimuthu Pillai.....(Defendant) Appellant

versus

Krishnasami Chetti and others.....(Plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3, 4) Respondents.*

Negotiable Instruments Act—Act XXVI of 1881, s. 46—Effect of an invalid endorsement of a promissory note by payee—Note recovered by, but not re-indorsed to the payee.

The defendant gave plaintiff a promissory note payable on demand. The plaintiff endorsed the note to a third party, a creditor of his, who sued the defendant on the note on his refusal to pay. The defendant pleaded that it had been agreed between the payee and himself that the note should not take effect until the payee had performed certain conditions which remained unperformed. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff thereupon paid the endorsee and took back the note, which, however, was not re-indorsed, and instituted the present suit against the defendant, who pleaded that the property in the note was not vested in the original plaintiff so as to enable him to maintain the suit. On the decease of the plaintiff before the trial his sons were substituted as plaintiffs :

Held, that, although the property in a promissory note payable to order on demand passes by endorsement and delivery (Act XXVI of 1881, s. 46), the endorsement in this case had been declared invalid in the suit referred to and must therefore be treated as cancelled, and consequently the property in the note was vested in the plaintiff at the date of the suit so as to enable him to maintain it.

[198] APPEAL against the decree of H. H. O'Farrell, District Judge of Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 30 of 1890.

The suit was brought by one Lakshmana Chetti, the payee of a promissory note, and the respondents, his legal representatives, against the defendant-appellant, the maker of the note. The other facts of the case are stated sufficiently for the purpose of this report in the judgment of the High Court.

The District Judge decreed in favour of the plaintiffs and the defendant preferred this appeal.

Rama Rau for Appellant.

Bhadrhyam Ayyangar and Tiruvenkata Chariar for Respondents.

Krishnasami Ayyar for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—The question is whether property in the promissory note vested in Lakshmana Chetti at the date of suit so as to enable him to maintain it. The facts, so far as they bear on this point, are shortly these : Lakshmana Chetti endorsed the promissory note to one Patnam Subbaiyar, but appellant refused to pay when the note was presented for payment. Thereupon Subbaiyar applied to a notary public at Trichinopoly for noting the dishonour and the note was accordingly protested. Thereupon the endorsee sued the maker in No. 37 of 1888 on the file of the District Court, but appellant pleaded the agreement now set up and contended further that the endorsee paid no consideration for the endorsement and that there was, therefore, no valid transfer of the promissory note. The District Judge upheld his contention and dismissed the suit without entering on the question whether any and what consideration passed from the payee to the maker. On the dismissal of this suit Lakshmana Chetti paid Subbaiyar and got back the note, but it was not re-indorsed in his favour. As appellant's fourth witness Subbaiyar states that the note was endorsed to him in part-payment of a debt due by Lakshmana Chetti, and that, when the suit failed, Lakshmana Chetti paid him the amount due under it and got back the dishonoured note, it is no doubt true, as argued by appellant's pleader, that the property in a promissory note payable to order on demand passes by endorsement and delivery. So it was held in Pattat Ambadi Marar v. Krishnan (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 290), and it is also expressly provided for by section 46 of Act XXVI of 1881. But, in the case before us, the endorsement [199] in favour of Subbaiyar was declared by the decree in Original Suit No. 37 of 1888 invalid and must, therefore, be treated as cancelled. Moreover, the payee of a promissory note is entitled to pay an endorsee when the note is dishonoured and, striking out the endorsement, to sue the maker for compensation or to re-issue the note. See Byles on Bills of Exchange, fourteenth edition, page 195. The objection that respondents have not taken out a certificate to collect the debts due to Lakshmana Chetti is not pressed, the certificate being produced before us.

This appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 18th, 20th and 26th October, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

versus

Somasundara Mudaliar and others.....(Plaintiffs)

Respondents.*

Temple repairs—'Katlais' or distinct endowments—Liability for repairs—Proof of custom in absence of endowment-deeds.

The 'panchayatdars' or managers of a temple, being directed by a Magistrate to repair the gateway of a store-house within the temple precincts and under their immediate control, spent Rs. 10-8-0 in so doing from the funds of a 'katlai' or endowment of which they were managers. They then sued the trustees of two other 'katlais' for recovery of the said sum on the ground that, by the usage of the temple, the cost of repairs was payable from the defendants' income, and asked for a declaration that the duty of executing repairs fell upon the defendants' 'katlais' :

* Appeal No. 64 of 1892.

Held that, in the absence of any endowment or trust-deed regarding the 'katlais,' the decision must be found in the usage of the temple, upon proof of which judgment was given for the plaintiffs, and a declaration added to the effect that the defendants were liable for repairs to the temple so far as the surplus funds of their 'katlais' should permit.

APPEAL against the decree of T. Ramasami Ayyangar, Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, in Original Suit No. 45 of 1890.

The defendants preferred this appeal.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—There is an ancient temple called Sri Tiyyagaraja Swami temple in the town of Tiruvalur in the Negapatam taluk of the district of Tanjore. Respondents are its 'panchayatdars' or managers, and appellants are trustees of two of the 'katlais' attached thereto called Abhisheka Katlai and Rajan alias Saba Katlai. In ordinary parlance, the term 'katlai,' as applied to temple endowments, signifies a special endowment for certain specific service or religious charity in the temple. Ardajama Katlai or endowment for mid-night service is an instance of the former, and Annadana Katlai or an endowment for distributing gratis food to the poor is an example of the latter. In this sense, the word 'katlai' is used in contradistinction to the endowment designed generally for the upkeep and maintenance of the temple. In the case of some important temples, the sources of their income are classified into distinct endowments according to their importance; each endowment is placed under a separate trustee, and specific items of expenditure are assigned to it as legitimate charges to be paid therefrom. Each of such endowments is called also a katlai and the trustee who administers it is called the katlaigar or the stanik of the particular katlai. The term 'katlai' is used in the present suit in this sense and Exhibit R enumerates the several katlais that exist in connection with the temple at Tiruvalur together with their average income from fasli 1221 to fasli 1228. When the institution was under the immediate control of officers of the Government, it appears from that exhibit that 'Abhisheka Katlai' under first appellant's management had an average income per year of 8,734 pons, 2½ fanams or Rs. 13,647-3-11, and that Rajan Katlai and Annadana Katlai, which are under second appellant's management, yielded an annual income of 10,208 pons, 9 fanams or Rs. 15,951-6-6, while the 'Ulthurai Katlai', which is under the direct management of the panchayatdars, produced an income of pons 6,247 or Rs. 9,760-15-0. It is these four katlais that are important, the other katlais having only small endowments whose average income is not likely to be in excess of their current expenses. The contest in this suit is as to appellants' liability to provide from the endowments in their charge for the necessary repairs of the temple and of the large tank outside called Kamalalayam which is attached to it.

[201] The facts which have given rise to this litigation are shortly these. Within the precincts of the temple there is a building, called the Kottaram, used as the store-room or store-house wherein provisions required for the use of the temple are usually secured by the panchayatdars. About November 1887, it came to the knowledge of the Head Assistant Magistrate in charge of the Negapatam taluk that the gateway giving entrance into the store-room was in such a state of repair as to endanger the safety of persons using it or passing near it. He called upon appellants to remove this source of danger under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but they alleged that respondents were the parties bound to execute the necessary repair according to the usage of the temple. After hearing both parties, the Magistrate declined to decide the question and held that the store-house being under the immediate control and in the charge of respondents as trustees of the Ulthurai Katlai, they were bound, under the Code of Criminal Procedure, to execute such repairs as were necessary to prevent danger to the public and made an order to that effect on the 23rd August 1888. From the 4th to the 7th October 1888 respondents spent Rs. 10-8-0 from the funds of the 'Ulthurai' Katlai under their management and repaired the gateway in obedience to the above order. On the 10th December 1888 they instituted this suit to recover the amount so spent by them from the funds of the katlais under appellants' management. Their case is that the two katlais under appellants' management consist of landed properties of the temple yielding an annual income of Rs. 30,000 and 20,000, respectively, that, by the usage of the institution, the cost of repairing the temple and the tank and of erecting necessary buildings is payable from that income, that appellants were bound to contribute to the cost of such repairs and structures in the proportion of two-thirds from the Abhisheka Katlai and one-third from the Rajan Katlai. They prayed for a decree directing appellants to pay them Rs. 10-8-0 with subsequent interest and costs, and declaring that the duty of executing repairs, as mentioned in the plaint, devolved on appellants by the usage of the temple. These, however, denied their liability and contended that there were various katlais attached to the temple in question, that they had separate buildings assigned to them within the precincts of the temple, and that it was the duty of katlaigars or trustees of the katlais to keep their own buildings in repair. They pleaded also to the [202] jurisdiction of the Subordinate Court, alleging that the present suit was cognizable by a Small Cause Court and that the staniks of the Ulthurai Katlai should be coplaintiffs. But they admitted that "on certain occasions, when funds were available, certain repairs were executed by them," adding that they were so executed at their will and pleasure and that respondents had no right to compel them to execute such repairs.

The two preliminary objections taken to this suit are that it is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and that the staniks of the Ulthurai Katlai ought to have been made parties to it. They form the subject of the first and fourth issues, which the Subordinate Judge has determined against appellants. The plaint contains a prayer for a declaratory decree, which a Court of Small Causes is not competent to pass. Nor is it shown that the staniks of the Ulthurai Katlai are not mere temple servants subordinate to the panchayatdars. There is also no doubt that as dharmakartas respondents are bound to see that the temple is kept in proper repair by those who are bound to do so according to usage. In my judgment the Subordinate Judge has properly disallowed both the preliminary objections. Again, it is not seriously denied that Rs. 10-8-0 have not (sic.) been spent by respondents upon the repair of the Kottaram, as found by the Subordinate Judge and the substantial question argued on appeal is as to appellants' liability to make the repair out of the funds of the katlais under their management. This forms the subject of the second issue and the Subordinate Judge has determined it in favour of respondents. No endowment or trust-deed is forthcoming in regard to the katlais, and it is conceded that the rule of decision must be found in the usage of the temple. The contention in appeal, therefore, is that the evidence does not warrant the finding of the Subordinate Judge in respondents' favour.

In support of the finding there is first the admission made by appellants themselves. In their written statements they averred that they executed repairs when funds were available. Though they qualified this admission by stating that they were under no obligation to do so, I agree with the Subordinate Judge that this statement is entitled to no weight. As katlaigars, appellants are trustees and they can only spend the income of the trust property upon the particular trusts attached to those katlais, and the explanation that they executed repairs at their pleasure is not intel-[203]ligible. Further, the first defendant stated in his evidence that the lands under his management as katlaigar are properties originally granted for the use of the temple by former sovereigns of Tanjore and that their income is first applied to the expenses of daily worship and of festivals and that the surplus is then spent on repairs. Adverting to a temple building called Porpandara, he deposed that it was in the exclusive possession of respondents and the expenses of its repair, as of several other buildings in the possession of respondents, were borne by the two katlais in the proportion of two-thirds and one-third. Moreover, it is in evidence that the katlai lands were in the possession of the Collectors of the district till 1847, when they were formally made over to appellants' predecessors. The muchalkas which these executed on that occasion contain a distinct acknowledgment that the katlai lands were originally granted to Sri Tiyyagaraja Swami and an undertaking to apply the income derived therefrom to the said temple. This is significant as showing that the repair of the temple was a trust to which the surplus income had to be devoted according to the original grant. I have already referred to Exhibit R and showed that, so far as the amount of average income is concerned, Abhisheka Katlai, Rajan Katlai and Ulthurai Katlai are the most prominent as being in a position to have a surplus at their disposal. It appears, however, from the sanad G and Exhibit T, and it is also conceded for appellants that the mohini or money allowance paid by the Government to the panchayatdars which (as is seen from Exhibit N1) forms the largest portion of the income of the Ulthurai Katlai is not chargeable with the cost of repairs, as it is an endowment for meeting certain defined items of expenditure. As argued by respondents' pleader, it is antecedently probable that if appellants' katlais alone bear the cost of repair, they do so because their large income is likely to leave a surplus available for being laid out on repairs.

Exhibit H1 is an account dated July 1839, and it enumerates the various duties which devolve on the katlaigars, and in the case of appellants looking after repairs is specified as one of them, whilst in the case of Ulthurai Katlai no similar duty is mentioned. Again, the same account shows that so early as 1829 an establishment for carrying out ordinary repairs was kept up by appellants' katlais and its cost was paid out of the funds of those katlais.

Another group of documents, Exhibits J to Q, is referred to by [204] the Subordinate Judge in paragraph 11 of his judgment as evidencing actual execution of repairs at the cost of appellants' katlais. Their genuineness is not questioned in appeal and their contents show that both appellants or one of them executed repairs from time to time in 1829, 1831 and 1832. It is argued on behalf of appellants that they merely superintended the execution of the repairs, but that they were paid for from the funds provided by the Collectors of the district as per estimates previously sanctioned by them. The exhibits specify the estimated amount sanctioned by the Collectors under it, the amount expended on repairs on each occasion and are signed by the staniks, of both katlais or by one of them and countersigned by taluk officials. It is not explained why the representatives of these katlais were always selected to execute the repairs in preference to panchayatdars if their katlai funds were not spent under previously sanctioned estimates. The Subordinate Judge naturally presumes that the course of business consisted in the katlaigars submitting estimates of repairs, obtaining the Collector's sanction for the outlay from the katlai funds and then executing the repairs from such funds in accordance with the estimate. I cannot say that this inference is, under the circumstances, unreasonable.

Moreover, Exhibit Y shows that in 1849 the Collector sanctioned the expenditure of Rs. 10,000 upon repairs on applications and estimates submitted by the katlaigars. Though, as argued by appellants' pleader, the exhibit does not mention the names of the katlaigars, yet it is material in so far as sanction is sought for laying out the income of katlais on repairs.

It appears further from Exhibit D that so recently as 1886 the trustee of the Abhisheka Katlai corresponded with the Deputy Tahsildar of Tiruvalur acting on behalf of Ulthurai Katlai on the subject of certain repairs.

It appears that first appellant did not repudiate his liability to repair, but entered into an explanation why it was not then necessary to do the repairs.

There is again Exhibit H which shows the amount required in August 1833 for consecrating an idol which was lost in 1802 and discovered in 1833. It purports to be a dittam or estimate of necessary expenses submitted to the Collector, and the amount entered as received from the Huzur is Rs. 586 which is divided [205] between the Abhisheka Katlai and Rajan Katlai, viz., Rs. 386 for Abhisheka Katlai and Rajan Katlai and Rs. 200 for Annadana Katlai. It is clear that the Collector did not sanction the outlay from the public treasury; whence did he then get the necessary funds? It is not unreasonable to infer from Exhibit H1 that the funds came from those katlais among the trusts of which the repair or Tiruppani of the temple finds a place.

On the other hand, our attention is drawn to certain facts by appellants' pleader as favouring their contention. The first fact to which reference is made is the preparation in 1820 of a new dittam or 'standing budget estimate' under the order of the Collector of Tanjore who then exercised control over the management of Hindu temples in the district. By Exhibit T he directed that the various sources of income should be estimated and that 20 per cent. should be deducted therefrom and kept as a reserve fund for meeting loss from floods, from withering of crops, from high prices and other unlooked-for causes and observed that, even if there were no such loss, the reserve fund was needed for the purpose of repairing the temples and preserving them in the same condition. Exhibits N1, O1, P and R enumerate the several sources of income for the three principal katlais and for the whole temple including all the katlais and the 20 per cent. deduction is entered against all sources of income except the mohini allowance paid by Government for the daily and festival expenses of the temple. In Exhibit O1, which is the dittam account for the Abhisheka Katlai, there is an entry under the head of extra expenses in the column of remarks "cost of repairs not included in the new dittam. Hence the decrease." This is referred to on respondents' behalf as suggesting the inference that, prior to the preparation of the new dittam account, such cost formed part of the old dittam of the katlai. However this may be, these exhibits do not throw light on the ancient usage of the temple before us. The constitution of a reserve fund such as was suggested by the Collector might be an administrative improvement conducive to beneficial management. Under what authority the Collector issued the order T in regard to trust properties is not clear. It had no especial reference to the temple at Tiruvalur nor was its primary object to create a fund for repairs or to supersede any pre-existing obligation in that respect. There is further no evidence to show that a reserve fund was so constituted and since [206] kept up. It is indeed suggested that it was not so kept up and the absence of allusion to it in the later accounts of 1830 favours the suggestion. It is noteworthy that appellants did not refer to any such fund in their written statements, or say that repairs were to be made from that fund; their case being that the katlais in their charge were not responsible for undertaking temple repairs and not that they as well as the other katlais were bound to meet the cost of repairs in proportion to the income. The contention, therefore, that the exhibits now under consideration negative appellants' liability appears to be an afterthought.

Another matter on which appellants' pleader lays stress is that it is natural that each katlai should repair the buildings in its charge as alleged by them. I am not prepared to attach importance to this contention, for Exhibits T to K show that appellants executed repairs to buildings in the temple which are not in their possession, but are in the immediate charge of the panchayatdars and among others to the kottaram or store-room now under consideration.

Another piece of evidence is Exhibit VII referred to by the Subordinate Judge in paragraph 16 of his judgment. There is no evidence to show when it was prepared, nor are we referred to any other document which refers to contribution by other katlais towards the cost of repairs. On the whole, the weight of testimony appears to me to be in favour of the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge has arrived. It is true that there is no endowment-deed forthcoming. It is also true that no accounts are produced to show execution of repairs by appellants except for a few years. But it should be remembered that the accounts are with appellants and their omission to produce them is open to remark. But there is the fact that all the katlai lands are lands originally granted for the use of the temple and there is an undertaking to apply their income to the temple. There is next the admission that the surplus income was spent on repairs and there is also the presumption that, unless the execution of repairs was one of the trusts of the katlais, the surplus would not have been so spent. Having regard to the fact that the katlais under appellants contribute also to the daily and festival expenses, the statement that the surplus is alone utilized in carrying out repairs is not improbable. There is further the fact that looking after repairs is entered in H1 among the duties devolving on the [207] representatives of appellants' katlais. There is also positive evidence as to appellants having actually executed repairs to various temple buildings in 1829-31 and 1832. There is some evidence of conscious liability to execute the necessary repairs in 1849 and 1886. Whilst these facts convey the impression that the katlai funds were spent on repairs because there was an obligation so to spend them, there is no evidence of any other katlai besides having regularly contributed to the cost of the repair. Exhibit VII, which contains a single entry to that effect, is not sufficient evidence of the usage of the temple. The exemption of the mohini allowance from liability for the cost of the repair and a comparison of the average income of the various katlais mentioned in Exhibit R raise also a presumption that the liability devolved on the Atheenam Katlais by reason of their being able to command a surplus income. Again, the allusion to the reserve fund, which the Collector proposed to organize in 1820, is an afterthought. There is no evidence that such fund is in existence nor was it referred to by appellants in their written statements. The suggestion that each katlai repairs the buildings in its charge is incompatible with the documentary evidence, which shows that appellants' predecessors repaired various temple buildings which are not under their control and kept up a standing establishment for carrying out small repairs. There is no trace in the evidence of other katlais having regularly contributed to the cost of repairs. Under these circumstances, I am unable to accede to the contention that the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the second issue is contrary to the weight of evidence. The decree of the Subordinate Judge must, therefore, be affirmed, but a declaration must be added to the effect that defendants are liable for repairs to the temple so far as the surplus funds of their katlais shall permit. The appeal having substantially failed, appellants will pay respondents' costs and bear their own costs.

Widow in possession of her late husband's land— Sale of the land in execution of a personal decree obtained against the widow—Suit by the nephew and reversioner of the deceased husband to recover the land from the purchaser.

A Hindu widow sued to recover certain land which belonged to her late husband from his brother. The suit was* compromised by means of a razinamah, one of the terms of which was that the widow should remain in possession of and enjoy the property, but should not alienate it without the brother's permission. Subsequently a personal decree was obtained against the widow, and the land being sold in execution, was purchased by the defendant in the present suit, in which the first plaintiff was the nephew and reversioner of the deceased husband :

Held, that the suit against the widow being on a personal claim, only her limited interest in the property was sold in execution, and that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the property. Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 985) distinguished, and the principle in Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Tall Awusti (I. R., 2 I. A., 275; S.C. I. L. R., 1 Cal., 133) applied.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of W. C. Holmes, District Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 236 of 1891, reversing the decree of J. P. Fernandez, District Munsif of Kundapur, in Original Suit No. 152 of 1890.

The District Munsif decreed in favour of the defendant, but the District Judge on appeal by the plaintiffs reversed the decree.

The defendant preferred this appeal.

The facts of the case are stated above sufficiently for the purposes of this report.

* Second Appeal No. 213 of 1893.

Judgment.—There is nothing to show that the decree was obtained against the widow Mahalakshmi as the representative of her husband's estate, nor are we referred to any proceedings in that suit showing that the decree was not a personal one simply.

[209] In Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore (I.L.R., 10 Cal., 985) the decree was passed against the husband. In Bisto Beharee Sahoy v. Lalla Byjnath Pershad (16 W.R., 49) the husband's property was expressly made liable by the decree. Neither of these cases is, therefore, on all fours with the present one, which is governed by the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lall Awusti (L.R., 2 I. A., 275; s.c. I.L.R., 15 Cal., 133).

The razinamah does not, on its true construction, amount to a gift of an absolute estate to the widow. It merely recognizes the widow's right to possess the property during her life without making alienations.

The dismissal of the claim petition cannot affect the plaintiffs' claim as reversioner, a claim which only became enforceable on the widow's death in 1888. Further, the claim was dismissed without inquiry.

It is finally contended that the debt in question was due from the husband, as is also found by the District Munsif, and that the District Court was wrong in considering this point immaterial.

This was not the case of a voluntary sale by a widow in discharge of her husband's debt, but of a Court-sale in execution of a personal decree obtained against the widow. The Judge is therefore right.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

APPEALS against the orders of S. Subbaya, Subordinate Judge of South Canara, dated 18th January 1892, passed on Civil Miscellaneous Petition Nos. 572 and 573 of 1891.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Judgment.—This was a suit brought by one Kutti Hamnad upon a bond executed by his late uncle Abdul Rahiman Kutti. Hamnad having since died, Beepathe and Kunhipathu, claiming to be his sisters by adoption, applied to have their names entered on the record in place of the deceased plaintiff. The third defendant denied the adoptions, but the Subordinate Judge granted the application without proper inquiry, and ordered that the suit be proceeded with; hence this appeal. It is contended for the appellants that the Subordinate Judge gave them no opportunity to disprove the alleged adoptions, and that the admission made by the deceased plaintiff is not binding upon them. It is also urged that before respondents were admitted as supplemental plaintiffs, the procedure prescribed by section 367 had not been complied with and the factum of the adoptions determined. On the other hand, the contention for respondents is that the Subordinate Judge has acted in accordance with the provision of section 365, and that no appeal lies from the order made under that section.

As regards the preliminary objection that no appeal lies, it cannot be maintained. In this case the third defendant denied that Beepathu and Kunhipathu were the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff, and it falls, therefore, under section 367. An appeal is allowed from the order made under that section by section 588,* clause 18. I am unable to accede to the contention that section 367 applies only when two or more persons claim to be legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff, and that it is not applicable where there is but one claimant, and the defendant denies his representative character. Section 365 provides that in case of the death of a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff, the legal representative of the deceased may, where the right to sue survives, apply to the Court to have his name entered on the record in place of the deceased plaintiff, and the Court shall, there-[211] upon, enter his name accordingly and proceed with the suit. The section presupposes that the claimant is the legal representative, and then prescribes the procedure which ought to be followed. Section 367 enacts that, if any dispute arise as to who is the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Court may either stay the suit until the fact has been determined in another suit or decide at or before the hearing of the suit who shall be admitted to be such legal representative for the purpose of prosecuting the suit. The language is wide enough to include a sole claimant, whose representative character is denied by the defendant. Reading the two sections together, they show that when there is no dispute as to the applicant being the legal representative, the procedure prescribed by section 365 is to be followed, and, either when the representative character is denied or when two more persons claim it, the procedure prescribed by section 367 should be followed. The bringing in of a representative on the record is not a mere formal act, and there must be a complete judicial inquiry and determination as to whether the claimant is the proper representative. This is further made clear by the procedure prescribed when the legal representative of a deceased sole defendant is brought on the record. In that case the Court is bound to enter on the record the name of the person who is alleged by the plaintiff to be the legal representative, liberty being reserved to the person who is so made defendant to object that he is not the legal representative. When the plaintiff makes the application and causes a new defendant to be put on the record, he does so at his own peril, and if the new defendant is not really the representative of the deceased defendant, the plaintiff will not be able to execute the decree. On the other hand, when a person is substituted for the deceased plaintiff, it is the act of the Court and the substituted person realizes the deceased's estate. The Court must, therefore, satisfy itself that the substituted person is the real representative at or before the hearing of the suit and then deal with it according to law. In the case before us, the Subordinate Judge admitted two documents and a judgment in evidence, and acted upon them without giving the defendants an opportunity to prove their allegation, and I cannot say that there was a proper judicial inquiry. The order of the Subordinate Judge is set aside, and he is directed to hear all the evidence which the parties may adduce and, after holding a proper judicial inquiry [212], to determine whether petitioners are entitled to be admitted as the legal representatives of the deceased Kutti Hammad for the purpose of prosecuting the suit and then deal with the suit according to law. Costs of this appeal will abide and follow the result and be provided for in the revised judgment or order.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of W. C. Holmes, District Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 171 of 1891, reversing the decree of J. P. Fernandez, District Munsif of Coondapoor, in Original Suit No. 73 of 1890.

The plaintiffs were four of five trustees of a mosque. The eighth and ninth defendants were members of the committee who had appointed the first to sixth defendants additional trustees. The seventh defendant was the fifth original trustee and khazi of the mosque, who had been dismissed from his office by the four other trustees, a proceeding which, inter alia, gave rise to rioting, in which two of the plaintiffs took part. The committee then appointed the additional trustees in order to counterbalance the influence of the plaintiff-trustees in the management.

[213] The District Munsif decreed that the appointment was unnecessary and collusively made by the eighth and ninth defendants, which decree was reversed on appeal by the defendants by the District Judge.

The plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Ranga Rau for Appellants.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondents Nos. 1, 2, 4 to 7 and 9.

Judgment.—It is urged on appellants' behalf that the committee constituted under Act XX of 1863 acted ultra vires in appointing six additional trustees to the plaint temple without any necessity for so doing.

It is certainly competent to the committee, when there is no hereditary trustee, to add to the number of the existing trustees and it has the same powers which the Board of Revenue had under Regulation VII of 1817. Section 13 of that Regulation authorizes the Board of Revenue to make provision for the administration of religious and charitable endowments. It was also held by this Court in Regular Appeal 31 of 1888 that the committee might validly appoint new trustees where the right of management is not hereditary. It is then contended, with regard to the power conferred on the committee, that it is bound to exercise it reasonably and in good faith in furtherance of beneficial administration, and this contention is entitled to weight. The power conferred on the committee is no doubt discretionary, but the principle embodied in section 49 of the Indian Trusts Act viz., that when such discretionary power is not exercised reasonably and in good faith, such power may be controlled by a Civil Court of original jurisdiction, is equally applicable to public trusts. There is nothing in Act XX of 1863 or in Regulation VII of 1817 to support respondents' suggestion that the power is absolute.

The second issue raised the question and the District Munsif held that the committee exercised the power otherwise than reasonably and in good faith. But the Judge has expressed no opinion. Before disposing of this second appeal we shall ask the Judge to return a finding as to whether the appointment of the additional trustees was a reasonable bonâ fide exercise of their power conducive to beneficial management. Additional evidence may be admitted.

Although the members of a tarwad or family may, in an irregular fashion, be represented by a karnavan of the tarwad in a suit, the decree therein does not raise an absolute estoppel against members not actually brought on the record.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of A. Thompson, District Judge of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 227 of 1892, reversing the decree of S. Subramaniya Iyer, District Munsif of Payoli, in Original Suit No. 13 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

The District Munsif decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, and the District Judge reversed the decree on appeal by the defendants. The plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Sundara Ayyar for Appellants.

Narayana Rau for Respondents Nos. 2 to 6.

Judgment.—The present suit is brought by twelve persons alleged to belong with Chathu Nambiar, the twelfth defendant, to a branch tarwad. They claim a property held under lease by the thirteenth defendant. In 1887 the first defendant in the suit who is karnavan of the tarwad, brought a suit to recover the same property. In that suit the tenant was joined as first defendant and the other two defendants were the above-mentioned Chathu Nambiar and another member of the branch, Raman Nambiar. The main contention in that suit was that these two, Chathu and [215] Raman, belonged to a branch having no community of interest with the main tarwad. That contention was overruled and a decree was passed in favour of the then plaintiff, the karnavan. This decree, it has been held by the District Judge, is binding on the present plaintiffs, because in the former suit they were represented by Chathu and Raman, respectively, the karnavan and senior anandravan of their branch. The District Judge held that the question sought to be raised in the present suit is res judicata. In our opinion the judgment cannot be sustained. In the first place, the statement that the two members, Chathu and Raman, represented anybody but themselves seems to be a mere assumption. The only part of the record in the previous suit which is produced is the judgment, and from that it would be difficult to say that the then defendants were impleaded by the then plaintiff or put themselves forward in a representative character. At any rate, the mere fact that they are branch karnavan and senior anandravan is no ground for raising any inference. It must be remembered that the case for the then plaintiff was that there is no such thing as an independent branch existent and Chathu was joined as a defendant, because he happened to have taken a part in granting the demise.

Under these circumstances we are of opinion that there really is no foundation for the statement of the Judge on which he rests his conclusion as to the applicability of section 30 of the Civil Procedure Code. In drawing that conclusion also the Judge is clearly in error. It has been more than once decided that although the members of a tarwad or family may, in an irregular fashion, be represented by a karnavan of the tarwad, the decree does not raise an absolute estoppel against members not actually brought on the record, see Ittiachan v. Vellappan (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 484, 488), Sri Devi v. Kelu Eradi (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 79) and Second Appeal No. 93 of 1885.

We must, therefore, reverse the decree of the District Judge and remand the appeal for disposal. The plaintiffs are entitled to the costs of the appeal. For other costs provision will be made in the revised decree.

NOTES.

Transfer of Property Act—Act IV of 1882, s. 114—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act—Act XV of 1882, ss. 22, 41.

The plaintiff, a landlord, relying on a provision in a lease, gave the defendants, his tenants, notice to quit. Within seven days the defendants tendered rent, interest and costs. The plaintiff, nevertheless, filed this suit to eject the defendants. The defendants subsequently paid the full amount due into Court :

Held, that, under the terms of the lease, the defendants were not liable to forfeiture, and that, since the suit should have been brought under chapter VII, section 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, plaintiff must pay the defendants' costs as between attorney and client under section 22 of that Act :

Held, on appeal (1) that there having been a tender and payment into Court of the full amount due, the plaintiff proceeded with the suit at his risk under section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act ;

(2) that the suit not being cognizable by the Small Cause Court, section 22 of Act XV of 1882 did not apply, an application under chapter VII of that Act not being a suit under section 22 thereof.

* Appeal No. 8 of 1893.

APPEAL against the judgment of WILKINSON, J., sitting on the Original Side of the High Court in Civil Suit No. 242 of 1892. The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment delivered by Mr. Justice WILKINSON.

WILKINSON, J.—"The plaintiff is one of three brothers, from whom the defendant company leased certain property in 1887. There was subsequently litigation between the brothers which terminated in plaintiff becoming the sole owner of the property. Thereupon, in March 1891, plaintiff applied to the defendants' head clerk for instructions as to the form in which he should draw up the bills for rent. First witness supplied him with a form (II-A), and from the 18th March, 1891 up to 16th [217] March, 1892 plaintiff duly presented a bill for rent on or about the 15th of each month and was duly paid. No bill was presented in April, 1892 for the rent due, and the defendants omitted to send a cheque for it. Thereupon the plaintiff, on the 10th May, sent a notice to the defendant to quit, relying on a provision in the lease that 'if any part of the rent reserved should be in arrear for 21 days, whether the same shall have been legally demanded or not, the lessors may re-enter and the demise shall absolutely determine.' On the 17th May, the defendants through their attorneys tendered rent with interest and costs, but the plaintiff refused to accept it and has filed the present suit in this Court, notwithstanding the provisions of section 41 of the Presidency Small Cause Court Act. The first question is whether there has been any breach of the condition of the lease. Strictly speaking, there does not appear to me to have been any such breach, for, according to the terms of the lease, rent is payable on the 1st of each month and the defendant has 21 days' grace. The last cheque which the plaintiff accepted was one dated 4th April. The next cheque was dated 13th May. It was in time, but was refused. But it is argued that according to the course of dealing which has grown up between the parties, as proved by the evidence of the defendants' witness and by Exhibits II and III, ever since the plaintiff has been sole owner, the custom has been for the plaintiff to send or present his bill for rent on or about the 15th of the month and for the defendants to issue a cheque on the day on which bill was presented or the day after. Plaintiff having omitted to present his bill on or about the 15th April, no cheque for the rent was issued, but I do not think that the defendants are, therefore, liable to forfeiture. The strict terms of the lease had, by the consent of the plaintiff, been departed from, and as the defendants were always ready and willing to pay, it would be most inequitable to hold that their omission to send a cheque for the rent in April entitles plaintiff to cancel the lease. Admittedly the defendant company have always been most regular in the payment of rent, and though, legally speaking, they were not entitled to a bill, but were bound to pay rent as stipulated, yet I hold that, looking at all the circumstances of the case, they would not be liable to forfeiture even if they had been bound to pay on 15th April and had omitted to pay till 10th May. The suit is one which ought to have been brought in the Small Cause Court, [218] and in dismissing it with costs, I direct plaintiff to pay defendants' costs as between attorney and client."

Krishnasami Chetti for Appellant. .

Mr. W. Grant for Respondents.

Judgment.—It appears that on 13th May 1892 there was a valid tender of rent, interest and costs, and that on 3rd November there was a payment into Court of the full amount due up to the 15th November. This being so, the defendants have brought themselves within the terms of section 114 of the Transfer of Property Act. After the tender on the 13th May the plaintiff proceeded with the suit at his risk. The only other question is as to costs between Attorney and client given by the learned Judge. In our opinion this suit was not cognizable by the Small Cause Court and therefore section 22 of the Act does not apply. *An application under chapter VII is not a suit within the meaning of section 22.

We must vary the decree accordingly. Each party will bear his own costs of this appeal.

Notice to quit—Assertion of Mulgeni (permanent) tenure—Entitlement to notice.

The setting up of a Mulgeni right by a tenant is not a disclaimer of title such as disentitles him to a notice to quit in determination of the tenure.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of W. C. Holmes, Acting District Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 405 of 1890, confirming the decree of S. Raghunathaya, District Munsif of Karkal, in Original Suit No. 323 of 1889.

[219] The lower Courts having decreed in favour of the defendants, the plaintiff preferred this appeal.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report in the judgment of the High Court.

Narayana Rau for Appellant.

Madhava Rau for Respondents Nos. 2, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 10.

Judgment.—This was a suit brought by appellant to eject respondents. Both Courts concur in finding that respondents 2 to 4 are, and have long been, in possession as tenants. Their case was that they were Mulgeni tenants and they set up their Mulgeni right in 1880, long prior to the suit. The District Munsif considered that they did not prove the Mulgeni right but, on appeal, the Judge thought it unnecessary to determine the question. But both Courts found that no notice to quit had been served upon respondents 2 to 10, and upon that finding, the Judge dismissed the suit with costs. For appellant it is contended that, as respondents set up a Mulgeni right, he was absolved from his obligation to give them notice to quit. There is no doubt that a tenant from year to year is entitled to reasonable notice ; as was held in Abdulla Rawutan v. Subbarayyar (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 346), the reason being that the duration of a tenancy from year to year is indefinite, and that it is part of the landlord's case to show that he had determined the tenancy prior to suit by sufficient notice to quit. Nor is there any doubt that the tenant forfeits this right to notice by denying the landlord's title prior to suit. It is also settled law that the denial of title for the first time in the suit does not disentitle the tenant to notice, for the reason that the plaintiff is bound to show that at the date of suit he had a complete cause of action ; and subsequent denial of title, even if false, does not release the landlord from proving his case or amount to a waiver by the defendant of his right to notice, Subba v. Nagappa (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 353). The question, therefore, arising for decision is whether setting up a Mulgeni right is a disclaimer of title such as disentitles to notice. As far as we are aware, this is the first time this question arises in this Court. When a Mulgeni right is set up, the landlord's title is, in fact, not denied ; on the other hand, the relation of landlord and tenant is admitted, what is denied being the particular kind of tenancy under which the tenant holds possession. This denial [220] includes no doubt a denial of the contract or the tenure under which the tenant commenced to hold, but it is not, we think, on that ground a denial of title. As pointed out in Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, page 325 (13th edition) there must be a direct repudiation of the relation of landlord and tenant or an assertion of facts which are, either expressly or by necessary implication, incompatible with the existence of such relation. For the appellant, however, our attention is drawn to Vivian v. Moat (L. R., 16 Ch.D., 730) and to the observations of Mr. Justice FRY. The ground of decision in that case was that the claim to hold at a customary rent was inconsistent with the ordinary relationship of landlord and tenant, and that it amounted to a suggestion that the landlord was not an ordinary landlord, but either lord of the manor or owner of some other right which gave him a right to customary rent and to nothing more. We cannot say that in the case of a Mulgeni in South Canara, the landlord is in the position of a lord of the manor in England or that the rent reserved is not often substantial. The tenures are not alike, and we do not think it safe to extend the rule laid down in Vivian v. Moat (L. R., 16 Ch. D., 730) to this country, especially as the rule is substantially one of forfeiture. The High Court at Calcutta considered that Vivian v. Moat (L. R. 16 Ch. D., 730) was not applicable in Bengal in Kali Krishna Tagore v. Golam Ally (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 248 254). It was also held by the Bombay High Court in Haji Sayyad v. Venkata (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 410) that the defendants' unsuccessful attempt to prove himself a Mulgenidar did not exonerate the plaintiff from proving the lawful determination of the Chalgeni holding. The decision of the Judge is right, and we dismiss the second appeal with costs.

PETITION under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of M. B. Sundara Rau, Subordinate Judge of Ellore, in Small Cause Suit No. 368 of 1891.

This was a suit to recover from the defendant (a minor) a sum of money on a bond executed by the mother of the defendant as his guardian in revival of an old debt due to the plaintiff's father, which debt was time-barred at the date of the suit. The Subordinate Judge, relying on Wajibun v. Kadir Buksh (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 295), held that the mother had no authority to make a fresh contract and give thereby a fresh cause of action for limitation to the original obligation, and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff preferred this petition.

Judgment.—This was a suit upon a bond executed by the defendant's mother as his guardian in renewal of an old debt. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that, but for the new bond, the old debt would be barred by limitation at the date of suit, and that a guardian was not competent to make an acknowledgment on behalf of his ward so as to give a fresh start for the period of limitation. The decision of the High Court at Calcutta in Wajibun v. Kadir Buksh (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 295), is not consistent with [222] the principle and the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Chinnaya v. Gurunatham (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 169). According to the last-mentioned decision, the manager of a joint Hindu family, in which there may be minors, has authority to acknowledge a debt, provided that it is not barred at the date of acknowledgment. In my opinion, such an acknowledgment may often be necessary to obtain an extension of time for payment of minor's debt and thereby prevent imminent pressure on the minor's property, and I see no reason to think that it is not an act within the general power of a guardian to do what is either necessary in the interest of the minor or what is manifestly for his benefit. Following the principle of the decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court, I set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remand the case for disposal on the merits. Costs incurred hitherto will abide and follow the result and be provided for in his revised judgment.

depends upon the authority of the person making the acknowledgment. The manager of a business, or of a joint Hindu family in which the minor is a sharer would ordinarily have such authority :—[(1892) 17 Bom., 512 following (1881) 5 Mad., 169 which, in reversing (1878) 1 Mad., 385 held that the manager of a Hindu family has the same authority to acknowledge as to create debts on behalf of the family; (1910) 37 Cal., 461. The effect of a payment of interest or part-payment of principal would also similarly depend upon the authority of the person making such payment, (1910) 37 Cal., 461. It has been held that the payment of interest by a guardian appointed under the Guardian and Wards Act extends the period of limitation (1902) 6 C.W.N., 729; (1901) 26 Bom., 221; (1894) 18 Mad., 454 but there is authority to the contrary, (1904) 26 All., 598, dissented from in (1908) 30 All., 422; 5 A.L.J., 375; (1886) 13 Cal., 292; (1894) 20 Bom., 61.

A guardian has no power to revive a debt already barred by limitation, by promising to pay it, on behalf of his ward, (1895) 19 Mad., 255; 26 Mad., 380; 17 Mad., 221; 5 Mad., 169; (1910) 7 M.L.J., 383.

parupathyagar or manager; and appellant is a member of the caste subject to the spiritual jurisdiction of first respondent. On the 17th May 1887, first respondent issued against appellant a provisional order of excommunication and communicated it to the Vaidikas and Grahastas, secular and lay Brahmans of Mangalore. Three caste offences are mentioned in the order. The first is that when the guru went to appellant's division or hobli, appellant neglected to visit him and pay the kanike or fee as other Havik Brahmans did, though he was duly apprised of first respondent's arrival; the second is that when the people of Vittal remonstrated with him against his conduct and advised him to see his guru, he referred to his disapproval of the excommunication of one Sham Bhatta and others of the Bayar village and to his promise to those persons to continue in caste communion with them, and declared that it was not necessary for him either to see the first respondent or to pay to him the arrears of kanike or fee. The third caste offence is that he associated with persons already excommunicated in defiance of first respondent's authority as the chief of his sub-caste. The order proceeds then to state that it shall be in force until appellant attends before first respondent and obtains an order disposing of the matters mentioned therein. It purports to be signed by second respondent under the orders of first respondent.

Appellant brought this suit to have it declared that the order passed against him is unjust and invalid on the ground that it was issued without notice to him and that he suffered thereby both in his property and reputation. In defence, respondents admitted the order, but alleged that it was only provisional and that it was fully competent to first respondent as the head and chief of his caste to issue such order. The District Munsif considered that first respondent was at liberty to deal with questions relating [224] to caste and religious usages, and that the Civil Courts ought not to interfere to prevent first respondent from correcting caste misconduct. On this view, the District Munsif dismissed the suit with costs; and on appeal the Subordinate Judge confirmed the decision. He observed (i) that the order was provisional in its nature; (ii) that the decisions marked as Exhibits I to III and VI and that reported in The Queen v. Sankara (I.L.R., 6 Mad., 381) showed that as guru first respondent had authority to inquire into the misconduct of his disciples and to punish them for caste offences and derelictions. He was also of opinion that appellant's liability to pay kanike or subscription or fee was a caste matter and that appellant had no right to complain, unless the fee demanded was unreasonable or extortionate, which it was not in the case before us as evidenced by Exhibit XIV. He found further that due notice was given to appellant, and that if no inquiry was held, it was because of appellant's contumacious conduct in refusing to attend such inquiry. He also remarked that appellant asked but for a declaratory decree in regard to a temporary interdict or an ad interim order in respect of certain caste imputations, and that in his judgment this was a case in which he, in the exercise of the discretion vesting in him under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, might properly refuse to pass a merely declaratory decree. Hence this second appeal.

For appellant it is contended that, upon the facts found, the decision of the Subordinate Judge is wrong in law; but we are unable to accede to this contention. The relation between appellant and first respondent is that of a member and the ecclesiastical chief of his caste. Whether the disciple should visit his guru and make his obeisance, whether the former should pay the latter a kanike or fee by virtue of the spiritual relation, and whether the disciple should abstain from intercourse with persons already excommunicated by his guru, are matters relating to the autonomy of caste with which, as the head of the caste, first respondent has jurisdiction to deal according to recognized caste custom. It was held in The Queen v. Sankara (I.L.R., 6 Mad., 381) and Murari v. Suba (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 725) that a guru's jurisdiction extends over such matters. This being so, the facts found show that first respondent exercised his jurisdiction bona fide. It is found that the fee demanded [225] was neither unreasonable nor extortionate. It is not denied that appellant did violate the duty which he owed to first respondent by refusing to visit him. The provisional nature of the order shows that care was taken to see that the punishment by way of excommunication which, as ecclesiastical chief, first respondent was competent to inflict, was not more extensive than was necessary to enforce obedience to caste duties. As observed by the Subordinate Judge, if there has been no inquiry, its absence is due to appellant's contumacious refusal to attend such inquiry. In a matter relating to caste customs over which the ecclesiastical chief has jurisdiction and exercises his jurisdiction with due care and in conformity to the usage of caste, the Civil Courts cannot interfere.

The decision of the Courts below is open to no legal objection, and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 6th April and 12th September, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR.

Sobhanadri Appa Rau.....(Plaintiff) Petitioner

versus

Chalamanna and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Rent Recovery Act (Madras)—Act VIII of 1865, s. 10—Suit to recover arrears of rent due under a decree given under s. 10—Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 110—Whether limitation commences from date of decree or from the dates when the various sums in arrears were payable.

In a suit for arrears of rent due under a decree given under section 10 of the Rent Recovery Act (Madras Act VIII of 1865) the period of limitation in article 110, schedule II of the Limitation Act, commences from the date when the plaintiff was in a position to sue for rent, i.e., the date of the decree.

THESE were petitions under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of C. Rangayya, District Munsif of Bezvada, in Small Cause Suits Nos. 502, 503 and 505 to 511 of 1891.

The facts of the case (Petition No. 42 of 1892) which governed the other petitions were as follows :

[226] On the refusal of a tenant to accept a patta tendered by his landlord for fasl 1296, the latter instituted in 1886 a suit to enforce acceptance thereof. The suit was finally decided on 15th May 1888, a decree being given under section 10 of the Rent Recovery Act modifying the terms of the patta. In the meanwhile the defendant had paid such rent from time to time as he thought he was bound to pay. On 15th May 1891 the landlord instituted the present suit to recover the difference between the rent due according to the amended patta and the amount paid by the defendant previous to the decree. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation since it had been brought more than three years after the expiration of the dates upon which the rents should be paid according to the kistbandi. The District Munsif decided in favour of the defendant and the plaintiff preferred this petition.

Judgment in Civil Revision Petition No. 42 of 1892.—The plaintiff is a minor zamindar under the care of the Court of Wards and the defendant is his tenant. The present suit was brought on the small cause side of the District Munsif's Court of Bezwada to recover the balance of sist due for fasli 1296. It was admitted by both parties that according to the kistbandi rent was payable every year in instalments from October to March of each fasli. The plaintiff's father tendered patta for fasli 1296, but the defendant refused to accept it. Thereupon the plaintiff's father instituted a suit in the Revenue Court to enforce acceptance of the patta and the parties joined issue on the question whether the patta tendered was proper or such as the tenant was bound to accept. It was only in May 1888 that the summary suit instituted in 1886 before the Head Assistant Collector was dealt with by the District Judge on appeal. He held that the patta tendered was not a proper one and passed a decree under section 10 of Act VIII of 1865. In accordance with the provisions of that section, he declared the terms of the patta which ought to be offered, and passed a judgment ordering the defendant to execute a muchilka in accordance with it. The plaintiff then brought this suit to recover the difference between the rent due according to the patta as amended by the decree and the payments made on account of rent by the defendant previous to the decree. The defendant [227] resisted the claim and pleaded, inter alia, that it was barred by limitation. The District Munsif upheld the defendant's contention and dismissed the suit with costs. It is argued in revision that the suit was not barred by limitation and, in support of the contention, reliance is placed on the decisions in Court of Wards v. Darmalinga (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 2), Kullayappa v. Lakshmiipathi (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 467) and Appayasami v. Subba (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 463).

As observed by the District Munsif, the petitioner is not entitled to any deduction of time under sections 14 and 15 of the Limitation Act. The cases contemplated by those sections are those in which a former suit failed from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature, or the former suit was stayed by injunction or order. In the case before me, the summary suit did not fail but was adjudicated upon. Nor was the cause of action or the relief claimed in the former suit the same as in the present suit. The District Munsif is also right in holding that the suit to recover arrears of rent is governed by article 110 of the Limitation Act, which prescribes three years from the time when the arrears become due. The substantial question, therefore, is when did the arrears become due and whether it was from the date when they should be paid according to the kistbandi, or from the date on which the plaintiff was in a position to sue for rent.

In Court of Wards v. Darmalinga (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 2), it was held that the landholder is not bound to tender a patta for acceptance as amended by the decree before suing to enforce the terms thereof, and no question of limitation arose in that suit. The point determined in Kullayappa v. Lakshmiipathi (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 467) was that a landlord could not attach the saleable interest of a defaulting tenant under section 38 of Act VIII of 1865 until the expiry of the current revenue year. The decision in Appayasami v. Subba (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 463) is only an authority for the proposition that the unit for the special rule of limitation prescribed by the Rent Recovery Act, s. 2, for proceedings by the landlord was the aggregate rent in arrears at the end of the fasli. This is not a suit falling under section 2 of Act VIII of 1865, and none of the cases cited appear to me to be in point.

The real question, as already observed, is when did the arrears of rent claimed by petitioner become due. By section 7 no suit [228] can be sustained to recover rent until a patta is tendered and accepted or a proper patta is tendered, and the tender of a proper patta is a condition precedent to the contract between the parties becoming actionable. It is a contradiction in terms to say that rent is due before the landlord is in a position to sue. When the landlord may sue for rent must depend on the terms of the contract in each case, and when the Legislature renders any contract actionable only on the occurrence of a particular event, no obligation can arise till that event occurs. By section 10 the amended patta relates back to the date of the suit brought for the enforcement of acceptance of the patta. In cases in which the landlord sues in time to enforce the acceptance of a patta, the landlord is not in a position to sue for rent until the decree passed under section 10 either amends the patta or declares it to be a proper patta. Otherwise a suit to enforce the acceptance of a proper patta may be pending in a Revenue Court for several years, and the claim for rent may be barred before the landlord acquires a right of action.

I am therefore of opinion that this suit is not barred. I set aside the decree of the District Munsif and remand the case for disposal on the merits. The costs hitherto incurred will abide and follow the result, and be provided for in the revised judgment.

Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 43 to 50 follow.

Execution sale—Portion of the property sold belonging to a stranger—Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 313, 315 and 316—Rights of a purchaser in an execution sale.

Where a Court sale in execution of a decree is not vitiated by fraud, the only extent to which the purchaser can claim relief is that indicated by s. 315 of the [230] Civil Procedure Code. The effect of ss. 313, 315 and 316 of the Code is that the right title and interest of the judgment-debtor passes to the purchaser at a Court-sale subject, however, to the condition that the purchaser may recover back his purchase money when he finds that the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest at all.

The implied warranty of title in respect of sales by private contract cannot be extended to Court-sales, except so far as such extension is justified by the processual law in India, viz., by s. 315 of the Civil Procedure Code.

PETITION under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of P. Narayanasami, Subordinate Judge of Madura (West), in Small Cause Suit No. 950 of 1891.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court. The lower Court decreed in favour of the plaintiffs, and the defendant preferred this petition

Judgment.—The petitioner is the judgment-creditor in Original Suit No. 45 of 1881 on the file of the Subordinate Court (West) at Madura, and the counter-petitioner is the purchaser at the Court-sale held in execution of the decree passed therein against one B. Krishnasami Chetty. The auction sale was held on the 27th July 1885, and it was since found that a portion of the property sold, valued at Rs. 60, belonged to one Velayudam at the date of the sale. The counter-petitioner thereupon claimed a refund of the purchase money, and the Subordinate Judge decreed the claim on the Small Cause side. It is contended for the petitioner that as Krishnasami Chetty had some saleable interest in the property sold, the counter-petitioner is entitled to no refund at all. It is true that in Kunhamed v. Chathu (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 437), it was held that where the judgment-debtor had some saleable interest in the property sold the Court had no jurisdiction to make an order under section 315 for refund of the purchase money or any part thereof, but the question that now arises for determination is whether the purchaser may, in a regular suit, claim a refund in proportion to the extent to which the judgment-debtor had no interest in the property sold. With reference to a Sheriff's sale the Privy Council held in Dorab Ally Khan v. Abdool Azeez (L. R., 5 I. A., 116) that in India the vendor's liability to refund the purchase money in respect of a private sale is [230] governed by the English law relating to the sale of chattels and that law, as laid down in Eichholz v. Bamster (34 L. J., C.B., 105), is that there is an implied warranty on the part of the seller that he is the owner of the goods. This is in accordance with the law as laid down in section 55, sub-section 2 of Act IV of 1882. But in the case before me, the sale was not a sale by private contract, but a sale in inritum, and under legal process it must, therefore, be governed by rules applicable to execution sales. The effect of a Court-sale, as stated in section 316, Code of Civil Procedure, is that "so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them, the title to the property sold vests in the purchaser," etc. The Court-sale then is a sale of the judgment-debtor's interest such as it was at the date of the sale according to section 316. By section 313, however, the purchaser is

*[Sec 313 :—The purchaser at any such sale may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the person whose property purported to be sold had no saleable interest therein, and the Court may make such order as it thinks fit provided that no order to set aside a sale shall be made, unless the judgment-debtor and the decree holder have had opportunity of being heard against such order.]

enabled to apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the person whose property purported to be sold had no saleable interest therein, and the Court is authorized to make such order as it thinks fit. By section 315 it is provided that when it was found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold, and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it, the purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his purchase money (with or without interest) from any person to whom the purchase money has been paid. The result of the above-mentioned sections is that what passes to the purchaser at a Court sale is the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor subject, however, to this condition, viz., that the purchaser may recover back his purchase money when he finds that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest at all. The English rule, as stated by Lord St. Leonards, is that if a conveyance of real property is actually executed by all the necessary parties, and the purchaser is evicted by a title to which the covenants do not extend, he cannot recover back the purchase money either at law or in equity, and referring to that rule as governing all sales by private contract, the Privy Council point out in the case cited above that it is not applicable to a Sheriff's sale under a feri facias in which the sale, as regards the owner of the thing sold, is in invitum, and made under colour of legal process. They say that a purchaser at a Sheriff's sale has at least very inadequate means of investigating the title of the judgment-debtor; all that is sold and bought is the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor with all its defects, and the Sheriff who sells and executes the bill of sale is never called upon, and, if called upon, would refuse to execute any covenant of title. They observe then "it is perfectly clear that when the property has been sold under a regular execution and the purchaser is evicted afterwards under a title paramount to that of the judgment-debtor, he has no remedy either against the Sheriff or the judgment-debtor." Such being the law of England applicable to Sheriff's sales under a feri facias, the question is whether it is not applicable in India by reason of the fact that there is an implied warranty of title in India as is the case in the sale of chattels in England. The decision of the Privy Council seems to me to be an authority for the proposition that the implied warranty of title in respect of sales by private contract cannot be extended to Court-sales, except so far as such extension is justified by the processual law in India.

I do not desire to be understood as suggesting that in case of fraud there would be no remedy, but this is not that case. What I hold is that where the Court-sale is not vitiated by fraud, the only extent to which the purchaser can claim relief is that indicated by section 315 which recognizes the equity on which Hitchcock v. Giddings (4 Price, 135) was decided, viz., that the sale may be rescinded on the ground of mistake whether there was no saleable interest at all, even after a conveyance has been executed.

It follows, therefore, that the judgment-creditor cannot be treated as if he was the vendor, and the Court-sale cannot be treated as if there was an implied warranty of title as in a private sale, except so far as is warranted by the language of section 315. The decree of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

[232] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 21st November, 1893 and 19th February, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Padammah and others.....(Defendants Nos. 2 to 7) Appellants

Themana Ammah and others.....(Plaintiffs) Respondents.*

Specific Relief Act— Act I of 1877, s. 42—Consequential relief—Suit by a member of a tarwad for a decree declaratory of the invalidity of a kanom granted to other members by the karnavan of the tarwad.

Where a kanom of tarwad property is granted by the karnavan to members of the tarwad and the property in question remains in the possession of the karnavan on behalf of the tarwad, all that is necessary for a junior member to do in order to prevent the possession becoming adverse to the tarwad is to obtain a declaration that the kanom which is relied on as the cause of adverse possession is invalid. But if the kanom is granted to a stranger to the family, who is in possession, possession must then be sought for as relief consequent on the declaration.

An attornment of tenants to the kanomdars does not operate as a transfer of possession from the tarwad to the kanomdars. Subramanyan v. Paramaswaran (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 116) followed; and Bikutti v. Kalandan (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 267), Abdulkadar v. Mahomed (I.L.R., 15 Mad., 15), and Narayana v. Shankunni (I.L.R., 15 Mad., 255), distinguished.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of E. K. Krishnan, Subordinate Judge of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 562 of 1881, confirming the decree of O. Chandu Menon, Principal District Munsif of Calicut, in Original Suit No. 670 of 1890.

The first defendant was the karnavati of a tarwad. On the 4th August 1890 she granted a kanom of Rs. 479-10-0 in respect of 45 parcels of land belonging to the tarwad in favour of her younger daughters, second and third defendants, and her grand-daughter, fourth defendant.

The plaintiffs, who were the first defendant's eldest daughter and her children, contended that the kanom was not granted for proper purposes of the tarwad and sought for a declaration that it was null and void as against the tarwad. The suit was resisted by the defendants who contended that the grant was a proper and [233] bonâ fide one, and that the suit was one in which consequential relief in the shape of possession of the properties comprised in the kanom grant ought to have been sought and the Court fee on the value of such properties paid. This point was decided by the lower Courts against the defendants, the Subordinate Judge holding that the possession of the properties was in the tarwad, of which the management vested in the first defendant as karnavati; that the plaintiffs had no objection to her possession as karnavati; and that if the second to fourth defendants had, since the grant of the kanom complained of, obtained attornment from tenants, it was an attornment on a title viciously acquired.

* Second Appeal No. 423 of 1893.

The defendants preferred this appeal.

Sankara Menon for Appellants.

Sundara Ayyar for Respondents.

Judgment.—This was a suit to have it declared that a kanom granted by the first defendant to second and third defendants was not binding on the plaintiffs' tarwad. The first defendant, since deceased, was the karnavati of the tarwad and both appellants and respondents were her anandravara. It was contended for defendants, inter alia, that a suit for merely a declaratory decree could not be maintained and both the Courts below disallowed the contention. The District Munsif observed that as the first defendant was karnavati, the plaintiffs were not entitled to possession and that possession really remained where it was before the demise on kanom. The Subordinate Judge found that possession of the properties demised on kanom was held by the first defendant on behalf of the tarwad, that the plaintiffs had no objection to her possession, and that if second and third defendants obtained attornment from tarwad tenants subsequent to the kanom, it was inoperative as an attornment acquired 'on a vicious title.' The contention on appellants' behalf is that such attornment operates as a transfer of possession from the tarwad to the kanomdars and that the plaintiffs ought to have sued to recover possession, and not merely for a declaration, under section 42 of Specific Relief Act; but we do not consider that this view can be supported. So long as the property continues in the possession of the karnavan as a member of the tarwad, it is prima facie that of the tarwad; and all that is necessary for a junior member to do in order to prevent its becoming adverse to the tarwad is to obtain a declaration that the kanom which is relied on as the [234] cause of adverse possession is invalid. When the kanom is granted to a stranger to the family and he is in possession, the doctrine of unity of possession is not applicable and possession must then be sued for as relief consequent on the declaration. Our attention is called to the decisions in Subramanyan v. Paramaswaran (I. L. R. 11 Mad., 116) Bikutti v. Kalendan (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 267), Abdulkadar v. Mahomed (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 15), and Narayana v. Shankunni (I. L. R. 15 Mad., 255). It was held in Subramanyan v. Paramaswaran (I. L. R. 11 Mad. 116) that where a title is in dispute, there may be third parties who are honestly in doubt and ready to acknowledge the title of either claimant, or who, having attorned to one, may be ready to acknowledge the person declared by the Court to have the title, and that in such a case, a suit for a declaratory decree will lie. This decision is against the appellants. In Bikutti v. Kalendan (I. L. R., 14 Mad. 267), it was held that according to the plaintiffs' case, the land being in the possession of strangers, it was clearly the right of the plaintiff, as of the other members of the tarwad, to have the land restored to the possession of the tarwad. The decision in Abdulkadar v. Mahomed (I. L. R. 15 Mad., 15) proceeded on the ground that the office of Sheik and its emoluments were in the possession of the defendant and the doctrine of unity of possession had no application. Nor is the decision in Narayana v. Shankunni (I. L. R. 15 Mad. 255) in point.

Another contention on appellants' behalf is that the consideration for the kanom was in part-payment of tarwad debts and our attention is drawn in this connection to Exhibit IX and other documents. The Subordinate Judge observes in his judgment that if the appellants have paid any premium for the kanom grant, they may have a lien to that extent on the property. Though respondents may be entitled to have the kanom declared not binding on the tarwad, appellants are entitled to have any part of the consideration, which benefited the tarwad, or extinguished any of its debts, declared a charge in their favour. The Subordinate Judge has not come to any finding on this point. He is directed to try the following issue, viz., whether any, and what, debts due by the tarwad were discharged by the kanomdars from their private funds?

In compliance with the above order the Subordinate Judge [235] having returned a finding to the effect that tarwad debts had been discharged by the kanomdars to the extent of Rs. 695 from their private funds, the High Court delivered judgment as follows:

Judgment.—The finding being one of fact must be accepted. We, therefore, modify the decree of the Courts below by declaring the kanom by first defendant to defendants 2 to 4 to be invalid, but that these defendants have a charge on the property to the extent of Rs. 695 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the several dates of payment particularized in the finding.

Plaintiffs must pay the costs of the defendants 2 to 4 on the issue sent for trial. In other respects the appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL—FULL BENCH.

The 23rd November, 1893 and 26th January, 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Thapita Peter.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

versus

Thapita Lakshmi and another.....(Defendants) Respondents.

Divorce—Divorce Act IV of 1869, s. 7—Nature of the marriages contemplated by the Act—Monogamous marriage.

The petitioner and his wife married according to the rites of the Hindu religion. The wife subsequently left her husband and lived in adultery with another man. Both the husband and wife subsequently became Christians, but the wife continued to live in adultery. The husband sued under Act IV of 1869 for the dissolution of the marriage:

Held that, having regard to section 7, the marriages contemplated by the Act are those founded on the Christian principle of a union of one man and one woman to the exclusion of others, and that consequently the Act does not contemplate relief in cases where the parties have been married under the rites of Hindu law, a Hindu marriage not being a monogamous one. Hyde v. Hyde (L.R., 1 P. & D., 130) and Brinkley v. Attorney-General (L.R., 15 P. D., 76) cited and followed. Gobardhan Dass v. Jasadamoni Dass (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 152) dissented from.

* Referred (Matrimonial) Case No. 5 of 1893.

CASE referred under section 17, Act IV of 1869, by G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, for confirmation of his decree in Original [236] Suit No. 1 of 1893, declaring the marriage of the plaintiff with defendant No. 1 to be dissolved, subject to confirmation by the High Court.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the judgments delivered by the High Court.

The parties were not represented.

Collins, C. J.—Thapita Peter brought a suit against Thapita Lakshmi, his wife, alleging her adultery with Lunkapalli Gauth, and praying, therefore, that his marriage may be dissolved. The District Judge of Kistna granted a decree dissolving the marriage under the provisions of Act IV of 1869, and the decree now comes before the High Court for confirmation under section 17 of Act IV of 1869.

The petitioner and his wife were married according to the rites of the Hindu religion in 1879, petitioner and his wife being Hindus at that time. About a year after the marriage the petitioner's wife left him and has since been living in adultery with the second respondent. In 1882 the petitioner became a Christian, and about 1890 his wife and the second respondent also became Christians. The question to be decided is—can the Courts of this country pass a decree dissolving his marriage under Act IV of 1869?

Section 1 of the Act enables relief to be granted where the petitioner professes the Christian religion.

Section 7 directs that the Courts in India shall act and give relief in all suits and proceedings hereunder on principles and rules which, in the opinion of the said Courts, are, as nearly as may be, conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England acts and gives relief.

Divorce is unknown to the Hindu law, but it is clear that if Act IV of 1869 was intended to apply to Hindu marriages, the petitioner would be entitled to relief. Act XXI of 1866 has no application to this case. That Act provides a relief from the marriage tie when one of the parties becomes a Christian, the other still remaining a Hindu.

A Hindu marriage is not a monogamous one. The man may lawfully be the husband of many wives at the same time. It is therefore a ceremony inconsistent with marriage as understood in Christendom that the husband should have more than one wife. If the Act IV of 1869 applies to Hindu marriages, a case may [237] arise where a Hindu with more wives than one becomes a Christian and his wives also embrace Christianity. In that case could one of the wives sue her husband for a divorce because he continues to cohabit with one or more of his other wives, as the conversion of the parties to Christianity would not dissolve or make void the husband's previous marriages, or could the Christian husband sue for a divorce from one of his wives on the ground that she had committed adultery.

The point to be decided is not without difficulty, but I think that if marriages celebrated according to Hindu rites were intended to be within the scope of the Act, express provision would have been made to meet the difficulties that must arise owing to the fact that the Hindu marriage is not a monogamous one. There are two English cases which serve to illustrate in what cases the English Divorce Court will give relief. In Brinkley v. Attorney-General (L. R., 15 P. D., 76), a British subject married a Japanese woman in Japan according to the forms required by the law of that country, and it was proved that by such a marriage the husband was precluded from marrying any other woman during the subsistence of the marriage. A declaration was granted by the President of the Probate Division declaring (under 21 and 22 Vic., cap., 93) that such marriage was a valid one. In the judgment the President says: "Marriage must be that of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others. Throughout the judgments that have been given on this subject the phrase 'Christian marriage,' 'marriage in Christendom' or some equivalent phrase has been used: that has only been for convenience to express the idea. But the idea that was to be expressed was this, that the only marriage recognized in Christian countries and in Christendom is the marriage of the exclusive kind mentioned."

In Hyde v. Hyde (L. R., 1 P. & D., 130), the petitioner, an English subject, married in Utah, in the United States of America, a Miss Hawkins according to the rites of the Mormons. At the time of the celebration of the marriage, polygamy was a part of the Mormon doctrine and was the common custom in Utah. The marriage was a valid marriage according to the lex loci and polygamy was then lawful in Utah. The petitioner and his wife were both single and the petitioner had never taken a second wife. The petitioner [238] sometime after the marriage renounced Mormonism, was excommunicated, and his wife declared free to marry again. The wife did marry again and the petitioner then petitioned the Divorce Court for a dissolution of his marriage on account of his wife's adultery. The counsel for the petitioner argued, inter alia, that this was not a polygamous marriage, for both the parties were single at the time when it was contracted; but the Judge Ordinary observed that it would be extraordinary if a marriage in its essence polygamous should be treated as a good marriage by an English Court, and held that marriage as understood in Christendom may be defined as the voluntary union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others.

By section 7 of Act IV of 1869 the High Court and District Courts shall act and give relief on principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England for the time being acts and gives relief. It is clear to my mind that the Divorce Court would not grant the relief the petitioner prays for, on the ground that the marriage being a polygamous one cannot be recognized as a marriage by that Court; and, being also of opinion that Act IV of 1869 does not contemplate relief in cases where the parties have been married under the rites and ceremonies of Hindu law, I hold that the District Court had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit, and I would dismiss it. I am aware that the Judges of the Calcutta High Court have arrived at a different conclusion [see Gobardhan Dass v. Jasadamoni Dass (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 252)]. Section 7 of Act IV of 1869 does not seem to have been specially brought to the notice of the Court, as the judgment is silent upon the principles and rules on which the Courts shall give relief. However, be that as it may, I am unable, with the greatest respect to the learned Judges, to agree with them, and therefore decline to follow the case in Gobardhan Dass v. Jasadamoni Dass (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 252).

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—The question which it is necessary to determine in this suit is whether the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery under Act IV of 1869. The facts which give rise to this question are shortly these. The plaintiff was born in 1862. In 1879 he married the first defendant by Hindu rites, both being then Hindus by religion. In 1880 the wife left her husband and commenced to live in [239] adultery with the second defendant, to whom she has since borne four children. In 1882 the plaintiff embraced Christianity, and about two years prior to this suit, which was brought in 1893, the defendants also became Christians.

After her conversion to Christianity, the first defendant continued to live with the second defendant and repeat her adultery with him till date of suit. Upon these facts, it is clear that the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree for divorce if Act IV of 1869 applied to this case. The real question is whether the Act is applicable to a Hindu marriage after both parties to such marriage have become Christians.

In connection with a Hindu marriage, there are several legal incidents as to which no doubt can possibly exist. The first is that such marriage is in its nature not monogamous, and is not the voluntary union for life of one man with one woman to the exclusion of all others. It is true that as regards the Hindu wife, her union with her husband is a voluntary union for her life with one man to the exclusion of all others; but the Hindu husband may marry several wives at one and the same time, or may marry two or more wives during the lifetime of the first wife. The real point for consideration, therefore, is whether the Act is applicable to a Hindu marriage.

Another matter as to which there is also no doubt is that conversion to Christianity does not dissolve the prior Hindu marriage, and that the latter continues to be valid even after the parties to it become Christians for many purposes. So it was held in Administrator-General of Madras v. Anandachari (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 466) and in other cases to which it is hardly necessary to refer. Act XXI of 1866 is framed on the view that a marriage, though contracted by Hindu rites, is binding upon the parties to it even after they become Christians, and prescribes a procedure whereby a decree for dissolution of such marriage may be obtained in certain cases. That Act is applicable to cases in which the husband or the wife continues to be a Hindu by religion whilst the other has become a Christian.

It was further held in Perianayakam v. Pottukanni (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 382), that a pariah who was converted to Christianity was not entitled to a decree for divorce on the ground of adultery committed by his wife before his conversion, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain his petition under Act IV of 1869. The ground of [240] decision was that the Act applied only to Christian marriages. Having regard to the decision in Brinkley v. Attorney-General (L. R., 15 P. D., 76), the expression 'Christian marriages' must be taken to convey the idea, not that the parties must profess Christianity, but that the marriage must be of a kind recognized in Christian countries, viz., that the marriage must be that of one man and one woman for life to the exclusion of all others. That was a case in which the petitioner was a British subject with an Irish domicile of origin. When he temporarily resided in Japan, he married a Japanese woman in Japan according to the forms required by the law of that country. It was proved in that case that, according to the law of Japan, it was a valid marriage, and by that law the petitioner was also precluded from marrying any other woman during the subsistence of that marriage. The learned Judge recognized the Japanese marriage as valid under the Legitimacy Declaration Act (21 and 22 Vic., cap. 93) and explained the ground of decision in these terms: "This case is clear from the difficulties which arose in the Mormon case and in the South African case, because in both these cases there was an attempt to establish as a valid marriage a marriage with another person than the first spouse. The principle laid down by these cases is that a marriage which is not that of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others, though it may pass by the name of marriage, is not the status which the English law contemplates when dealing with the subject of marriage." But in this case it has been proved by the law of Japan, "marriage does involve this idea, viz., that one man unites himself to one woman to the exclusion of all others. Therefore, though throughout the judgments which have been given on the subject, the phrase 'Christian marriage,' or marriage in Christendom or some equivalent expression has been used, that has been used only for the sake of convenience, and the idea which has to be expressed was this—that the only marriage recognized in Christian countries or in Christendom is the marriage of the exclusive kind." This decision is clear authority on the one hand for construing the expression 'Christian marriage' used in Perianayakam v. Pottukanni (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 382) in the sense indicated above, and on the other, for the opinion that the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England gives relief in such cases subject to two conditions, viz., [241] that the marriage is valid according to the lex loci, and that the idea of the union of one man and one woman to the exclusion of others is present in it, as in marriages between persons professing the Christian religion and thereby implies the status contemplated by the English law whilst dealing with the subject of marriage. Turning to the case before us, I do not think that the Act is applicable to it. In a Hindu marriage the idea of the exclusive union of one man and one woman for life is not present as in a marriage recognized by the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England, and section 7 of Act IV of 1869 directs that we should give relief under Act IV of 1869 on principles and rules which may be conformable to the principles and rules by which that Court gives relief. The preamble of the Act states that it is expedient to amend the law relating to the divorce of persons professing the Christian religion, and the second paragraph of section 2 declares that nothing herein contained shall authorize any Court to grant any relief under this Act, except in cases where the petitioner professes the Christian religion. These provisions render it probable that the marriage which the Act purported to deal with was marriage founded on the Christian principle. Again in section 2, clause 8, marriage with another woman is stated to mean marriage of any person being married during the life of the former wife, and it is provided by section 18 that a marriage may be declared null and void on the ground, inter alia, that the former wife was living at the time of the marriage and that the marriage with the former wife was then in force. Take for instance the case of a Hindu with two or more wives becoming Christians, and suing under the Act to have it declared that all his marriages but one are null and void. Are we to pass a decision in his favour? If so, which of his several marriages is to be declared null, and if we are to declare all marriages except the first null and void, are we not acting in contravention of the rule that conversion to Christianity does not dissolve prior marriages valid by the lex loci? If the legislature had intended to bring Hindu marriages within the scope of the Act, they would probably have inserted express provisions relating to questions which arise from their polygamous character. It is true that the plaintiff has married only one wife, though whilst a Hindu he was at liberty to have married several wives at the same time, and it may be suggested that the particular Hindu marriage now before us may be treated as monogamous in [242] fact, entitling the plaintiff to the relief claimed. There are two objections to the adoption of this suggestion. The first is that what we have to consider is, the status consequent on a marriage as regulated by the lex loci or the legal conception of the marriage, and not whether the plaintiff in a given case has in fact married one wife or several wives. Another objection is that the suggestion is not the natural result of interpretation which can be put on the Act, though it may form an appropriate subject of legislation. I do not see my way to hold that Hindu marriages are marriages contemplated by the Act.

As for the argument that it is hard that the legislature should have intended to place Hindu husbands who become Christians at a disadvantage, I am not prepared to attach much weight to it. Divorce affects the wife as well as the husband, and no such thing as divorce is known to the Hindu law. Thus wives other than the first might justly complain if their marriages were declared invalid by reason of their conversion as polygamous and their intercourse with their husbands characterised as adulterous, since divorce was not in their contemplation as a possible incident of their marriages when they were contracted. Possibly on this ground the legislature did not intend to include such marriages in the Act. However this may be, I am aware of no decided case in India which is on all fours with this case except the one reported in Gobardhan Dass v. Jasadamoni Dass (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 252), wherein the difficulties that arise from considering the Act to be applicable to a marriage such as the one before us are not considered and explained. The point decided in the matter of Ram Kumari (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 264) is that a Hindu wife who first embraces Mahomedanism and then marries a Mahomedan husband without notice to her Hindu husband is guilty of bigamy, and it is not therefore a case in point. Relying, therefore, on the English decision already cited and on the construction of Act IV of 1869, I hold that the Act is not applicable to Hindu marriages.

Shephard, J.—This is a suit by the husband for the divorce of his wife on the ground of her adultery. At the date of their marriage the parties were Hindus, and the Judge finds that the marriage was solemnized according to Hindu custom. Since that date both husband and wife have become Christians.

[243] The question is whether the marriage being a marriage of Hindus according to the Hindu rites is of such a character as to entitle the husband to a decree of dissolution of it under the provisions of Act IV of 1869.

The authorities are conflicting: on the one hand, the decision of the High Court of Bengal, Gobardhan Dass v. Jasadamoni Dass (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 252); on the other hand, a decision of the North-West Provinces High Court, Moola v. Nundy (4 N. W. P. 109), and one of this Court in which I took part. The facts in this latter case differ materially from those with which we have now to deal.

The Act distinctly requires that any person seeking for relief under it shall, at the time when his or her petition is presented, profess the Christian religion. The Act does not require in terms that the parties or either of them shall have been Christians at the time of the solemnization of the marriage. There are provisions in the Act which presuppose Christianity as the religion of the parties at the time of the marriage, but it cannot be said that adherence to that religion at that time is made a condition precedent to the obtaining of relief under the Act. It by no means follows that the provisions of the Act can be made applicable to any marriage between non-Christians, although it may be a marriage which, according to the law governing them, is valid and legal. In applying the provisions of the Act, section 7 directs that the Court shall act and give relief on principles and rules which are as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes in England for the time being acts and gives relief.

In my opinion the direction given in this section has to be kept in view by the Court when considering whether a given marriage should be recognized as such for the purposes of the Act. The question then is whether on a petition for divorce by the husband a marriage of Hindus according to Hindu ritual could be recognized by the English Divorce Court. Now, in order to satisfy the English Divorce Court, while it is not necessary to prove that the marriage was celebrated with any specifically Christian ceremonies, or even that both the parties were Christians, it is necessary to show that the union was a union for life of one man with one woman to the exclusion of others. That is what is meant by a [244] Christian marriage or a marriage in Christendom. See Hyde v. Hyde (L. R., 1 P. & D., 130) and Brinkley v. Attorney-General (L. R., 15 P. D., 76).

This definition of marriage clearly excludes from the category of marriage, as understood for the purposes of the Divorce Court, alliances such as the one which took place between the parties to the present suit, for according to Hindu law and custom, by which at the time they were governed, it was permissible to the husband to take a second wife. As far as he was concerned the marriage did not possess that character of exclusiveness which the law of Christendom presupposes in the institution of marriage.

It may be suggested that although the husband might, as a Hindu, have contracted a second marriage, he did not in fact do so and could not lawfully have done so after he became a Christian. It may be said that in consequence of the conversion of the parties to Christianity the marriage has come to acquire the necessary character of exclusiveness which it did not possess before.

Similar arguments were used in the arguments in Hyde v. Hyde (L. R., 1 P. & D., 130) and considered by Lord Penzance. It was proved in that case that the petitioner's marriage in Utah would, if valid in Utah, be recognized as valid by the Supreme Court of the United States, and it had been argued that the matrimonial law of England might properly be applied to the first of a series of Mormon marriages. Lord Penzance deals with this argument and points out the inconsistencies that might result if it were adopted.

In the present case it is true that the petitioner had married only one wife. Let it be supposed, however, that either when he married the respondent he already had a wife living, or that after so marrying her he had taken a second wife,

In the first case there can be no doubt that the marriage of the respondent could not be recognized, at least for the purposes of the Divorce Act, whether or not the first wife were still alive when the suit was brought.

Nor, it is conceived, could the second wife come into Court to ask that her marriage be declared void on the ground that her husband's former wife was alive at the date of the marriage, for section 19 of the Act relates to cases in which the marriage is void ab initio, and in the case supposed the marriage would not have been so void. In the other case supposed, the first wife, if she is [245] to be deemed the legal wife for all the purposes of the Act, would under section 10* be entitled to treat her husband's second marriage as bigamous and

When husband may petition for dissolution. * [Sec. 10:--Any husband may present a petition to the District Court or to the High Court, praying that his marriage may be dissolved on the ground that his wife has, since the solemnization thereof, been guilty of adultery.

Any wife may present a petition to the District Court or to the High Court, praying that her marriage may be dissolved on the ground that, since the solemnization thereof, her husband has exchanged his profession of Christianity for the profession of some other religion, and gone through a form of marriage with another woman ;

When wife may petition for a dissolution. or has been guilty of incestuous adultery, or of bigamy with adultery, or of marriage with another woman with adultery, or of rape, sodomy or bestiality, • or of adultery coupled with such cruelty as without adultery would have entitled her to a divorce a mensa et thoro, or of adultery coupled with desertion, without reasonable excuse, for two years or upwards. Every such petition shall state, as distinctly as the nature of the case permits, the facts on which the claim to have such marriage dissolved is founded.] Contents of petition.

on the strength of it to seek dissolution of her marriage on the ground of a connection which, at the time it was formed, was perfectly lawful.

No doubt it is true that persons who have married as Hindus and subsequently become Christians subject themselves to the law prevailing among Christians, so that the husband may be convicted of bigamy if he goes through a form of marriage with another woman. In re Millard (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 218), In the matter of Ram Kumari (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 269); see minute of Sir H. Maine. Ceasing to be a Hindu or Mahomedan as the case may be and becoming a Christian he sacrifices the liberty which heretofore he had according to the law of his birth—certainly the liberty of taking another wife and presumably the liberty of divorce, which if he had been Mahomedan, the Mahomedan law gave him. See Lopez v. Lopez (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 706).

It does not, however, follow that the convert is, in compensation for his sacrifice, entitled to a relief under the Act or to any divorce except under the provisions of Act XXI of 1866.

Any argument founded on the circumstance that the Hindu or Mahomedan marriage is, for some purposes, recognized after the parties became Christians really proves too much, for I conceive that the second of two wives married at the same time would, if she survived the first and became a Christian with her husband, be recognized as his lawful wife and her children would be legitimate; see Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 55. What would become of the second wife if both being alive, either or both of them became Christians with the husband it would be difficult to say. Assuming that the second wife only survived, I apprehend, as already observed, that there is no doubt that her marriage contracted in the lifetime of another wife would not be recognized for the purposes of the Act.

Again if a marriage, according to the Hindu custom, may be dissolved under the Act, it may also be declared null and void for any of the reasons mentioned in section 19. One of the reasons there specified is that the parties are within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity (whether natural or legal) or affinity. Those [246] words, which, excepting the bracketed words, are to be found in the Marriage Act, s. 48, are words habitually used in connection with Christian marriages, although it may be correct to hold that they do not involve the application of English rules to all Christians (see Lopez v. Lopez, I. L. R., 12 Cal., 706). If it be right to hold that the liberty of choice possessed by Hindus adopting Christianity extends to the law relating to marriage, Lopez v. Lopez (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 706), the Court might have to apply either the rules of Hindu law or the English rules of prohibited degrees in determining whether a marriage was valid or not. It would be a strange consequence if the Court constituted to administer the law in matters matrimonial to persons professing the Christian religion had to declare void a marriage which according to Christian usage was valid or to declare void a marriage which was valid according to the law governing the parties at the time of its solemnization.

The origin of the jurisdiction must not be lost sight of. As the English Divorce Court exercises the jurisdiction originally vested in the Ecclesiastical Court, so the jurisdiction exercised by the Supreme Court sitting on the ecclesiastical side is extended under certain conditions to the District Courts. See Lopez v. Lopez (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 706). There is no reason whatever for holding that this matrimonial jurisdiction, for which a new forum was thus created, was intended to be enlarged, so as to include marriages which would not come within the scope of the English Act. See Ardaseer Cursetjee v. Perozeboye (10 Moore's P. C., 375) as to the law before the Act.

In the present case, there being no evidence of any marriage except a marriage according to Hindu rites, I am of opinion that the Act does not apply, and that the District Court had no jurisdiction to decree dissolution.

[247] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 23rd March and 7th September, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST

Srinivasa Thathachar.....(Defendant,) Appellant

versus

Rama Ayyan and another.....(Plaintiff and Defendant No. 85)

Respondents.*

Revenue Recovery Act—(Madras) Act II of 1864, s. 35—Payment of arrears of village revenue by the assignee of a mortgagee of portion of the village property—'Defaulter'—Registered and real owners.

The plaintiff was assignee of a mortgagee of 38-1/8th pangus in a village consisting of 51-1/8th pangus. Having sued the executants of the mortgage and obtained a decree in 1885, he, in 1887 and 1888, paid certain arrears of revenue due from the village, in order to prevent its sale. In 1888, the plaintiff's 38-1/8th pangus were sold in execution of the decree of 1885 to the 85th defendant subject to a charge for the amount of the revenue arrears paid by the plaintiff. In 1890 the plaintiff instituted the present suit to recover from the entire village and from the defendants Nos. 1 to 84 personally the amount of these arrears :

Held, that the 85th defendant, as also the 38-1/8th shares purchased by him were liable for the debt conjointly with the remaining shares and the other defendants, the plaintiff having by payment of the arrears acquired a charge upon the land under s. 35 of the Revenue Recovery Act :

that not only registered proprietors but real owners and their holdings may be treated as defaulters within the meaning of s. 35 of that Act. Seshagiri v. Pichu (I. L. R., 11 Mad. 457) followed.

APPEAL against the decree of L. A. Campbell, District Judge of Salem, in Original Suit No. 9 of 1890.

The District Judge decreed in favour of the plaintiff and the 85th defendant and dismissed the suit as against certain other defendants. The remaining defendants preferred this appeal.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment delivered by the High Court.

* Appeal No. 151 of 1891.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellants.

Govinda Menon for Respondent No. 2.

Best, J.—The following are the facts of the case. The plaintiff (now respondent) was assignee of the mortgagee of 38-1/8th [248] out of 51-1/8th pangus of the agrapharam of Byrojee effected by some of the pangudars on 8th January 1881 for a sum of Rs. 8,245-7-5, borrowed to pay off the assessment, &c., due on the whole agrapharam. As such assignee plaintiff brought a suit (Original Suit No. 2 of 1884) against the executants of the mortgage and obtained a decree on 22nd June 1885. While the above suit was pending, the agrapharam was again advertised for sale for arrears of revenue, &c., which plaintiff paid off and instituted Original Suit No. 2 of 1886 for recovery of the amount so paid and obtained a decree for the same with interest on 27th August 1888. While Original Suit No. 2 of 1886 was pending, arrears accrued for subsequent fashies, and to prevent the sale of the properties for such arrears plaintiff paid a sum of Rs. 3,618-2-7 on the 13th April 1887 and a further sum of Rs. 1,707-7-0 on the 4th May 1888. In execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 2 of 1884, the 38-1/8th pangus were sold on 24th September 1885, when 85th defendant purchased the same for Rs. 11,000. The suit, out of which the present appeal has arisen, was instituted by plaintiff in 1890 to recover from the entire agrapharam and from defendants 1 to 84 personally the amount paid in 1887 and 1888, with interest, costs and further interest.

The District Judge has found some of the defendants to have no interest in the agrapharam and therefore to be not liable, but against the rest, except the 85th defendant, he has given a personal decree. He has also exempted from liability for the debt the 38-1/8th pangus purchased by 85th defendant at the sale in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 2 of 1884, but has made the debt a charge on the remaining 13 pangus. Hence this appeal by defendants 1, 4, 5, 16, 17, 58 to 62, 66, 69, 74, 78 and 81.

The first objection urged on behalf of the appellants is that in purchasing the 38-1/8th pangus at the sale in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 2 of 1884, 85th defendant was merely a benamidar for the plaintiff, and that the latter being the real purchaser, the charge is extinguished under section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act. On the issue whether the plaintiff was the real purchaser of the 38-1/8th shares, the District Judge's finding is that, though there are reasonable grounds for the defendants suspecting such to be the case, they have failed to prove it. Such also is our finding after a careful consideration of the [249] evidence on both sides. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider the question raised with reference to section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Other contentions on behalf of the appellants are (i) that none but registered holders of shares in the agrapharam can be held personally liable for the claim of the plaintiffs, and (ii) that the District Judge has erred in exonerating from such liability the 85th defendant and the 38-1/8th shares of the village purchased in his name.

The District Judge's finding is that the 38-1/8th shares were sold subject to these encumbrances, but that nevertheless the shares must be held to be not liable for the same. His reasons for this finding are as follows:— A payment made by a mortgagee or other incumbrancer to save lands from sale for arrears of assessment is declared by section 35 of Act II of 1864 (Madras) to be a charge upon the land which should "only take priority over other charges according to the date at which the payment was made." Plaintiff is, therefore, qua such payment in the position of a mortgagee, and the decision in Shaik Abdulla Saiba v. Haji Abdulla (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 13) is authority for the position that what is sold by the Court in such cases is the right, title, and interest of the mortgagor as it stood at the date of the mortgage, and such being the case, it cannot be affected by the statement in the sale proclamation that the auction sale was subject to such incumbrances. It is difficult to follow the Judge's reasoning. It being found as a fact that the 38½th shares were sold subject to the charge, there seems no reason why the purchaser at such sale should be allowed to hold the same free of the charge.

As the arrears were due on these 38½th shares as well, there is no reason whatever for exonerating them from liability for a proportionate share of the charge in any case.

As to the contention that only registered owners can be treated as defaulters within the meaning of section 25 of the Revenue Recovery Act, and consequently the lower Court's decree is bad in so far as it makes defendants who are not registered holders also liable for the money due to plaintiff, the answer is to be found in Seshagiri v. Pichu (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 452). As there pointed out, the right which the Government has to proceed against the registered pro-[250]prietor in no way alters the liability of the real owner or of his holding for the arrears of revenue. Registered holders and their property are declared liable at the option of Government, in order that Government may not be hampered in the collection of revenue by being compelled to hold complicated inquiries as to real ownership. But, nevertheless, the revenue is a debt due from the real defaulter and a charge on the holding.

The remaining question is whether the decree is correct in so far as it makes the defaulters jointly and severally liable. As the entire holding was liable for the revenue to Government, it must, I think, be held to be similarly liable to the plaintiff who has, by payment of the arrears, acquired a charge upon the land under the provisions of section 35 of the Revenue Recovery Act.

As to the liability of defendants 58 to 60 (appellants Nos. 6 to 8) no issue appears to have been asked for in the lower Court.

The result is that the 85th defendant, as also the 38½th shares purchased by him, must be held liable for the decree debt conjointly with the remaining shares and the other defendants. The lower Court's decree will be modified accordingly.

The appellants must pay the 1st respondent's (plaintiff's) costs of this appeal. They are entitled to their costs on the 38½th shares from second respondent (85th defendant) and must themselves bear the rest of their costs. As to the memorandum of objections, I find the Judge has given no reasons for disallowing interest subsequent to the date of the suit.

I am of opinion that plaintiff is entitled to interest at 12 per cent. per annum till the date of decree, and at 6 per cent. per annum from that date to date of payment on the amount decreed, including costs.

The decree will be further modified accordingly.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I concur.

[251] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 29th January and 6th March, 1894.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE DAVIES.

Perumal Udayar and another.....(Plaintiffs) Appellants

Krishnama Chettyar and another.....(Defendants)

Respondents.*

Revenue Recovery Act—Madras Act II of 1864—Liability of purchaser at a sale, who enters into possession of the purchased property, to account for mesne profits to the person in whose favour the decree is subsequently reversed.

A purchaser of property at a sale under the Revenue Recovery Act, who enters into possession thereof, is in rightful possession until the decree is set aside. He is not, therefore, a trespasser and liable to make good any loss sustained by the rightful owner by being kept out of possession; but he is bound to account for mesne profits, the calculation of which is to be based on a proper discharge of the stewardship of the property. Dakshina Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Saroda Mohun Roy Chowdhry (L. R., 20 Ind. App., 160) cited and followed.

APPEAL against the decree of P. Dorasawmy Ayyar, Subordinate Judge of Salem, in Original Suit No. 13 of 1891.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, and the plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson), Mr. Norton and Subramanya Ayyar for Appellants.

Bhashyam Ayyangar and Desikachariar for Respondents. •

Judgment.—The defendants were in possession of the mittah of Sundamangalam for the faslis 1293 to 1298 as purchasers in a sale made under the Revenue Recovery Act. It was ultimately held in a suit brought by the plaintiffs that the sale was irregular, and they were reinstated in the mittah as part-proprietors thereof. They now sue for their share of the mesne profits derived while the defendants were in possession.

The Subordinate Judge found that they were entitled to recover the same, but, on taking accounts, it was found that defendants [232] had realized no net profits, their expenses having exceeded their receipts, and plaintiffs' claim was therefore dismissed.

Plaintiffs appeal on two main grounds. The first is a point of law, that defendants were in the position of trespassers and wrong-doers, and were, therefore, liable to account to plaintiffs for such loss as they sustained by being kept out of possession, and the question was not what amount of profits the defendants had actually realized, but what they might and ought to have realized. The learned Advocate-General, in support of the plaintiffs' contention first referred to Mayne On Damages (page 417) for the authority that an "action for mesne profits is in origin an action of trespass brought after a judgment in ejectment to recover damages for the previous occupation of the land." And he then referred to several decided cases Bynath Pershad v. Badhoo Singh (10 W. R., 486), Hurruck Lall Shaha v. Sreenibash Karmottar (15 W.R., 428), Ghoogly Sahoo v. Chunder Pershad Misser (21 W.R., 246), Tiluck Chand v. Soudamini Dasi (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 566), Brojendro Coomhar Roy v. Madhub Chunder Ghose (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 343), and Shitab Dei v. Ajudhia Prasad (I. L. R., 10 All., 13), where it has been held that the possession of a party who had no right to possession was the possession of a wrong-doer, and that the party entitled to the possession was entitled to recover as mesne profits all loss sustained by him by being kept out of possession, whether or not the party in possession had himself derived profits. But we are referred, on the other hand, to a late ruling of the Privy Council where a different view of the matter is taken Dakshina Mohun Roy Chowdhry v. Saroda Mohun Roy Chowdhry (L. R., 20 Ind. App., 160). In that case it was held that the party in possession was in bona fide possession, because he was in possession under a decree of Court, and, until that decree was reversed, he was in rightful possession. In this case the defendants' possession was obtained from the Revenue authorities and it was confirmed by a decree of the Salem District Court. They were, therefore, in rightful possession until that decree was reversed, as it was by this Court on appeal, not however on the merits, but on a technical irregularity in the sale. Their Lordships then lay down this rule: "Of course he is bound to account for mesne profits, for all rents and [253] profits which he has received or which without wilful default he might have received. But if owing to circumstances beyond his control, and still more if, in consequence of some wrongful conduct on the part of his opponent, he has received less than what he has had to pay for the preservation of the estate, it would seem to be in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience, there being no specific rule to the contrary, that he should recover the difference on the final adjustment of accounts." This is a clear exposition of the law applicable to this case, and the question, therefore, is not what damages are plaintiffs entitled to, but whether the defendants have conducted themselves properly in their stewardship. That is the second main ground of the appeal. It is contended that as regards collections the defendants were negligent, and as regards expenses were extravagant. Nothing has been urged to convince us that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in his conclusion that the defendants used all due diligence to collect the rents. His reasons are stated in paragraphs 14 to 16 of his judgment, and we concur in them. The defendants were Chettis who had paid a large sum for the mittah, and it stands to reason that, for their own benefit, they would have done their best to get every penny they could out of the ryots, and if they did not get more it was due to the obstruction caused by the plaintiffs themselves, who, it is said, instigated the tenants by various means to resist the defendants and put difficulties in their way. (Vide the evidence of the second defendant as defence sixth witness and of the defence seventh witness, one of the mittahdars.) Moreover it would appear that the collections made by the plaintiffs since they have been in possession do not on an average nearly come up to those made by the defendants. The defendants admit a sum of Rs. 32,000 odd as their collections for the six years they were in occupation, and the correctness of this sum has not been seriously impugned, but it seems that during the three years the plaintiffs have regained possession only Rs. 8,000 have been collected (see second defendant's evidence), which is on an average only half the amount that was collected by the defendants per annum, and this is a favourable estimate, for plaintiffs' own twelfth witness says the plaintiffs' half share of the collections for the three years has been only Rs. 3,200, making a total collection of only Rs. 6,400 in three years as compared with the defendants' collection of Rs. 32,000 in six years. So that there is no ground whatever for holding [254] that the defendants were remiss in gathering in the rents. As regards the expenses, objection is chiefly taken to the law charges which defendants put down at Rs. 6,208-9-8. The Subordinate Judge, disallowing certain items, reduced the claim by some Rs. 1,500 to Rs. 4,725-15-10. We have no reason to consider the amount allowed to be excessive. The defendants were bound to exchange pattahs and muchilkas with the tenants before they could recover their rents, and it was owing to the contumaciousness of the tenants, instigated in some instances by the plaintiffs, that these expenses in litigation were incurred. Considering that the cases went to three Courts—the Revenue Court, the District Court and the High Court—the amount allowed as proved to have been spent was not unreasonable. Whether they were suits rightly brought or wrongly brought it is now impossible to decide, for in the second appeal to the High Court they were thrown out on the simple ground that the defendants had been held in the other suit not to be the landlords. There is nothing to show that the defendants were not justified in bringing these suits, and it is highly probable that if they had not brought them, they would not have collected as much as they did, and then the plaintiffs would have turned round and charged them, and perhaps rightly charged them, with wilful default. The charges incurred for establishments were also objected to, but they were pretty much the same as had hitherto been incurred, and were found to be reasonable and necessary. We therefore disallow the appeal on the merits also.

A plea of bar by limitation to the plaintiffs' suit was overruled by the lower Court, but was again urged in this Court. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that the decision of the point in question, namely the year of age at which first plaintiff was to be considered as having attained his majority, is governed by the case cited, Rudra Prokash Misser v. Bhola Nath Mukherjee (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 612), and that there was, therefore, no bar to his suit. The result, however, is that the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

The 12th and 22nd December, 1893.

PRESENT:

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND MR. JUSTICE
* SHEPHARD.

Orr and others.....(Defendants) Appellants
Sundra Pandia(Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Limitation—Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, s. 28—Limitation in relation to persons in undisturbed possession.

The law of limitation operates against parties who have been guilty of delay and in favour of persons in possession. Section 28 of the Limitation Act† has no application to persons who are in possession and who have had no occasion to sue for recovery of possession.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of T. Weir, District Judge of Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 16 of 1892, reversing the decree of Venkata Rengaiyar Avergal, Subordinate Judge of Madura (East), in Original Suit No. 38 of 1890.

The plaintiff in this suit sued for possession of a certain village which he alleged had been leased to him by the zamindar in 1883. The defendants, the lessees of the zamindari, alleged that the lease had been obtained by fraud. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit, but the District Judge reversed the decree and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff, on the ground that the zamindar, from whom the defendants derived their rights, had failed to obtain the cancellation of the plaintiff's lease on the ground of fraud within three years of its execution, and that the defendants were barred by the Limitation Act from contesting the suit on the ground of fraud.

Hence this appeal by the defendants.

Bhashyam Ayyangar for Appellant.

Mr. K. Brown for Respondent.

Judgment.—The District Judge has disposed of the appeal on a point of law without deciding the issues of fact which are raised. Assuming that the execution of the lease by the late zamindar [256] in the plaintiff's favour was obtained by fraud, he has held that, with reference to the fifth issue, it is not open to the defendants now to raise the plea of fraud, because a suit by them to set aside the plaintiff's lease would be barred by limitation.

The case cited by the District Judge certainly furnishes some authority for the view adopted by him Jugaldas v. Ambashankar (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 501), Hargovandas Lakhmidas v. Bajibhai Jijibhai (I. L. R., 14 Bom., 222), and Sundaram v. Sithammal (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 311). In our opinion, however, this view involving the proposition that a party in possession may be affected prejudicially by the law of limitation is unsound and cannot be maintained.

The Act XV of 1877 is an Act relating to the limitation of suits and does not in terms refer to defences. Section 28 presupposes a person who by force of limitation has already lost his remedy by suit for possession, for such a person it declares that his right to the property shall be extinguished. To persons who are in possession and have had no occasion to sue for recovery of it, the section can have no application. If it was intended that the right to property should be lost in all cases where the time for enforcing the remedy had expired, section 28 would have been unnecessary or would have been differently worded. In addition to the circumstance that defences are not generally brought within the scope of the Act [see In re Marshfield (L. R., 34 Ch. D., 721), the case of set off being an exceptional one, the principles on which the law of limitation is founded do not justify its extension to a case like the present (Edmunds v. Waugh (L. R., 1 Eq., 418))]. Generally the law of limitation operates against parties who have been guilty of delay and in favour of persons in possession. One of the main objects of the law is to quiet long-continued possession and to obviate the injustice which may ensue upon the enforcement of stale demands. Here the defendants, who for the purposes of this judgment may be identified with the zamindar, are in possession. Being in full enjoyment of the property, and not being attacked by the plaintiff, they had no occasion to seek for the judicial cancelment of the lease under which the plaintiff claims. If either party can be said to have been guilty of delay in prosecuting his remedy, it certainly was not the defendants, and it is they, rather than the plaintiff, who are likely to suffer by the lapse of time for the burden of [257] proving the fraud, and thereby displacing the plaintiff's title rests on the defendants. The construction which it is sought to put on the Limitation Act would tend to defeat the policy of the Act and to disturb rather than quiet possession [see remarks of JARDINE, J., in Hargovandas Lukhmidas v. Bajibhai Jijibhai (I. L. R., 14 Bom., 222)]. In our opinion the defence which the defendants raise is not affected by the Act of Limitation and therefore the appeal must be remanded for trial on the merits. We must point out that the acts of the zamindar after the execution of the lease to the defendants can have no material bearing on the case. The question is whether after having notice of the fraud and before executing that lease, he elected to avoid the lease to the plaintiff or not to avoid it. If he made no election, the right to rescind remained to him. Clough v. London and North-Western Railway Company (L. R., 7 Ex., 35), and The Lindsay Petroleum Company v. Hurd (L. R., 5 P. C., 221). The decree must be reversed and the appeal remanded. Costs to abide result.

† [Sec. 28:—At the determination of the period hereby limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished.]

A solicitor cannot recover the costs of litigation incurred by the next friend of a minor on his behalf from the quondam minor, who, on coming of age, repudiates the proceedings there being no relation of contract between them.

[258] The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the Appellate Court.

The Advocate-General (Honourable Mr. Spring Branson) for Appellant,
Mr. K. Brown for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an action by a solicitor to recover from the defendant costs incurred by the next friend of the defendant in litigation undertaken on his behalf. The principal suit thus prosecuted in the interests of the defendant was instituted in 1882, and was still pending in 1887, when, in the month of November, the defendant came of age. In January 1888 the defendant having resolved to abandon the suit, caused an application to be made by other solicitors for the dismissal of the suit. The learned Judge, who tried the case now under appeal, found with regard to the first issue that it was not shown that the proceedings undertaken on the defendant's behalf were necessary and proper for the protection of his interest, and it was argued before us that this finding was contrary to the weight of evidence. In the view taken by us it is not necessary to discuss this question, for assuming that the circumstances relating to the defendants' estate were such as to justify and require the proceedings taken by the next friend, we are of opinion that the present action at the suit of the solicitor against the defendant cannot be maintained. It must be observed that no question arises as to the rights of the next friend against the quondam minor plaintiff, nor as to the right of the solicitor against the next friend. In the order made on the application of the present respondent dismissing the suit of 1883, provision was made in accordance with the terms of section 452 of the Civil Procedure Code for the payment by him of the costs which might have been paid by his next friend. It is not necessary for us to say whether under any circumstances the next friend might, notwithstanding the language of that section, be entitled to any further rights against the quondam minor. On the other hand, as regards the right of the solicitor against the next friend, there can be no doubt, and he has in fact obtained a decree against him in the present suit. Not contented with that, he also asks for relief against the quondam minor. We are at a loss to understand on what principle a person who has contracted with A can have a right of action against B when it appears that, at the time of the contract, B was not competent to appoint an agent; and, moreover, [259] that immediately on attaining majority, he has repudiated the acts of A. The general rule is that "liabilities are not to be forced on a man behind his back" [per BOWEN, L. J., in Falcke v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Company (L. R., 34 Ch., D. 248)], and the present case cannot be brought within the case provided for by section 70 of the Contract Act, to which section, indeed, no reference was made in the argument. It was contended that the services rendered by the plaintiff to the minor were in the nature of necessities and that, therefore, the action would lie, but there is really no analogy between the cases, for here there was the next friend responsible to the plaintiff and from him, if necessary, funds might have been obtained. The fact that he was unwilling or unable to supply funds is no reason for giving the plaintiff a supplementary right of action against another person. The decision in Watkins v. Dhunnoo Baboo (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 140) has no bearing on the present case, for there the defendant was still a minor, and there had been no repudiation of the acts done for the protection of his estate. Seeing that there was not, and in point of law could not be, any relation of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that there was such relation between the plaintiff and another person, and considering, moreover, that the services in respect of which the act [sic] is brought were not accepted, but repudiated by the defendant on his attaining majority, we are of opinion that no obligation to pay the plaintiff in respect of those services has been established. In addition it appears that any cause of action which the plaintiff might have had is barred by limitation. As has been shown notice of the defendants' resolve to abandon the litigation was given in January 1888, and the present suit was not brought till April 1891. By that notice in our judgment there was effected a determination of the suit or business within the meaning of article 84 of the schedule to the Limitation Act. It is immaterial that the order passed on the defendants' application was not issued till a later date. For these reasons we think the suit was rightly dismissed and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Criminal Procedure Code—Act X of 1882, ss. 4, 488—‘Adultery’—Indian Penal Code—Act XLV of 1860, s. 497.

A wife petitioned for maintenance for herself and child against her husband under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The husband did not refuse to maintain his wife, but the petitioner refused to live with him as he kept a concubine :

Held, that the word ‘adultery’ in section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code must, by virtue of section 4 of the Code, be construed with reference to the definition of the term in section 497 of the Indian Penal Code. Consequently a husband’s immorality which does not amount to ‘adultery’ or involve the degradation of a married woman being brought into the society of a concubine is not sufficient ground for a wife’s refusal to live with her husband.

An offer to maintain a wife must be an offer to maintain with the consideration due to her position as a wife. Marakkal v. Kandappa (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 371) cited.

Per BEST, J.—It is very doubtful if the framers of section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure intended the word ‘adultery’ as used therein to have the limited meaning given to it in the Penal Code. The wrong done to the wife is in no way affected by the circumstance of her husband’s concubine being married or unmarried, or, in case of her being married, whether it is with or without her husband’s consent or collusion that she is living in such concubinage. In face however of section 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code, no other interpretation of the term ‘adultery’ is possible than the limited interpretation contained in the Penal Code.

CASE referred for the orders of the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code by M. Hammick, Acting District Magistrate of South Arcot.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the foregoing and from the judgment of the High Court.

Parties were not represented.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—The term ‘adultery’ in section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, must be construed with reference to its definition in section 497 of the Indian Penal Code. There is no [261] finding in the present case that the concubine is a married woman, and the Joint Magistrate seems to suppose that every illicit connection with a woman, whether she is married or not, and whether, if married, with her husband’s consent or connivance or not, is adulterous. This view cannot be accepted as the legal conception of adultery, and the ground on which the Joint Magistrate rests his decision cannot be supported without further inquiry. The complainant stated in her evidence that her husband insisted on her getting her meals from the concubine, and it was held in Marakkal v. Kandappa (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 371) that the offer to maintain must be an offer to maintain with the consideration due to her position as wife. A question may therefore arise, if the complaint is well founded whether the offer made is sufficient within the meaning of the proviso of section 488. In his explanation to the District Magistrate the Joint Magistrate states that he has never followed the ruling of the High Court in Criminal Revision Case No. 574 of 1884, because, in his opinion, it is directly opposed to the wording of the section and has always seemed to him unintelligible. I would here point out to the Joint Magistrate that it was his duty to have either followed the ruling of the High Court, or if he doubted its correctness, to have referred the matter to that Court for reconsideration. There may be cases in which the husband may not bring the concubine into the family house, or may arrange for the concubine not coming into contact with his wife and for the society of the former not being forced on the latter. I am not prepared to hold that either the husband's immorality, which does not amount to adultery or involve the degradation of a married woman being brought into the society of a concubine, is sufficient ground for the wife's refusal to live with her husband. I would set aside the order of the Joint Magistrate and direct him to re-hear the case and pass fresh orders with reference to the foregoing observations.

* Criminal Revision Case No. 499 of 1893.

Best, J.—It seems to me to be very doubtful if the framers of section 488 of the Code of Criminal Procedure intended the word 'adultery' as used therein to have the limited meaning given to it in defining the offence of adultery in the Penal Code. The offence is against the husband, as is recognized in section 199 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which prohibits the Court from [262] taking cognizance of such offence except on the complaint of the husband or of some person on his behalf. Hence the necessity for the existence of a husband and absence of consent or connivance on his part to constitute such offence. But so far as a wife seeking an order for maintenance under chapter XXXVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure is concerned, the wrong done to her is in no way affected by the circumstance of her husband's concubine*being married or unmarried, or in case of her being married, whether it is with or without her husband's consent or collusion that she is living in such concubinage.

However, any other than the limited interpretation of the word as defined in the Penal Code is impossible in the face of the concluding clause of section 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which directs that "all words and expressions used herein and defined in the Indian Penal Code and not hereinbefore defined (and the word adultery is not one of those hereinbefore defined) shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively attributed to them by that Code."

I concur, therefore, in the order proposed by my learned colleague.

NOTES.

Judgment.—We agree with the Judge that the document is not an account stated, but a promissory note or bond. The balance acknowledged to be due upon the memorandum of interest is referred to therein only as the consideration for the promise to pay it with interest within twelve months after date. It is the lex loci contractus that determines the validity of a contract made in a foreign state. The document being executed in the Pudukotta [264] territory, and no bond or promissory note being, according to the law of that state, operative for the purpose of creating any legal right unless it is registered, the suit cannot be supported as an action on the document.

The only other question which arises for decision is whether the decree can be supported by treating the suit as one brought upon the consideration for the document. It is not necessary to decide for our present purpose whether it is a bond or promissory note. In either case it is not, in the absence of registration, a source of legal right according to the law of Pudukotta. We are of opinion that the question whether a judgment may be given for respondent, upon the consideration for the document, is one of procedure governed by the lex fori. Though the account stated is mentioned in the plaint, it is mentioned as part of the transaction evidenced by the document and not as a distinct ground of claim, the date on which the cause of action arose being described as the date mentioned for payment in the document. But it is argued that a judgment may be given upon the consideration, though the plaint does not refer to it as a distinct count or as an additional ground of claim, and though no issue was taken in regard to it.

According to English practice, a common count upon the consideration and special count on the bill are inserted in the declaration; but in India we are not governed by technical rules of pleadings. It is, however, necessary that it should be either stated in the plaint as an independent ground of claim or treated as such and an issue taken at the first hearing.

As the plaintiff did neither in this case, the decree could not be supported as a decree upon the case disclosed by the plaint or as amended by the issues on which the parties proceeded to trial. This view is in accordance with the decision in Valiappa v. Mahommed Khasim (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 166). We allow the appeal, and, setting aside the decrees of the Courts below, direct that the suit be dismissed.

Under the circumstances of this case we order that each party do bear his costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, s. 544—'Any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants.'

Section 544 of the Civil Procedure Code presupposes a common ground of decision affecting property in which both those who have appealed and those who have not appealed have an interest direct or indirect. Thus a District Judge has no power under this section to reverse the decree of a lower Court, given for a plaintiff in favour of a defendant who did not appeal, and in respect to property in which the other defendants who did appeal disclaim all interest. Sriram Ghatak v. Braga Mohan Ghosal (3 B. L. R., App. 41) and Appa Rau v. Ratnam (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 249) cited and followed. Seshadri v. Krishnan (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 192) and Nagamma v. Subba (I. L. SECOND APPEAL against the decree of Manavēdan Raja, Acting District Judge of Kurnool, in Appeal Suit No. 64 of 1892, reversing the decree of V. Ranga Row in Original Suit No. 79 of 1891.

The plaintiff sued to establish his right to certain property and to recover from the defendants possession of the same. The property consisted of two plots of ground marked respectively A and C in the survey of the village. All the defendants except the sixth defendant laid claim to plot A only, whilst the sixth defendant laid claim to plots A and C. The plaintiff claimed the property on the ground that his late father had purchased it from the former owner, and the District Munsif decreed in his favour. All the defendants except the sixth thereupon appealed, and the District Judge reversed the decree of the lower Court in respect to the whole property on the ground that the alleged sale to the plaintiff's father had not been established.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Venkatasubbayyar for Appellant.

Ramachandra Rau Sahab, Sriramulu Sastriar and Venkatarama Sarma for Respondents.

[266] Judgment.—The Judge's finding is that there was no completed sale. He gives his reasons for so finding, and it is not open to us in second appeal to consider that question of fact. This appeal, so far as the plot A is concerned, must therefore fail.

It is contended further with regard to the plot C, in which the other respondents disclaim all interest, that sixth defendant not having appealed from the District Munsif's decree, the District Judge could not disturb that decree so far as it affected this plot C. On the other hand the fifth respondent's vakil refers to the cases in Seshadri v. Krishnan (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 192) and Nagamma v. Subba (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 197) and urges that when the ground of decision is common, the Court is entitled under section 544 of the Code of Civil Procedure to alter a decree in favour of a party who has not appealed, even in respect of property in which those who have appealed disclaim all interest. We are not prepared to accept this contention. Section 544 appears to us to presuppose a common ground of decision affecting property in which both those who have appealed and those who have not appealed have an interest either direct or indirect. This was the ground on which the decisions proceed in the two cases cited. The present case is on all fours with that in Appa Rau v. Ratnam (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 249). The principle is that laid down by JACKSON, J., in Sriram Ghatak v. Braga Mohan Ghosal (3 B. L. R., App., 41) that the section applies only to decrees incapable of division and relates to property in which all the plaintiffs or all the defendants are interested.

We therefore set aside the lower Appellate Court's decree so far as the land C is concerned and affirm it with regard to the land A.

Appellant must pay the costs in this Court of the respondents other than the sixth defendant, who and appellant will bear their own costs.

Narayana Rau for Appellant.

Madhava Rau for Respondent.

Judgment.—The Judge's finding that the full amount was not tendered cannot be accepted. It is clear from the plaintiff's petition that the amount of Rs. 674-3-9 was tendered in full discharge of what was due under the mortgage. Defendant agreed to accept the amount and to pass a receipt. He did not then say that the tender was deficient by annas 4-4, as is now pleaded. Reading the two petitions together, the reasonable inference is that defendant agreed to accept the tender in full satisfaction as provided in section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. That such was the case is clear from the receipt registered by him on the [268] day that the present suit was brought, in which he has accepted this very amount in full discharge of the mortgage.

It is next argued that the tender was conditional. No doubt section 83 is silent as to a receipt. But defendant not only waived the objection to this demand, but, acceding to it, produced a draft receipt for approval. Nor do we think that the request for return of the title-deeds was a condition vitiating the tender, as the section requires that the title-deeds should be deposited before the mortgagee takes out the money.

As to the case in Nanu v. Manchu (I.L.R., 14 Mad., 49), the mortgagor in that case appears to have insisted on the return of documents other than those which the mortgagee was bound to deposit under section 83.

We therefore set aside the decree of the Lower Appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif.

Respondent must pay appellant's costs in this Court and in the Lower Appellate Court.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—Appellant is a Hindu widow and defendants 1 to 16 are her husband's brothers and nephews. In Original Suit No. 137 of 1870 the former obtained a personal decree against Vadiraja Charia, her father-in-law, for maintenance at the rate of Rs. 30 per annum. To that suit her husband's five brothers were also made parties, but there was no personal decree against them. Nor did appellant then ask that her maintenance be made a charge on ancestral or family property. Vadiraja Charia died since and defendants 1 to 16 repudiated their liability to pay maintenance under the decree passed against him. On the death of Vadiraja Charia, the family property devolved on respondents, and at the date of the suit there were arrears of maintenance under the former decree to the extent of Rs. 90. The first 16 defendants sold items of property 3 and 4 to the 17th defendant, and appellant's case is that the alienation can only be upheld subject to her claim for maintenance. The plaint prayed for a decree establishing her right to receive maintenance for her life at the rate of Rs. 30 per annum as per decree in Original Suit No. 137 of 1870, and Rs. 90 for arrears of maintenance on the responsibility and by the sale of the properties 1 to 4 mentioned in schedule A attached to the plaint, and such other relief as the Court might deem fit to grant in the circumstances of this case. The District Judge considered that [270] appellant was bound to have asked in the former suit that her maintenance be made a charge on the family property, and held that the present suit was barred by section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The District Judge further held that appellant's claim against the 17th defendant must fail, and in support of his opinion he relied upon the decisions in Saminatha v. Rangathammal (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 285) and Rangamma v. Voballayya (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 127). I do not think that the decision of the Judge can be supported except so far as it relates to the 17th defendant.

Appellant's maintenance has not been declared a charge on the property alienated, and the District Judge was right in upholding the alienation against her claim. I am also of opinion that neither of the cases relied on by the Judge is in point. In Saminatha v. Rangathammal (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 285), both suits were brought against the same person, and it was held that no second suit should be brought to recover arrears of maintenance which might have been recovered in execution of the decree passed in the prior suit. The point decided in Rangamma v. Vobalayya (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 127) was that a personal decree for maintenance and a declaration that it is a charge on family property are two remedies referable to the same cause of action, viz., the right to receive maintenance, and that two separate suits cannot be brought in respect of the two remedies against the same defendant.

In the present case appellant rests her claim to arrears on the ground that they constitute a personal debt of Vadiraja Charia and his sons and grandsons. Defendants 1 to 16 are bound to discharge it under Hindu law from the family property which has devolved on them by right of survivorship. Their liability to pay their father's and grandfather's debt arose only on the death of Vadiraja Charia.

As regards plaintiff's claim to future maintenance, it is tenable against defendants 1 to 16, the ancestral property surviving to them and passing into their management only on the death of Vadiraja Charia. The right to maintenance being enforceable against them, the right to have it made a charge on family property is also enforceable along with it.

Though several grounds of claim are united in this suit, each ground of claim is good as against all respondents. It is urged on respondents' behalf that the suit is framed as if it was a suit [271] to execute the decree already passed in Original Suit No. 137 of 1870; but the clause in the plaint which contains the prayer is open to the construction that it prays for relief similar to those in the former decree. I would, therefore, set aside the decree of the Judge and remand the case for disposal on the merits. The costs incurred in this Court will abide and follow the result and be provided for in the revised decree.

Mortgage—Right of a jenmi, who is a judgment-creditor, to sell the kanom right before the expiry of twelve years.

A jenmi, who has obtained a decree for arrears of rent, may sell the kanom before the expiry of twelve years : such a sale does not put an end to the kanom, but only transfers the kanomdar's interest to the purchaser at the execution sale.

*Second Appeal No. 417 of 1893.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of A. Venkataramana Pai, Subordinate Judge of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 374 of 1892, modifying the decree of J. F. Pereira, District Munsif of Angadipuram, in Original Suit No. 45 of 1892.

This was a suit to recover the sum of Rs. 63-14-2, being principal and interest on account of arrears of porapad for the years 1065, 1066 and a portion of 1067, alleged to be due by the defendants on a kanom kychit executed by the first defendant to plaintiff's elder brother, the late Neelakandan Musad, on the 7th Edavom 1048 (19th May 1883).

The plaintiff sued to recover the aforesaid arrears from first defendant personally, from the properties of first to third defendants' tarwad, and by the sale of the kanom and value of improvements on the properties demised.

Defendants 1 to 3 and 5 were ex parte.

The fourth defendant answered that the demise sued upon was [272] true; that the kychit simply provides for the payment of arrears of porapad with interest; that the value of kuyikoor improvements being an unascertained amount could not be sold for arrears of porapad; that first to third defendants and others mortgaged the plaint properties on a panayom right of 324 rupees and 528 paras of paddy to him (fourth defendant) on the 6th April 1884, and on a further panayom rights of 174 paras of paddy on the 18th April 1887; that these rights were admitted by the plaintiff in the matter of the execution of decree in Original Suit No. 70 of 1889; that, therefore, the kanom and the value of improvements were liable in the first instance for the above debts; that plaintiff could not have the kanom right sold before the expiry of twelve years allowed by the demise.

The District Munsif decreed in favour of the plaintiff, but dismissed the suit against the fourth defendant. The Subordinate Judge set aside the decree dismissing the suit as against the fourth defendant, and decreed that, in default of the defendants paying the amount awarded by the lower Courts, the plaintiff should recover the same by the sale of the first to third defendants' interest as mortgagees under the plaintiff, free of the encumbrance created by the first defendant in favour of the fourth defendant, as well as from the first defendant personally, and from first to third defendants' tarwad properties.

The fourth defendant preferred this appeal.

Sankara Menon for Appellant.

Kannan Nambiar for Respondent.

Judgment.—It is contended that the kanom right is not liable to be sold in satisfaction of the decree before the expiry of twelve years from the date of the kanom to first defendant. No doubt, according to the custom of the country, a kanom is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, redeemable only after the expiry of the period of twelve years. But this custom cannot supersede the general rule of processual law that a judgment-creditor is entitled to attach and sell the judgment-debtor's property. It is not denied that an ordinary judgment-creditor, who is not the jenmi, would be entitled to bring the kanom right to sale even before the expiry of twelve years. We see no reason why a jenmi, who is a judgment-creditor, should be in a different position. The right to set off arrears of rent against the kanom debt and value of improvements when the kanom becomes redeemable is [273] an additional security for the benefit of the jenmi, but it does not follow that he cannot sell the kanom at an earlier date if he has obtained a decree for arrears of rent. Such sale will not ordinarily put an end to the kanom, but only transfer the kanomdar's interest, such as it is, to the purchaser at the execution sale. If the jenmi himself becomes the purchaser, he will be in no better position, except in that he will have a priority of claim as against fourth defendant's panayams for arrears of rent, one of the customary incidents of the kanom.

The decree of the Lower Appellate Court must be modified by striking out the words "free of the encumbrance created by first defendant in favour of fourth defendant." In other respects the decree is affirmed.

The cases referred to at the hearing, viz., Achuta v. Kali (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 547) and Kanna Pesharodi v. Kombi Achen (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 381) and Unnian v. Rama (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 415) are not in point, inasmuch as the question here did not arise in those cases.

Under the circumstances of this case we direct each party to bear his own costs of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, s. 13 — ‘Court of competent jurisdiction.’

The term ‘competent jurisdiction’ in section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code has regard to the pecuniary limit as well as to the subject-matter. There is no authority for the general proposition that the competency of one Court as compared with another is affected by the circumstance that in the one case an appeal lies in the first instance to the District Court and in the other directly to the High Court. Misir Raghobardial v. Sheo Buksh Singh (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 439) cited and followed. Vithilinga Padayachi v. Vithilinga Mudali (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 111) qualified.

[274] APPEAL against the decree of E. K. Krishnan, Subordinate Judge of Malabar, in Original Suit No. 26 of 1891.

The plaintiff in this suit sued to recover certain land and mesne profits, resting his title thereto on a karar dated 14th July, 1864. In a former suit in the same Court between the plaintiff and the first defendant it had been decided that the karar in question was a forgery, and the Subordinate Judge held that the present suit was barred by section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Anandacharlu for Appellant.

Mr. Gover for Respondents.

* Appeal No. 66 of 1893.

Judgment.—We fully agree with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief except with reference to the allegations made in the plaint. In the plaint the plaintiff alleges as his title to the land, in respect of which he sues, a karar executed on the 14th of July 1864. If the plaintiff fails, or is unable to prove the execution of this karar by his lessor, it is clear that the suit must be dismissed. It is pleaded by the defendants that the question of the genuineness of this karar has already been decided in a suit between plaintiff and the first defendant, and that therefore it is not now open to the plaintiff to rely on that title. The former suit was brought in the same Court and the issue tried with regard to this karar was identically the same as that raised in the present suit. It is objected, however, on behalf of the appellant that the Court which heard the former suit was not competent to try the present suit, because in the former suit the value of the subject-matter was such that an appeal lay not to this Court, but to the District Court. In support of this objection, we are referred to certain decisions in which it has been held that the judgment in a suit cognizable as a Small Cause Court suit is not binding in a regular suit between the same parties subsequently brought with regard to the same matter. In the present case, where it was the very same Court that heard the two suits, we do not think that those decisions are applicable. In Vithilinga Padayachi v. Vithilinga Mudali (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 111) reference is made to the language of the Judicial Committee in the case in Misir Raghobardial v. Sheo Buksh Singh (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 439). It appears to have been [278] thought that, in considering the question of the competency of a Court within the meaning of section 13 of the Code, the Judicial Committee had regard to the question as to the tribunal to which an appeal would lie from such Court. We do not think that the language of the Judicial Committee really bears this meaning. In their judgment reference is made to the anomaly which would arise if the decree of the District Munsif were held to be binding on a superior Court, and it is observed that this anomaly would not be removed by the fact that from both the Courts there would be an appeal, because from the judgment of the Munsif the appeal would lie to the District Court, and a second appeal only on questions of law would lie to the High Court. In the next sentence of the judgment their Lordships explain the meaning of the expression 'concurrent or competent jurisdiction.' The term has regard to the pecuniary limit as well as the subject-matter, and with respect to both those conditions it is plain that in the present case the Court which heard the former suit was equally competent to hear the present suit. There is no authority for the general proposition that the competency of one Court as compared with another is affected by the circumstance that in the one case an appeal lies in the first instance to the District Court and in the other directly to the High Court. In our opinion the suit was rightly dismissed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Contract—Undue influence—Acquiescence by conduct—Lease for one year at a rental of more than Rs. 100—Registration—Registration Act—Act III of 1877, s. 17—Transfer of Property Act—Act IV of 1882, ss. 4 and 107.

Where the owner of certain land exchanges it for certain other land, but takes a lease for one year of the former lands and pays the rent thereof, and receives and [276] retains the rents of the land he has acquired by the exchange, he shows no complete acquiescence in the transaction that he cannot afterwards have it set aside on the ground of undue influence.

The fact that such a lease recites the fact of the exchange of the lands does not evidence the exchange, and as such create a title in land. Nor does the fact that the rent reserved under the lease is more than Rs. 200 create an interest in land of Rs. 100 and more in value so as to necessitate registration of the lease under s. 17 of the Registration Act. Such a lease falls under s. 107† of the Transfer of Property Act, the provisions of which section are, by s. 4 of the Act, supplemental to the Registration Act.

APPEAL against the decree of H. R. Farmer, District Judge, of Vizagapatam in Original Suit No. 33 of 1891.

The District Judge decreed in favour of the plaintiff and the defendant preferred this appeal.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Ramachandra Rau Saheb for Appellant.

Mr. Wedderburn and Rangachariar for Respondent.

Judgment.—The defendant owned some land called Burripollem Agraharam, which, in 1875, he exchanged for the plaintiff land situated in the village of Thandrangi. In 1888 a re-exchange of these same lands was made between the defendant and the plaintiff, but the defendant then took upon lease for one year the Thandrangi lands, the ownership of which he had parted with in the re-exchange, and executed a cowl to the plaintiff, agreeing to give the land up if so required at the end of his year's lease, which expired on the 31st March 1889. Defendant having failed either to take a fresh lease of the land or to vacate it, this suit was brought for the recovery of its possession, together with the mesne profits for the two years for which the defendant had held over. The lower Court decreed for the plaintiff as prayed.

* Appeal No. 71 of 1893.

† [Sec. 107 :—A lease of immoveable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, can be made only by a registered instrument.

All other leases of immoveable property may be made either by an instrument or by oral agreement.]

Defendant appeals on several grounds, his chief contention being that he was not willing to make the re-exchange, and that the cowle he executed, admitting his tenancy of the plaint land for one year only, was obtained from him by the undue influence of the plaintiff and his servants and he is, therefore, not bound by it. He further contends that it is not admissible in evidence, not being registered. The lease being set at nought on these grounds, he contends that he is entitled to retain possession of the plaint land, because he had been in adverse possession of it for [277] more than twelve years in 1888 even should the exchange of 1875 be found not to have been operative.

There are two grounds on which it is urged that the cowle is inadmissible for want of registration. The first is that the document must be treated as evidencing the re-exchange of the lands, and as such it creates a title in land of Rs. 100 in value. But we cannot accept this view of the document, which is nothing more than it purports to be, namely, a lease for one year. The reference to the exchange is merely a recital therein as to how the plaintiff obtained his title as landlord from the defendant. The actual exchange of the lands is not effected by this document. The second objection is that, although the lease is only for a year, yet as it creates an interest in land of Rs. 100 and more in value, the amount of the rent being Rs. 206-4-0, it requires to be registered under section 17 of the Registration Act. But section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act disposes of this objection. After laying down that leases of immoveable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year or reserving a yearly rent can be made only by a registered instrument it provides that "all other leases of immoveable property may be made either by an instrument or by oral agreement." Section 4 of that Act declares that this section 107 shall be read as supplemental to the Registration Act. It follows that the lease in this case did not require to be registered.

As to the allegation of 'undue influence' which the defendant urges as voiding his execution of the cowle, he certainly has adduced evidence showing that pressure was brought to bear upon him. It is highly probable too that it was not with his full and free consent that he gave way to the wishes of the plaintiff, a powerful landholder, in whose employ he also was at the time. A contract made under such pressure is, however, not void, but only voidable. Had the defendant done nothing beyond executing the lease deed, we should probably have found him entitled to relief on this score. But instead of attempting to repudiate it by not acting up to it or by other means, we find the defendant not only paid the rent due under it for the whole year, but he also received and kept the rents of the Burripollem land. All this indicates so complete an acquiescence in the arrangements that had been made subsequent thereto, that we are unable to declare that the defendant is not now bound by them for want of [278] his consent. A great deal of argument was expended both in this and in the lower Court as to whether the defendant was or was not estopped under section 116 of the Evidence Act from denying the plaintiff's title. It was contended on the strength of the decision in Lall Mahomed v. Kallanus (I.L.R., 11 Cal., 519), that that section applied only to cases in which the tenants had been put into possession of the tenancy by the person to whom they have attorned and not to a case such as this, in which the tenant was previously in possession. We are, however, not called upon to decide the question, which is one not altogether free from difficulty, for we find that as a fact the defendant became the tenant of the plaintiff under the document. So that even if the defendant were allowed to dispute the plaintiff's title, it would be found against him as a matter of fact that the plaintiff was his landlord.

Another objection taken to the suit that it was not brought in the name of the Maharajah of Vizianagram, but of his agent, is frivolous, for we find the plaint is actually signed by the Maharajah. The appeal accordingly fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Police (Madras) Act XXIV of 1859, ss. 10 and 44—Departmental punishment and prosecution under the Act.

In the absence of any rules framed by Government under section 10 of the Madras Police Act, a departmental punishment inflicted under that section is no bar to a prosecution under section 44 of that Act.

CASE referred for the orders of the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code by K. C. Manavedan Raja, Acting District Magistrate of Anantapur.

[279] The case stated was as follows :—

“The accused, a police constable attached to the Guntakul junction station, was on sentry duty on the night of the 9th July 1893 from 12 to 3 a.m. guarding the road goods consisting of 88 articles received that night into the station at about 9 p.m. At the end of the period of his watch it was his duty to awake his successor to get himself relieved and to hand over charge of the articles to the relieving officer; but, instead of doing this, he fell asleep and failed, therefore, to discharge the above duties. Next morning, on examination of the articles by the road goods clerk, it was found that a portion of a bag of jaggery had been extracted. This was alleged to be due to the wilful neglect of the sentinel. The Taluk Magistrate who tried the case acquitted the accused under section 245, Criminal Procedure Code, on the sole ground that the man had already been punished departmentally by the Superintendent of Police by receiving a black mark.

“Whether he ought to receive double punishment was not the question for the Magistrate to decide. Having received one punishment, it may not seem to be necessary that he should be charged in a Magistrate's Court. But the charge having been brought, the Sub-Magistrate should have taken evidence and disposed of it on its merits.

“It has been further held by the High Court in its Proceedings No. 1074 of 13th June 1872 that a conviction of a police constable under section 44, Act

Mr. Wedderburn for the Crown.

Best, J.—No rules sanctioned by Government under section 10 of Act XXIV 1859 have been brought to our notice, and in the absence of such rules the accused is liable to be prosecuted under section 44. The mere fact of a departmental punishment having been awarded is not sufficient to exonerate from liability under section 44, though the circumstance may be taken into consideration in passing sentence. I would set aside the order of acquittal and direct the Magistrate to dispose of the case on its merits.

[280] Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I am also of the same opinion. In the absence of any rules framed by Government, the departmental punishment inflicted on the accused under section 10 of Act XXIV of 1859 does not bar his prosecution under section 44 of the same Act, unless the Magistrate thinks that the breach of duty is not grave but trivial. It is a grave violation of duty on the part of a police officer to go to sleep whilst on guard, and I would follow the principle laid down by this Court in its proceedings, dated the 3rd October 1878, No. 1601. Weir, p. 569. I would also set aside the order of acquittal and order a re-trial with reference to the foregoing observations.

Stamp Act—Act I of 1879, sch. I, art. 4—'Agreement to lease.'

An agreement by a zamindar to execute a formal deed of lease of his zamindari which is under attachment, after obtaining a certificate from the the Court under s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code, is an 'agreement to lease' under art. 4† sch. I of the Stamp Act.

CASE referred for the decision of the High Court under section 46 of Act I of 1879 by the Board of Revenue, Madras. The case stated was as follows :—

"On the 11th January 1886, the Zamindar of Sivaganga entered into an agreement (marked A) with the Rajah of Nilambur and another to lease the zamindari to the latter in consideration of his debts, to the extent of 16 lakhs of rupees, being discharged by them. At the time of the agreement the zamindari was under attachment and the zamindar undertook to execute a formal deed of lease after obtaining a certificate from the Court under section 305 of the Civil Procedure Code. The agreement in question was engrossed on an eight-anna stamp paper [281] apparently under article 5^(c) of schedule I. The question at issue is whether the stamp was sufficient, and if not, under what article of schedule I the instrument ought to have been stamped?

"The main grounds on which it is contended that the agreement was properly stamped are that as the zamindari was under attachment, the document was not and could never have been intended to operate as a lease, and that the subsequent conduct of the parties resulting eventually in the execution of a formal and duly stamped deed of lease makes it clear that the agreement of the 11th January 1886 was intended as a mere agreement and nothing else.

"The Board, while conceding that the agreement was not intended to operate as a lease, is unable to accept the conclusion that it is, therefore, not liable to duty under article 4, schedule I of the Stamp Act. In that article it is clearly stated that an agreement to lease is chargeable with the same duty as a lease, and there is no saving clause to indicate that the intention (which in the present case may be admitted) subsequently to execute a regular lease makes any difference. The charge of the full duty both on an agreement to lease and on a lease executed in pursuance thereof is guarded against by the proviso to article 39. The Board considers that the law may be read as meaning that an agreement to lease is chargeable as a lease, whether an actual lease is subsequently executed or not, and notwithstanding any bonâ fide intention on the part of the executants of the former subsequently to execute the latter; otherwise the proviso to article 39 would be superfluous."

Govinda Menon for Respondents in No. 779.

Sankaran Nayar for Appellant in No. 943.

Bhashyam Ayyangar for Respondents in No. 943.

Best, J.—These two appeals are against the same decree, the appellant in No. 779 being the second defendant, and appellant in No. 943 the first defendant.

[283] The suit was brought by plaintiff for possession of two items of land alleged to be the jenm property of plaintiff's house and demised by plaintiff's ancestor on kanom for Rs. 412-9-2 to a former karnavan of defendants 2 to 15 in Kollam 1040 (1864-65). Plaintiff's case is that on the land being sold (in 1874) in execution of decree in Original Suit No. 232 of 1868, obtained against plaintiff's father, it was purchased by first defendant's late karnavan Raman Nambiar benami for plaintiff's mana (house), the said Raman Nambiar having been appointed by plaintiff's mother manager of plaintiff's mana, plaintiff being an infant aged two years in 1048 (1872-73) when his father died; that

* Special Appeals Nos. 779 and 943 of 1892.

Raman Nambiar continued as such manager till 1054 (1878-79), when first defendant was appointed as his successor and is still the kariastan; that in 1064 (1888-89) when the kanom was renewed to second defendant at the advice of the first defendant, the plaint items were fraudulently excluded. Hence this suit.

The first defendant denied that either his karnavan or himself ever managed on behalf of plaintiff's mana, and pleaded that the purchase in 1874 was made by his karnavan with his own money and on account of his own tarwad, and not benami for plaintiff; that the suit was opposed to sections 30 and 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also bad for misjoinder of causes of action; further, that it was time-barred, and that plaintiff attained his majority more than three years before the institution of the suit.

Defendants 2 to 5 supported first defendant, and the other defendants allowed the suit to proceed ex parte as far as they were concerned.

The two lower Courts have concurred in finding that at the date of the purchase of the plaint property, first defendant's karnavan was managing on behalf of plaintiff's mana; that he did in fact purchase the property for the plaintiff's illom, though the money paid was first defendant's karnavan's own; that there was no adverse possession till January 1889 when plaintiff granted the renewal kanom and first defendant executed the kanom deed XXIII shortly after for the plaint lands; also, that the suit is brought within three years of plaintiff's attainment of majority, and that the cause of action did not arise till January 1889. It has further been found that the suit is not bad either for misjoinder of causes of action or under section 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[284] The principal contention before this Court is that the suit is bad as being opposed to section 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which declares that "no suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser (at a Court sale) on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of any other person, or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims."

The District Munsif held the above section to be no bar to the suit, because "the auction was held and the sale certificate granted before the new Act (X of 1877) came into force and the provisions of section 317 apply to a certified purchaser under the Act." But, as well observed by MAHMOOD, J., in Aldwell v. Ilahi Bakhsh (I. L. R., 5 All., 478) section 317 of the present Civil Procedure Code has not altered in principle the rule of law contained in section 260* of the old Code (VIII of 1859). The Subordinate Judge's reason for holding this suit not to fall within the prohibition contained in section 317 is because it was held in Sohun Lall v. Lala Gya Pershad (6 N.-W. P., 265), that section 260 of Act VIII of 1859 did not preclude a suit by a decree-holder against the certified purchaser for the purpose of establishing his right to bring the property to sale in execution of the property of the judgment-debtor, and "if so," says the Subordinate Judge, "I do not see why the judgment-debtor himself cannot bring a suit for a declaration that the property was purchased by his agent benami for himself." I imagine, however, that it is this latter case that the Legislature had expressly in view in enacting section 317. As observed by the Chief Justice and HANDLEY, J., in Rama Kurup v. Sridevi (I. L. R., 16

* [Sec. 260 :—The certificate shall state the name of the person who at the time of sale is declared to be the actual purchaser, and any suit brought

Certificate to state the name of actual purchaser. against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of another person not the certified purchaser, though by agreement the name of the certified purchaser was used, shall be dismissed with costs.]

Mad., 290) the object of the section is to put a stop to benami purchases at execution sales, and this object can only be carried out by enforcing it in all cases without regard to consequences." As further observed in the same judgment, "It is not a sufficient reason for declining to carry out the express terms of the section; that to do so would be to allow a fraud to be perpetrated. The person in whose name a purchase has been made for the benefit and with the money of another, of course, commits a fraud in claiming the property as his own. Nevertheless, the law says that a suit shall not be maintained against him on the ground that the purchase was benami and thus provides that his fraud [286] shall prevail." As was also remarked in Ramakrishnappa v. Adinarayana (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 511) "the effect of Section 317 can only be taken to be to enable certified purchasers and those claiming under them to avoid any arrangement made with them in regard to the purchase in the nature of a trust."

The present, however, is not a case of benamidar pure and simple. It is found that Raman Nambiar was, at the time of the purchase, manager on behalf of plaintiff, who was an infant, and that other would-be purchasers of the property abstained from bidding, because they were given to understand that the purchase by Raman Nambiar was being made by him as such manager and on behalf of the minor. Consequently, property worth Rs. 2,000 was allowed to be knocked down for Rs. 230. Moreover, Raman Nambiar never set up any claim to the property as his own. Such being the case, I do not think the first defendant can be allowed to succeed in his attempt to secure the property for himself under colour of section 317 of the Civil Procedure Code.

But first defendant is entitled to interest on the Rs. 230 decreed to him from 25th July 1874, the date of sale. The lower Courts' decrees will, therefore, be modified by directing plaintiff to pay to first defendant interest at 6 per cent. per annum from 25th July 1874 to date of payment on the Rs. 230 decreed to first defendant. Plaintiff and first defendant will pay each other costs of the appeal proportionate to the amount allowed and disallowed.

Second defendant's Appeal No. 779 is dismissed with costs.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I come to the same conclusion. The question for determination in these second appeals is whether upon the facts found the decision of the Courts below is correct. The substantial parties to this suit are the son of the execution-debtor in Original Suit No. 232 of 1868 and the representative of the certified purchaser at the Court sale held in execution of the decree passed therein. It is provided by section 317 of the Civil Procedure Code that no suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of any other person, or of some one through whom such other person claims. Although Act VIII of 1859 was in force when the sale took place in the present case, section 317 has not, [286] as observed in Aldwell v. Ilahi Bakhsh (I. L. R., 5 All., 478) altered in principle the rule of law contained in section 260 of Act VIII of 1859. That rule is, not that a benami purchase is void altogether, but that it shall not be available as a ground of action against a certified purchaser. The Privy Council held in Lokhee Narain Roy Chowdhry v. Kalypuddo Bandopadhyaya and Shamapuddo Bandopadhyaya (L. R., 2 I. A., 154) that when the certified purchaser is the plaintiff, the real owner, if in possession, and if he honestly obtained that possession, may rely on the benami purchase as a ground of defence. It was also pointed out by this Court in Ramakrishnappa v. Adinarayana (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 511) that a benami purchase is not invalid even as a ground of claim as against defendants who are neither certified purchasers nor claim under them. Another limitation of the rule is that indicated by the second paragraph of section 317, viz., that the protection vouchsafed to a certified purchaser does not extend to cases of fraud. The suit from which these second appeals arise was brought against the anandravan of the certified purchaser, and the ground on which the Courts below rest their decision is that the plaintiff is the beneficial owner, and that the certified purchaser under whom the first defendant claims is benami purchaser or his trustee. This ground of decision is inconsistent with the effect of section 317 which is described in Ramakrishnappa v. Adinarayana (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 511) as enabling the person claiming under the certified purchaser to avoid any arrangement made regarding the benami purchase. If the facts found disclosed a benami purchase and nothing more, the appeals must prevail. But it is also found that Raman Nambiar was, at the time of the Court sale, managing the affairs of respondent's illom as its agent, and that he bought the land as such, though he advanced the purchase money on the understanding that he was to be repaid. It is also found, as a fact, that the market value of the land in dispute was Rs. 2,000, whilst it was bought at the Court sale for Rs. 230. The District Munsif observes that there is strong evidence to show that numerous persons who went to bid at the Court sale were dissuaded from doing so by Raman Nambiar, who represented to them that he was buying the land for the use of respondent's illom. It is also found that Raman Nambiar continued to be the [287] agent of the illom till his death, and that after him, the first defendant was agent until the date of the controversy which resulted in this litigation. Until 1889, the kanom originally granted by the illom was outstanding, and it does not appear that Raman Nambiar ever asserted his title to the land in dispute, or that the first defendant asserted the right of his tarwad to it prior to 1889. Under these circumstances, I consider that the decision of the Courts below can be supported on the ground that Raman Nambiar bought the land as agent of plaintiff's illom subject to a charge in his favour for the amount advanced by him, and that until 1889 the land was treated as the property of the illom; otherwise an agent would be enabled to make a profit out of his principal's property, which he intended to deal with as agent, and continued to do so till 1889, and thereby to turn the understanding on which his name was inserted in the certificate and the land was since held into a means of perpetrating fraud on his principal. I also think that interest should be awarded on Rs. 230 in the decree proposed.

I concur with my learned colleague on the other questions raised on second appeal and in the decree proposed by him.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 1st, 2nd, and 3rd November and 12th December, 1893.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Narasimha Razu.....(Plaintiff No. 1) Appellant *versus*Veerabhadra Razu and others.....(Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and Plaintiff No. 2) Respondents.Hindu law—Inheritance—Illatom adoption—Sapratibandha property.*

There is no evidence that the custom of illatom adoption exists among the Kondarazu caste of the Vizagapatam District. Sapratibandha (liable to obstruction) property vests in the heirs in existence at the time the inheritance opens, and is not subject to variation by the subsequent birth of any co-heir.

APPEAL against the decree of H. R. Farmer, District Judge of Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 3 of 1890.

[288] The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report in the following judgment of the District Judge :—

“The facts of the case as set forth in the plaint are as follows :—

“The parties to the suit are related as shown in the pedigree given below :
V. Sitarama Raz, zamindar.——Subhadrayamma, wife of zamindar.

“Sri Rajah Vyricherla Sitaramarazu Garu possessed the zamindari estate of Kurupain and some moveable property and died in 1830. At the time of his death there were living his widow Sitayamma, [Subhadrayamma?] his son Sanyasi Razu, and two daughters Sitayamma and Gangayamma. This Sanyasi Razu lived only for fifteen days after the death of his father. The whole of the Kurupam zamindari, therefore, vested in his mother, who died in 1841, being in possession of the estate until the date of her death. In 1835, Subhadrayamma Garu married her daughter Sitayamma Garu to one Silavamsam Sanyasi Razu Garu, an inhabitant of Pachipenta. She constituted him her illatom son-in-law, and as such his sons would be heirs to the family property.

“At the time of the death of Subhadrayamma Garu, the first defendant had been born to Sitayamma Garu, subsequently Gajapati Raz, father of first plaintiff, the second plaintiff, and one Gopal Razu were born. This Gopal Razu died without issue. As the first defendant was, at the time of the death of Subhadrayama Garu (1841) a minor, the estate was taken under the Court of Wards, and was managed by them until 1856, when the estate was handed over to the first defendant, he having then attained majority, and as he was the senior member of the family.

" Since 1856, first defendant, as the head of the family, has managed the estate. Plaintiffs were living jointly with the defendants. About seven or eight months ago first defendant [289] purchased the Chemudu zamindari and got the sale-deed executed in the name of his son, the second defendant. This property having been purchased with joint funds, all the members of the family are entitled to a share in it. Accordingly first plaintiff demanded a share in this as well as in the other properties, but the first defendant refused to give any share. The second plaintiff brought a pauper suit in respect of the share due to him in Original Suit No. 19 of 1879 on the file of this Court; but his suit failed, as second plaintiff was found not to be a pauper. Hence the suit for partition of the properties mentioned in the schedules annexed to the plaint.

" First defendant's answer is :—The zamindari of Kurupam is an impartible zamindari, governed by the rule of primogeniture. The late Subhadrayama took the first defendant in adoption in 1839, with the permission of her late husband, and plaintiffs are not entitled to any share.

" As at the time of the death of Subhadrayama, there were no sapindas or samanodakas belonging to the legitimate branch of the Vyricherla family; first defendant as the only sister's son of the last full owner then in existence had the exclusive right to inherit the zamindari, irrespective of his right as the adopted son.

" Subhadrayama never married her daughter to Sanyasi Razu Garu with the object that he should be her illatom son-in-law, and that his issue should inherit the zamindari. Even if she had such an intention, it cannot have any effect, being opposed to custom and Hindu law.

" Plaintiffs and first defendant never constituted an undivided family. The purchase referred to in paragraph 10 of the plaint was from second defendant's own funds. Even if that is not proved, plaintiffs cannot claim anything in this, though they may be found entitled to the other estate, inasmuch as the purchase was made from the savings of the zamindari, and so formed the exclusive property of the first defendant. The suit is barred by limitation. This Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit in respect of Gumma Mutta and Konda Mutta. The schedules are incorrect. The plaint is not properly stamped. The suit so far as second plaintiff is concerned is res judicata. The suit is barred by limitation. The second defendant contended that there is no cause of action against him, and the third defendant disclaimed [290] all interest, and stated that she merely acted as guardian of the second defendant, her son.

" The following issues were framed :—

" (1) Is the suit barred by limitation ?

" (2) Is the claim of second plaintiff res judicata ?

" (3) Was first defendant adopted by Subhadrayama Garu as alleged in paragraph 3 of first defendant's written statement, and, if so, is such adoption invalid for the reasons stated by the plaintiff ?

" (4) In case the factum of adoption is proved, are plaintiffs entitled to question the validity of this adoption, or are they precluded from doing so, either by estoppel, by conduct or by lapse of time ?

- " (5) In the event of its being found that the first defendant was not duly adopted, whether the right under which first defendant succeeded to the Kurupam zamindari, which vested in first defendant in 1841 was partially divested by the subsequent birth of brothers : in other words, did the brothers become, on their birth, coparceners with him (first defendant) ?
- " (6) Is there a valid custom among the Kondarazu caste of the Vizagapatam district to take an illatom son-in-law as alleged by plaintiff ?
- " (7) Did Subhadrayama take Silavamsam Sanyasi Razu in 1835 as an illatom son-in-law in accordance with such custom ?
- " (8) Is the zamindari partible and governed by the ordinary Hindu law, or is it impartible and governed by the rule of primogeniture ?
- " (9) Has the Court jurisdiction with regard to the plaint Muttas—Gumma Muttas and Conda Muttas—situated in the jurisdiction of the Agent to the Governor at Vizagapatam ?"

On the fifth issue the District Judge found that the right under which the first defendant succeeded to the zamindari was not partially divested by the subsequent birth of brothers, and that under Hindu law an estate cannot be thus divested when the estate is taken by obstructed inheritance. On the sixth and seventh issues the Judge found in the absence of evidence that no such [291] custom as that alleged by the plaintiff existed, and dismissed the suit.

The first plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Judgment.—We are of opinion that the findings of the District Judge on the fifth, sixth and seventh issues, recorded by him are correct and sufficient for the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit.

These issues are as follows :—

- " (5) In the event of its being found that the first defendant was not duly adopted, whether the right under which first defendant succeeded to the Kurupam zamindari, which vested in first defendant in 1841 was partially divested by the subsequent birth of brothers : in other words did the brothers become on their birth coparceners with first defendant ?
- " (6) Is there a valid custom among the Kondarazu caste of the Vizagapatam district to take an illatom son-in-law as alleged by plaintiff ?
- " (7) Did Subhadrayama take Silavamsam Sanyasi Razu in 1835 as an illatom son-in-law in accordance with such custom ? "

As to the sixth issue there is no evidence whatever and no attempt has been made by the plaintiffs to prove that the custom of illatom exists among the Kondarazu caste of the Vizagapatam district. Plaintiff's first witness says, however, that before the marriage of Sanyasi Razu with Sitayama, the daughter of Subhadrayama (the widow of the former zamindar) Subhadrayama told Sanyasi Razu that " if his wife had a male child she would hand over the zamindari to that child." Our attention is called to a statement recorded as made by second defendant's third witness Gattupalli Jagamma in the following words :—"Sitayama's husband alone was taken as illatom. Gangayama's husband was not taken as illatom." Gangayama was, it must here be observed, the younger sister of Sitayama. This statement in record is made in answer to the Court's question "was Gangayama's husband also taken as illatom." This is in a deposition taken by the District Munsif of Parvatipur. The witness was a woman and uneducated. She had not stated that Sitayama's husband was taken as illatom. It is therefore difficult to understand how the witness came to be [292] asked if Gangayama's husband was also taken as illatom and this after her examination had been closed. As is contended on behalf of first and second respondents; the conduct of the parties has been quite inconsistent with the custom of illatom: for if Sanyasi Razu had been in fact adopted under that custom, he himself should have succeeded to the zamindari which he admittedly never claimed to have done even as against Subhadrayama. There can be little doubt, we think, that the alleged taking of Sanyasi Razu as an illatom son-in-law is not true.

Failing this contention, it is clear that, if plaintiffs are entitled at all, it is as the last zamindar's sister's sons, i.e., as bandhus, who take by inheritance and not by survivorship. The property was, therefore, Sapratibandha (liable to obstruction) which vests in the heirs in existence at the time when the inheritance opened and is not subject to variation by the subsequent birth of any co-heir. The case in Krishna v. Sami (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 64) referred to by the appellant's counsel was one relating to Apratibandha or unobstructed property.

It is clear from the plaint that when the suit was instituted the plaintiffs had overlooked this obstacle in their way: for in paragraph 7 they speak of first defendant alone having been born before Subhadrayama's death, and of first plaintiff's father and his other two brothers and sisters as born subsequently. That such was the fact is also seen from Exhibit LXVI, a petition presented by Sitayama to the Governor's Agent on 21st September 1841, in which she speaks of herself as the mother of one son alone (eka putra). This is evidence entitled to more weight than the statements of plaintiffs' first and second witnesses. The worthlessness of the evidence of plaintiffs' first witness is moreover apparent from the answers given by him in cross-examination.

As to the adoption of first defendant by Subhadrayama, the evidence as to her being authorized by her husband to make the adoption is very far from satisfactory. Moreover, her husband was not the last male owner as his son (a child of four years) survived him for a month (more or less). There can be no doubt, however, that Subhadrayama did herself take the first defendant and treat him as the heir to the zamindari. Though it may be doubted whether this adoption was made under legal authority, there can be no doubt that it was recognized, and that the late first [293] defendant was in possession on the strength of it from the date of Subhadrayama's death in 1841 till the institution of the present suit in 1890. According to first plaintiff's own evidence, the property which stood in his father's name came to himself exclusively and first defendant was given no share in it. First plaintiff admits further that till the institution of this suit he described himself by his father's house-name Silavamsam, and not as Vyricherla, which is the description applicable to the zamindar's family. Plaintiff's third witness, who speaks to the maintenance of the late first defendant's brothers and sisters by that defendant, says that each of the brothers got half a measure of rice daily which first defendant "stopped when he was displeased," and that "some servants got rations like the brothers." There is no evidence on behalf of plaintiffs that this maintenance was claimed as a right and that the grant of it was not an act of brotherly kindness on the part of first defendant. The Judge is right, therefore, in holding the suit to be time-barred.

A consideration of the issue whether the zamindari is partible is unnecessary under these circumstances, as on the finding that first plaintiff (the only appellant) was not born when the property vested in the late first defendant, plaintiffs' suit must fail. First defendant thus became the exclusive owner and on his death the property belongs to his son, now the sole respondent, as the nearer heir than appellant.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

To constitute a mutual account there must be transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other, and not merely transactions which create [294] obligations on the one side, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations. Thus an account consisting of entries of payments made by one party in reduction of his debt to the other, and of payments made by the latter on behalf of the former party for the same purpose is not a mutual account within the meaning of art. 85 of sched. from the 23rd September 1885, on which date a balance was struck and a settlement made in favour of the plaintiffs, to the 7th October 1890, on which date they showed a balance of Rs. 3,016-1-6 in the plaintiffs' favour, the sum now sued for. Payments had been made from time to time and balances struck on both the plaintiffs' and defendants' accounts, but with one small exception in 1885 the account was invariably in favour of the plaintiffs. The District Judge held that the plaintiffs' account did not fall under Article 85, Schedule II of the Limitation Act, since to bring a case within that article there must be a fluctuating balance, at times in favour of one party and at times in favour of the other, and in the present case the solitary item referred to above being beyond the period of limitation, and therefore not availing the plaintiffs' case, the amounts prior to the 3rd November 1887, were barred, and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the amounts due between the 3rd November 1887, and the close of the accounts.

The plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Judgment.—The only point argued in this appeal is as to the correctness of the Judge in holding that the account on which plaintiffs rely is not a mutual account within the meaning of Article 85 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act.

The reason assigned by the District Judge is that, with one trifling exception, and that beyond the period of limitation, the [295] account has been invariably in favour of plaintiffs. He says: "although it may not be necessary in order to bring the case within Article 85 of Act XV of 1877 that there should be actual demands, it is necessary that the balance should fluctuate, being at times in favour of one party and at times in favour of the other," and in support of this proposition he refers to Harrandas Hemraj v. Vissandas Hemraj (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 134) and Hajee Syud Mahomed v. Mussamut Ashrufoonnissa (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 759).

In the former case it was said by SIR CHARLES SARGENT, C. J., that the corresponding clause of Act IX of 1871 appeared to have been intended to apply to "cases where the course of business has been of such a nature as to give rise to reciprocal demands between the parties; in other words, where the dealings between the parties are such that sometimes the balance may be in favour of one party and sometimes of the other." The meaning of which is not that there must have been such a shifting balance, but such was a possible and likely incident of the mutual transactions with regard to which the account was kept.

The decision in Hajee Syud Mahomed v. Mussamut Ashrufoonnissa (I.L.R., 5 Cal., 759), is authority for the proposition that the mere fact of the balance having been in favour of the defendant on some occasions is not sufficient to constitute the account a "mutual, open and current account."

A shifting balance may, no doubt, be a test of mutuality, but its absence cannot be taken to be conclusive proof against mutuality.

The reason assigned by the Judge for this finding is therefore not valid; but, nevertheless, his decision is correct. The rule to be applied is to be found in the judgment delivered by the late Mr. Justice HOLLOWAY in Hirada Basappa v. Gadigi Muddappa (6 M. H. C. R., 142). "To be mutual there must be transactions on each side creating independent obligations on the other, and not merely transactions which create obligations on the one side, those on the other being merely complete or partial discharges of such obligations." The amounts credited to defendant in the account kept by plaintiffs in the present case are merely payments made in reduction of the debt due from defendants to plaintiffs, and the two entries of amounts due to defendants from plaintiffs for oil, etc., pur- [296] chased from defendants are also credited merely as items received in partial discharge of defendant's debt to the plaintiffs. We cannot accede to the contention that they are evidences of reciprocal demands. They are casual merely and not such as would imply a regular course of reciprocal dealings.

The lower Court's decision is, therefore, correct, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Objection has been filed by respondent against that part of the lower Court's decree which awards to plaintiffs costs on the whole amount sued for, instead of limiting the same to the amount decreed. The general rule is that if a plaintiff recovers a less amount than he claimed in the plaint, his costs should be apportioned according to the amount recovered and not to the sum claimed. Mudhan Mohan Doss v. Gopal Doss (10 M. I. A., 563). The Judge has given no reason for departing from this rule. The decree will be modified by awarding costs to plaintiffs only on the amount decreed. The circumstances of the case are such as to justify disallowance of costs to the second defendant (respondent).

In allowance of this objection the lower Court's decree will be modified as above.

There will be no order as to costs of this memorandum of objections.

The lessee shall not, by reason only of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities attaching to the lease:

Nothing in this clause shall be deemed to authorize a tenant having an untransferable right of occupancy, the farmer of an estate in respect of which default has been made in paying revenue, or the lessee of an estate under the management of a Court of Wards, to assign his interest as such tenant, farmer or lessee.]

property, and that the lessee shall not, by reason of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities attaching to the lease, does not prevent the transferee being also liable to the lessor, who may at the same time sue the [297] lessee upon his express covenant and the transferee upon the privity of estate, though he can have execution against one only.

PETITION under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of E. K. Krishnan, Subordinate Judge of South Malabar, in Small Cause Suit No. 65 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

The Subordinate Judge gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff, and the eighth defendant preferred this appeal.

Sundara Ayyar for Petitioner.

Judgment.—This was a suit for house-rent. The house was let to the first defendant under a kulichit, which he executed on the 23rd September, 1888. The first defendant assigned the lease to one Ali Koya, and defendants 2 to 7 are his heirs. The eighth defendant purchased Ali Koya's interest at a Court sale. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 210 as the balance of rent due by all the defendants. The eighth defendant did not enter into possession, and stated that he did not desire to take possession under his sale certificate, though it was his intention to insist on his claim as purchaser so far as the improvements made by Ali Koya are concerned. The Subordinate Judge held, on the Small Cause side, that, as the principal lessee, the first defendant was liable for rent, that defendants 2 to 7 were also liable, as Ali Koya's heirs, from date of Ali Koya's purchase, and that the eighth defendant was liable for rent from the date on which he purchased Ali Koya's interest. The eighth defendant is the petitioner in revision before me, and it is contended for him that unless he enters into possession as purchaser, he is not liable for rent under section 108, clause (j) of Act IV of 1882. It is not denied that under the English law the assignee of a lease may be sued on covenants which run with the land, although he has not taken actual possession of it, and that a covenant to pay rent is a covenant running with the land (Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, page 239). The reason for the assignee's liability is the privity of estate created by the assignment as between heir [him?] and the original lessor, and the privity arises from the vesting of the assignor's interest in the assignee. The question, therefore, is whether, as argued on petitioner's behalf, section 108, clause (j) of Act IV of 1882 renders this view inapplicable in this country. That clause provides [298] that the lessee may transfer absolutely or by way of mortgage or sub-lease the whole or any part of his interest in the property, and the lessee shall not, by reason of such transfer, cease to be subject to any of the liabilities attaching to the lease. But from this it does not follow that the transferee is not also liable. The lessor may at the same time sue the lessee upon his express covenant, and the assignee upon the privity of estate, though he can have execution against one only. (Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 11th edition, 238.) I do not, therefore, consider that this petition can be supported, and I dismiss it with costs.

Rent Recovery Act—Madras Act VIII of 1865, s. 76—Civil Procedure Code, ss. 4, 622.

Orders passed by a Collector under the Rent Recovery Act are not open to revision under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. Velli Periya Mira v. Moidin Padsha (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 332) followed.

PETITIONS under section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code praying the High Court to revise the order of C. Venkatajugga Row, Assistant Collector of Kistna, dated 9th March 1892, passed in Summary Suits Nos. 100 and in others.

The petitioner, a zamindar, applied under section 10 of the Rent Recovery Act to eject a tenant on the ground that he had not, in accordance with a decree of the Assistant Collector given in a suit to enforce the acceptance of patta brought by the petitioner against the tenant, accepted patta and presented a muchilika as directed. The Assistant Collector rejected the application, and the zamindar presented this petition under section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Seshagiri Ayyar for Respondent.

[299] Judgment.—The preliminary point in this case is whether orders passed under Madras Act VIII of 1865 by a Collector are open to revision under section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The question was answered in the negative in Velli Periya Mira v. Moidin Padsha (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 332), which was followed in Appandai v. Srihari Joishi (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 451).

It has now been contended that the revision mentioned in section 76 of Act VIII of 1865 (Madras) means revision by the Court which made the order and not revision by a superior Court. We are unable thus to limit the scope of the word by introducing words which are not to be found in the section.

As to the contention that Act VIII of 1865 is a local Act and cannot override the provisions of section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the powers conferred on this Court under the Letters Patent, we need only refer to section 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We do not see sufficient ground for dissenting from the decision in Velli Periya Mira v. Moidin Padsha (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 332).

This petition is dismissed with costs.

Limitation.—Limitation Act (Act XV of 1877), s. 14—Deduction of time during prosecution of suit with due diligence—Defect of jurisdiction—Other cause of a like nature.

Where a previous suit by the same plaintiff against the same defendant has failed by reason of misjoinder of causes of action and parties, the plaintiff in a second suit is not entitled to the extra period of limitation allowed by section 14 † [300] of the Limitation Act, since the cause of failure of the previous suit is not due to 'defect of jurisdiction' in the Court which entertained the suit, nor is it a cause 'of a like nature' thereto. Deo Prosad Singh v. Pertab Kairee (I.L.R., 10 Cal., 86) dissented from.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of W. C. Holmes, Acting District Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 440 of 1889, confirming the decree of U. Babu Rao, District Munsif of Udipi, in Original Suit. No. 320 of 1888.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the following judgment of the District Judge:—

"The plaintiff, the present sami of the Puttige matt, sued to set aside a number of decrees passed against the Puttige matt property during the incumbency of Vijayendra Tirtha Sami, who was the de facto sami of the matt between the death of Samuthendra Tirtha Sami, who had nominated which the defendant has been prosecuting with due diligence another Civil proceeding, whether in a Court of First Instance or in a Court of Appeal, against the defendant shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it.

have been stayed by order under the Code of Civil Procedure, section 20, the interval between the institution of the suit and the date of so staying proceedings, and the time requisite for going from the Court in which proceedings are stayed to the

during which the applicant has been making another application for the same relief, shall be excluded, where the last mentioned application is made in good faith to a Court which from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to grant it.

Explanation 1.—In excluding the time during which a former suit or application was pending or being made, the day on which that suit or application was instituted or made, and the day on which the proceedings therein ended, shall both be counted.

Explanation 2.—A plaintiff resisting an appeal presented on the ground of want of jurisdiction shall be deemed to be prosecuting a suit within the meaning of this section.]

Vijayendra Tirtha Sami as his successor, and his (the plaintiff's) getting possession of the office of sami and of the lands attached to the matt under the High Court decree in Appeal Suit No. 66 of 1881, dated 26th October 1883. The plaintiff contended that the suits were fraudulent and collusive, and denied that the money was borrowed or the goods purchased for the purposes of the matt, and asserted that Samuthendra Tirtha Sami and Vijayendra Tirtha Sami had no power to do anything connected with the matt after the samis of the seven other matts deposed Samuthendra and appointed the plaintiff as his successor.

The lower Court has held that all the suits are barred. The lower Court held that Article 95 of Schedule II of the Limitation Act governs the cases. That article, it is argued in this appeal, does not apply. The article relates to a suit 'to set aside a decree obtained by fraud,' and, assuming that the only ground for setting the decrees against the matt property aside would be fraud and collusion, the article would clearly apply, and I do not think that the decrees can be questioned on any other ground. I think Article 95 governs the cases.

It is contended in this appeal that the suits would not be barred even if the article applies; because to the three years allowed by Article 95 there must be added under section 14 of the Limitation Act the period (two years, five months and [301] twenty-six days) during which the plaintiff was prosecuting a suit against all the defendants jointly. That suit (Original Suit No. 11 of 1886) was filed in the Subordinate Court on the 13th February 1886 and was dismissed, as it was held the defendants were wrongly joined in the same suit, and in appeal to the High Court (No. 139 of 1887) the Subordinate Judge's decree was confirmed on the 9th August 1888.

Section 14 of the Limitation Act directs that the Court should exclude the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting against the defendant another civil proceeding which the 'Court from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature' is unable to entertain. In the present case the plaintiff sued a number of defendants together. It was held that there was a separate cause of action against each defendant, and no joint cause of action, and the suit was therefore dismissed. The question is, should the time he was prosecuting that suit be excluded in computing the period of limitation for the suits brought against each defendant separately. In Ram Subhag Das v. Govind Prosad (I.L.R., 2 All., 622) it was held that the plaintiff could not count in his favour the period during which the plaintiff was prosecuting a suit which could not be entertained owing to misjoinder of parties (plaintiffs). In Deo Prosad Singh v. Pertab Kairee (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 86), where there had been a misjoinder of causes of action in a suit, it was held that in a subsequent suit the period during which the former suit was being prosecuted was to be excluded, misjoinder of causes of action being held to be of 'like nature' with 'defect of jurisdiction.' In Jema v. Ahmad Ali Khan (I. L. R., 12 All., 207) this Calcutta decision was not followed. A plaintiff sued without joining his partner as party in the suit and the suit was dismissed. It was held that in a subsequent suit the period during which the former suit was prosecuted could not be excluded, because there was no defect of jurisdiction or 'other cause of a like nature,' which was held to mean something analogous to defect of jurisdiction. The Madras High Court has not as yet given a decision on the point, and it is, if not incumbent, at least advisable, that this Court should follow the latest ruling of the other High Courts. Besides, to interpret inability to entertain a suit for defect of jurisdiction or other like cause, to include inability to decide a suit in [302] consequence of misjoinder of causes of action or of parties or in consequence of some other reason that prevents the suit being decided on its merits, would be, I think, to put a wider meaning on the words used in the statute than would be in accordance with the principles of interpretation usually applied to the interpretation of modern statutes. I think, though with considerable hesitation, that the suits should be held to be barred."

The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Subramanya Ayyar and Ramachandra Rau Saheb for Appellant.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondents.

Judgment.—Assuming that the suit is one to which the six years' rule applies, we do not think that the plaintiff can take advantage of section 14 of the Limitation Act, inasmuch as his previous suit against the same defendant failed, not by reason of any want of jurisdiction on the part of the Court, but by reason of misjoinder of causes of action and parties. In our opinion that is not a cause of a like nature within the meaning of the section. We are unable to agree with the decision in Deo Prosad Singh v. Pertab Kairee (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 86). The Courts of Allahabad and Bombay seem to take the same view as we do.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL—FULL BENCH.

Hereditary office—(Madras) Regulation VI of 1831, s. 3—Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts.

A suit for 'maniam' lands attached to the hereditary office of village carpenter is barred by the operation of section 3 of Regulation VI of 1831.

APPEAL against the decree of R. S. Benson, District Judge of South Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 254 of 1890, reversing the decree [303] of P. Subramaniya Pillay, District Munsif of Vriddhachalam, in Original Suit No. 694 of 1889.

The plaintiff brought a summary suit against the defendants in the Court of the Head Assistant Collector under Regulation VI of 1831 for the possession of the plaint lands on the ground that he was the carpenter of the village of Kandiyanuppam, and that the lands were 'maniam' lands attached to his office as carpenter. The Head Assistant Collector found that the defendants' occupation was unlawful, and that the plaintiff, who was the village carpenter, was the proper person to be in possession of them, i.e., of the 'maniam' lands.

An appeal was made to the Collector, and he confirmed the Head Assistant Collector's decree, but remarked that there was no means of carrying out a decree under Regulation VI of 1831.

On the 23rd August 1889 the plaintiff applied to the Head Assistant Collector to be put in possession in accordance with the decree in the above suit, but the Head Assistant Collector referred the plaintiff to the Civil Court.

The plaintiff then brought his suit in the lower Court to recover possession of the lands and Rs. 30 as mesne profits, but the District Munsif dismissed it on the ground that the land was unenfranchised service inam land and that, under Regulation VI of 1831, claims regarding such lands are not cognizable by Civil Courts.

Plaintiff appealed on the ground that the Revenue authorities having decided the right in plaintiff's favour, the defendants were liable to be ejected, and that the suit, being virtually one to enforce the order of the Head Assistant Collector under the Regulation, was maintainable.

The District Judge decreed in favour of the plaintiff, and the defendants preferred this appeal.

R. Subramanya Ayyar for Appellants.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondent.

This appeal came on for hearing before MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., and WILKINSON, J., on the 10th October 1892, when the Court made the following order of reference to Full Bench:—

We are unable to reconcile the decision in Ravutha Koundan v. Muttu Koundan (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 41) with the provisions of section 3 of [314] Regulation VI of 1831 and with the decision in the Collector of Kistna District v. Chinnamrazu (5 M. H. C. R., 360). The present suit is one for the possession of the emoluments of a certain hereditary office, and such a suit is apparently barred by the operation of section 3, Regulation VI of 1831. We therefore refer the question whether the suit is so barred to the Full Bench.

This appeal having come on for hearing before the Full Bench on 23rd November 1893, the Court delivered the following Judgment:—This is clearly a suit within section 3 of the Regulation, and we must, therefore, answer the question in the affirmative. There is no necessary conflict between the two cases cited in the order of reference.

This appeal coming on for hearing before a Division Bench consisting of MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and BEST, JJ., the Court delivered the following Judgment:—In accordance with the opinion of the Full Bench we set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the District Munsif.

Respondent must pay appellants' costs in this Court and also in the Lower Appellate Court.

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Raman.....(Petitioner) Appellant

versus

Kunhayan and another.....(Counter-Petitioners) Respondents.*

Execution—Fraud in conducting a sale in contravention of agreement between creditor and debtor—Estoppel of judgment-debtor by previous petition.

The fact that a judgment-debtor, who petitions to have the sale in execution of the decree against him set aside on the ground of fraud and irregularity, has, in a petition made previous to the sale asking for its adjournment, made no mention of the irregularities now relied on, does not create an estoppel.

Thakoor Mahatab Deo v. Leelanund Singh (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 613) followed.

[305] APPEAL against the order of the Subordinate Judge of North Malabar passed on Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 8 of 1892.

The petitioner, a judgment-debtor, prayed that the sale in execution of the decree passed against him might be set aside on the ground that the decree-holder, having entered into an agreement with him arranging for a settlement of the debt in lieu of the sale of the property, had nevertheless caused the property to be sold, had purchased it at a low price and had generally acted fraudulently and in contravention of the agreement. It appeared that after the execution of the aforesaid agreement, the petitioner had filed a petition for the purpose of obtaining an adjournment of the sale with a view to making arrangements for carrying out his agreement. The Court, however, had refused the petition on the ground that the date of the sale was very near.

The Subordinate Judge rejected the petition on the ground that the first petition (No. 545 of 1891) estopped the petitioner from alleging any irregularity in the sale, since no mention had been made in the said petition of the alleged arrangement between the creditor and judgment-debtor.

Ryru Nambiar for Appellant.

Govinda Menon for Respondents.

Judgment.—The Subordinate Judge is in error in thinking that the petitioner is estopped by his previous petition No. 545 of 1891. There was no occasion for mentioning in that petition the irregularities now relied on as vitiating the sale, as that petition was filed for the purpose of obtaining an adjournment with a view to raising the money by private arrangement. In a similar case the Calcutta High Court also held that omissions in such a petition did not create an estoppel (I. L. R., 7 Cal., 613). We set aside the order and direct the Subordinate Judge to allow the parties to adduce evidence with reference to the alleged irregularities and to dispose of the case in accordance with law. The costs of this appeal will abide and follow the result.

Legal Practitioners' Act—(Act XVIII of 1879), ss. 28, 29—Remuneration by promissory note for past professional services rendered under oral agreements—Guardian and ward—Services necessary or manifestly beneficial.

A guardian executed a promissory note in favour of a vakil (the plaintiff) as remuneration for his past professional services rendered under oral agreements with him :

Held, that a suit upon the note was barred by ss. 28 and 29 of Act XVIII of 1879, and that, as there was no such necessity for the proceedings in question as to render the contract binding on the minors, no suit would lie against them.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of J. W. F. Dumergue, Acting District Judge of Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 270 of 1892, reversing the decree of H. Krishna Row, District Munsif of Madura, in Original Suit No. 272 of 1891.

This was a suit upon a promissory note executed by the fourth defendant as the guardian of his sister's sons, defendants 1 to 3, for Rs. 600 alleged to be due to the plaintiff as remuneration for past professional services rendered by the plaintiff as vakil under oral agreements with the fourth defendant in certain criminal cases and proceedings which arose as follows :—

The present zamindar of Sivagunga and the late zamindar granted the villages of Tiruvelloor, Vembatoor and Thavasagudy to the father of the first, second and third defendants on a perpetual cowl in August 1882. After the death of the said defendants' father in September 1887, the present zamindar granted a cowl of the village of Tiruvelloor to his own wife. Disputes arose since then between zamindar's wife backed by the zamindar and first, second and third defendants' mother, who was supported by her brother, the fourth defendant. The zamindar's wife [307] through her husband commenced to issue pattas to the tenants and collect melwaram, which the first, second and third defendants' mother through her brother, the fourth defendant, resisted. The first, second and third defendants' mother leased the village of Tiruvelloor to one Gopalsamy Naidu, who brought suit against zamindar's wife for possession in Original Suit No. 7 of 1890 on the file of the East Subordinate Court and obtained decree. While matters were thus progressing, two criminal cases arose out of them. The zamindar's wife's agent charged the fourth defendant's agents with carrying off the fruits of karuvela trees in Tiruvelloor village before the Sub-Magistrate of Sivagunga. The fourth defendant engaged the plaintiff's service to defend the accused and the accused were acquitted. In the other case, while first, second and third defendants' men were taking the melwaram of Vembatoor village to the said defendants' house, the zamindar's men waylaid them near Othapoovarasu and beating them, carried off the said melwaram produce. The fourth defendant charged the zamindar's men with dacoity and the preliminary enquiry was conducted by the Head Assistant Magistrate, who committed the men to the Sessions Court where, however, they were acquitted. The plaintiff was engaged to prosecute the men before the Head Assistant Magistrate during the preliminary enquiry. It was mainly in connection with the plaintiff's services in these two criminal cases that fourth defendant executed the plaint promissory note. The promissory note further stated that plaintiff's services were engaged in a breach of trust case and putta transfer case against the zamindar.

The District Munsif passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff, which the District Judge reversed, on the grounds that the suit on the promissory note was barred by sections 28 and 29 of the Legal Practitioners' Act, which require all agreements for remuneration between a pleader and his client to be in writing and filed in Court, and that there was no such necessity in the case as to render the agreement of the guardian binding on defendants 1 to 3.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Bhashyam Ayyangar and Gopalsami Ayyangar for appellant.

Sundara Ayyar for respondents.

Judgment.—This was a suit upon a promissory note executed by fourth defendant as the guardian of his sister's sons, defendants [308] 1 to 3 for Rs. 600, alleged to be due to plaintiff as remuneration for professional services rendered by plaintiff as vakil in criminal cases and proceedings. We agree with the Judge that the claim cannot be supported on the special contract evidenced by the promissory note. Sections 28 and 29 of the Legal Practitioners' Act require that such agreements should be in writing and filed in Court. It appears from the promissory note that it was executed for past services rendered under oral agreements with the fourth defendant.

It has been held that this is no bar to a decree being passed for such reasonable remuneration as may be found due on the principle of quantum meruit. If, therefore, the fourth defendant should be held to have had authority to bind the minor defendants 1, 2, 3 by this contract, we should have considered it necessary to call for a distinct finding as to the amount that plaintiff would be entitled to as reasonable compensation for services rendered. But no contract made by fourth defendant whether as guardian of the minors, or as their next friend can be held to be binding on them unless the services to be rendered were either necessary or manifestly beneficial to the minors. The finding of the Judge is that there was no such necessity as to render the contract binding on the minors. Having regard to the objects for which the plaintiff was employed, we do not think they were necessary or manifestly beneficial to the minors. In this view of the case it is not necessary for us to express an opinion as to the competency of the minors' mother to appoint a guardian for her sons. We also observe that a decree has been passed against fourth defendant for the amount claimed by plaintiff and he has preferred no appeal.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 25, 223—Madras Civil Courts Act, s. 12—Jurisdiction of Munsif's Court—Execution of decree of superior Court.

As in suits so in execution proceedings the competent forum is ordinarily that indicated by s. 12 of the Civil Courts Act, but in the five cases mentioned in s. 223 of the Civil Procedure Code special reasons exist for departing from that rule and creating a special or extraordinary jurisdiction, the object whereof is to secure to judgment-creditors in certain cases a special facility or convenience. The condition as to the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Court to which a suit can be transferred under s. 25 of the Code of Civil Procedure is not laid down in s. 223 of the Code, which relates to transfers of applications for execution of decrees, and was omitted therefrom for the special reasons mentioned therein. *Narasayya v. APPEAL against the order of W. F. Grahame, District Judge of South Arcot, dated 30th August 1891, passed on Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 20 of 1891, confirming the order of the District Munsif of Chidambaram passed on Execution Petition No. 354 of 1891 and Miscellaneous Petitions Nos. 503 and 598 of 1891 (Original Suit No. 19 of 1888 on the file of the District Court of South Arcot).

The facts of this case were as follows : —

The defendant had mortgaged to the plaintiff certain property, only half of which belonged to him, the other half belonging to his brother, one Theagaraja Pillai, who instituted a suit for partition and had his share delivered to him. The plaintiff instituted a suit and attached and sold the defendant's share of the property, the decree in the said suit having been, on the plaintiff's petition, sent by the District Court to the District Munsif's Court for execution. When the plaintiff applied for attachment of the defendant's other property, the defendant presented a petition demanding that the remainder of the property [310] which he had mortgaged should be first sold before his other property was proceeded against. On both the lower Courts rejecting this petition, the defendant preferred this appeal alleging, inter alia, that the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to execute the decree of the District Court for more than Rs. 2,500, the limit of his jurisdiction.

Judgment.—Two questions arise for determination in this appeal and the first is whether the District Munsif had jurisdiction to execute the decree in Original Suit No. 19 of 1888. Though the objection was not taken in either of the Courts below, it relates to the inherent jurisdiction of the District Munsif and is patent on the face of the proceedings, and I am of opinion that such objection may be taken at any stage of the case. The decree which is being executed by the District Munsif was passed upon a hypothecation bond for more than Rs. 5,000 which is considerably in excess of his pecuniary jurisdiction, and it is contended on appellant's behalf that the Judge had no power to transfer such decree for execution to a District Munsiff. As to the question whether this contention ought to prevail, there is a conflict of opinion among the different High Courts. It was decided in the negative in Narasayya v. Venkatakrishnayya (I.L.R., 7 Mad., 397), and in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 47 of 1888, but in the affirmative in Gokul Kristo Chunder v. Aukhil Chunder Chatterjee (I.L.R., 16 Cal., 457), and Durga Charan Mojumdar v. Umataara Gupta (I.L.R., 16 Cal., 465), and in Shri Sudheshwara Pandit v. Shri Harihar Pandit (I.L.R., 12 Bom., 155). The last case was decided in 1887, the Madras case was decided in 1884 and the Calcutta case in 1889. The learned Judges at Calcutta who decided Gokul Kristo Chunder v. Aukhil Chunder Chatterjee (I.L.R., 16 Cal., 457), considered the Madras case and expressed themselves as being unable to concur in the decision therein.

That decision depends on the construction put on section 223 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 25 which relates to transfer of suits authorises the transfer to a Subordinate Court "competent to try the same in respect of its nature and the amount or value of its subject-matter." These words of limitation are not found in section 223 which relates to transfer of applications for execution of decrees. That section not only omits the condition that the Court to which it is sent for execution must be competent to determine the suit in which the decree was passed, but also substitutes for it five other conditions. The first condition clause (a) premises that the judgment-debtor resides or carries on business or works for gain within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the decree is sent for execution. The second condition clause (b) presupposes that the judgment-debtor has not sufficient property within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree, but has property within the jurisdiction of the Court to which the decree is sent for execution. The third condition clause (c) premises a case in which immoveable property is ordered to be sold, and such property is situated outside the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree. The fourth condition clause (d) postulates the existence of some special reason for the transfer which the Court that orders the transfer is required to state in writing. The fifth condition premises that the Court to which the decree is sent for execution is subordinate to the Court which passed the decree. Looking at the nature of the several conditions, they suggest the inference that the Legislature contemplated a special convenience, or a special facility or some special reason or a special relation as Subordinate and Appellate Courts, as grounds for the transfer. There is thus reason to conclude that the condition as to jurisdiction, inserted in section 25, was omitted from section 223 for the special reasons mentioned therein. It follows that if the condition as to jurisdiction mentioned in section 25 and intentionally omitted from section 223 were imported into it, the special facility or convenience which it was the intention of the Legislature to secure to judgment-creditors in certain cases might be taken away from them, and the object which the Legislature had in view, might be defeated. Suppose for instance the case of a decree passed by a District Court or Subordinate Court for Rs. 2,600 and of the judgment-debtor residing within the jurisdiction of a District Munsif or possessing property only within that jurisdiction; why should the special convenience or facility which might exist if the decree were executed by the District Munsif be denied to the judgment-creditor? Again, the specification of five special cases in section 223 implies that in [312] other cases the Court executing the decree must be competent to decide the suit in which the decree was passed. Hence it was inferred in Narasayya v. Venkatakrishnayya (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 397) that in framing the five conditions, the Legislature intended to denote the statutory exceptions founded on special considerations to the rule which regulates the ordinary jurisdiction. Further, the penultimate clause of the section states expressly that when a decree transferred for execution is that of a Provincial Court of Small Causes, the Presidency Small Cause Court to which it is transferred must also have jurisdiction over the suit in which the decree was passed as regards its subject-matter. The express mention of the ordinary rule in this paragraph emphasizes its omission in the five cases mentioned in the first paragraph of the section. There is also reason for holding that the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates certain exceptions to the ordinary rule, that a Court can only exercise jurisdiction over proceedings of civil nature when the subject-matter therein does not exceed in value the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction as defined by section 12 of the Civil Courts Act. Take, for instance, a claim preferred in regard to a house of Rs. 3,000 value in the Court of a District Munsif during the execution of a money decree passed by him for Rs. 2,400. Which is the Court competent to investigate the claim? Is it the District Munsif who passed the decree or the Subordinate or District Court, as the case may be, that has jurisdiction to try a suit relating to a house of Rs. 3,000 value. The language of section 278 shows that it is the District Munsif who was executing the decree that is authorized to investigate the claim.

The reason mentioned for holding that no exceptions were intended to be created is that intricate questions of importance are likely to arise as often in execution of decrees as in the trial of suits; but it must also be remembered that there are cases in which execution of decrees may be a simple matter giving rise to no questions of special difficulty. In order that the cases may be differentiated, the Legislature has given a discretion to the District Court in whom the power of transfer is vested, and also enacted section 239* in addition to section 228. Furthermore, the special relation of the Court to which the decree is sent for execution, under paragraph 6 as a Subordinate Court will enable [313] the District Court to call up the application for execution for disposal by itself when questions of exceptional difficulty arise therein for consideration.

The grounds on which the decision in the Madras case rests may be thus formulated. As in suits so in execution proceedings, the competent forum is ordinarily that indicated by section 12 of the Civil Courts Act, but in the five cases mentioned in section 223 special reasons exist for departing from that rule and creating a special or extraordinary jurisdiction. In view to show that this view is not tenable, the High Court at Calcutta refers to sections 3

* [Sec. 239 :—The Court to which a decree has been sent for execution under this chapter shall, upon sufficient cause being shown, stay the execution of

When Court may stay such decree for a reasonable time, to enable the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court by which the decree was made, or to any court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution thereof, for an order to stay the execution, or for any other order relating to the decree or execution which might have been made by such Court of First Instance or Appellate Court if execution had been made thereto ;

and in case the property or person of the judgment-debtor has been seized under an execution, the Court which issued the execution may order the restitution or discharge of such property or person pending the result of the application for such order.]

6, 9, 228 * and 649 in addition to section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 12 of the Civil Courts Act. The learned Judges think that this Court overlooked the rule that the word 'suit' may include as well proceedings after decree as proceedings before decree.

First as to section 12 of the Madras Civil Courts Act it is referred to in the Madras decision and its applicability to cases other than those specified in the second and third paragraphs of section 223 is recognised. But what is stated there is that an extraordinary or a special jurisdiction was conferred by the Code of Civil Procedure in cases to which paragraphs 2 and 3 relate. The absence of this special jurisdiction would render ineffectual the considerations of special convenience and facility implied by the five conditions in section 223 to which reference has already been made. As regards section 25, the word 'suit' may no doubt include in its extensive sense proceedings after as well as before decree; but it may also possibly be used in its popular and restricted sense to connote proceedings before decree, as contradistinguished from execution proceedings. The presence of additional words in section 12 of the Civil Courts Act and in section 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure lends weight to the view that in section 25 it was used by the Legislature in its restricted sense. Even assuming that it includes execution proceedings, the limitation as to jurisdiction can only be imported into section 223 so far as it is consistent with that section. To import it into that section so far as it relates to the special cases founded on special considerations would be incongruous and not only do violence to the plain grammatical interpretation, but also deny to judgment-creditors the special convenience and facilities contemplated in these cases.

[314] As to section 3, it exempts pending proceedings from the operation of the Code, and refers in terms to proceedings prior to decree in any suit instituted or appeal presented before the 1st June 1882, or to proceedings after decree that may have been commenced and were still pending at that date. This section furnishes an argument in support of the view that when proceedings after decree are intended to be denoted, the Legislature said so expressly. As to sections 6 and 9 they are relied on as indicating that the term 'suit' may be taken to include execution proceedings, but I have already stated that on that view the limitation as to jurisdiction in section 25 can only be imported into section 223 so far as it can be done without incongruity.

With reference to section 649, it recognises the principle which ordinarily regulates the jurisdiction in execution proceedings, but it does not negative an intention to create a special jurisdiction in the five cases specified in section 223. After carefully considering the Bombay and Calcutta decisions, I do not see where the fallacy lies in the reasoning adopted in Narasayya v. Venkatakrishnayya (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 397), and I must, therefore, adhere to the principle of that decision therein until the Full Bench overrules it.

The second question for decision is whether appellant's omission to bring to sale Tiyyagaraja Pillai's share is a bar to the execution of his decree against other than mortgaged property until he cures the omission. In the present case there is no doubt a direction in the decree that respondent shall first execute the Powers of Court in executing transmitted decree.

Appeal from orders in executing such decrees.

And its orders in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself.]

*[Sec. 228 :—The Court executing a decree sent to it under this chapter shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself. All persons disobeying or obstructing the execution of the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same manner as if it had passed the decree.]

decree against the mortgaged property, but the direction presupposes that the property belongs solely to appellant, or that the decree is binding on Tiyagaraja Pillai. It must be observed here that Tiyagaraja Pillai was not a party to that decree, and that the partition suit brought by Tiyagaraja Pillai was pending at the date of decree under execution. It is not even alleged that in the decree since passed in the partition suit the mortgage-debt was either mentioned as a family debt or that Tiyagaraja Pillai had his share decreed to him, subject to payment of a moiety of that debt. The respondent was therefore justified in not proceeding against Tiyagaraja Pillai's share, lest by so doing he may run the risk of involving himself in litigation which may entail [315] on him expense. The direction is binding only so far as it does not compel him to invade the rights of third parties who were not parties to the decree. This view is in accordance with that taken by the High Court at Allahabad in Zalim Gir v. Ram Charan Singh (I. L. R., 10 All., 629). In that case a zamindar executed two mortgages of his zamindari property in favour of one Panna Lal — one on the 10th October 1871 and the other on the 10th October 1872. On the 27th January 1874 he mortgaged about 117 bighas out of his zamindari for Rs. 700 to the defendant in that case. On the 10th September 1877 he made a conditional sale of the zamindari property in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 4,500 to pay off the two charges created in favour of Panna Lal. On the 10th August 1878 the zamindar made another mortgage to the defendant for Rs. 300 of the same 117 bighas. On the 8th November 1881 the defendant obtained a decree on his two mortgages of the 27th January 1874 and of the 10th August 1878, and on his application for execution of the decree, the mortgaged property was advertised for sale on the 20th November 1883. Meanwhile the plaintiff took the necessary proceedings to foreclose his conditional sale, and upon the 18th March 1883 the sale was foreclosed. On the 19th November 1883 the plaintiff brought a suit to have it declared that defendant was not entitled to bring the property to sale, and it was held that he was not entitled to do so before first recouping the plaintiff the amount due on the prior encumbrances. It is therefore competent to respondent in the case before us to apply for execution against other than the mortgaged property if he can show that the portion of the mortgaged property not brought to sale belongs to appellant's divided brother. It is urged on behalf of appellant that the decree under execution was passed against appellant as the managing member of a joint Hindu family during the subsistence of coparcenary, for a debt contracted for purposes binding on all the coparceners; but the decree is not produced before me; nor am I referred to any document showing that the decree was passed against appellant as the representative of the joint family whilst the absence of all allusion to the debt and to Tiyagaraja Pillai's liability for his moiety thereof negatives the contention.

The appeal fails, and I dismiss it with costs.

NOTES.

[There has been a difference of opinion as regards the jurisdiction of the executing Court where the suit would have been outside its competence. The Bombay and Calcutta High Courts insisted upon the executing Court also having jurisdiction, (1889) 16 Cal., 457; 465; (1887) 12 Bom., 155; (1892) 16 Bom., 791 while the Madras Court held otherwise, 7 Mad., 397; 17 Mad., 309; (1909) 5 I. [316] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 9th, 10th, 11th and 15th January and 13th February, 1894.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talavar.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Siva Subramanya Pillay and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Limitation—Suit to recover immoveable family property unlawfully alienated during plaintiff's minority—Limitation Act, s. 7, illustration (b), and sched. II, Arts. 12, 44, 45, 120 and 144—Hindu Law—Succession : whether under the Mitakshara law, nearness of blood is a ground of preference as between brothers of the half and full blood respectively in case of disputed succession to impartible coparcenary property—Representation of minor heirs as defendants by including a Collector as a defendant, as their guardian ad litem—Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 13, 244 and 312—Powers of a Hindu son to question the alienation of an impartible estate by his father.

Where a suit is brought to set aside a sale of immoveable family property unlawfully alienated during the plaintiff's minority, it must be instituted within one year of the plaintiff's attaining his majority, under schedule II, article 12 of the Limitation Act. Section 7 of that Act must be read together with each article in schedule II, and when the period prescribed by the latter extends to three years or more and expires within three years from the date of attainment of majority, the intention is that the late minor should have the full three years. But when the period of limitation prescribed is less than three years, as in article 12, and the minor has that period from the date of his majority, the prescribed period is not to be enlarged to three years.

In determining the right of succession to an impartible estate, the class of kindred from whom a single heir is to be selected should be first ascertained. Next, it should be seen whether family custom or kulachar discloses a special rule of selection, and, in default of such custom, seniority of age constitutes a title by descent to the impartible estate, by analogy to general Hindu law.

Nearness of blood is no ground of preference under the Mitakshara law in case of disputed succession to coparcenary property which is partible, and it is likewise no ground of preference when such property is impartible. Where, therefore, the family property belongs to a coparcenary family consisting of all the brothers of the deceased propositus, whether of the whole or half-blood, in the absence of a specification to the contrary, the brother that is entitled to succeed to the property is the eldest in years.

Representation by a Collector of all minor sons of a deceased Zamindar as their guardian ad litem, under the order of the Court, the Collector being added as a [317] defendant in the suit, is an adequate representation of all the sons, even if the Collector could only treat, under Regulation V of 1804, the particular minor on whose behalf the Court of Wards was then managing the zamindari as their proper ward. Consequently, a suit brought by one of such minors, on his attaining majority, to set aside the sale of a portion of the zamindari property attached in execution of the decree given in the former suit, is barred by Sections 136, 244 and 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

APPEAL against the decree of Venkata Rangayyar, Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 46 of 1885. The facts of this case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

The Subordinate Judge decreed in favour of the defendants.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Judgment.—This was a suit to recover the mittas or estates called Perunani and Karaikurichi and the pannai or home-farm lands therein, which had formed part of the zamindari of Maniachi, situated in the district of Tinnevely. The Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, who tried the suit, dismissed it with costs. Appellant (plaintiff) is the present Zamindar of Maniachi, which is admittedly an impartible estate belonging to a joint Hindu family, but capable of being enjoyed by but one member of the family at a time, and respondents are alienees who are in possession of the property in dispute.

The transactions which have given rise to this litigation are fully set forth by the Court of First Instance in paragraphs 25 to 57 of its judgment. The Subordinate Judge has also sufficiently stated the substance of the pleadings, the contentions of the several respondents, and the questions arising thereupon for determination, and we do not think it is necessary for us to recapitulate in this judgment.

Of the fourteen issues recorded for decision, the thirteenth and fourteenth relate merely to improvements and mesne profits. To the decision on the first three issues, no exception is taken at the hearing before us. The fourth, sixth and seventh issues relate to preliminary grounds of objection urged against the suit, whilst the other issues refer to the merits.

[318] The first question for determination is that raised by the fourth issue, viz., whether the suit is barred by the Act of Limitations. The facts, from which it arises, are shortly these. At the commencement of the year 1866, and for some years before it, one Bhuloka Pandya Chokka Talavar was the Zamindar of Maniachi, and the properties now in dispute were then comprised in the zamindari. He died on the 14th January 1866, leaving him surviving seven widows and five minor sons as shown in the sub-joined pedigree :

Bhuloka Pandya Chokka Talavar, Zamindar of Maniachi, who died in January, 1866.
His seven wives.

On the death of Bhuloka Pandya in 1866, the Government at first recognized as his lawful successor, his son by the fourth wife, Chokka Talavar, No. 8 in the pedigree. He was, however, junior in years to the eldest son by the fifth wife, Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talavar, No. 9 in the pedigree. But the Government considered that his mother's prior marriage was a legitimate ground of preference. As he (No. 8) was a minor, the Court of Wards assumed management of the zamindari under Regulation V of 1804. The late zamindar's fifth wife then instituted Original Suit No. 25 of 1866 on the file of the Civil Court of Tinnevely, disputing the action of the Government and asserting her eldest son's preferable claim by right of primogeniture. In May, 1868 the Civil Court decreed in his favour. Meanwhile, the Government recalled their recognition of the junior son by the fourth wife and recognized in his stead the eldest son by the fifth wife, No. 9 in the pedigree, Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talavar, and the Court of Wards since continued in management on his behalf.

Of the three sons by the fifth wife, the second son, Vellaya Pandyan, died unmarried during his minority, and the eldest [319] Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talavar, the last recognized zamindar and lawful holder, died during his minority in 1873, leaving him surviving one uterine brother, named Sendura Pandyan, No. 11 in the pedigree, and two half-brothers, Chokka Talavar, No. 8, and the plaintiff (appellant) No. 12 in the pedigree. It is an undisputed fact that of the three surviving brothers, the plaintiff is the eldest. It is also admitted that the zamindari of Maniachi is an impartible estate belonging to a joint Hindu family constituted by its male coparceners, and that the last lawful zamindar was appellant's and Chokka Talavar's half-brother, and the uterine brother of Sendura Pandya, No. 11 in the pedigree.

Appellant rests his title to the zamindari in this Court, as in the Court below, on his position as the eldest of the surviving brothers of the last zamindar, while the respondents' case is that the uterine brother, Sendura Pandyan, excludes him from succession. With reference to this contention, it was alleged for the appellant that Sendura relinquished his interest in the zamindari, if any in favour of the appellant by document C, which bears date the 15th August 1885. The plaint, which is dated the 9th June 1885, prayed for a decree (1) establishing appellant's right to the properties in dispute, cancelling the decree in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866 and the auction sale in its execution, and (2) awarding him possession of the properties mentioned in the plaint. It stated that the decree and the execution sale were vitiated by fraud, and that the circumstances constituting fraud came to appellant's knowledge only in March, 1885. The decree in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866 was passed on the 4th May 1867, and the sales in execution of it took place on the 11th and 13th August 1870, and were confirmed by the Civil Judge on the 14th September, 1870. The purchasers were placed in possession on 27th and 29th September 1870.

These are the facts which have to be borne in mind whilst dealing with the question of limitation with reference to the arguments addressed to us at the hearing. Treating this suit as one brought to recover immoveable family property unlawfully alienated during appellant's minority, the Subordinate Judge has found that it is barred by limitation. He rests his opinion on the ground that appellant was born on the 5th May 1861 and completed his twenty-first year on the 4th May 1882, and not as [320] alleged by him on 11th June 1882. It is urged on appellant's behalf that this finding is contrary to the weight of evidence.

The date of appellant's birth formed the subject of the sixth issue, and the evidence cited with reference to it is partly oral and partly documentary. It must be observed that in the case of the appellant, no horoscope has been kept so as to throw light on the precise date of his birth. Both parties admit that appellant was in existence from the 12th June 1861, the contest being as to whether he was born on that date, or, as found by the Subordinate Judge, on the 5th May 1861.

As regards the oral evidence, it is that of plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 4 and 25, and defendants' witnesses Nos. 11 and 12. The two former state that plaintiff was born in the month of Vaiyasi, Andu 1036 corresponding to May—June 1861, and the two latter depose that the plaintiff's birth-day star or lunar mansion was 'Satayam' or the 24th lunar day or star in the month of Chittirai. Both the witnesses for appellant are related to him, the fourth being a distant relative, and the twenty-fifth witness being his maternal uncle. The evidence of the maternal uncle is open to the observation that he is unable to remember the month and year in which his own eldest and other sons were born, though he professes to recollect the month and year in which appellant was born. The evidence of the fourth witness is also open to the remark that the date of the temple festival at Tiruchendūr in the district of Tinnevely in the year 1861 with which he connects appellant's birth shows (as explained by the Subordinate Judge) when it is computed from the calendar, that appellant was born on the 5th May and not on the 12th June.

On the other hand, respondents' twelfth witness does not name the month in which special worship or Archanai is performed in the Tiruchendur temple on appellant's Janma Nakshatram day or the day of his birth fixed with reference to the lunar asterism or mansion. According to respondents' eleventh witness it is clear that the appellant's Janma Nakshatram or the star, under which he was born, was the 'Satayam' or the 24th lunar mansion day in the month of Chittirai which corresponds to the 5th May 1861 according to the calendar. Respondents' witnesses are not connected with them. The Subordinate Judge describes the evidence at length in paragraph 21 of his judgment and comes to the conclusion that appellant was born on the 5th May 1861; and after [321] carefully considering it, we see no reason to disturb his finding. In the first place, respondents' eleventh witness is a disinterested witness. The fact deposed to by him is in the nature of circumstantial evidence. It is a fact which he was in a position to remember from the Archanai or special service being performed every year on the same lunar day of the same solar month. It is corroborated by the date of the Tiruchendur festival in the year 1861 with which event the fourth witness connects appellant's birth. Respondent's twelfth witness corroborates the eleventh so far as the performance of a special service in the Tiruchendur temple on the zamindar's birth-day and the name of his Janma Nakshatram or the star under which he was born are concerned.

On the other hand, the onus of showing that the suit was brought in time is on the appellant. Both his witnesses are related to him, and their evidence is open to the observations mentioned above. The appellant's pleader suggests that his fourth witness may have made a mistake, but it is not likely. The allusion to the Tiruchendur festival as the event which enabled him to fix the month and star of appellant's birth appears to be natural.

The documentary evidence bearing on the sixth issue consists of two Exhibits H and XV. The former is a takid sent on the 31st May 1882 by the Sub-Collector of Tinnevely to the Tahsildar of Ottapidaram taluk. It states that the Maniachi Zamindar attains his majority on the 12th June and directs the Tahsildar to close the accounts of the estate and be ready to deliver the zamindari on the 13th June. Exhibit XV is the letter written by the Sub-Collector to the Collector on the same date and is to the following effect: "It appears the eldest minor of the Maniachi estate has no horoscope and the exact date of his birth is not known. The Tahsildar on examining the previous records and on due inquiry, approximately fixes the date on which the minor attains his age as the 12th June 1882. I propose to issue orders to the Tahsildar to make over the estate to the minor on the 13th proximo." The report of the Tahsildar, to which reference is made in Exhibit XV, is not before us. We cannot say that the exhibits which name the 12th June 1882 approximately as the date on which the appellant attained his majority are inconsistent with the finding that the actual date of birth was the 5th May 1861. It is then said that the zamindari was actually made over to the appellant on the 13th June 1882, but this fact does not carry the case [322] further. No correspondence is produced, from which we can infer that the real date of birth was ascertained by the Court of Wards, and it was enough for that Court that, on the 13th June 1882, when they transferred the estate, the appellant had ceased to be a minor. The Subordinate Judge appears to us to have come to a correct finding as to the date of appellant's birth.

With reference to the latter part of the sixth issue, it is argued by respondents' pleader that under the Indian Majority Act IX of 1875, section 3, the appellant should be treated as having attained his majority on the completion of 21 years, only in case he had lawfully been under the jurisdiction of the Court of Wards, and that he must otherwise be treated as having attained his majority on the completion of 18 years. We shall presently consider the question whether Sendura Pandyan excludes the appellant from succession and whether an uterine brother succeeds to an impartible estate in preference to a half-brother, though the latter is senior in years to the former. Assuming, for the purpose of dealing with the question of limitation and for that purpose only, that the appellant was not only the de facto but also the de jure zamindar, we see no reason to doubt the correctness of the Subordinate Judge's decision that appellant attained his majority on the completion of 21 years on the 4th May 1882.

There are three more matters in connection with which the question of limitation has been considered by the Subordinate Judge. Adverting to the prayer in the plaint that the decree in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866 and the sales, in execution of it, of the properties in dispute be cancelled, the Subordinate Judge observes that there is no doubt that as a suit to set aside Court sales in execution of a decree to which appellant was a party, it must be governed by the one-year's limitation prescribed by article 12, schedule II of the Act of Limitations. He adds, however, that, as the plaintiff was a minor, a period of two years must, under illustration (b), attached to section 7 of the Act, be added to the one year. It is argued on appellant's behalf that this is a misapprehension of the scope of the illustration, and that the period of limitation prescribed by article 12 is applicable to minors as well as to adults.

That article premises a suit to set aside a sale in execution of a decree and prescribes as the period of limitation one year from the date on which the sale is confirmed. The case premised by [323] illustration (b) of section 7 is one in which the right to sue for a legacy accrues to A during his minority, and A attains his majority eleven years after such accrual; he would have under the ordinary law one year remaining within which to sue, but under this section an extension of two years will be allowed him, making in all a period of three years from the date of his attaining majority within which he may bring his suit. The Subordinate Judge considers that by reason of the illustration (b) a minor, who is a party to a suit, has three years to set aside a sale therein from the date on which he attains his majority. He relies in support of his opinion on Mahommed Hossein v. Purundur Mahto (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 287), and on Suryanna v. Durgi (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 258), but neither of them is in point. The question whether illustration (b) of section 7 is an authority for giving a minor the right to sue to set aside a sale falling under article 12 within three years from the date on which he attains his majority, though article 12 prescribes only one year in the case of adults, was not raised or considered in those cases.

The illustration, no doubt, recognises the principle that when the period of limitation prescribed by the ordinary law exceeds three years but expires within three years from the date on which he attains his majority, the minor will have the whole period of three years from the date of his majority. But it does not warrant the inference that it gives three years in cases which are governed by article 12. If the minor were an adult at the date of the sale which he seeks to set aside, he would have to sue within one year from the date of the confirmation of the sale; and on attaining his majority, he stands in the position of an adult, and there is no reason why he should have three years instead of one year from the date of majority. Section 7 ought to be read together with each article in the second schedule, and when the period prescribed by the latter extends to three years or more and expires within three years from the date of attainment of majority, the intention is that the late minor should have the full three years. But when the period of limitation prescribed by the schedule, as for instance by article 12, is less than three years, and the minor has that period from the date of his majority, we see no warrant for holding that the intention was to enlarge the period of limitation prescribed by the schedule to three years. [324] We are unable to adopt the view of the Subordinate Judge that the appellant had more than one year to set aside the Court-sales if he were a party to Original Suit No. 14 of 1866.

In paragraph 147 of his judgment, the Subordinate Judge observes that as a suit to set aside the decree in Suit No. 14 of 1866 for fraud, the suit is governed by article 95 which allows the appellant a period of three years from the date on which the fraud came to his knowledge. As he finds however, that no fraud has been proved, the question does not arise in this case, and we shall consider in connection with the merits whether this finding is correct.

The Subordinate Judge also refers to article 44*, though he considers it to apply only to voluntary sales; but, for the appellant, it is contended that, by analogy to that article, he is entitled to sue to set aside, within three years from date of his majority, an improper Court-sale which took place during his minority with the privity of his guardian. We cannot accede to this contention, as article 12 must be read together with article 44, and there can be no true analogy when there is an express provision to the contrary. With articles 12 and 144 before us, we do not think that article 120, which presupposes the absence of a special provision applicable to the case under consideration can apply. The conclusion we come to on the fourth issue is that the present suit is time-barred as a suit falling under article 144 or article 12 and that neither article 120 nor 44 nor 45 has any application.

In dealing with the question of limitation it was assumed that appellant was a party to Original Suit No. 14 of 1866 by his guardian, and that as the eldest surviving brother, though of the half-blood, he is lawfully entitled to the zamindari. We now proceed to consider these questions.

The question raised by the fifth issue is whether appellant is entitled to the zamindari of Maniachi in preference to Sendura Pandya Talavar who is still alive. The facts upon which it arises for determination are (1) that the zamindari is an impartible estate; (2) that it belongs to the coparcenary family consisting of the appellant and his brothers; (3) that the propositus was Subramanya Chokka Talavar, No. 9 in the pedigree, who died without male issue; (4) that Sendura Pandyan is his uterine brother, whereas appellant is only his half-brother, and (5) that the latter is older than the former and is the eldest of the surviving sons of [323] Bhuloka Pandya Chokka Talavar. It is admitted that Subramanya Chokka Talavar was the eldest son of the previous Zamindar, and that he succeeded his father by right of primogeniture, no special custom being alleged by either party as controlling the right of primogeniture in case of disputed succession to the zamindari. The point for consideration is whether, under the Mitakshara law nearness of blood is a ground of preference as between brothers of the half and full blood in case of disputed succession to impartible coparcenary property.

The Subordinate Judge decides it in the affirmative, but in that opinion we are unable to concur. Apart from authority, we are of opinion that on general principles the question should be answered in the negative. The first of them is that a rule of decision in regard to succession to impartible property is to be found in the Mitakshara law applicable to partible property, subject to such modifications as naturally flow from the character of the property as an impartible estate. The second principle is that the only modification which impartibility suggests in regard to the right of succession is the existence of a special rule for the selection of a single heir when there are several heirs of the same class who would be entitled to succeed to the property if it were partible under the general Hindu Law. The third principle is that, in the absence of a special custom, the rule of primogeniture furnishes a ground of preference. In determining who the single heir is according to these principles, we have first to ascertain the class of heirs who would be entitled to succeed to the property if it were partible, regard being had to its nature as coparcenary or separate property, and we have next to select the single heir by applying the special rule indicated above.

Applying the principles mentioned above to the case before us, there can be no doubt that if the property in dispute had been the separate property of the last lawful zamindar, from whom succession has to be traced, the uterine brother would be preferred to the half-brother. In enumerating the classes of heirs to separate property with reference to the Smṛiti of Yagnavalkya cited in Mitakshara, Chapter II, Section I, Sloka 2, the commentator observes in Chapter II, Section IV, Sloka 5, that "among brothers, such as are of the whole blood take the inheritance in the first instance", under the text already cited, 'to the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs,' since those of the [326] half-blood are remote through the difference of the mothers.' Vignanes-vara Yogi proceeds then to state in Section 6 that "if there be no uterine brothers, those by different mothers inherit the estate," and adds in Section 8 that "in case of competition between brothers and nephews, nephews of the whole blood have no title to the succession in preference to brothers of the half-blood," for their right of inheritance is declared to be on failure of brothers. If the zamindari of Maniachi, from which the property now in litigation was severed by Court-sales, had been the separate or self-acquired property of Subramania Talavar, Sendura Pandya, his uterine brother, would certainly have succeeded to it in preference to the appellant who is his brother by a different mother. The principle which determines the class of kindred entitled to succeed is that, in case of disputed succession to such property, remoteness of blood furnishes a rule of exclusion. This being so, the further question arises whether the same principle applies when the property is the coparcenary property, though impartible, belonging to a joint Hindu family consisting of the deceased zamindar and his brothers. Looking again to the Mitakshara law of succession as applied to partible coparcenary property, the right of survivorship is mentioned as a dominant right which controls the rule of succession applicable to separate property. In Chapter II, Section I, Sloka 20, of the Mitakshara, the commentator premises a case of competition between the coparceners and widows of a deceased person, and refers to the text of Narada 'let them allow a maintenance to his women for life,' and concludes* that the widows are entitled only to maintenance, the coparceners being entitled to the property. It follows that in case of coparcenary property, the doctrine of survivorship furnishes an additional rule whereby the class of heirs has to be found. It is also a controlling or dominant right for the reason that, according to Hindu theory, coparcenary property belongs to the coparcenary family, that though coparceners are tenants in common, they have no specific property but only an interest which may ripen into specific property on partition, and that, if the existing coparceners die without male issue, they are to be treated as if they had never been born, and, as if the partible property actually belonged to the body of coparceners who are alive at the time of partition. When, therefore, partible property belongs to a coparcenary family, and when a coparcener dies without male [327] issue, leaving one uterine brother and one half-brother surviving him, the half-brother is entitled to share the property equally with the uterine brother at the time of partition, the deceased brother being considered as if he never had been born, and the property being treated as always vested in the family as a unit, and as never absolutely vested for purposes of inheritance in any one coparcener in preference to another, how much soever the family may change as to the number of coparceners from time to time during coparcenary. To say, therefore, that nearness of blood is a ground of preference in such cases would be tantamount to ignoring the pre-existing coparcenary interest of half-brothers. Nearness of blood being thus no ground of preference under the Mitakshara law in case of disputed succession to coparcenary property when it is partible, it is likewise no ground of preference when such property is impartible. It is conceded that the zamindari belongs to the coparcenary family consisting of all the brothers of the propositus, and the nearest class of kindred in which the single heir ought to be found is that of brothers, whether of the whole or half-blood; and applying the rule of primogeniture as a subsidiary rule of selection, since there is no specific custom, the brother, that is entitled to the zamindari, is the eldest in years, viz., the plaintiff or appellant.

This view is in accordance with the course of decisions to which our attention has been called at the hearing.

The first is the case of Katama Natchiar v. The Rajah of Shivaganga (9 M. I. A., 539). The point decided in that case was that the zamindari of Sivaganga was the self-acquired property of Gouri Vallabha Tevar, the prior lawful zamindar, that the competition being between his daughter and brother's son, there was no right of survivorship as in the case of coparcenary property, and that, according to the ordinary rule of succession, the class of kindred among whom the single heir was to be found was represented by the daughter and not by coparceners. The question now in dispute did not arise in that case, but there are observations made by the Privy Council which indicate the principles that should guide our decision in this case. Their Lordships say there are two principles on which the rule of succession, according to the Hindu [328] law, appears to depend. The first is that which determines the right to offer the funeral oblation and the degree in which the persons making the offering are supposed to minister to the spiritual benefit of the deceased; the second is the right of survivorship. It is generally intelligible that upon the principle of survivorship the right of the coparceners in an undivided estate should prevail. Their Lordships say further that in coparcenary property according to the principles of Hindu law, there is coparcenership between the different members of a united family and survivorship following upon it; for there is community of interest and unity of possession between all the members of the family, and upon the death of any one of them, the others may well take by survivorship that in which they had during the deceased's lifetime a common interest and a common possession. But the law of partition shows that as to the separately-acquired property of one member, the other members of that family have neither unity of interest nor unity of possession, and the foundation, therefore, of a right to take such property by survivorship fails. It is said that these observations are in the nature of obiter dicta, but if so, they are the dicta of the highest judicial tribunal for India, followed in several later cases. Moreover, the two main principles of succession mentioned above are those embodied in the text of Manu, 'that the inheritance belongs to the nearest sapinda', and in the text of Narada, to the effect that in an undivided family the brother takes the coparcenary property in preference to the widow.

The second case is Neelkisto Deb Burmono v. Beerchunder Thakoor (12 M. I. A., 523). That was a suit in the nature of ejectment brought by a brother of the half-blood against the uterine brother on the ground that, as he was the eldest of the class of heirs from whom a jobraj should be selected according to family custom, the appointment by the deceased zamindar of his younger brother, the then defendant, as jobraj, was invalid. The Privy Council held that the appointment was valid by family custom or kulachar which imposed no restriction on the power of the reigning raja to appoint a jobraj from among his kindred. On this point, the Lords of the Judicial Committee remarked that "where there is evidence of a power of selection, the actual observance of seniority [329] even in a considerable series of successions cannot of itself defeat a custom which establishes a right of free choice; and had the instances been uniform and without exception, that alone would have been sufficient to support the appellant's case. Such uniformity of practice was, however, not proved, for, several instances appear of infants appointed to the office of jobraj, whilst relatives within the custom and older in years were living." It is this finding of fact that was the ratio decidendi, but the decision is an authority for the proposition that in determining the right of succession to an impartible estate, we should first ascertain the class of kindred from whom a single heir is to be selected, next see whether family custom or kulachar discloses a special rule of selection, and that in default of such custom, seniority of age constitutes a title by descent to the impartible estate, by analogy to general Hindu law. The Judicial Committee say further that by general Hindu law, the uterine brother would be the heir in preference to the half-brother, were it a disputed succession to divided property.

This limitation is also in accordance with the text of the Mitakshara in chapter II, section IV, slokas 5 and 6, and is an authority for the proposition that in case of disputed succession to impartible property, which was acquired by, or belonged exclusively to, the deceased zamindar, nearness of blood is a factor to be considered in determining the class of kindred from whom the single heir has to be selected. Respondents' pleader lays considerable stress on the passage in the judgment of the Privy Council which deals with the contention on behalf of the appellant in the Tipperah case, to the effect that the preference of the whole to the half-blood does not extend to a raj, and that, when the estate is ancestral and undivided, brothers of the whole and half-blood are on the same footing. Their Lordships observe as follows: "When a raj is enjoyed and inherited by one sole member of a family, it would be to introduce into the law, by judicial construction, a fiction, involving also a contradiction to call this separate ownership, though coming by inheritance, at once sole and joint ownership, and so to constitute a joint ownership without the common incidents of coparcenership. The truth is, the title to the throne and to the royal lands is, in this case, one and the same title. Survivorship cannot obtain in such a possession from its very nature, and there can be no community [330] of interest; for, claims to an estate in lands and to rights in others over it, such as to maintenance, are distinct and inconsistent claims. As there can be no survivorship, title by survivorship, where it varies from the ordinary title by heirship, cannot, in the absence of custom, furnish the rule to ascertain the heir to a property which is solely owned and enjoyed and which passes by inheritance to a sole heir." It is further argued on behalf of the respondents that the doctrine of survivorship, as a dominant right, has no operation as well in the case of impartible coparcenary as in the case of impartible separate property, and that we are not at liberty to introduce a distinction so as to vary the ordinary rule of succession which, it is contended, applies alike to both. We are unable to accede to this suggestion for several reasons. In the first place, later decisions of the Privy Council recognized survivorship as a material factor when the impartible estate is coparcenary property. In the next place, the Tipperah estate is situated in a part of India governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu law, which explains away the Smriti of Narada as inapplicable to married women and denies a place to the doctrine of survivorship in its scheme of succession. It may be, as suggested by Mr. Bhashyam Ayyangar on respondents' behalf, that when the Tipperah case was decided by the Privy Council, there was an impression at Calcutta that, even under the Dayabhaga law, there was survivorship as an exception to the general scheme of inheritance in the case contemplated by Jimutavahana in verse 34, section 5, chapter XI of the Dayabhaga. But such a notion was held to be erroneous by the Full Bench of the High Court at Calcutta in Raykishore Lahoori v. Gobind Chunder Lahoori (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 27) and see Sheo Soondary v. Pirthee Singh (L. R., 4 I. A., 147) wherein it was decided that by the Hindu law current in Bengal, a brother of the whole blood succeeds in the case of an undivided immoveable estate, in preference to a brother of the half-blood. The ratio decidendi is that the doctrine of survivorship has no operation under the Dayabhaga law either as part of the general scheme of inheritance or as an exception to it.

Again, the recognized foundation of the right of survivorship is the Smriti of Narada cited in Mitakshara, chapter II, section 1, verse 7; but Jimutavahana notices this Smriti in chapter XI, sec-[331]tion 1, verse 48, of the Dayabhaga, and concludes after a consideration of the other Smritis, especially the Smriti of Vrihaspati, that Narada contemplated the case of wives of an inferior rank, who do not possess the status of a Patni or the lawful wife of approved rank. On the construction suggested by him in verse 54, there is no foundation in the Smriti law, on which the doctrine of survivorship can rest. As the Mitakshara, however, differs from the Dayabhaga, the decision in the Tipperah case, although it is in perfect accordance with the Dayabhaga law, has no application in the Mitakshara country.

It is further urged by the learned pleader for respondents that assuming that the Tipperah hills and estate are governed by the Dayabhaga law, the reason assigned by the Privy Council for their decision suggests that the character of impartible property as one capable of sole enjoyment by the incumbent for the time being is so much in the nature of separate property that it is inconsistent with the theory of coparcenary of which unity of ownership and unity of possession quoad the property in litigation are essential incidents.

This contention is sound only in the Dayabhaga country, for, as explained by this Court in Naraganti Achamma Garu v. Venkatachalapati Nayanivaru (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 250, 266), the modifications of coparcenary which flow from impartibility consist in this: "where from the nature of the property, possession is left with one coparcener, the others are not divested of co-ownership. Their necessary exclusion from possession imposes on the co-owner in possession two obligations to his coparceners, in virtue of their co-ownership—the obligation to provide them with maintenance and the obligation to preserve the corpus of the estate. The rights of possession and maintenance are to this extent distinct and inconsistent—that they cannot coexist and be enjoyed by the same persons, that the one is a right to the immediate perception of the fruits of the property, the other a right to the indirect benefit, but both rights have a common origin, unity of ownership. . . . Separate possession but not separate ownership is the characteristic of property, which, although impartible, is ex hypothesi joint. Co-ownership, which is the cause of survivorship, was held not to exist in the case of the Tipperah raj. We should have hesitated [332] to express an opinion at variance with that ruling if we could find no support for our views in a ruling which is equally imperative upon us, and from which, in the Tipperah case, their Lordships expressed no intention to dissent. In Katama Natchiar v. The Rajah of Sivagunga (9 M. I. A., 593), their Lordships declared that, in the absence of proof of a special custom of descent, the succession to a zamindari impartible and capable of enjoyment by one member only of the family at a time, is governed by the general Hindu law prevalent in that part of India with such qualifications only as flow from the impartible character of the subject. The impartibility of the subject does not necessitate the denial of the right of survivorship, and there are not wanting in the admitted rules which govern the enjoyment of such property and the succession to it indicia of co-ownership and consequent survivorship." This case is an authority in the Presidency for the proposition that the very custom by which coparcenary property is rendered impartible suggests survivorship as a necessary incident of impartibility, and that it is not correct to say that there is no coparcenership in regard to such property, the difference being only in the form in which coparcenary exists in respect of partible and impartible property.

In this connection our attention is drawn to the decision of the Privy Council in Rani Sartaj Kuari Rani v. Deoraj Kuari (L. R., 15 I. A., 51). This case modifies the opinion expressed in the last preceding case to this extent and no further, "when the estate is governed by the Mitakshara law, and it is impartible by the usage and custom of family and descends according to the law of primogeniture on the male heirs of the original grantee, the estate is not inalienable except on proof of special custom." The case is, therefore, an authority for the proposition that inalienability is not one of the modifications which flow necessarily from the impartibility of the subject. As regards survivorship as a cause of succession, their Lordships expressly save it and say, "by the custom or usage, the eldest son succeeds to the whole estate on the death of the father as he would if the estate were held in severalty. It is difficult to reconcile this mode of succession with the rights of a joint family and to hold that there is joint ownership which is a restraint on alienation. It is not so difficult where the holder of [333] the estate has no son, and it is necessary to decide who is to succeed." Referring to the Sivaganga case, their Lordships add "the saying in the Sivaganga case that the zamindari, though impartible, was part of the family property, must be understood with reference to the question which was then before their Lordships." That question was one of succession and not of alienation, inter vivos.

Another case referred to is what is called the Tōtapalli case, Stree Rajah Yanumula Venkayamah v. Stree Rajah Yanumula Boochia Vankondora (13 M. I. A., 333). In that case an impartible estate belonging to a joint Hindu family was usurped by one of the members of the family. The zamindar, by the aid of another member of the family, ousted him and afterwards entered into an agreement with him to pay the revenue. There was no division in the family. It was argued in that case by appellant's counsel that the estate being impartible must, from its very nature, be taken to be separate estate, and consequently that, according to the decision in the Sivaganga case, the succession was determinable by the law which regulates the succession to a separate estate, whether the family be divided or undivided. With reference to the first contention, their Lordships' answer was: "It is clear that the mere impartibility of the estate is not sufficient to make the succession follow the course of succession to separate estate. Their Lordships apprehend that if they were to hold that it did so, they would affect the titles to many estates held and enjoyed as impartible in different parts of India. Has it then been shown that, though the family was undivided, the estate was in fact the separate property of the appellant's husband?" After answering the above question in the negative their Lordships answered the second question in these terms: "In the Sivaganga case, the zamindari had escheated to Government, which was free to deal with it as it chose. By a new sannad the Government granted it to Gouri Vallabha, conferring a legal title which none could dispute. But what was done in this case?" After referring to the facts of that case their Lordships state: "This account shows no legal forfeiture, no fresh grant by any person competent to grant a legal title. It only shows that on a dispute between Mallappa Dhora and his superior, another member of the family came in, and, with the [334] strong hand and in concert with the superior, succeeded in ousting Mallappa Dhora and in assuming the position and right of the zamindar." This case is an authority for the position that forcible dispossession produces no change in the nature and tenure of the impartible property.

Another case is that of Maharani Hiranath Koer v. Baboo Ram Narayan Sing (9 B. L. R., 274, 324), in which the Tipperah case was dissented from.

Two other cases were also referred to at the hearing—Ranganayakamma v. Ramaya (Mayne, § 499), and the Padamathur case (1. L. R., 1 Mad., 312). They follow the Sivaganga case.

The latest case is that of Raja Jogendra Bhupati Hurri Chundun Mahapatra v. Nityanund Mansingh (L. R., 17 I. A., 128). In that case the contest was as to the right of succession to an impartible raj and a zamindari, the rival claimants being the last male holder Nandikishore's three widows and daughter on the one side, and his illegitimate brother on the other. The joint family belonged to the Sudra caste. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the illegitimate brother was entitled under the Mitakshara law to succeed by survivorship and observed as follows: "according to the decision in the Sivaganga case which, as their Lordships understand is not now disputed, the fact of the raj being impartible does not affect the rule of succession. In considering who is to succeed on the death of the raja, the rules which govern the succession to a partible estate are to be looked at, and, therefore, the question in this case is what would be the right of succession, supposing instead of being an impartible estate, it were a partible one." After discussing the point and concluding that the right of survivorship existed as between the deceased zamindar and his illegitimate brother, their Lordships held that the latter was entitled to succeed to the raj by virtue of survivorship. This case is the latest authority for the position that when the impartible estate belongs to a coparcenary family, the right of survivorship determines the heir entitled to succeed.

The next question is whether the suit is barred by sections 13, 244 and 212 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is conceded that if the eighth issue is determined against the appellant, this question must likewise be decided against him.

[333] The eighth issue is whether the plaintiff and his predecessor in title were properly represented in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866. The Subordinate Judge states the facts of the case so far as they bear on this question in paragraphs 36 to 57 of his judgment, and comes to the conclusion that the appellant and the zamindar whom he succeeded were represented for the reasons mentioned in paragraphs 58 to 103. To this finding several objections are taken on behalf of the appellant.

The first objection is that though the appellant and his predecessor in title were made defendants in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866, yet they were then minors, and they were not described either as defendants by their mothers and guardians, nor were their mothers, who were also defendants, described as the guardians of their minor sons. It appears from the decree in that suit that the first eleven defendants consisted of six widows and the five minor sons of the former zamindar, Buloka Pandya, including the plaintiff and his predecessor in title, the mother's name being entered first as that of a defendant and the minor's name being entered next as that of her minor son. It is not stated in terms that the mother of each minor was appointed or made a party as his guardian, ad litem; but it is clear that, in each case, the mother was her minor son's natural guardian and that the object in including both as defendants was presumably to make both parties to the suit, the mother as Buloka Pandya's widow and the minor son by his mother and natural guardian. It was Act VIII of 1859 that was in force when the suit was brought, and it contained no provisions as to appointment by the Court of guardians, ad litem, for minor defendants. According to the then practice of the Court, it was sufficient if the mother was made a party as guardian and permitted to act as such on his behalf. It is also in evidence that the mother of Subramania Pandya Chokka Talavar, plaintiff's predecessor in title, applied for a postponement of the sale and preferred an appeal to the High Court from the order of the Civil Judge refusing her application. The conclusion we come to is that in the suit of 1866, as originally framed, appellant and his predecessors' mothers were included to act as their guardians; that the Court allowed them to act as such; that one of them endeavoured in execution proceedings to obtain a postponement of the sale, and that, though the description is [336] defective, the defect is merely one of form and the minors were in no way prejudiced thereby.

* [Sec. 212:—When the suit is for the recovery of possession of immoveable property and for mesne profits which have accrued on the property during a period prior to the institution of the suit, and the amount of such profits is disputed, the Court may either determine the amount of the decree itself, or may pass a decree for the property and direct an inquiry into the amount of mesne profits, and dispose of the same on further orders.]

Even assuming that the description is insufficient, we must still hold that minors were adequately represented and their interests carefully protected by the Collector of the District, as the Agent of the Court of Wards, and as their guardian ad litem. Original Suit No. 14 of 1866 was instituted subsequent to the death of Buloka Pandya Chokka Talavar, but prior to the recognition of his son, Chokka Talavar, by the Government as his successor, and to the assumption of management of the zamindari by the Court of Wards. After the Court entered on the management of the estate, the Civil Judge included the Collector of the District as the twelfth defendant, and he was made a party as the ex officio guardian of the minor heirs. It is clear, therefore, that the minors were sufficiently represented by the Collector as their guardian ad litem, if not also by their mothers previously; but it is urged on behalf of the appellant that the Collector, as Agent of the Court of Wards, was the lawful guardian only of the then recognized zamindar, on whose behalf the Court of Wards held the zamindari, but not of his brothers including the plaintiff and his predecessors in title, the then fifth and ninth defendants. We do not, however, attach weight to this contention, as it is open to the Judge to appoint any competent person as guardian, ad litem, provided that there is no antagonism between his interest and that of the minors in the subject-matter of the suit. The Collector accepted the appointment and acted as guardian of all the minor sons. Representation by him of all minor sons as their guardian under the order of the Court is sufficient, even if it were held that the Collector could only treat under Regulation V of 1804 the particular minor on whose behalf the Court of Wards then managed the zamindari as their proper ward.

The second objection is that the mothers of the minors allowed the trial to proceed ex parte, and that summonses were not served upon them. As regards non-service of summonses the allegation was attempted to be supported by oral evidence which the Subordinate Judge has discredited. As to the weight due to the oral evidence on this point, we concur in his opinion. It is true that the copy of the judgment in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866 shows that the Collector alone defended the suit, but the circumstances [337] of the case suggest the inference that the minors' mothers left the defence to be conducted by that officer acting under the direction of the Court of Wards, as he was more competent than themselves adequately to protect the minors' interests. We may here observe that the interests of the then de facto minor zamindar, who was the ward of the Court of Wards under Regulation V of 1804, were identical with those of his brothers so far as they related to the subject-matter of that suit.

The third objection is that the admission by the Collector of the claim was an act not compatible with his position as guardian, ad litem, and prejudicial to the minors. Exhibit XXI proves that the Collector acknowledged the correctness of the plaint in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866, but requested that the debt sued for and other debts might be permitted to be paid rateably from the income of the estate as it was realised. If the claim was true and valid (it will appear later on from this judgment that such was really the case), it is preposterous to say that the guardian should not have acknowledged the claim but put the plaintiff to the proof of it. Such conduct on his part would add to the costs of the suit, which would be a needless burden on the estate. We are of opinion that the Collector's action was bonâ fide and abundantly warranted by the actual facts of the case.

It is here argued that of the six instalments for which a decree was asked for in the plaint, only three were overdue at date of suit, that the fourth, fifth and sixth instalments had not then accrued due, and that the Collector ought to have resisted the claim for a declaratory decree in respect of the last-mentioned instalments. It is true that the plaint prayed for an order of the Court directing defendants to pay into Court the fourth, fifth and sixth instalments as agreed on in the razinamas on which the suit was based. It is also true that the Civil Court decided that there must be a decree for the then plaintiff for the amount sued for, and for an order that the fourth, fifth and sixth instalments be paid as they fell due. Assuming that no such order should have been made, the then plaintiff might have obtained separate decrees for those instalments with costs prior to the date of the Court-sale. The omission, therefore, of the Collector to take the technical objection now argued saved the minor the costs of other suits which the creditor was at liberty to institute as each instalment fell due. Considering that he put in the written statement in communica-[338]tion with the Court of Wards and with its sanction, and seeing also that the Collector then asked the Civil Court for indulgence as to payment of the decree amount from the income of the zamindari, his action was perfectly bonâ fide. It was not then unusual for the Civil Courts in order to avoid multiplicity of suits (though the practice is now considered loose) to include a direction in the decree passed on instalment bonds to pay future instalments due on those bonds as they fell due.

Another objection taken to the finding on the eighth issue is that the decree was merely declaratory in so far as it related to the fourth, fifth and sixth instalments, and that the decree was nevertheless executed against the minors' estate.

It must be observed, however, that the decree was not declaratory but contained an order for payment as those instalments fell due, and, in fact, the sale now impugned by the appellant took place long after they had become overdue. In our opinion this objection is entitled to no weight.

Another objection is that the Collector ought to have objected to the execution of the decree on the ground mentioned in the last paragraph, when he represented the plaintiff's predecessor in title in execution proceedings. In fact the Collector did not then take the objection; but, if it had been taken, it would have been disallowed for the simple reason that on its true construction, the decree was not declaratory after the future instalments became due any more than a decree for payment of future maintenance at a fixed rate would be, and that in execution Courts do not go behind the decree sought to be executed, but take it as they find it, unless it is impugned for fraud or want of jurisdiction patent on the face of the record.

It is also an admitted fact that neither the plaintiff's predecessor in title nor any one else on his behalf objected to the execution of the decree at any time before his death, and we do not think that the plaintiff is now at liberty to rip open the decree and to undo proceedings held in its execution, and completed during his predecessor's lifetime, except on the ground of fraud or collusion.

The next objection is that the Collector should have obtained an adjournment of the sale and not allowed the property in dispute to be sold. The Subordinate Judge refers to the several applications made for adjournments of the sale, to the several adjournments actually granted to the order of the Civil Judge refusing the last [339] application and to the several attempts made to prevent the sale, and to its being at last found unavoidable as shown by the Collector Mr. Longley's letter. We agree in the opinion that the sale was not due to any laches on the Collector's part as guardian of the plaintiff's predecessor in title, but to its being found otherwise impracticable to clear off the heavy debts left by Buloka Pandya Chokka Talavar.

The next objection is that there was no attachment prior to the sale. This is not well founded in fact, and it is inconsistent with the appellant's admission in the plaint. There are also several exhibits which prove that an attachment preceded the sale. On this point we agree with the Subordinate Judge that the objection has no foundation in fact.

Passing on to the ninth issue, we observe that there is not a particle of evidence in support of the alleged fraud. The learned pleader for the appellant states that he relies on the objections taken by him to the decision of the Subordinate Judge on the eighth issue as constituting together a case of fraud. We are of opinion that they do not amount to fraud.

The last question which remains to be considered in this appeal is that raised by the tenth issue. The plaintiff's case was that the decree-debt was vicious and immoral, and that, although it had originally been contracted by his father, yet it was not one binding upon him. The contention for the defendants was that the debt was incurred for purposes binding on the former zamindar, Buloka Pandya's family and therefore on the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge has stated the evidence on each side, and, after carefully considering it at length, has come to the finding that the debt was neither vicious nor immoral as alleged by the appellant, but was a debt contracted by a Hindu father for purposes binding on his family. In this opinion we entirely concur. The evidence for defendants clearly traces the nucleus of the decree-debt to debts contracted by appellant's father in 1845 and 1849 whilst the plaintiff was born only in 1861. Original Suit No. 1 of 1845 was brought by an illegitimate son of appellant's grandfather, and, to that suit, the grandfather and Buloka Pandya, appellant's father, were made parties. The object of that suit was to recover possession of a pannai land or home-farm on the ground that it had been sold to the then plaintiff by appellant's grandfather. Appellant's father resisted the claim, but the suit ended in a compromise, whereby [340] it was agreed that appellant's grandfather should pay the then plaintiff Rs. 7,000, that the sale in favour of the latter should be cancelled, and that appellant's father should succeed to the pannai land given up by the then plaintiff. After the compromise, appellant's grandfather died, and appellant's father succeeded to the zamindari and the pannai land in November 1845.

In order to pay the sum of Rs. 7,000 due under the razinamah to pay peishcush, and the then zamindar's installation expenses and palace expenses, appellant's father borrowed Rs. 22,000 from one Vellayan Chetty. That this debt was contracted for the abovementioned purposes is, as observed by the Subordinate Judge, proved by defendants' witnesses Nos. 1, 3, 4, 7 and 8, by plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 4 and 22, and by the compromise V.

Vellayan Chetty instituted Original Suit No. 1 of 1849 against appellant's father and another, and the suit terminated also in a compromise, whereby appellant's father undertook to pay the debt in certain instalments.

In order to pay Vellayan Chetty, appellant's father borrowed from one Venkatachellam Chetty, who subsequently brought Original Suit No. 3 of 1854, which suit terminated in a compromise, which secured the debt on the zamindari and moveable property of appellant's father. In execution of the decree several razinamāhs were filed, the last of which was for Rs. 36,000. Venkatachellam assigned his right under the razinamah to Chidambaram Chetty, the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866, in execution of the decree in which the Court-sales now in dispute took place.

Thus the nucleus of the decree-debt is traced by a series of public documents to the money borrowed from Vellayan Chetty prior to Original Suit No. 1 of 1849, of which Rs. 7,000 was the amount undertaken to be paid to secure to appellant's father the succession to certain pannai land yielding an annual income of Rs. 10,000, and Rs. 15,000 were borrowed for payment of (i) peishcush, (ii) installation expenses, and (iii) palace expenses. It is argued by the appellant's pleader that the razinamah entered into by appellant's father with Venkatachellam Chetty does not operate to create a charge but only evidences a money-debt. We should be inclined to hold that it did create a charge, for the language of the instrument suggests an intention to secure the debt on specific property. The insertion of general words moveable property in addition to the zamindari cannot defeat that intention which [341] is the key to right construction. However, it is not necessary to determine this question for the purposes of the present appeal, as we concur in the opinion of the Subordinate Judge that, before the property in dispute was sold, it had been attached in execution of the decree. On the other hand, the appellant's contention that the decree-debt was immoral rests on mere oral evidence. The Subordinate Judge sets out the evidence and considers it not trustworthy, and the reasons assigned by him support his conclusion. On reading the evidence, we do not see our way to coming to a different finding. Thus, on the one side there is unimpeachable documentary evidence, whilst on the other side there is only questionable oral evidence in regard to transactions which took place more than forty years ago, the evidence being produced at a late stage of the final hearing and several of the witnesses being in a position to be influenced by a person in the appellant's position. We have, therefore, no hesitation in adopting the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the tenth issue. Apart from the weight due to the evidence, there are also several reasons why the appellant should not now be permitted to question the nature of the debt. (i) It was held by the Privy Council in Rani Sartaj Kuari v. Rani Deoraj Kuari (L. R., 15 I. A., 51), that a Hindu son has no power, unless he has it by special custom, to question the alienation of an impartible estate by his father, and in the present case there is no proof of such custom; (ii) there is also the fact that the debt sued for in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866 had been contracted more than ten years previous to the birth of the appellant; (iii) again the original debt merged into a decree-debt during the lifetime of appellant's predecessor in title and in a suit to which both appellant and his predecessor in title were substantially parties, and there is no proof of fraud nor any other material fact upon which appellant can repudiate the decree in Original Suit No. 14 of 1866 or the Court-sales in its execution.

We shall here briefly notice another question which respondents argued at the hearing of this appeal with reference to the relinquishment by the two surviving brothers of the whole blood in favour of the appellant of any interest which they possess in the zamindari. Exhibit C evidences such relinquishment, and it is admitted by both the brothers of the full blood, Sendura [342] Pandya Talavar and Chokka Talavar. Also in their evidence, as the third witness for the plaintiff and as the Court first witness, they acknowledge the appellant's right to the zamindari. The Subordinate Judge held that on the true construction of the document, their rights of survivorship to the zamindari were not the interest relinquished, but we are unable to support this construction, having regard to the language of paragraph 6 of document C. It is in these terms: "Further, as we have given up in consideration for this, all our right, interest and title, etc., in the moveable and immoveable properties, such as the zamindari, etc., capable of improvement by you, as far as our share of maintenance is concerned, and as what we have received is sufficient for our share of maintenance suitable to our dignity as per zamindari custom and our shares, you and we are not undivided but divided gnathis (bandhus), and we shall live in separate families." The words 'such as the zamindari' and 'we are divided' disclose an intention to regard the zamindari as appellant's exclusive property from the date of the document.

The respondents' contention is that appellant's claim, as based on Exhibit C, would be time-barred, and that the relinquishment is not available to appellant as an additional ground in support of his claim. It is argued that, though Sendura Pandyan, the next junior brother of the appellant and the eldest of the surviving brothers of the whole blood, might not be time-barred by reason of his having attained his majority within three years before he executed document C, yet the privilege conferred upon minors by section 7 of the Limitation Act is personal to them, and does not extend to their adult transferees, and that the transfer of their right after a period of twelve years from the date on which the sale was confirmed and before the expiry of three years, a period which is allowed to them as a personal privilege, is not actionable if the transferee had attained his majority more than three years before suit. In support of this contention reliance is placed on Rudra Kant Surma Sircar v. Nobo Kishore Surma Biswas (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 663) and Mohammed Arsud Chowdhry v. Yakoub Ally (15 B. L. R., 357). Those decisions involve, however, the apparent anomaly that a minor cannot transfer his title to property though at the date of transfer it is a subsisting interest so far as he is concerned. In the view which we take [343] of the question whether a brother of the whole blood is entitled to succeed to an impartible zamindari in preference to his elder brother of half-blood, it is not necessary for us to determine this question for the purposes of this appeal. Thus, the appellant's claim is barred first by limitation, and next by sections 13, 244 and 312 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and lastly, it also fails on the merits.

As this is a case which may be taken to the Privy Council, and as the original suit was instituted in 1885 and the appeal preferred in 1891, we have deemed it fit to consider at length all the questions argued before us on appeal in order that no occasion may rise for further investigation. The result is that the appeal cannot be supported and must be dismissed with costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

The 2nd and 3rd March and 28th April, 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD MACNAGHTEN, SIR RICHARD COUCH AND THE HONORABLE GEORGE DENMAN.

Ponnambala Tambiran, Appellant and

Sivagnana Desika Gnana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi, Visvalinga Tambiran, and Saminadha Tambiran.
[On appeal from the High Court at Madras.]

Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882), section 244, sub-section (c)— Questions arising in execution of decree—Construction of a decree as to the appointment of a Manager of the property of a religious institution.

A decree of the High Court declared its holder entitled as the Pandara Sannadhi, or religious chief, of an adhinam, to see that a competent person, from among the Tambirans who had received initiation at that institution, was appointed to fill the then vacant office of Tambiran, managing certain mutts. The decree directed that the Pandara should name a Tambiran of his adhinam for the office, whom, after inquiry as to his fitness, the Subordinate Court should appoint. If that Court found him unfit, it was to appoint a Tambiran of that adhinam upon its own selection.

In execution the Pandara named a Tambiran for the office, but died before the inquiry as to his fitness. His successor, as head of the adhinam, petitioned to withdraw the nomination, naming another Tambiran. The Subordinate Court made an order disallowing the withdrawal, and, after inquiry as to the fitness of the first-[344]named Tambiran, appointed him to the office. The High Court, on the Pandara's appeal, decided that the first nomination had been competently withdrawn, and directed an inquiry as to the fitness of the person secondly named, finding on the evidence that the first-named was not fit:

Held, on the appeal of the Tambiran first-named, that the question as to his right was one that had arisen between the parties to the suit, and related to the execution of the decree, within the meaning of section 244, sub-section (c), Civil Procedure Code and that he could appeal from the order made. Also, that, on the construction of the decree, the first nomination could not be withdrawn and a second one substituted before the inquiry, and that the person first named was entitled to the Court's decision as to his fitness. On the facts, the finding of the High Court that the first-named Tambiran was unfit, was not affirmed; and the order of the Subordinate Judge was maintained.

APPEAL from an order (24th February 1890) of the High Court, reversing an order (7th October 1889) of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, made in execution of a decree (23rd October 1888) of the High Court.

The orders now in question related to the appellant's appointment to be managing Tambiran of endowments belonging to two mutts—one called the Benares (Kasi) mutt at Tiruppanandal in Kumbakonam, and the other at Benares connected with it. Both were in relation to the adhinam at Dharma-puram in the Tanjore district, of which the first respondent was the head or Pandara Sannadhi. The orders were made in execution of a decree of the High Court of the 23rd October 1888, following a judgment in Gnana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kundasami Tambiran (I. L. R., 10 Mad. 397). In that suit the plaintiff, Gnana, then the head of the adhinam, obtained a decree against Kundasami Tambiran, declaring his appointment as manager of the property of the mutts to be invalid. The latter, though appointed by the will of the last holder of the office, Ramalinga, deceased in 1880, had not been a disciple who received initiation from the adhinam at Dharmapuram. The judgment described the connection of the religious establishments affected by the suit, giving their histories and stating their customs. The decree is to be found in the report of the appeal in the execution proceedings in Gnana Sambandha v. Visvalinga (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 339). The judgment of 1888 decided that the managing Tambiran at Tiruppanandal was entitled to select his junior and successor, but his selection was subject to the condition that it should be made of a [345] Tambiran from among the disciples of the adhinam at Dharmapuram. Also that, when this had been fulfilled, the Pandara Sannadhi at that adhinam was alone entitled to conduct the ceremony of investiture. The relation of the adhinam to the mutt was to be maintained according to ancient usage. Reference was made also to a previous decision of this committee relating to these institutions in Kashi Bashi Ramling Swamee v. Chitumber Nath Koomar Swamee [20 W. R. (P. C.), 217.] The right of the plaintiff consisted in seeing that a Tambiran of the association at Dharmapuram was appointed to manage the property of the mutts; and the remedy applicable was that the Subordinate Court should, on the nomination by him of a qualified Tambiran belonging to Dharmapuram, appoint the latter to the office. The decree ordered that the Subordinate Judge should direct the head of that adhinam to name a Tambiran, from among those of his adhinam, competent to the duties of the managing Tambiran of the mutt at Tiruppanandal; and that, if the Judge saw no objection to the fitness of the person so named for the office, he was to appoint him; but that, in case the Judge should object to the person named, he was to select as well as to appoint, and to direct the head of the adhinam to make the investiture, and certify it; whereupon, the Judge should put the person so appointed and invested in possession of the mutts and their endowments.

The proceedings in execution are stated in the report above mentioned. On the 25th January 1889 the Subordinate Judge ordered the Pandaram to name. On the 11th February he named Ponnambala, and the Court issued a notification of the nomination. On the 18th February, 1889, Gnana Sambandha died, and was succeeded by the first respondent, Sivagnana Desika, whose succession was recognized on the 15th March following. On the same day the new Pandaram filed a petition stating the unfitness of Ponnambala for the office, and asking leave to withdraw his name, and to nominate Saminadha instead. The latter became the third respondent in this appeal. The second respondent was Visvalinga, who represented Kandasami, the original defendant, deceased, pending the proceedings. Visvalinga did not appear on this appeal.

The principal questions now raised were, firstly, whether, with reference to section 244, Civil Procedure Code, the present appellant, in order to prefer his claim as the Tambiran first named for the [346] appointment, ought to have brought his separate suit, or could maintain his right in execution proceedings and appeal, as he had done as a petitioner in them, without having been one of the original parties to the suit; secondly, whether, on the true construction of the decree of 1888, the succeeding Pandara of Dharmapuram had power to withdraw his predecessor's nomination; thirdly, whether, upon the inquiry as to his ordination in religion, his character and qualifications, the appellant satisfied requirements.

On the 16th March 1889 the Subordinate Judge made his order. He decided that the power of nomination had been exhausted, and did not continue to the representative of the deceased decree-holder. He referred to the absence of any direction from the Subordinate Judge to the succeeding Pandara to nominate. He added: "I am unable to construe the decree of the High Court as giving to the appellant the power of nomination more than once. As the person that had made the nomination, and as one that saw reasons subsequently for not quite approving the nomination, the deceased appellant might, before the Court passed final orders in respect to his nomination, make representations calculated to show how he had been mistaken in his nomination, and the Court might permit him to make a fresh nomination. The same line of procedure is open to the present Pandara Sannadhi also. Beyond this he cannot go, I think. Of course, it is the duty of the Pandara Sannadhi to see that a nominee of his adhinam is in every way worthy of the office he is called upon to fill. Consequently, if the present nominee is not worthy of the office, the present Pandara Sannadhi, as I said before, should assist the Court in finding out whether the nominee is a worthy person or not. Therefore I am of opinion that the power of nomination could be exercised only once."

The Subordinate Judge then vacated his office. His successor made inquiry as to the fitness of Ponnambala, and on the 7th October 1889 gave judgment that there was no objection to his nomination, which he confirmed. The Pandara Sivagnana Desika was directed to invest Ponnambala with the signs of his office, but filed an appeal to the High Court from the order.

A Divisional Bench (COLLINS, C. J., and MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J.) reversed the order of the Subordinate Judge. They held that Ponnambala, who, before them, was respondent with Visvalinga, the Pandara, was a necessary party to the appeal, in order that his [347] interests might not be prejudiced. Their view was that, until the Subordinate Judge had acted upon the nomination, it might be recalled, and that, if there should be any valid cause, it was open to the nominator or his representative to withdraw it and name another person. It might be that there was hardly enough to justify the removal of the first-named Tambiran, if he had been put into possession; but there was enough to show his disqualification upon the inquiry which had yet to be held when his name was withdrawn. They directed an inquiry as to the fitness of the Tambiran secondly nominated, and upon his being found unfit, if that should result, the Subordinate Court was itself to appoint. The judgment is given at length in I. L. R., 13 Mad., 339.

On the 16th January 1891, on Ponnambala's petition under section 598, Civil Procedure Code, for a certificate to enable him to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, the High Court refused leave, giving the following reasons: "The order of this Court of the 24th February 1890, from which Ponnambala desires to appeal, was not a final order made against a person who was already a party in execution proceedings, the petitioner's status being merely that of a candidate for selection as a trustee, whose nomination by the former Pandara Sannadhi had been withdrawn by the present Pandara Sannadhi, and whom the latter had declined to invest with the insignia of the office as provided by the decree of 1888. Further, the order proceeded, not only on the ground that under the terms of the decree the present Pandara Sannadhi was perfectly competent to revoke the nomination made by his predecessor for sufficient cause, but also on the further ground that there was enough in the evidence as regarded the petitioner's antecedent conduct for disallowing his claim as a candidate for the responsible and important position of trustee of the mutt at Tiruppanandal.

"We do not consider that the refusal to accept a candidate for the office of a trustee, when there is no prior vested right in him, is a matter in respect of which the petitioner is entitled to leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

"It is contended that the former order treated the petitioner as a necessary party to it. The petitioner was made a party by the Pandara Sannadhi (who was entitled to appeal) to his appeal from the order of 1889, and it was considered that he was a necessary party in his own interest, for the limited purpose of determining whether the objections taken by the Pandara Sannadhi were well founded, and whether the petitioner was an eligible candidate for the office of trustee. We do not consider that this is a case in which we should grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council."

On the 9th May 1891 Ponnambala, on the motion of Mr. J. D. Mayne, obtained special leave to appeal, liberty being reserved to the respondents to raise any question as to the competency of the appeal at the hearing.

On this appeal, Mr. J. D. Mayne appeared for the appellant, Sir John Rigby, Q.C., Solicitor-General, and Mr. Walter Lindley appeared for the first and third respondents.

The second respondent did not appear.

Sir John Rigby, Q.C., raised the objection, as one preliminary to the hearing, that the appellant was not in a position to bring forward his claim to be appointed managing Tambiran by appealing from the order of the 24th February 1890. He had not been a party to the suit. The order of the High Court of the 16th January 1891 was referred to. As regarded his right to secure, if he could, the result of his nomination, the order of the 24th February 1889 was not a final decree or order in his favour within section 595, Civil Procedure. A right under that decree had vested in the nominator, but none was vested in the person who might be named by the latter, so as to enable him to appear in the suit which was between rival claimants of the power to appoint. His only mode of insisting on his right, if he had one, was by bringing his separate suit. Reference was made to Ragava v. Rajaratnam (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 57).

Their Lordships disallowed the objection, reserving their reasons till they should give judgment on the appeal.

Mr. J. D. Mayne for the appellant argued that the High Court had been wrong in deciding that the first respondent had power to withdraw, as he had petitioned to withdraw, the nomination made by his predecessor. The first question was—had not the power to name been exhausted when the first nomination was made? It was true that the Pandara of the adhinam had not, by exercising the power to name in favour of the appellant, invested him thereby with the office. But the nomination was sufficient to [349] vest in him the right to be subsequently appointed to the office, subject to one exception, viz., that his right would be defeated if the judicial inquiry provided should terminate in a finding of his unfitness. The inquiry had not taken place when the first respondent applied to be allowed to withdraw the nomination made by his predecessor, without alleging that it had been made in error, or without care, or on any undue ground. No such reason was assigned why the nomination should be withdrawn. The first respondent had asked leave to withdraw the name already submitted, and with it to withdraw what the appellant had previously obtained as a right, viz., the opportunity of submitting himself for the Court to inquire whether he was fit for the office or not. The appellant, when named, had a right defeasible in a special manner, but not in the manner attempted. Reference was made to Neelkisto Deb Burmono v. Beerchunder Thakur [12 Moore I. A., 523; 3 B. L. R. (P. C.), 13; 12 W. R. (P. C.), 21]. The appellant was entitled to rely on a strict adherence to the terms of the decree of 1888, which did not authorize a series of nominations, but required an inquiry to be held by the Judge as soon as a nomination had reached him from the Pandara. If nothing had vested in the Tambiran first named, the Judge's proceedings, after the attempted withdrawal, which would in that supposed case have been effectual, would have been void. There would have been no person in whose favour the Subordinate Judge's approval of the nomination would have operated. But that was not the state of things. The first nomination was valid for all the way that it went; the choice had been exercised; and the rest was in the hands of the Subordinate Judge. Moreover, the High Court was wrong upon the evidence in reference to the character and conduct of the appellant. As to this the order was made on an incorrect view of the facts. The sanctioning authority had no right of selection, but must proceed on judicial grounds, and could not withhold the appointment, unless there were valid reasons for holding the first nominated Tambiran to be unfit. There was error in the High Court's finding that such reasons existed.

Sir John Rigby, Q. C., and Mr. W. Linlley for the first and third respondents argued that, upon the true construction of the decree of 1888, the right of nomination had not been exhausted, but the right and duty of seeing that due nomination was made [380] by the causing a suitable person's name to be before the Subordinate Judge, had passed to the successor of the original decree-holder as head of the adhinam. The former having died before the approval of the nomination, without that approval it could have no effect. To this must be added that the High Court found valid reasons to exist why the Subordinate Court should not have sanctioned the nomination. There had been a locus penitentia as the High Court had decided. If the nominator had changed his opinion as to the fitness of the person whom he had named, and in this respect the successor had the same power, he could have withdrawn that name. It was contended that, upon the evidence, the High Court was right in finding that there were grounds for refusing to confirm the appellant's nomination; and that the order that inquiry should be made as to the qualifications and fitness of the third respondent was a proper one.

Mr. J. D. Mayne replied.

Afterwards, on the 28th April 1894, their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Sir RICHARD COUCH.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in the execution of a decree of the High Court at Madras, made on the 23rd of October 1888 in an appeal in which Gnana Sambandha, the plaintiff in the suit, was appellant, and the second respondent Visvalinga Tambiran, the representative of Kumarasami Tambiran, the original defendant in the suit, was respondent. The suit related to two mutts (temples)—one situated at Tiruppanandal and the other at Benares—and was brought by the plaintiff as the representative for the time being of a religious institution called the adhinam at Dharmapuram in the district of Tanjore. The plaintiff's case was that the properties in suit were the endowments founded in support of the mutts and various charities at Benares and other places, in the charge and under the management of the Tambirans or representatives of the mutt called the Benares mutt at Tiruppanandal in the same district; that the last lawful manager of this mutt was one Ramalingam Tambiran, and upon his death a dispute arose in regard to the right of succession to the management. The plaint prayed for a declaration that the mutts at Tiruppanandal and Benares were subject to the control of the plaintiff and his successors at Dharmapuram; that they were entitled to appoint and send Tambirans to manage them; that the defendant's succession was unlawful, as he was not a Tambiran [351] attached to the adhinam at Dharmapuram, and was not appointed by the plaintiff; and that the will executed by Ramalingam Tambiran in his favour had no legal force. The High Court decreed that the appellant's claim that the properties at Tiruppanandal and Benares belonged to the adhinam at Dharmapuram and to the possession of those properties should be dismissed; and that his claim to a declaration of his right to appoint Tambirans to management at Tiruppanandal and Benares, and to a direction that possession of the said properties should be transferred to a Tambiran whom he might appoint, should also be dismissed. In other respects the decree of the lower Court was reversed, and it was declared that the appointment of Kumarasami, the original defendant, by Ramalingam as his junior and successor, and the will in favour of Kumarasami, were illegal, and they were set aside so far as they related to the mutts at Tiruppanandal and Benares and other subordinate mutts and their endowments. It was also declared that the appellant was entitled, as the head of the Dharmapuram mutt, to see that a competent Dharmapuram Tambiran was appointed as the head of the mutt at Tiruppanandal; that the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in order to fill up the then vacant office of Tambiran of the Tiruppanandal mutt, should direct the appellant, who was the plaintiff in the suit, to name a Tambiran from among the Tambirans of his adhinam competent to discharge the duties of the managing Tambiran of the Benares (Kasi) mutt at Tiruppanandal; that if the Subordinate Judge saw no objection to the fitness of the person so named for the office aforesaid, he should appoint him as such managing Tambiran; but in case the Subordinate Judge should object to the person so named, he should appoint a competent person of the Dharmapuram adhinam as such managing Tambiran, and should thereupon direct the appellant to invest him as usual and certify it; and that upon the investiture being certified, the Subordinate Judge was to place the person so appointed and invested in possession of the mutt, etc.

On the 21st of January 1889 the plaintiff in the suit and appellant in the High Court applied to the Subordinate Judge for execution of the decree by a warrant for realization of the costs awarded by it, and that further proceedings might be taken regarding the appointment of a Tambiran to the then vacant place in the Kasi (Benares) mutt at Tiruppanandal in accordance with the decree. Thereupon, on the 25th of January, the Subordinate [352] Judge made an order directing the petitioner to name a Tambiran from among the Tambirans of his adhinam competent to discharge the duties, ten days being given for that purpose.

On the 11th of February 1889 the plaintiff presented a petition to the Subordinate Judge praying that, inasmuch as Ponnambala Tambiran, one of the Tambirans of his adhinam, was a fit man for the vacant place, was competent to discharge the affairs thereof with efficiency, and was one of good character from among the Tambirans of his adhinam, the Court would be pleased to appoint him to the vacant office. Upon this an order was made in these terms:—"The Court has no means of testing the fitness of the Tambiran named except by inviting the opinion of the public about it. Therefore a notice will be put up at the court-house calling upon the public interested in the well-being of the mutt at Tiruppanandal to give its opinion about the Tambiran named on Saturday the 2nd of March 1889." Accordingly a notice to that effect was, on the 15th of February, affixed in a conspicuous part of the court-house. It may be doubted whether this was either a necessary or a wise proceeding on the part of the Subordinate Judge leading, as it was sure to do, to agitation among the supporters of a rival candidate, and subjecting the appointment to something resembling popular election, which does not appear to be intended by the decree.

In the case for the appellant it is stated that in reply to this notice a great number of petitions were forwarded to the Court, many of them expressing approval of the nomination of Ponnambala, others suggesting the names of other Tambirans as being, in the opinion of the writers, more suitable for the post. Of the latter class the majority were in favour of Karbar Saminadha Tambiran, at that time manager of the Dharmapuram adhinam. Of the petitions opposed to the nomination 74 stated the preference of the petitioners for some other nominee, but contained no allegation to the prejudice of Ponnambala; 61 contained a general statement of unfitness, but with no reason for it, and 11 charged him with misconduct. The accuracy of this statement in the appellant's case was not disputed by the respondents' counsel.

On the 18th of February 1889 the plaintiff in the suit and appellant in the High Court died, and was succeeded as the head of the Dharmapuram adhinam by the first respondent in the present appeal who, on the 28th of February, petitioned the Court [333] to admit him in the place of the deceased and to take further proceedings. On the 15th of March he was ordered to be made the representative of the deceased plaintiff. On the same day he presented a petition to the Court stating that Ponnambala was unfit to manage the properties of the Benares mutt at Tiruppanandal, and that contrary to the decision he was a Tambiran who received kashayam (a ceremony of initiation) from the Madura adhinam, and praying that the Court would permit him to withdraw the petition submitted to the Court by the former Pandara Sannadhi nominating Ponnambala Tambiran, and to appoint Karbar Saminadha Tambiran to the office. On the 16th of March the petition, and also one for the realization of the costs, came on for hearing, the representative of the defendant in the suit and Ponnambala being described as counter-petitioners in the title of the judgment. The former did not appear. Ponnambala appeared by two vakils, and in the judgment it is said that on his behalf it was contended, inter alia, that the power of nomination could be exercised only once, that it was exercised by the late Pandara Sannadhi, and that under the decree of the High Court the representative of the appellant had no power to make a fresh nomination unless directed by the Court. The petitioner's pleader contended that there was power to withdraw the nomination and to make a fresh nomination. The Subordinate Judge in his judgment, after saying it was suggested that matters would be greatly facilitated by his deciding first of all the question about the power of nomination, gave his reasons for holding that the power of nomination could be exercised only once.

Evidence was then gone into, the new head of the Dharmapuram adhinam examining witnesses, including himself, to prove the charges against Ponnambala, and Ponnambala examining witnesses in answer, also including himself. The opponents of Ponnambala objected to his appointment on the grounds (i) that he was not ordained by the Dharmapuram adhinam, and was not a Tambiran of the Dharmapuram mutt, but that he came from and belonged to the adhinam at Madura; (ii) that he proved himself unequal to discharge the less onerous and comparatively trifling duties of the Dharmapuram mutt to which he had been appointed within the last seven or eight years. Upon the latter charge evidence was allowed to be given that he misconducted himself while so employed, and committed acts of [334] malversation and breach of trust, and misappropriated money and things belonging to the mutt and its charities. The Subordinate Judge (the successor of the one who held that the nomination could not be withdrawn, and who had taken the depositions of all the plaintiff's witnesses upon the second question, except one who was examined before a commissioner) having taken the evidence of Ponnambala and his witnesses, held that there was no objection to his nomination, and confirmed it, and directed him to be invested and the investiture to be certified within two months from the date of his decree, and ordered that, upon such investiture being certified, Ponnambala Tambiran should be put in possession of the Benares mutt at Tiruppanandal and the properties forming its endowments, and the endowments of the charities attached to it.

The new head of the Dharmapuram adhinam, who was allowed to be the plaintiff, appealed to the High Court, which ordered that the order of the lower Court appointing Ponnambala Tambiran as the head of the mutt should be set aside and the petitions be remanded, and that the Judge should proceed to inquire if there was any objection to the appointment of the person nominated by the then plaintiff, and appoint him if there was no objection, and if his appointment was found on inquiry to be open to objection, to proceed to appoint a competent Tambiran to Tiruppanandal. The present appeal is brought by Ponnambala from that order.

The Solicitor-General, who appeared for the first and third respondents, objected to the appeal being heard, on the ground that section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) was applicable, and that Ponnambala ought to have brought a separate suit. By an order of Her Majesty in Council, dated the 9th of May 1891, special leave to appeal against the order of the High Court was given, but the respondents were to be at liberty to raise any questions regarding the competency of the appeal at the hearing thereof. Section 244 enacts that questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by order of the Court executing the decree and not by separate suit. It would be a sufficient answer to this objection that it was not taken before the Subordinate Judge when he allowed Ponnambala [335] to become a party to the proceedings and appear by a vakil at the hearing, at which it was decided that the nomination could not be withdrawn. Nor was the objection taken in the grounds of appeal to the High Court. It is too late now to take it. But their Lordships cannot see what suit could be brought by Ponnambala. The nomination could not give a right to bring a suit, and whilst the decree of the High Court stood he had no title upon which to bring one to set aside that decree if such a kind of suit were maintainable. If he is not allowed to appeal against the order of the High Court, he will be without any mode of relief. And the High Court say in their judgment that they considered he was a necessary party to the proceeding as the person to whose appointment the appellant before them objected. Section 244 appears to be intended to prohibit a separate suit in cases where one might be brought, and to enable the question to be determined in the execution proceeding. It is not applicable to such a case as this.

The first question for consideration is—Could the new head of the Dharmapuram adhinam withdraw the nomination of his predecessor and make a new nomination? The answer to that depends upon the meaning of the decree. The declaration in it that the head of the Dharmapuram adhinam was entitled to see that a competent Dharmapuram Tambiran was appointed as the head of the mutt at Tiruppanandal was relied on. What follows this declaration shows that it does not give him power to appoint. He is to nominate, and it is his duty to nominate, a competent person. If he afterwards discovers any ground of unfitness in the person nominated, he should inform the Subordinate Judge, who is to decide whether there is any objection to the fitness of the person. The appointment is to be made only by the Subordinate Judge. He is to direct the head of the adhinam to name a Tambiran, and when that is done, is to decide upon his fitness. The person nominated has a right to have the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and would be deprived of it by the nomination being withdrawn and a new nomination being made. The petition before referred to asked that the petitioner might be permitted to withdraw the nomination of Ponnambala and to nominate Saminadha Tambiran. This was not granted by the Subordinate Judge, but the High Court, if their Lordships rightly understand its judgment, appears to have held that until the Subordinate Judge acted upon the nomination there was a locus [356] penitentie, and he was entitled to withdraw it if in his opinion there was any valid objection to it, and therefore the petitioner might withdraw it if there was any valid objection to it. Their Lordships do not concur in this construction of the decree.

There remain then two questions for determination : (i) Was Ponnambala a Tambiran of the Dharmapuram mutt ? (ii) Was he unfit to be appointed Tambiran of the mutt at Tiruppanandal ? The first witness was the then head of the Dharmapuram adhinam, who petitioned to be allowed to withdraw the nomination of Ponnambala. He said that Ponnambala was removed from the Odakkam (an office) in the Dharmapuram mutt for some wrongful acts committed by him in respect to cash and paddy. He used to visit Dharmapuram occasionally from Trichinopoly, where he held an office, and finding Ponnambala unemployed, he asked him the reason. Ponnambala said he had committed some faults in respect of cash and paddy, and that the Pandara Sannadhi had removed him. The witness spoke to the Pandara Sannadhi himself, who said he had removed Ponnambala for wrongful acts committed by him in respect to cash and paddy. In answer to the Court the witness said that the late Pandara Sannadhi did not think Ponnambala fit for the office of Tambiran of Tiruppanandal, and that he nominated him in consequence of the persuasion of persons whose names he gave, because it was thought he would act up to their wishes. In cross-examination he said that he had been to the Madura adhinam and saw Ponnambala there, and therefore he stated in his petition that Ponnambala had received his kashayam (the visible symbol of initiation) in the Madura adhinam. He said there was some difference in the mode of dress adopted by the Tambirans of the Madura adhinam and the Tambirans of the Dharmapuram adhinam, and that Ponnambala had adopted the Dharmapuram style for 10 or 11 years, ever since he came to the Dharmapuram adhinam, and that the Dharmapuram adhinam had a mutt at Madura. As to the faults committed in the Odakkam, he said there was a general talk that he had not up to that time inquired about particulars, and did not know what faults Ponnambala had committed in respect to cash and paddy, and there was no record to show that Ponnambala had committed faults in the Odakkam, and that he had been removed. The witness said he and three other Tambirans protested against the nomination ; they told the Pandara Sannadhi that Ponnambala belonged to the Madura adhinam ; that it was not proper to [357] appoint him to a big mutt like Tiruppanandal ; and that the Karbar Tambiran should be appointed. This is the Tambiran who was nominated by the witness in his petition for withdrawal of the nomination of Ponnambala. Further on he said there were complaints about the management of Rajan Katlai some months before the Pandara Sannadhi's death ; that Ponnambala had made large remissions of rent, and that he did not take any notice of the accounts showing less cultivation : there were no records about them. Why, it may be asked, did not the witness bring these complaints before the deceased Pandara Sannadhi when he made the protest ? He appears to have made in his petition to the Court a grave charge of unfitness against Ponnambala upon vague and general statements, of which he had not at that time any evidence, and to have been influenced by a desire to have the other candidate appointed. The next witness, Venkatarama Aiyar, had been an agent in the Dharmapuram mutt for 47 or 48 years, and had known Ponnambala for 10 or 11 years. He said he was a Tambiran of the Madura adhinam. He said : " I asked him, and he said he had come from the Madura adhinam. I have moved with him closely these 10 or 11 years. He is not fit to manage the estate of the Tiruppanandal mutt as the Tambiran thereof." He went on to say that Ponnambala was dismissed from the Odakkam for acts of malversation as regards paddy, rice and cloths, and was unemployed for two or two and a half years ; that he was afterwards sent for five or six months by the Pandara Sannadhi to assist the Katlai Tambiran at Tirubhuvanam who was ill, and was afterwards sent to Tiruvarur, where he had been for the last two years, and there had been frequent complaints that he did not manage the lands properly. He said : " The complaints existed from the time of the late Pandara Sannadhi." Their Lordships think that if there had been any malversation in the Odakkam which rendered Ponnambala unfit for employment, he would not have been appointed to Tiruvarur or allowed to remain there for two years. In cross-examination the witness said : " From what Ponnambala Tambiran and other Tambirans told me, I said he belonged to the Madura adhinam." As to the faults, as the witness called them, in the Odakkam, he said the Pandara Sannadhi held an inquiry, and called on Ponnambala for an explanation, and asked the witness and other agents to look into the accounts. They did so and reported the matter to the Pandara Sannadhi, who did not press it. The next witness is Dharmalinga Pillai, who [338] said he had been in the service of the mutt for 22 years. In considering the value of the evidence of agents or servants of the mutt it is to be observed that they were deposing in support of the case of the present head of it. This witness said Ponnambala was a Tambiran of the Madura adhinam ; it did not appear that he received mantra kashayam in the Dharmapuram mutt. In cross-examination he said that when Ponnambala first arrived at Dharmapuram he was not dressed in the Dharmapuram style, and he asked him to what adhinam he belonged, and he said to the Madura adhinam. But the witness said : " When he changed his style of dress I did not ask him about it. . . . I do not know the reason for his changing his style of dress. It is not usual for one to remain at the giving of mantra kashayam or upadesam. Tambirans who received mantra kashayam used to tell me about it. As Ponnambala did not tell me about it, I thought he did not receive it at Dharmapuram." He said he was present when the Pandara Sannadhi inquired about the cash, cloths and paddy missing, and from faults discovered against him in the Odakkam, and from complaints against him from Tiruvarur, he stated he was not fit to be appointed to Tiruppanandal.

The next witness was Tirumalai Pillai, also an agent in the Dharmapuram mutt. He said Ponnambala committed some faults in the Odakkam, and the Pandara Sannadhi dismissed him ; that he knew both the facts personally. This is all he said as to that charge. As to the Rajan Katlai he said two Brahmin agents attached to it represented to the Pandara Sannadhi " that Ponnambala had sold paddy without orders, and that he had made remissions in lease. They said that paddy was sold, and the proceeds were not brought to account, and that the yield was good, and there was no ground for remission at all. Pandara Sannadhi sent for Ponnambala. The agents said that the sale proceeds were carried towards the payment of debts due to one Somasundara. This was what the accounts stated. They said Ponnambala said he had not committed any faults and that the accounts would support him." The accounts were not produced as they should have been. Without them this evidence is of no value. The next witness is Ramasawmy Aiyar, who was employed in the Rajan Katlai at Triuvarur as the Attavanai accountant. His charges against Ponnambala were that he expended money without uthara chits (which are orders on the shroff for disbursements of monies, prepared by the witness and signed by the [359] Tambiran); that when there were not uthara chits, Tambiran himself spent the money and the shroff had no knowledge of it. He said Ponnambala wrote in the accounts some fictitious debts and appropriated the sums to his own use; that the debts were written in the names of Somasundara Chetti and Tyagu Chetti. The witness also said that a sum of Rs. 100 and odd, the produce of a sale, was not brought into account, and there was a remission to a lessee; that the Pandara Sannadhi directed the amount remitted to be collected, and as regards the matters not brought into account he said he would send final orders, but no such orders were received. Without the accounts the truthfulness of this witness could not be tested. He said he got Rs. 6 a month in the Rajan Katlai and "did not mention to any one else the said matters up to now," which is improbable if they were of any importance. The next witness is Ramasawmy Aiyar, one of the Brahmins who were said by a former witness to have made a complaint. He does not give any material evidence, and appears to have had a dispute with Ponnambala about his pay.

The evidence of the remaining witnesses for the plaintiff, with one exception, Vydilinga Tambiran, whose evidence need not be noticed, relates to the question whether Ponnambala was a Tambiran of Dharmapuram, and it will be better now to notice his witnesses in answer to the charges against him. He was first examined. He said that he was a native of Kallianpuram and received mantra kashayam in Sivasilam. He denied that while he was doing duty as Odakkam Tambiran he was removed for any fault, or that the Pandara Sannadhi held an inquiry as to his having appropriated to his own use paddy, cloth and cash; or that he was tried at Dharmapuram for any fault committed at Tiruvarur. He said in cross-examination that "orders were received that it was wrong to have granted a lease to the maniarar of the village of Sukkramangalam . . . that it was wrong not to have collected 150 kalams of paddy* out of the lease amount. The order to the effect that it was wrong to have granted remission of 50 kalams of paddy was received subsequent to the explanation sent by me to the Pandara Sannadhi." He also admitted that uthara chits were not properly kept by him, and that they should be properly kept up. In the course of a long cross-examination he repeated that he was not dismissed from the Odakkam, and was not found fault with for stealing money and [360] paddy, or punished for it. This examination was taken on the 11th of April 1888, and it appears from the Judge's diary that, owing to his illness, and the Court being closed for recess, the further hearing was postponed till the 13th of September. On the 18th of September the witness was re-called and examined by the plaintiff's pleader, when he said that he never made expense without issuing uthara chits. He was then examined as to sums amounting to Rs. 200 credited in the accounts of Rajan Katlai under the name of Somasundari Chetti. He admitted that there was a man of that name at Dharmapuram, a cook in the mutt there, who was serving under him for a month or two, but he said he did not know who the Somasundari Chetti in the accounts was and did not inquire "until now." He said he knew the man; he was living at Tiruvarur; he kept no profession of any kind as far as he knew ; he said he had a house ; he must look to the accounts to see if there were any dealings with that man before he went to Rajan Katlai. He then spoke about credit in the name of Tiyaagu Chetti which he had been charged with. He said that one Tyagaraja Pillai and a Mudaliar kept a common shop at Tiruvarur ; that the kanukkupillai used to borrow from him for their Katlai purposes and wanted to give credit in the name of Tiyaagu Chetti, and he gave him leave to do so ; that he knew Tyagaraja Pillai who came to him to demand money due to him ; that there was no man of the name of Tyagaraja Mudali at Tiruvarur, and he had made a mistake when he said before that the creditor was Tyagaraja Mudali ; that the Judge was not well at the time, and he was told to answer readily and to the point, and so the mistake happened. The Judge's diary in the record shows that he was ill at this time. This part of Ponnambala's evidence appears to be what is referred to in the judgment of the High Court as " matters against him in evidence which he ought to have explained, but has not explained satisfactorily." It is to be observed that the plaintiff's witnesses had been examined before the predecessor of the Subordinate Judge, who gave the judgment, but Ponnambala was examined before that Judge, who did not express any dissatisfaction with his evidence. The other witnesses spoke about his being a Tambiran of Dharmapuram, except the last, V. Krishna Aiyar, a vakil of the High Court. His evidence was that the nomination was made by the late Pandara Sannadhi after consideration of the merits and demerits [361] of the Tambirans from whom the selection might be made, and with a desire to select one who might not be disapproved by the Court. From his evidence the nomination appears to have been honestly made, and not from any undue influence or pressure.

Some of the evidence for the plaintiff on the latter question has been already noticed. Two remain to be mentioned. Subramania Mudaliar, who lived in the Tinnevely district, and was one of the chief disciples of the Dharmapuram adhinam, said that when Ponnambala was in the Odakkam, he told him he belonged to the Madura matam (apparently meant for adhinam) in reply to his questions where he came from, where he received his kashayam, and what he was doing. He was then dressed in the Dharmapuram style. " From what Ponnambala told me I say he belongs to the Madura adhinam. I have no other reason for saying that he is a Tambiran of the Madura adhinam." He also said he told him he belonged to Panangudi. Theetharappa Mudali, who also lived at Tinnevely and is one of the disciples of the Dharmapuram mutt and one of the petitioners for the appointment of Saminadha Tambiran, said that the Dharmapuram adhinam had a mutt at Sivasilam in the Tinnevely district ; that Ponnambala was a Tambiran of the Madura adhinam and belonged to Panangudi in the Nanguneri taluk ; that Kallianpuram is near Sivasilam ; there was a Kallianpuram Ponnambala, a Tambiran of Dharmapuram, who was dead. In cross-examination the witness said the nominee, Ponnambala, told him about his native place : that he had belonged to Panangudi and had received his kashayam in the Madura mutt. He is the only witness who speaks about another Ponnambala.

The case of the nominee, Ponnambala, was that he received his kashayam at the mutt in Sivasilam and did not belong to Panangudi, but to Kallianpuram. Three witnesses, members of his family residing in Kallianpuram, deposed that he got his kashayam at the Dharmapuram mutt at Sivasilam ; he was then 20 or 22 years of age. Another witness, Chitambaranadha, a Tambiran of Dharmapuram, said that Ponnambala got his mantra kashayam at Sivasilam ; the witness was then present at Sivasilam outside the pujamatam ; that Ponnambala came to Dharmapuram and was employed at the Odakkam. Ponnambala was not asked in cross-examination or by his own pleader about the statements it had been said he had made that he came from the Madura adhinam. This is a frequent omission in trials in India, and [362] no inference can fairly be drawn from it. Their Lordships cannot attach much weight to the evidence that Ponnambala said he came from the Madura adhinam. Assuming that the witnesses intended to speak the truth, it is possible they may not have exactly recollected what was said. He may have said he came from Madura, which appears to be true, and it may have been supposed by the witnesses that he meant he came from the Madura adhinam. Their Lordships do not give credit to the evidence that he belonged to Panangudi, and that there was a Kallianpuram Ponnambala who is dead. Upon the question whether the nominee, Ponnambala, was a Tambiran of Dharmapuram, the High Court was silent, but as they may have thought it was unnecessary to decide it, no inference can be drawn from their silence. Upon the questions of fact in the case their Lordships have come to the same conclusion as the Subordinate Judge, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the order of the High Court, and to order that the appeal to it be dismissed with costs, and to affirm the order of the Subordinate Judge. The respondent, Sivagnana Desika Gnana, will pay the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 30th November and 1st, 6th and 7th December, 1893 and 9th March 1894.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE SHEPARD.

Mallikarjuna Prasada Naidu.....(Defendant) Appellant

versus

Durga Prasada Naidu and another.....(Plaintiffs) Respondents.*

Hindu law—Partition—Maintenance—Arrears of maintenance—Wrongful withholding.

Where, in consequence of a suit for partition of the entire family property, a portion of the property is divided, but the remaining portion is declared impartible, the family remains undivided in respect to the latter portion.

* Appeals Nos. 47 and 48 of 1892.

[363] In a suit for arrears of maintenance it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that there has been a wrongful withholding of the maintenance to which he is entitled.

Jivi v. Ramji (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 207), Mahalakshamma v. Venkataratnamma (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 83), and Sri Raja Satrucharla Jaganatha Razu v. Sri Raja Satrucharla Ramabhadra Razu (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 240) followed.

APPEALS against the decrees of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Original Suits Nos. 10 and 13 of 1891.

These two suits were filed by the younger brothers of the zamindar of Challapalli or Devarakota, who was the defendant in both suits. The plaintiffs were similar, and set forth that plaintiffs and defendant were members of an undivided Hindu family; that their father died on 6th April 1875, leaving these three sons; that disputes arose and plaintiffs lived apart from defendant from 1st May 1875; that their father left a valuable zamindari estate, regarding the partition of which the parties engaged in litigation, which terminated with the decision of the Privy Council, dated 1st May 1890, that the zamindari was impartible; that the plaintiffs, while engaged in the partition litigation, did not ask for or receive maintenance from defendant; that defendant in a written statement and in an affidavit admitted his liability to give plaintiffs maintenance; that each plaintiff received Rs. 19,500 as maintenance during the pendency of the partition suit by order of Court; that each plaintiff claimed Rs. 2,000 per mensem as maintenance from defendant, with arrears bearing interest, and sums for the marriages of their children, furniture and residence; that this was demanded by a letter, dated 30th March 1891, and had not been given; and the plaintiffs prayed for a decree for these sums as a charge upon the zamindari with costs and subsequent interest.

The defendant filed similar written statements in the two suits. He pleaded that plaintiffs had been divided from defendant since 30th September 1882, the date of the decree of the District Court in the partition suit, and that they had no claim upon defendant for maintenance. Defendant denied that he had ever made any admission that he was liable to maintain plaintiffs after a decree for partition. Defendant pleaded that the amount of maintenance claimed was excessive, and that the other sums claimed were contrary to law and custom. Defendant also submitted that the [364] Court must take into account the amount of property which has come into the hands of plaintiffs from other sources, and suggested that Rs. 3,000 per annum to each plaintiff would be a sufficient grant. Defendant also stated that the plaintiffs were maintained until February 1879 out of the estate funds, and that defendant was ready and willing to maintain the plaintiffs in the family house in the accustomed manner. The defendant contended that plaintiffs by their acts and omissions had deprived themselves of the right to claim arrears of maintenance, and that the claim for arrears was for the most part barred. If arrears were granted, they ought not to be at the rate of Rs. 2,000 per mensem, and they ought not to bear interest, and that the maintenance ought not to be a charge upon the zamindari.

The District Judge decreed in favour of the plaintiffs and the defendant preferred this appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson) and Venkatarama Sarma for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs and defendant are sons of the late Raja Ankinidu, zamindar of Challapalli, who died in the month of April 1875. The zamindari, as it has now been finally decided by the Privy Council, is an impartible one, and consequently the eldest son of the late zamindar, that is the defendant, is in enjoyment. The present suits are brought against him for maintenance.

The main question raised by the defendant is whether the family has, in consequence of proceedings in the suit ultimately determined by the Privy Council, become a divided one.

A larger question was raised by the defendant's vakil with regard to the right of a younger brother of the holder of an impartible zamindari to any maintenance at the hands of the zamindar for the time being. Having regard to the pleadings and issues, this general contention, we think, cannot properly be allowed on this appeal. If it could have been successfully maintained, it ought to have been raised in the Court of First Instance. The plaintiff would then have had an opportunity of meeting it by showing that at any rate in this family it has been usual for the reigning zamindar to make provision for the other members of his family, and there are some indications that such was in fact the case. Moreover, in his written statement in the partition suit, the zamindar admitted his liability in this respect.

[365] The real defence is based on the admitted fact that in 188 [0?] the plaintiffs brought a suit against the defendant for partition of the entire family property, and, so far as the partible property was concerned, obtained a decree. It is said that the effect of a partition of any part of the property of a Hindu family is to sever the joint ownership in respect of the whole property, and that it is not legally possible for a family to divide a portion of their family estate and yet to remain undivided in respect of the remainder. It is true that, when a partition is effected in a family either by agreement or by decree, the result generally is to bring about a complete severance of the coparcenary, and that this consequence may follow, although in fact a portion of the property remains undivided. In the case, however, of division by consent of parties, it is clear that they may, if they choose, reserve and keep undivided part of the property. With regard to such part they must necessarily retain the status of undivided family. See Sri Raja Satrucharla Jaggannadha Razu v. Sri Raja Satrucharla Ramabhadra Razu (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 240). No authority for the contrary proposition was cited by the zamindar's vakil. In the present case, with regard to the property which remains undivided, there was on the plaintiff's side a demand that it should be divided, but that demand was ineffectual because in point of law the property was not partible. No partition has taken place either by decree or by consent, and therefore, in our judgment, the rights of the junior members of the family remain as they were before any demand was made. That is to say, they retain "such right and interest in respect of maintenance and possible rights of succession as belong to the junior members of a raj or other impartible estate descendible to a single heir." See Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (I. L. R., 10 All., 285). If the plaintiff is entitled to maintenance he is, we think, entitled to have it charged on the zamindari property or part of it. See Coomara Yettapa Naikar v. Venkateswara Yettia (5 M. H. C. R., 405.) In view of the liberty of disposition enjoyed by the zamindar there is no other way in which the rights of junior members can be secured. No reason was suggested why in this respect any distinction should be made between the male and female members of a family, and in the case of women there is no [366] doubt that a decree for maintenance in their favour is generally accompanied with a direction making it chargeable on certain specified property. We think, however, that the zamindar is justified in objecting to the decree as framed by the District Judge, inasmuch as it fetters him unnecessarily in the disposition of his property. It is sufficient that the decree should make the maintenance chargeable on certain villages, and if the parties cannot agree, we must ask the Judge to find what particular property will form sufficient security.

The next question is as to the rate at which maintenance should properly be allowed. It was contended on behalf of the zamindar that in estimating the rate the Court should take into account the property alleged to be in the hands of the plaintiff, and the finding of the Judge with regard to that property was impugned.

The zamindar's wakil relied particularly on certain letters put in by the plaintiff himself and admitted in some unaccountable way, although the writer of them was not called and was admittedly alive. The case made for the zamindar was that lanka lands of considerable value had been acquired by the plaintiff in his own name, and in June 1890, when the unfavourable judgment of the Privy Council had been heard of, transferred benami to Janakiramayya, the District Munsif. We do not think this is proved, and agree with the conclusion stated by the Judge in the 41st paragraph of his judgment. Janakiramayya's letters, some written to the zamindar's brother, Ramalinga, and some to the plaintiff's servant Suryaprakasa (11th witness), cannot fairly be construed as implying that the lands belonged to the plaintiff or his brother. The District Judge has found that a monthly allowance of Rs. 500, with an additional Rs. 250 in lieu of any provision for a house, furniture, cattle or occasional expenses, e. g., on account of marriages, is an adequate and fair allowance. The plaintiff had asked for a much larger sum, viz., Rs. 2,000, and the defendant had named a smaller one, viz., Rs. 250. It appears from the notes that the quantum of the allowance was in a great measure left to the Judge, and considering his experience in the district, we should be slow to disturb his judgment in the matter. On the part of the plaintiff it is urged that the allowance ought to be raised at least to Rs. 1,000 per mensem, and that some provision ought to be made from the allotment to the plaintiff of a house and garden. On the other hand, it is contended for the [367] zamindar that the allowance of Rs. 750 is excessive. We think that the District Judge has given good reasons for refusing to grant the use of a house to the plaintiff, and we are not satisfied that the money allowance he has made is either excessive or inadequate.

The District Judge has granted arrears at the rate of Rs. 500 per mensem for twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. In this we think he was wrong. The right to maintenance is primarily a right to be maintained out of the current income of the property in the enjoyment of the party chargeable. The circumstance however, that a person entitled to maintenance has not in fact been maintained by the person chargeable does not necessarily give him a right of action for arrears. On proof of failure to maintain without more, he cannot be said to become a creditor of the person in default. It is incumbent on him to prove that there has been a wrongful withholding of the maintenance to which he is entitled. Jivi v. Ramji (I.L.R., 3 Bom., 207) and Mahalakshamma v. Venkataratnama (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 83). If it were not so, it would mean that the manager of the family could, at the choice of any member preferring to reserve his claim for maintenance out of current income, be compelled to pay him from time to time sums of accumulated arrears which could only be paid out of capital. In this case it is admitted that the plaintiff has, since the 1st May 1875, been living apart from the defendant, and has neither asked for nor received maintenance except what he received under the order of the High Court pending the appeal to the Privy Council, that is, between December 1887 and July 1890.

In our opinion it is clearly the plaintiff's own fault that he has not received maintenance for the whole period of twelve years for which he claims it.

In his suit brought in 1880 he made another and inconsistent claim, and therefore he has no right now that he has failed in that litigation to complain that a claim not made by him, though conceded by the defendant, was not satisfied. There has been no wrongful withholding on the part of the defendant. We must, therefore, reverse the decision of the District Judge with regard to the arrears, except as regards the period above mentioned, during which payment was actually made. The allowance for that period was demanded and given on the footing of maintenance, and as the sum will have to be refunded by the [368] plaintiff in execution of the decree of the Privy Council, we think that plaintiff is entitled to a decree for the same sum, viz., Rs. 19,500 in the present case, to which must be added Rs. 3,500 for the seven months between the date of the institution of the suit and the making of the decree, for the Judge has decreed payment of the higher rate of Rs. 750 per mensem only from the latter date, and in that respect we do not alter the decree.

Subject to the alterations required by this judgment, the decrees are confirmed, and plaintiffs must pay proportionate costs of these appeals.

Their memoranda of objections are dismissed with costs. We see no reason to interfere with the decrees of the Judge on the point raised.

If the parties do not agree within one week from date of receipt of this order, the Judge must proceed to inquire as to the property which should be charged with the maintenance.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th December, 1893 and 29th March, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Madhava Rau.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

P. M. Fernandes.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Tort—Injury to property—Contributory Act—Test thereof.

As in the case of contributory negligence, so an act of one party can only be contributory to the injury he complains of, if by the exercise of ordinary care the other party could not have avoided causing the injury.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of S. Subbarayar, Subordinate Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 321 of 1891, confirming the decree of A. Babu Rau, District Munsif of Udipi, in Original Suit No. 25 of 1890.

The plaintiff was the owner of a garden. The defendant was his neighbouring proprietor on the north and east. The plaintiff's case was that his garden was surrounded on three sides—north, [369] east and west—by three channels; that, at a certain point, the defendant blocked up the communication of the third channel with the first by recently putting up a wall; that, by pushing forward a bank to the south of his fields and adding to them, and by additions to the west of his gardens, defendant had encroached upon the beds of the first and second channels and narrowed their water-way considerably; that by deepening the channel below the foundation of a stone embankment of the plaintiff's he had endangered it, and that these wrongful acts of the defendant had caused the water on three sides of his garden to increase so in depth and force as to overflow his garden, wash off the surface soil and otherwise damage his trees. Plaintiff accordingly prayed that the channels might be restored to their former condition, or Rs. 50 paid to him in the alternative, and that Rs. 21 for damages already sustained might be awarded.

The defendant denied the alleged encroachment and acts complained of, and charged plaintiff with having trespassed upon and included the village road and channel to the area of his garden and otherwise encroached from his side of the garden.

The District Munsif found that the narrowing of the first and second channels and their water-way was caused by the wrongful encroachments into and usurpation of unassessed Government waste land set apart for 'Karugulanadari' (cattle path) by plaintiff and defendant.

That defendant had blocked up the channel and cut off the communication of the first channel with the third; that defendant had deepened the first channel; that these wrongful acts, though they caused damage to plaintiff's property, were not the sole causes of the damage complained of, the plaintiff having also contributed to bring about the result. In this view he dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

* The plaintiff appealed on the ground, inter alia, that the encroachment on his part on Government land had taken place more than twelve years before and did not contribute to the injury complained of. The District Judge confirmed the decree of the District Munsif.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Ramachandra Rau Saheb for Appellant.

Sundara Ayyar for Respondent.

[370] Order.—On the facts found the decrees of the Courts below cannot be supported. It is conceded that the encroachment in the channel by plaintiff was long before the defendant's encroachments. The Courts below are in error in supposing that plaintiff's suit must fail on the ground that he also contributed to the injury. As in the case of contributory negligence, so also in the present case, plaintiff's encroachment could only be held to be contributory if by the exercise of ordinary care defendant could not have avoided causing the injury. Government, on whose property both parties are found to have encroached, may be entitled to require both parties to restore the channel to its original width; but as between plaintiff and defendant it was the latter's recent encroachment that was the cause of plaintiff's land being submerged. This is a wrong against which plaintiff is entitled to relief against the defendant.

We, therefore, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and call upon the Subordinate Judge to submit findings on the eighth issue, viz., to what relief (if any) is the plaintiff entitled under the circumstance of the case, within one month from date of receipt of this order, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections after the finding has been posted up in this Court.

(In compliance with the above order, the Subordinate Judge submitted a finding which was accepted by the High Court in the following judgment) :—

Judgment.—Accepting the finding, we reverse the decrees of the Courts below and direct that the channel and cattle lane be repaired by the defendant, or else that he do pay plaintiff a sum of Rs. 30 (thirty) as costs of doing the work, and that defendant do pay plaintiff a further sum of Rs. 15 as damages, and that he do also pay plaintiff proportionate costs on the above in all three Courts.

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, s. 622—Land Acquisition Act—Act X of 1870, ss. 3, 24, 25, 29 and 34—‘Material irregularity’—Mistake in regard to the principle of calculation of the value of the land acquired.

If a Judge and assessors, sitting to determine the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under the Land Acquisition Act of 1870, have refused to take into consideration any of the matters prescribed by s. 24 of that Act, or have improperly taken into consideration any of the matters prohibited by s. 25 thereof, such procedure would amount to material irregularity in the exercise of their jurisdiction, and would justify the intervention of the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Having regard to the definition of ‘land’ contained in s. 3 of Act X of 1870, there is nothing illegal in a Judge taking into account the value of works on the land which make it suitable for a salt factory; and even if, in making his estimate of the market value of the land, he took into consideration the price paid for neighbouring pans, and was in error in so doing, his mistake would be only one concerning the principles of valuation and not an irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction.

PETITION under Section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, praying the High Court to revise the order of J. A. Davies, District Judge of Tanjore, in Compensation Case No. 4 of 1890. The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the foregoing and from the judgment of the High Court.

* Civil Revision Petition No. 312 of 1891.

The Acting Government Pleader (Subramania Ayyar) for Petitioner.

Mr. Wedderburn, Sankaran Nayar and Madhava Row for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a Civil Revision Petition put in on behalf of the Secretary of State in Council under Section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code against the decision of the District Judge of Tanjore and the assessors in Compensation Case No. 4 of 1890.

[372] The first question which arises is whether the High Court has power to entertain the petition under Section 622, Civil Procedure Code. The Judge and assessors agreed as to the amount of compensation to be awarded, and, under Section 29, Act X of 1870, their decision is final. But under Section 34, the Judge and assessors are bound to state the grounds of their award under clauses 1-4 of Section 24, and if it can be shown that they have refused to take into consideration any of the matters prescribed by that section or have improperly taken into consideration any of the matters prohibited under Section 25, we think such procedure would amount to material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction which would justify interference under Section 622, Civil Procedure Code. We find, moreover, that, in a case in which a question rose under Section 55 of the Land Acquisition Act, the High Court of Calcutta held that though there was no appeal from what the Judge had decided, it could be set aside as being in excess of his jurisdiction. Taylor v. The Collector of Purnea (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 423, 429).

Passing to the grounds for the award stated under Section 34, we find that the Judge and assessors state that they award under Section 24, Clause 1, the sum of Rs. 42,500 "on the ground of that being its market value judging (i) by the amount actually expended upon the property, (ii) by the amount fetched at sales in neighbouring pans, and (iii) at the average value per pan arrived at with reference to the estimate of the several witnesses."

Prima facie there is no illegality or irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction in this award, the 'market value of the land' being the first matter which the Judge and assessors were bound to consider under Section 24, Clause 1.

It is contended, however, for the Government that the Judge and assessors were wrong in estimating the market value of the land as a salt factory, because the Salt Commissioner could, at any time, withdraw the licence to make salt under Madras Act IV of 1889, that the land could not, therefore, have any market-value as a salt factory, and that the selling price of the land itself was the proper criterion for value.

It is true that Section 16, Madras Act IV of 1889, directs that, when on cancelment of a licence the Commissioner resolves to retain the salt works, and to acquire the proprietary rights of the [373] late licensee, the value of the land as a site for salt manufacture shall not be taken into account in acquiring the proprietary right, but that compensation shall be paid to the late licensee at the rate fixed in Section 18. But this Act did not receive the assent of the Governor-General till 30th December 1889, subsequent to this land being taken up under Act X of 1870, and, in the former Salt Act I of 1882, we find no corresponding provision. We observe that the lands were purchased by the company in 1885 and 1886 for about Rs. 3,000, and that in making his offer of Rs. 18,002-11-6 for acquiring them under the Act the Collector has taken into consideration the cost of converting them into salt pans. At the time, therefore, the land was acquired, there was no direction that the Government should only be called upon to pay the value of the land alone and that compensation for its special value should only be paid for at fixed rates. Looking to the definition of 'land' in Section 3, Act X of 1870, we are not able to say there was any illegality in the Judge taking into account the value of the works which made the place suitable for a salt-factory, and even if, in making his estimate of market value, the Judge was in error in taking into consideration the price paid for neighbouring pans, the mistake would at most be only one concerning the principles of valuation and not an irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. We must dismiss the petition with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 15th and 16th February and 4th May, 1894.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Rahamtullah Sahib.....(Defendant) Appellant

versus

Rama Rau and another.....(Plaintiffs) Respondents.*

Will—Probate—Interest of defendant in testator's estate.

In a suit brought to obtain probate of a will the defendant, before he can contest the will, must show that he has some interest in the testator's estate. The fact of being a legatee under the will, or a creditor of the testator, does not amount to such an interest. But proof of a former will of the testator in which the defendant is interested is a sufficient interest to contest the will set up.

[374] APPEAL from the decree of SHEPHARD, J., sitting on the Original Side of the High Court in Testamentary Original Suit No. 10 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. Michell, Subramania Ayyar and Mr. Laing for Appellant.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson), Mr. Wedderburn, Mr. W. Grant and Mr. D. Grant for Respondents.

Judgment.—This was a testamentary suit brought to obtain probate of the last will and testament of the late Raja of Venkatagiri in the district of Nellore. Plaintiffs alleged that the late raja made his last will on the 3rd June 1892 and died on the 6th idem, and, as executors appointed by testator, they claimed probate. Exhibit A is the will propounded by them, and among the legacies mentioned therein, a sum of Rs. 1,000 is given to defendant Haji Muhammad Rahamtullah Saheb. He, however, filed a caveat objecting to the grant of probate on the ground that the will is not genuine; that its execution was procured by fraud, coercion or undue influence; that the testator did not know what he was doing, nor understand the nature and effect of its provisions, if in fact he signed or affixed his mark to the alleged will. Defendant set up another will, dated the 31st May 1892, whereby it is alleged the late raja appointed Dewan Bahadur Raghunadha Row, the Honourable Mr. Humayun Jah Bahadur, C.I.E., Kummati Krishnamachari and Dewan Bahadur T. Venkasami Rao as executors. Defendant stated that that will purports to remit, inter alia, a debt of Rs. 55,000 due from him to the testator, and further, to give defendant a legacy of Rs. 5,500. He further alleged that the will relied on by him was in the possession or power of the testator's sons and others, including the plaintiffs, Raja T. Rama Row and Ramakrishniah.

* Appeal No. 29 of 1893.

Plaintiff's application for probate of the will propounded by him was made on the 12th August 1892 and the defendant's caveat was filed on the 19th idem. On the 24th January 1893 the following four issues were fixed for decision :—

- (i) Whether the will dated 3rd June 1892 was genuine ?
- (ii) Was the deceased raja at the time of executing the same of sound and disposing mind ?
- (iii) Is the will invalid as having been procured by fraud, coercion, undue influence or such importunity as took away his free agency in the matter ?
- (iv) Was it duly attested ?

[375] On the 7th February 1893 two more issues were framed with reference to plaintiff's averment that defendant had no interest in the estate of the late raja entitling him to intervene in the matter of their application for probate, and to call upon them to prove the will in solemn form. The additional issues are—"whether defendant has any interest in the estate of the deceased raja," and "whether it is competent to the defendant to prove such interest, if any, in this suit." The final hearing was fixed on the 3rd March for the 12th April, and it was also directed that the additional, or the fifth and sixth, issues be tried first. The suit came on for trial before Mr. Justice SHEPARD on the 19th April 1893, and on that day defendant applied for an adjournment in order that he might bring in the prior will set up by him, and was not ready with his evidence. The learned Judge declined to grant the application on the ground that it was made at the very last stage of the argument. Thereupon, he recorded a judgment, finding the first of the additional and preliminary issues in plaintiff's favour, and decreed that the will dated 3rd June 1892 was the last will and testament of the deceased raja, and that the probate thereof be granted to plaintiffs. Hence this appeal.

Two questions arise for determination in this appeal, viz., whether, apart from the prior will set up by the defendant, there is proof of defendant's interest in the testator's estate, and whether the learned Judge ought to have granted an adjournment to enable defendant to bring in the alleged prior will. As regards the first question, we agree with the learned Judge that, apart from that will, defendant has no interest. It is true that under the will propounded by plaintiffs, defendant is entitled to a legacy of Rs. 1,000, but this circumstance can give him no right to denounce that will and to call for proof of it in solemn form. Another contention on appellant's behalf is that he claims to be also a creditor of the late raja. Adverting to this contention, the learned Judge has observed that in reality there is no evidence that appellant is a creditor of the testator, and even if he is, this will not help him.

The law is clear on this point. In Hingeston v. Tucker (2 Swaby and Tristram's Rep., 596) it was held by Sir C. CRESSWELL that before a person can be permitted [376] to contest a will, the party propounding it has a right to call upon him to show that he has some interest. Section 250 of the Indian Succession Act is framed on the same principles. As for the nature of the interest which ought to be proved, it was held in Kipping v. Ash (1 Robertson's Rep., 270) that the bare possibility of an interest is sufficient. But this possibility should rest on existing facts and not on mere conjecture. In Crispin v. Doghione (2 Swaby and Tristram's Rep., 17) it was held by Sir C. CRESSWELL that the possibility of filling a character which would give the party concerned an interest was not sufficient, but that there must be a possibility of having an interest in the result of setting aside the will. There are also several Indian cases in which an interest was considered necessary and made the subject of inquiry, and we may refer to In the matter of the petition of Desputty Singh (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 208), Komallochun Dutt v. Nibrutten Mundle (I. L. R., 4 Cal., 360), In the matter of the petition of Hurro Lall Shaha (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 570), Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Umanath Mookerjee (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 28). In in the matter of the petition of Desputty Singh (I. L. R., 2 Cal., 208), and in Menzies v. Pulbrook and Ker (2 Curteis Rep., 845) it was decided that a creditor of the testator has no right to contest the will, for the reason that it is indifferent to him whether he shall receive his debt from an executor or an administrator.

There is, however, no doubt that if the defendant proved the prior will, he would have a sufficient interest to contest the will set up by the plaintiffs. The material question, therefore, is whether the defendant was justified in not producing, at the date of the final hearing, evidence to prove the prior will on which he relies. He ought to have been prepared to proceed at once with the case if the sixth issue had been decided in his favour. It is quite possible, however, that he expected that the second preliminary issue would be determined first and hoped to frame his procedure with reference to such determination. Moreover, defendant will be hereafter precluded from proving the will set up by him, as it has been held that when once probate of a will has been granted in solemn form, no one who has been cited or taken part in the proceedings or who was cognizant of those proceedings and stood by, can afterwards seek to have it cancelled. In re Pitamber Girdhar (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 638). We are of opinion therefore that if defendant pays [377] into Court within one week from the date of re-opening of this Court after the recess all the costs incurred hitherto by plaintiffs both in the Court below and on appeal, the decree of the learned Judge should be set aside and the case remanded for disposal afresh, after giving appellant an opportunity to prove the will set up by him, and that if the appellant fails to make such payment within the time thus allowed, the appeal shall stand dismissed with costs throughout.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 25th November, 1892.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, AND MR. JUSTICE PARKER.

Venkatrayer.....(Petitioner)

Jambho Ayyan.....(Respondent).*

Appeal from insolvency order—Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 588 (17) 589—Act VII of 1888, s. 56—Act X of 1888, s. 3, cl. (a).

Bearing in mind that section 589 of the Code of Civil Procedure was passed to regulate the appellate jurisdiction in appeals from orders, the words 'Court subordinate to that Court' in section 3 of Act X of 1888 must be construed with reference to its appellate jurisdiction. Consequently, a District Court has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from an order in insolvency matters, in a case where it has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal in the suit itself, as when the subject-matter of the suit is more than Rs. 5,000 in value.

PETITION under section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, praying the High Court to revise the order of J. A. Davies, District Judge of Tanjore, passed on appeal against Order, No. 94 of 1891, presented against the order of P. Doraisami Iyer, Acting Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Insolvency Petition No. 2 of 1890 (in connection with Original Suit No. 36 of 1886).

The defendant in Original Suit No. 36 of 1886 applied under Section 344 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, praying that he might be declared an insolvent, being unable to satisfy his debts, which amounted to over Rs. 9,000. The Subordinate Judge granted the petition. The [378] plaintiff in the above suit, a scheduled-creditor of the petitioner, appealed to the District Judge against the order of the Subordinate Judge, who allowed the appeal on the ground that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction in the matter, and that the application for insolvency should have been made to the District Court. The original petitioner preferred this appeal to the High Court against the order of the District Judge on the ground that the appeal should have been made to the High Court.

Srirangachariar and Parthasaradi Ayyangar for Petitioner.

Ramachandra Ayyar and Sivaswami Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—The question before us is whether the appeal lies to the District Court or to the High Court. The suit in which the order was passed was one in which the subject-matter was over Rs. 5,000 in value and the appeal in the suit therefore lay to the High Court.

As section 589 of the Code of Civil Procedure was first enacted, appeals from orders specified under section 588, clause 17, lay in all cases to the High Court. This was modified by Act VII of 1888, in which the Court to hear the appeal in the suit was made the Court to hear the appeal against the orders in insolvency matters. The section thus modified failed, however, to provide for cases in which orders in insolvency matters were passed by Courts of Small Causes, and by Section 3, Act X of 1888, it was provided that an appeal from an order specified in section 588, clause 17, should lie (a) to the District Court when the order was passed by a Court subordinate to that Court ; and (b) to the High Court in any other case.

The question, therefore, is whether clause (a) operates to transfer the jurisdiction from the High Court to the District Court, in cases in which the subject-matter of the suit is over Rs. 5,000 in value. Section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes a Subordinate Court subordinate both to the High Court and the District Court, but the Civil Courts Act gives the appellate jurisdiction exclusively to the High Court in suits in which the subject-matter is over Rs. 5,000 in value. Bearing in mind that section 589 of the Code of Civil Procedure was passed to regulate the appellate jurisdiction in appeals from orders, we are of opinion that the words 'Court subordinate to that Court' must be construed with reference to its appellate jurisdiction. It would be anomalous that a District Court should have jurisdiction to hear appeals from such [379] orders when it had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal in the suit itself, and the first clause in the section points to an intention to give jurisdiction in insolvency matters to the ordinary appellate forum.

We must set aside the order of the District Court and direct that the appeal be returned to the party for presentation in the High Court. Appellant is entitled to his costs in this appeal, but we make no order as to costs in the Court below, since the point was not taken there.

Limitation—Limitation Act, sch. II, art. 178—Applications for probate.

The Limitation Act does not apply to applications for probate, and the applications referred to in art. 178 † of sch. II of that Act are applications under the Code of Civil Procedure. Janaki v. Kesavalu (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 207), Bai Manekbai v. Manekji Kavazji (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 213), and Ishan Chunder Roy in re (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 707), followed.

APPEALS against the orders of T. M. Horsfall, District Judge of Tinnevely, passed on Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 165 of 1892 and Succession Certificate Petition No. 40 of 1892, respectively.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

The petitioner preferred these appeals.

[380] Judgment.—These appeals have been preferred from two orders passed in connection with a previous order made on an application for probate, which was registered as Certificate Case No. 9 of 1892 on the file of the District Court of Tinnevely. The facts of the case, in so far as they relate to that application, are shortly these. A lady at Tuticorin called Ponniya Muthu Nadathi died on the 12th June 1891. Appellant is her father and respondent is her husband. The former applied for probate, alleging that she had left a will and appointed him executor, but the latter contended that the alleged will was a forgery and repudiated appellant's claim to probate. He urged further that she died intestate leaving a son surviving her, though he survived her but for three months, and that respondent was entitled to letters of administration in regard to her estate. But when the application for probate came on for disposal on the 16th February 1892, as the appellant's vakil stated that he had no instructions, the application was dismissed with costs. No appeal was preferred from the order of dismissal.

But on the 10th March 1892 appellant made another application for probate to the District Court. The Judge held that there must first be a petition asking, for reasons stated, that the order on Petition No. 9 of 1892 should be set aside or reviewed, and on the ground that no such petition had been presented; he dismissed the second application for probate with costs on the 7th April 1892. From this order appellant has preferred Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 139 of 1892.

On the 29th April 1892 appellant made an application to the District Court praying that the order of the 16th February 1892 be set aside and the original application for probate be restored to the file. On the 29th July 1892 the Judge dismissed this application as barred. He observed that the rulings in Janaki v. Kesavalu (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 207), Ishan Chunder Roy in re (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 707), and Bai Manekbai v. Manekji Kavasji (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 213) did not apply, as in all these cases the limitation was merely held not to apply to the institution of proceedings, and that in the case before him the proceedings had begun and must, therefore, be governed by the Code of Civil Procedure and the Limitation Act. From this order Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 130 of 1892 has been preferred.

[381] Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 139 of 1892.—The Judge's order in dismissing the second application for probate on the application of 10th March 1892 is clearly bad in law. It was a fresh application for probate, and the Judge was in error in not treating it as such. It was pointed out in Janaki v. Kesavalu (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 207), so early as November 1884, that the Limitation Act was not intended to apply to an application for probate, an application under the Religious Endowments Act, an application for a certificate to collect the debts, an application for the appointment of new trustees, and similar applications. It was also explained in the case of Bai Manekbai v. Manekji Kavasji (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 213) and in re Ishan Chundur Roy (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 707) that article 178 of schedule II of Act XV of 1877 is limited to applications made under the Code of Civil Procedure, that an examination of all the other articles in the second schedule relating to applications, that is to say of the third division of that schedule, shows that the applications therein contemplated are such as are made under the Code of Civil Procedure, and that though article 178, when read alone, seems capable of the widest extension to every application that can possibly be made to a Court, the applications referred to in that article are applications ejusdem generis, i.e., applications under the Code of Civil Procedure, and that any other construction would lead to the most inconvenient results. It is no doubt usual to demand an explanation when there is unreasonable delay in applying for probate, because the time when after the testator's death the will is to be proved is not fixed, and the explanation is necessary to assist the Judge in coming to a finding as to the genuineness of the will propounded. The reason for the exemption of applications for probate from the operation of the Limitation Act probably is that the application for probate is in the nature of an application for permission to perform a duty created by a will or for recognition as a testamentary trustee, and the right to apply continues so long as the object of the trust exists or any part of the trust if really created remains to be executed. The order of the Judge on the application of the 10th March 1892 is set aside, and he is directed to restore the application for probate to his file and to dispose of it on the merits in accordance with law. Respondent will pay appellant's costs in this Court.

[382] Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 130 of 1892.—The order of the Judge cannot be supported. It is wrong, because when the appellant was legally entitled to make a second application on the 10th March 1892, it was not competent to the Judge to impose a restriction upon appellant's right and to direct that he should make an application under the Code of Civil Procedure, so as to let in the law of limitation and indirectly to defeat the object of the legislature in exempting applications for probate from the Act of Limitations. The Judge is also in error in construing section 261, which only renders the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as nearly as may be so as to let in the limitation bar, from which applications for probate are saved.

This order must be, and is hereby, set aside, as both appeals were heard at the same time, and as the same vakils appeared in both, there would be no order for costs in this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, s. 257A—Adjustment of decree out of Court—Instalment bond—Consideration

An instalment bond, executed by a judgment-debtor in favour of the decree-holder and in consideration of the benefit of the decree being given up, is not void as an agreement falling under s. 257A of the Civil Procedure Code. Such an agreement is void only as far as it affects the right to execute the decree, and may be the foundation of a fresh suit. Sellamayyan v. Muthan (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 61), *Jhabor Mahomed v. The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the foregoing and from the judgment of the High Court.

[383] Sankaran Nayar and Sankara Menon for Petitioner.

Narayana Rau for Respondent.

Judgment.—Two questions are argued in support of this petition for revision. The first is that the bond sued on is void as an agreement falling under section 257A of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section is inserted in the Code in the chapter relating to the execution of decrees and in the section headed 'mode of executing decrees.' This suggests that the intention was to render such agreement void only so far as it affects the right to execute the decree. As observed in Sellamayyan v. Muthan (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 61) where the benefit of a decree is given up, and in consideration of it a bond is executed, it cannot be intended that the bond should not be the foundation of a fresh suit. This is also the view taken by the High Court of Calcutta. Hukum Chand Oswal v. Taharunnessa Bibi (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 504), Jhabar Mohamed v. Modan Sonahar (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 671). We are aware that the High Court at Bombay has held otherwise, but the scheme of the Code does not appear to have been allowed due effect in arriving at those decisions.

The second question is whether the suit is time-barred. If, as alleged in the plaint, the first instalment of Rs. 50 was paid in February 1886, as the next instalment was not payable till February 1887, the suit brought in January 1890 was in time. In the revision petition defendants claim credit for the sum of Rs. 50. We cannot, therefore, say the suit is time-barred.

A further question raised is as to the liability of the third defendant for the debt. Third defendant was not a party to the bond on which the suit is brought, and the karar referred to in the bond to which third defendant is alleged to have been a party appears to have been superseded by the plaint bond. We therefore exonerate third defendant from all liability for the debt and direct plaintiff to pay her costs; and we modify the decree as against defendants 1 and 2 by reducing the amount decreed from Rs. 420 to Rs. 370.

Plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 will pay each other's costs throughout proportionate to the amounts now allowed and disallowed.

[On appeal from the High Court at Madras].

Sivaganga sanad of 1803—Failure of suit alleging fraud—Possession known and acquiesced in prior to adjudication—Civil Procedure Code, s. 13.

The High Court of Madras dismissed on the facts a suit brought in 1886, grounded on fraud attributed to the lineal ancestor of the principal defendant, in obtaining, in 1803, the grant of the sanad of the Sivaganga Zamindari, to which the plaintiff claimed title. The plaintiff's case was that the defendant's ancestor, the younger of two brothers, had fraudulently caused the sanad to be made out in his own name, whereas it was intended to be, and ought to have been, a grant to the elder brother, who was the plaintiff's lineal ancestor. Those through whom the plaintiff claimed had not made any such charge, although they had knowledge of all the facts connected with the grant of the sanad of 1803 to the younger brother, and with the long possession by him and his descendants, among whom there had been litigation, resulting in a decision as to the ownership :

Held, that this suit could not be maintained to re-open the question.

APPEAL from a decree (20th March 1889) of the High Court, affirming, after a remand, a decree (20th November 1886) of the District Court of Madura, dismissing the appellant's suit.

In this suit for the proprietary right and possession of the Sivaganga Zamindari, the question which the plaintiff sought to raise related to the selection by the Government of Madras of a successor to the former zamindar of Sivaganga, named Sasivarna, whose lineal heirs became extinct in the last century. In 1801 his surviving collateral relations were the Tevar family, then consisting of two brothers, and of these the younger was appointed by proclamation to be zamindar, and in 1803 received a sanad from the Government. It was claimed that the elder brother, Padamattur Woyar Tevar, from whom the plaintiff was fifth in descent, was intended to be appointed zamindar, but the name of the younger brother, Gauri Vallaba Woyar Tevar, was by fraud inserted in the sanad, and that his line of descendants had thus come into possession.

[385] The principal point on this appeal was whether, after judicial decision and the open and known succession of the younger brother and his branch of the family, considered along with the grant made to him, the right of the elder brother could now be held to be an open question. Two Courts had found no proof of fraud.

The appointment of the zamindar in 1801 was made by proclamation on the 6th July. The sanad was dated the 22nd April 1803, and was forwarded to the Collector for delivery to the zamindar, whom it styled Muttu Rangunadha Gauri Vallaba Wulla Worria Tevar. This the younger brother received and continued in possession till he died in 1829. The elder brother lived till 1814 and left sons, but neither he nor they set up any claim to the zamindari.

Gauri Vallaba left no son, but a posthumous daughter, Katama Natchiar, was born to him. Between her and others of his immediate family on the one hand, and his collateral relations on the other, the succession was disputed. Suits followed in which the elder branch, claiming through Padamattur Goyar Tevar, was represented. The report of Srimut Mootoo Vijaya (Ragunadha Gauri Vallaba Peria Woodia Tevar v. Rani Angamuthu Natchiar) (3 Moore, I. A. Ca., 278) shows the earlier litigation, but the principal cases bearing on the present one were Katama Natchiar v. The Raja of Sivaganga (9 Moore, I. A. Ca., 539; see also 11 Moore, I. A., 50), decided in 1863 (which decided that the zamindari was to be taken as 'self-acquired' property in the hands of the 'Istemrar zamindar,' in other words in the possession of Gauri Vallaba Tevar), and Muttu Vaduganadha Tevar v. Dora Singha Tevar (I. L. R., 3 Mad., 290). In this last case, Dora Singha Tevar, the eldest surviving grandson of the 'Istemrar zamindar,' was held solely entitled to the impartible estate of Sivaganga; and in the judgment all the anterior facts material to a report of the present one are to be found at p. 298 of I. L. R., 3 Mad. From 1866, when the judgment in 11 Moore, I. A., 50, was given, the younger branch of the Tevar family remained in possession.

This suit was brought on the 4th January 1886 against Periasami, the son of Dora Singha Tevar. As defendants with him [386] were joined his brothers, and also purchasers who had become, from time to time, interested in the estate, bringing the number up to 124. The plaintiff claimed a declaration that the judgment of 30th November 1863 in Katama Natchiar (the daughter of Gauri Vallaba Tevar) v. Bodha Gaurasami Peria Odaya (the plaintiff's father) (9 Moore, I. A. Ca., 539) was not binding upon him, having been obtained by fraud. He complained that in consequence of that decision, Katama ousted his father in 1864 and continued in possession till her death in 1877, after which Dora Singha Tevar, the father of the defendant Periasami, obtained possession from Katama's son by the decree of the Madras Courts, dated the 14th May 1881, affirmed in appeal in Muttuvadhana Tevar v. Dora Singha Tevar (I. L. R., 3 Mad., 290) and held possession till his death on the 19th July 1883, when Periasami, his eldest son, succeeded to the impartible zamindari. He alleged that when his father, Bodha Gurusami, died in 1872, he was left an infant of eight years of age; that he came of age in 1882, 27th December, and acquired the knowledge of the fraudulent acts in 1885. The details of these acts he did not specify.

The defendant by his written statement, in which his younger brothers joined, contended that the fact of the zamindari having been acquired by his maternal great grandfather Gauri Vallaba Tevar had been conclusively settled as a matter adjudicated within section 13, Civil Procedure, by the judgment above mentioned (9 Moore, I. A. Ca., 543), which could not be set aside. He denied that there had been fraud in the obtaining the sanad of 1803, and urged the insufficiency of the allegations on account of their vagueness. He also set up limitation.

Issues raising the above points having been fixed, the plaintiff filed a more definite statement, that, in 1802, when the permanent settlement was submitted to the Collector of Madura, Gauri Vallaba fraudulently inserted his name and title between those of his brother Padamattur Woya Tevar, so as to enable him to assert that he was the grantee of the zamindari; and that "in 1803 the Government forwarded to the elder Woya Tevar, through the Collector, an istemrar sanad for the zamindari, but Gauri Vallaba kept possession of it, and pretended that he was the person named therein as grantee."

[387] The plaintiff also alleged that "Gauri Vallaba caused the permanent settlement accounts and other documents which were in the Collector's office, and which stood in the name of Woya Tevar, to be concealed or destroyed."

Other charges were made, but the main fraud alleged was that Gauri Vallaba had caused his own name to be inserted in the sanad. The suit was dismissed on the 20th November 1886 by the District Judge, who held it barred by the decision in 1863, and also by limitation. He recorded no express finding as to whether fraud had taken place or not. On appeal the High Court (KERNAN and WILKINSON, JJ.) remanded the record for a finding on this latter question, which had been raised by an issue, pointing out that, at the time of the decision of 1863, the question of fraud had not arisen, and was now alleged not to have been known. They added that it was now alleged that Gauri Vallaba Tevar had fraudulently caused the preparation of the sanad, having arranged that accounts should be given by the Collector's office, containing the insertion of his own name as zamindar, and making it appear that his was the name of the person to whom the sanad should issue.

On this remand, the District Judge finally found, on all the evidence, that the allegations of fraud were not proved. He concluded that there was no evidence of the fraud alleged as to Gauri Vallaba Tevar having got his own name inserted in the sanad in the place of that of his elder brother, or that the Government had intended to make the grant to the latter.

Objections were filed by the plaintiff. The same Division Bench of the High Court then dismissed the appeal, giving the following judgment:—

"The plaintiff's case is based on allegation of fraud having been committed by Gauri Vallaba Tevar on his elder brother in 1802 and 1803 by preparing false accounts showing that he, Gauri Vallaba Tevar, was the person who was proclaimed zamindar in 1801, and by inducing thereby the Government to grant the zamindari in his name. All those acts of alleged fraud have been fully investigated by the District Judge, and he has, after careful examination, negatived them. It is not necessary to repeat his observations in which, however, we agree. The conduct of the elder brother of Gauri Vallaba Tevar and of his grandson after his death contain the clearest evidence that the [388] sanad granted in the name of Gauri Vallaba Tevar was known to them and, although there were various suits between the parties, this fraud was not set up until this suit was filed.

"In the suit in 1836 the grandson of the elder brother admitted that the younger brother was installed as zamindar, but he says it was with the elder brother's consent. The installation of the younger brother took place in 1801 in Colonel Agrew's camp and the evidence of Mr. Hughes, referred to by the District Judge, shows that, amongst the people who then held up their hands in homage to the newly-installed zamindar, the younger brother, was his elder brother.

"The parties have had the sanad in the name of Gauri Vallaba Tevar before them for eighty years and had ample opportunity of inquiry, and the plaintiff had entirely failed to prove his allegation, and we dismiss the appeal with separate costs to the zamindar and to the lessees."

On this appeal Mr. T. H. Cozue, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. R. V. Doyne for the Respondent.

For the appellant, the argument was, in outline, as follows :—The decision of 1863 in favour of Katama Natchiar was based on the assumption that Gauri Vallaba was the person in whom the Government intended that the zamindari should vest in 1801 and 1803. This was no bar to the present suit, which was brought upon the contention that the elder brother was intended to be the zamindar, and that the insertion of Gauri Vallaba's name in the sanad of 1803 was effected by his fraud. There were errors in dealing with the evidence in the Courts below, which should be held to affect the findings upon this question, and to leave it open to reconsideration. Counsel for the respondents was not called upon.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Hobhouse.

Judgment.—This case appears to their Lordships to be a very simple one. The appellant contends that by a fraud alleged to have been committed in the years 1802 and 1803 by Gauri Vallaba Tevar, a sanad appointing him zamindar of Sivaganga was granted to him by the Government in 1803, whereas it should have been granted to his elder brother Woya Tevar. But Gauri Vallaba Tevar entered upon the zamindari at that time, and he and his descendants have enjoyed it ever since.

[389] It is quite clear that there could have been no secrecy about his appointment to be zamindar. The matter was the subject of public proclamation, and Woya Tevar must have known, and all his descendants must have known, that the sanad granting the zamindari was in the name of Gauri Vallaba Tevar, and that the zamindari was actually occupied and enjoyed by Gauri Vallaba Tevar and his descendants.

No suit can be brought forward at the present time to re-open the question, and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the decree of the High Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, s. 283—Whether defendant may plead that the decree in question was collusively obtained.

A defendant in a suit brought under section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, who is connected with the judgment-debtor as being reversionary heir of the judgment debtor's husband, or as being his coparcener, may show that the decree, in execution of which the property in dispute was attached, was collusively obtained. Gulibai v. Jagannath Galvankar (I. L. R., 10 Bom., 659) dissented from.

APPEAL against the order of J. A. Davies, District Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 577 of 1891, reversing the decree of T. Venkataramaiyar, District Munsif of Valangiman, in Original Suit No. 247 of 1890.

This was a suit under section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure to establish the plaintiff's right to proceed against certain [390] property of Sitaramayyan, against whose widow the plaintiff held a decree. The District Munsif, having determined that decree to be fraudulent, dismissed this suit.

On appeal by the plaintiff, the District Judge, relying on Gulibai v. Jagannath Galvankar (I. L. R., 10 Bom., 659), reversed the decree of the District Munsif and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant preferred this appeal.

Subramanya Ayyar for Appellant.

Mr. Norton and Sankaran Nayar for Respondent.

Judgment.—We are of opinion that the decision of the Judge cannot be supported.

It is not necessary, for the purposes of this suit, to determine whether it is open to the plaintiff in a suit brought under section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure to ask for consequential relief in addition to a declaration establishing his right to the property. If it were necessary to decide the question, we should certainly hold that even a plaintiff could do so, and thus avoid a multiplicity of suits. Such is also the opinion of JARDINE and TELANG, JJ., in Sadu Bin Raghu v. Ram Bin Govind (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 608).

The question before us is whether a defendant in such a suit is precluded from showing that the decree, in execution of which the property in dispute was attached, was collusively obtained. Such a defence would not be ordinarily available or necessary when the defendant is an utter stranger, in no way connected with the judgment-debtor, unless, it may be, the decree makes the debt a charge on the property claimed. In the present case, however, the Munsif considered the defendant interested in setting up the defence either as reversionary heir of the judgment-debtor's husband Seetharamiah or as a coparcener of his. We are unable to hold that such a defence is not open to a party interested in making it in a suit brought under section 283. We do not see our way to following the decision in Gulibai v. Jagannath Galvenkar (I. L. R., 10 Bom., 659), as in our opinion section 283 does not introduce an exception to the rule that the defendant is bound to set up every defence available to him. Moreover; we think it unreasonable that he should be compelled to submit to a decree that may result in his eviction and thus have to bring a fresh suit for restoration.

[391] We must observe, however, that the defence is only available to the defendant if he is interested as mentioned above.

We set aside the order of remand and send back the appeal to the District Judge for disposal with reference to the foregoing observations.

The costs of this appeal will abide and follow the result.

A person who performs a ceremony of marriage according to Hindu form between a Native Christian and a Hindu commits an offence under section 68 of Act XV of 1872, unless he is authorized to solemnize marriages under section 5 of the Act.

PETITION under sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of H. T. Ross, Sessions Judge of Godavari acquitting the prisoners in Calendar Case No. 39 of 1891.

The third accused, a Hindu, performed the ceremony of marriage according to Hindu form between the first accused, who was a Native Christian at the time, and a Hindu girl, who was given in marriage by the second accused, her uncle. The Sessions Judge acquitted the accused persons on the ground that Section 68 of the Christian Marriage Act (XV of 1872) does not apply to marriages in Hindu form, solemnized by a Hindu, though one of the parties is [392] The Acting Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor (Subramanya Ayyar) for the Crown.

Mr. Mitchell for the Accused.

Judgment:— We cannot agree with the view taken by the Sessions Judge. The preamble and sections 4, 5 and 68 of the present Act XV of 1872 are almost identical with the preamble and sections 4, 5 and 56 of Act V of 1865.

Section 68, as amended by section 6, Act II of 1891, makes punishable the solemnization of a marriage between persons of whom one is a Christian, unless the person solemnizing such marriage has been authorized for that purpose under section 5. It is conceded that the third accused was not authorized under section 5, and hence the case is exactly similar to that in Proceedings of the Madras High Court, dated 21st March, 1871 (6 M. H. C. R. App. 20) and the accused are, prima facie, liable to punishment.

We are told that this application has been made by Government merely to obtain an authoritative declaration of the law and a re-trial is not pressed for, having regard to the length of time which has elapsed.

We, therefore, do not think it necessary to pass any further order.

Hindu law—Maintenance—Forfeiture of widow's right to maintenance by reason of unchastity.

The unchastity of a widow deprives her wholly of her right to maintenance, and the fact that there has been an agreement as to maintenance makes no difference. Valu v. Ganga (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 84) and Vishnu Shambhog v. Manjamma (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 108) followed. SECOND APPEAL against the decree of P. Subbayar, Subordinate Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 246 of 1892, reversing [393] the decree of J. P. Fernandez, District Munsif of Kundapur, in Original Suit No. 108 of 1891.

Plaintiff in this case, the widow of defendant's deceased son, Subraya Hebbara, sued for recovery of Rs. 20-2-6, being the value of rice and money with interest, due for her maintenance from October 1890 to April 1891 under a deed of agreement executed by the defendant on 6th March 1887.

The defendant admitted the agreement, but averred that the plaintiff had been living in adultery for a year and a half, that she had been degraded from caste for her pregnancy, and that thereby she forfeited her right to maintenance.

* Second Appeal No. 684 of 1893.

The plaintiff in her statement in answer to defendant's statement admitted having been put out of caste in consequence of pregnancy, but denied having lived in adultery, her pregnancy being the result of a forcible connection, and contended that the agreement was not invalidated by such pregnancy.

The Subordinate Judge reversed the decree of the District Munsif in favour of the plaintiff, who preferred this appeal.

Judgment.—We must follow the decision in Valu v. Ganga (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 84) and Vishnu Shambhog v. Manjamma (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 108) and hold that unchastity of a widow deprives her wholly of her right to maintenance. No text has been cited in favour of the theory that a bare maintenance can be allowed. The fact that there has been an agreement in our opinion makes no difference. It merely fixes the amount and the security. We must dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—We are of opinion that from an order under section 231 of the Code of Civil Procedure, being an order relating to the execution of a decree between the parties to the decree within the meaning of section 244 of the same Code, an appeal lies. If all the joint decree-holders apply for execution, there can be no doubt that the order passed on such application, whether refusing or granting it, will be appealable. Section 231 provides for the case in which all the decree-holders are unable or are unwilling to join in the application, and in such case enables one or more of such decree-holders to apply for execution of the whole decree, and then the Court is authorized to impose such terms as are necessary for the protection of the interests of the other decree-holders. This appears to us to disclose an intention to provide [395] facility for executing decrees even when all the decree-holders are unable or unwilling to join in applying for execution. It is no doubt true that the Court has discretion to refuse execution for sufficient cause; but that is no reason for holding such order to be other than an order relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of section 244. In Gooroo Doss Roy v. Ram Ruginee Dossia (17 W.R., 136), which was followed in Odhoya Pershad v. Mahadeo Dutt Bhandaree (17 W.R., 415), the question was not between the decree-holder on one side and the judgment-debtor on the other, but merely between two of the joint decree-holders. With reference to the learned Judge's observation, we find that there has been no contest as between the decree-holders, but only an allegation that some of them had come to terms with the judgment-debtor.

We set aside the order of the learned Judge and of the Lower Appellate Court, and remand the case to the District Judge for replacement on the file and disposal on the merits, so far as the order of the District Munsif cancels the previous order in favour of third plaintiff.

The costs in this Court and the District Court will abide and follow the result.

Respondents.Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 124—Suit for having the appointment of a karnam declared void.

A suit by existing karnams for having the appointment of another person as a karnam jointly with themselves declared void does not fall within the provision of article 124† of the Limitation Act.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 545 of 1891, confirming the [396] decree of O. V. Nunjundeh Ayyar, District Munsif of Masulipatam, in Original Suit No. 130 of 1890.

The third defendant was appointed a village karnam by the first and second defendants, who were the receiver and manager, respectively, of the estate in which the village was situated. The plaintiffs, who were already karnams of that village, filed this suit to set aside the appointment. It appeared that the third defendant was appointed a karnam on the ground that the existing karnams did not discharge the duties of their office efficiently, and that his father, who had died ten years before the suit, had been a karnam, but had for ten years previously performed no duties as such. The District Judge, in affirming the decree of the District Munsif, held that the third defendant having been out of possession of this hereditary office for twenty years, had lost all right to it, and was barred by article 124 of the Limitation Act.

The third defendant preferred this appeal.

karnams for having declared void the appointment of third defendant as karnam jointly with themselves. We observe that the appointment was made under the orders of the Collector administering the estate on behalf of the zamindar, on the ground that the existing karnams did not discharge the duties of their office with efficiency.

As regards respondents' contention that the third defendant was appointed as an additional karnam, we find that the third defendant's father had been karnam of the village, and it was quite open to the landholder, in fact it was his duty, to fill up the vacancy caused by the third defendant's father's death under section 7 of the Regulation XXIX of 1802. The faisal number of karnams cannot be reduced without the sanction of the Board of Revenue, and the omission to appoint a successor to the third defendant's father was contrary to the policy of that section. The appointment of the third defendant, instead of being open to objection, was therefore merely in accordance with the requirements of the regulation.

It is contended that the third defendant's right to the office was barred, as his father had died ten years previously, and he has [397] also during the last ten years of his life ceased to do the duties of kurnam, though his name was retained in the list of kurnams. The question is not whether the third defendant's right to claim the office is barred, but whether the Collector had no power to make the appointment.

The appointment of a stranger even by a zamindar when a vacancy exists would be open to no objection on the ground of its not being made within twelve years of the vacancy occurring, and we fail to understand why the appointment of an heir should be open to objection on this ground.

We set aside the decrees of both the lower Courts and direct that the suit be dismissed with costs throughout to be paid by plaintiffs (first and second respondents).

Indian Ports Act—Act X of 1889, s. 6. cl. k—Local Government's rules thereunder—Boats plying and not plying for hire—' Ultra vires '

It is only with regard to boats plying for hire that section 6 of Act X of 1889 gives the Local Government authority to make rules. Rules purporting to make it obligatory on boat owners to ply for hire are ultra vires.

* Criminal Revision Cases Nos. 290 to 297 of 1893.

PETITIONS under sections 435 and 436 of the Criminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the finding and sentence of the First-Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Negapatam, passed in summary trials Nos. 1, 5 to 7 and 9 to 11 of 1893.

In these cases the owners of boats in the Port of Negapatam were fined various sums for refusing to take out their boats to a certain steamer, when called upon by the Port Officer to do so. The convictions were under rules 1 and 23 of the boat rules sanctioned [398] in Madras G. O., No. 503, dated 16th November 1891, passed under section 6, clause (k) of Act X of 1889. The rules in question were as follows :—

“ Owners of boats shall be subject to the control of the registering officer appointed by Government, and shall carry out at all times all orders issued by him in connection with the plying of their boats and which are not inconsistent with any of these rules, and shall supply the tindal of each registered boat with a printed copy of these rules and of any orders issued by the registering officer, which copy shall be shown by such tindal to any passenger by such boat demanding to see the same.

“ No owner of a registered boat licensed to ply for hire, not being a steam launch, and no person in charge of such boat, shall refuse to let on hire such boat without having and assigning reasonable cause for such refusal to the satisfaction of the registering officer.”

Mr. Grant for Petitioners.

The Acting Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor (Subramanya Ayyar, in support of the conviction.

Collins, C. J.—The accused were convicted for refusing to take out their licensed boats to certain steamers when called on by the Port Officer to do so. The Acting Sessions Judge, who refers this case, admits that the accused were rightly convicted under certain boat rules made by the Local Government under the powers given by section 6 of Act X of 1889, but suggests that those rules are ultra vires. Clause (k) is the clause in the Act under which the Local Government acted, and boat rules 20 to 23 are the rules under which the convictions took place. It is contended on the part of the accused that at the time the Port Officer issued his orders they were not plying, and that therefore the order of the Port Officer was not a lawful one. I do not think that there is any power in the Local Government to make rules compelling owners of licensed boats to ply their boats at all times, and if they have a discretion to ply or not, the Port Officer's orders to ply are not lawful orders. These boat rules 20 to 23 appear to be ultra vires, and the convictions must be set aside and the fines, if paid, refunded. In summary trial No. 4 of 1893 if the boat was unseaworthy as it is stated, I agree with the Acting Sessions Judge that the complaint was vexatious and frivolous and ought not to have been made.

[399] Shepherd, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the rules 1 and 23, so far as they purport to make it obligatory on boat owners to ply for hire, are ultra vires, and therefore void and of no effect. It is only with regard to boats plying for hire that section 6 of the Act gives the Government authority to make rules.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Petitioner.

Narayana Rau for Respondent.

Judgment.—The petitioner, Upendra Bhatta, obtained a money decree in Original Suit No. 206 of 1883 on the file of the District Munsif of Karakal against one Shridhara Bhatta. Shridhara Bhatta having died, execution was applied for against his sons, widow and undivided brothers as his heirs. In course of execution a certain piece of land called Mudanga bettu was attached and advertised for sale. Counter-petitioner, Ranganatha Bhatta, [400] one of the brothers of the deceased Shridhara Bhatta, objected to the sale on the ground that this land under the will of Sridhara Bhatta's father belonged to a certain temple. The District Munsif found that the land in question did not form portion of the land devised to the temple by the will, and ordered execution to proceed. Present counter-petitioner appealed to the District Court, which, after calling for a further finding from the District Munsif, reversed his order and dismissed the execution petition so far as it related to the Mudanga bettu land. The judgment-creditor, Upendra Bhatta, objects by this revision petition to the proceedings of the District Court on the ground that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal against the District Munsif's order, inasmuch as that order was passed under the claim sections of the Civil Procedure Code, ss. 278 to 283, and therefore by section 283 no appeal lies against such order, but counter-petitioner's remedy was by regular suit. The objection was not raised in the District Court, but being one relating to jurisdiction, we cannot but entertain it.

The argument on the other side is that the question which the District Munsif had to decide was one between the parties to the suit or their representatives, and relating to the execution, of the decree, within the meaning of

* Civil Revision Petition No. 38 of 1892.

Section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, and therefore was one to be decided by the Court executing the decree, and not by separate suit. This view is in accordance with the later decisions of all the High Courts. In some earlier decisions of the Allahabad High Court distinctions were drawn between cases where the judgment-debtor or his representatives set up a title in themselves, and those when they set up a title as trustees on behalf of third parties or of charities. But the later decisions adopting the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Abeedoonissa Khatoon v. Ameeroonissa Khatoon (L.R., 4 I.A., 66) have established that when the question is whether the property in dispute belongs to the judgment-debtor or to his estate or not, and that question is raised in a proceeding in execution between parties to the suit or their representatives, it matters not on what grounds the objection is taken to the property being made the subject of execution, and the question is one to be determined in execution, and section 244 bars a separate suit. Kuriali v. [401] Mayan (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 255), Ravunni Menon v. Kunju Nayar (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 117), Punchanun Budopudhya v. Rambia Bibi (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 711), Nimba Harishet v. Sitaram Paraji (I. We must hold that the District Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and dismiss this Revision Petition with costs.

Penal Code—Act XLV of 1860, s. 378, illustration (o)—Theft—Whether a dishonest removal by a wife of her husband's property left in her custody amounts to theft.

There is no presumption of law that a wife and husband constitute one person in India for the purpose of criminal law. If the wife, removing her husband's property from his house, does so with dishonest intention, she is guilty of theft.

CASE referred for the orders of the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code by A. W. B. Higgins, District Magistrate of Godavari, in his letter dated 23rd February 1893, No. 89.

* Criminal Revision Case No. 88 of 1893.

charged the wife and her paramour with theft. The Second-Class Magistrate convicted both of theft, but the Deputy Magistrate, on appeal acquitted the wife on the strength of illustration (o) to section 378 of the Indian Penal Code, which he interpreted as meaning that the paramour, and not the wife should be treated as the thief in such cases.

On this the District Magistrate referred the case for the orders of the High Court.

[402] The Acting Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor (Subramanya Ayyar) for the Crown.

Judgment:—There is no presumption of law that the wife and husband constitute one person in India for the purposes of criminal law. Theft is an offence against property, and where there is no community of property, each may commit theft in regard to the property of the other. The question is one of intention. If the wife, removing the husband's property from his house, does so with dishonest intention, she is guilty of theft. Her joint possession may in many cases give rise to a presumption that she had authority from her husband to give the property, but this is a presumption of fact, and it may be rebutted. The intent with which the husband's property is removed is a question of fact, and where a dishonest conversion is intended, it clearly amounts to theft.

We set aside the Deputy Magistrate's order acquitting the first accused and direct that the appeal so far as she is concerned be restored to the file and disposed of with reference to the above observations.

Criminal Procedure Code—Act X of 1882, ss. 531, 532 and 537—Commitment to Sessions Court by Magistrate having no jurisdiction over place where alleged offence was committed—Exercise of powers duly conferred.

A Magistrate who commits a case for trial by a Sessions Court does so in the exercise of powers duly conferred upon him, and the fact that he had no territorial jurisdiction over the place where the alleged offence was committed, and that an objection to the committal on this ground was taken before the commitment, is no ground for the Court to which the commitment is made quashing it under section 532 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The Queen-Empress v James Ingle (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 200), followed.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellants.

The Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor (Mr. Powell) in support of the conviction.

Parker, J.—I do not think we are bound to set aside the conviction and sentence of the Sessions Court merely on the ground that the committing Magistrate had no territorial jurisdiction over the place in which the offence is alleged to have been committed. The order of commitment was an order under section 531, Criminal Procedure Code, and is not liable to be set aside because the proceedings were taken in a wrong place, unless the error occasioned a failure of justice. The Magistrate was himself empowered to commit to the Sessions, and did not in so doing usurp an authority to which he was not entitled. I do not think section 532, Code of Criminal Procedure, applies. See The Queen-Empress v. James Ingle (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 200). Nor am I of opinion that the institution of proceedings in the wrong sub-division has occasioned a failure of justice. The Sessions Court which tried the case had territorial jurisdiction, even though the committing Magistrate had not. Under section 537, Code of Criminal Procedure, we should not be justified in reversing the sentence on account of the irregularity previous to the trial.

Best, J.—Before proceeding to the merits of this appeal, a legal objection to the validity of the trial has to be considered.

It is urged on behalf of appellants that the Joint Magistrate, by whom the case was referred to the Second-class Magistrate for inquiry with a view to the committal of the case for trial by the Sessions Court was without jurisdiction in the case, and that, as the objection was taken before the commitment, the commitment ought to have been quashed under section 532 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The section is as follows: "If any Magistrate or other authority purporting to exercise powers duly conferred, which were not so conferred, commits an accused person for trial before a Court of Session or High Court, the Court to which the commitment is made may, after perusal of the proceedings, accept the commitment if it considers that the accused has not been injured thereby, unless [404] during the inquiry and before the order of commitment objection was made on behalf either of the accused or of the prosecution to the jurisdiction of such Magistrate or other authority.

"If such Court considers that the accused was injured, or if such objection was so made, it shall quash the commitment and direct a fresh inquiry by a competent Magistrate."

The words 'purporting to exercise powers duly conferred' at the beginning of this section appears to me to have reference to section 206 of the Code, and to signify 'power to commit for trial,' and, as all Magistrates in this Presidency are empowered to commit to the Court of Session, I am of opinion that this objection must be disallowed. There can be no doubt that the Sessions Court of the North Arcot District is the proper Court to which the case should have been committed, and, as the commitment, even if irregular, cannot have prejudiced the accused, the objection must be further disallowed with reference to the provisions of section 537 of the Code.

Seeing no reason to differ from the finding arrived at by the Judge and assessors we dismiss these appeals.

Ordered accordingly.

Revenue Recovery Act—Madras Act II of 1864, s. 11—Whether gathered products belonging to a tenant can be distrained by Government on account of the landlord's arrears of revenue.

Government can attach for arrears of revenue under section 11 * of Madras Act II of 1864 the gathered products belonging to a tenant, provided that the products are of the land on account of which the arrears of revenue have accrued.

CASE stated under section 617 of the Civil Procedure Code by W. C. Holmes, District Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 339 of 1892.

[405] This reference arose from a suit in which a landlord sued his tenant, inter alia, for 10 mudies of rice-rent, in respect of which the tenant denied his liability on the ground that the said rice was distrained by the Revenue authorities in satisfaction of arrears of revenue due by the landlord.

* Referred Case No. 138 of 1893.

†[Sec. 11:—The distrainer attaching the crops or ungathered products of the land belonging to a defaulter, may cause them to be sold when fit for reaping or gathering, or, at his option, may cause them to be reaped or gathered in due season, and stored in proper places until sold. In the latter case, the expense of reaping or gathering and restoring such crops or products shall be defrayed by the owner upon his redeeming the property, or from the proceeds of the sale in the event of its being sold. When crops or products belonging to a tenant shall have been sold, it shall be lawful for such tenant to deduct the value of the crops or products so sold from any rent which may be due by him, then or afterwards, to the defaulter, in respect of the land on which such crops or products have been grown. It shall also be lawful for a tenant whose crops are attached for an arrear of revenue to pay the arrear and deduct the amount in the aforesaid manner from any rent due by him, then or afterwards.]

The District Judge decided that section 11 of Madras Act II of 1864 does not empower the Revenue authorities to distrain gathered products in possession of a tenant for arrears of revenue accruing on the land, but referred the point to the High Court as being one not free from doubt.

Narayana Rau for Appellant.

Respondent was not represented.

Judgment.—Our answer to the question is that the Government can attach, under section 11 of Madras Act II of 1864, for arrears of revenue, gathered products belonging to a tenant, provided that they are the products of the land on account of which the arrears of revenue have accrued.

The products belonging to a tenant are made liable by the section, and clause 3 gives a right to the tenant to deduct the value of the same from rent then due or thereafter to become due to the landlord on account of the land on which the products were grown.

It follows that the products liable to distraint are the products of the defaulter's land, though such products may belong to the tenant.

Religious endowment --Powers of a Christian congregation to elect under which Bishoprick the endowment should be placed in spiritual matters —Effect of a concordat placing the endowment within the territorial jurisdiction of a certain Bishop—Suit for partition of the endowment.

In the year 1806, a fund was started by a caste of Roman Catholic boatmen in Royapuram for the purpose of supplying the religious wants of the caste, and in 1829 the Church of St. Peter at Royapuram was erected. The fund was under the control of the Government Marine Board which, in 1830, in consequence of disputes between the headmen of the caste, suspended all payments. In 1863, a member of the caste, claiming to be sole surviving headman, brought a suit against Government for a declaration that he was sole surviving headman and as such entitled to the sole management of the funds then in the hands of Government, which funds the Government paid into Court to the credit of the said suit. By the decree in this suit it was declared that the fund in question belonged to the whole body of Roman Catholic boatmen in Royapuram, that it must be devoted to the religious observances of the body, and that it rested with that body to determine whether in spiritual matters the Church should continue under the Vicar Apostolic or the Goanese Bishop of Mylapore.

* Appeal No. 11 of 1892.

In 1886 a concordat was executed between the Pope of Rome and the King of Portugal, the effect of which was to place St. Peter's Church within the territorial jurisdiction of the Vicar Apostolic. Plaintiffs, who were members of the Goanese party, complained that, having regard to the effect of the concordat of 1886, it would be impossible for their party—even if in a majority—to elect a priest of their own party, and prayed for a division of the fund :

Held, that even if this were so, this fact would not justify the Court in taking away from St. Peter's Church part of its endowment.

APPEAL from the decree of SHEPARD, J., sitting on the Original Side of the High Court in Suit No. 124 of 1889.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the foregoing, and from the judgment of the High Court.

Judgment.—We agree with the learned Judge that the plaintiffs have not been able to show that the position of themselves or their party has, in a canonical point of view, been materially affected by the concordat of 1886. The plaintiffs, no doubt, belong to the caste of Christian boatmen, for whose religious benefit the fund was originally intended. But by the decree in Original Suit No. 105 of 1863, it was decided that it was for the majority of the caste to determine whether in spiritual matters, the Church of St. Peter at Royapuram should be placed under the Vicar Apostolic or under the Goanese Bishop of Mylapore. Although the result of the first caste meeting held in pursuance of that decree was to place the Church under the Bishop of Mylapore, the order of 30th January 1867 recognized the election of the Rev. T. Gnanaprakasa Nadar as the successor of the Rev. Vincent de Silva. The Rev. T. Gnanaprakasa Nadar was subordinate to the Vicar Apostolic, and ever since 1867 the Church of St. Peter has remained under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Bishop of Madras.

The concordat of 1886 and the decree of 1887 have not, therefore, affected the position of the plaintiffs with regard to the sacraments called 'parabolism.' If plaintiffs are unable now to obtain these sacraments in St. Peter's Church, they have been under the same disability since 1867, and the concordat between the Pope and the King of Portugal has not altered their position in respect to these sacraments.

All that can be alleged by plaintiffs as a grievance against the concordat is that at any future election of a priest by the members of the boatmen caste, it may be practically impossible for the adherents of the Goanese party—even if in a majority—to elect a priest of their own party, since by the concordat, St. Peter's Church has been definitely placed within the territorial jurisdiction of the Vicar Apostolic. We are by no means clear that this result would necessarily follow. Seeing that the differences settled by the concordat related only to questions of patronage and jurisdiction, and did not touch the validity of the orders of either party or the faith of the Church, it may be that a Goanese priest, if elected, would be granted the necessary faculties by the Supreme Pontiff or the Vicar Apostolic. It appears from the evidence of Father [408] Mayer, the Vicar-General under the Archbishop of Madras, that such canonical faculties can be given, though no doubt they very rarely are given. But even if supreme ecclesiastical authority has imposed upon the priests of the Goanese party a prohibition to accept this particular office, it appears to us that such prohibition is a matter of ecclesiastical jurisdiction with which the Courts have nothing to do. It could hardly be contended that it would not be open to the Supreme Pontiff to impose such a prohibition upon any individual priest in obedience to the See of Rome. And the possibility that the right of the caste to have one of the Goanese clergy as their officiating priest might be terminated by the permanent surrender of the church to the jurisdiction of the Vicar Apostolic was clearly contemplated by SCOTLAND, C.J., and BITTLESTON, J., in Civil Suit No. 136 of 1866, and by TURNER, C.J., in his judgment in Civil Suit No. 102 of 1880.

It is not, however, necessary for us to speculate upon a contingency which may never arise, for even if the practical effect of the concordat is to prevent the election of a Goanese priest, it is clear that that fact will not justify the Court in taking away from St. Peter's Church part of its endowment and bestowing that part upon the Church of St. Anthony. It was held in Civil Suit No. 105 of 1863, and re-affirmed in Civil Suit No. 102 of 1880, that the purpose of the fund was the erection of a church for the use of the caste of Christian boatmen at Royapuram, the performance of divine worship therein and other religious observances connected with the church, and to that purpose the whole property must be devoted. The question of the division of the fund so as to endow two churches for the use of the two parties has been previously considered, and it has been twice held that on principle and authority no such division can be made, and that the fund and the church cannot be separated.

Finally it was urged for the appellants that they were entitled to their costs out of the fund, since they had a bond fide grievance, and that the Advocate-General had accorded his sanction for the bringing of the suit. We have already shown that the concordat has not altered the existing position of the plaintiffs with regard to the rites of the church, which remain the same as it has been since 1867, while the possible future grievance, if it exist at all, is one with which the ecclesiastical authorities alone can deal. As regards the sanction of the Advocate-General, it is rightly pointed [409] out that it is no part of the duty of that officer to decide the case as a Judge, and that if an apparently good and bond fide grievance is shown, he may properly leave the applicants to bring the suit at their own risk. When, however, we find that an opportunity has been taken of a friendly settlement of differences between the highest authorities in Church and State to re-agitate in a hostile spirit questions long ago decided against the party of the appellants, we can see no reason why they should not be left to bear their own expenses. It would be an evil precedent if litigants were advised or encouraged to think that they could renew litigation with impunity, drawing the expenses of so doing from trust funds and not from their own pockets. We cannot but see how the very existence of such a fund as this may offer temptation to fomenters of litigation and encouragement for speculative actions. The last suit, which was decided by Sir CHARLES TURNER on December 5th, 1883 cost the fund no less than Rs. 20,366. The present suit, which is framed to re-open the same questions, was filed within 5½ years of that decision, and here too we find that separate costs for third defendant, as well as those of the Advocate-General (first defendant), amounting in all to Rs. 4,775, have been allowed out of the fund. Apparently none of this has yet been recovered from the plaintiffs. It is lamentable to find that moneys which have been devoted to the performance of divine worship and the religious instruction of the poor should be dissipated in fruitless litigation, and we cannot but express our regret that the Court was not moved to call for security for costs before the hearing of this appeal.

We dismiss the appeal with costs, but we do not feel ourselves justified in ordering that any further sum be paid out of the fund.

MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD, MR. JUSTICE BEST, AND
MR. JUSTICE DAVIES.

Kristamma Naidu and others.....(Plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 6) Petitioners

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, s. 622—Power to call for record of cases not appealable to High Court—When a Court can be said "to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity."

A District Judge disposed of some suits on a point taken by himself on appeal, without affording the parties an opportunity of proving what was necessary to meet the point, and admitted other appeals after they had become time-barred:

Held, that where a Subordinate Court, having applied its mind to a question of law or procedure, arrives at an erroneous decision, such decision is not by itself any ground for the exercise by a High Court of the powers given by s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 6) followed.

Held, further (BEST and DAVIES, JJ., dissentiente), that the case contemplated by the words "act . . . illegally or with material irregularity" in s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure is that of a perverse decision on a question of law or procedure, a decision being perverse where it is a conscious departure from some rule of law or procedure.

Per BEST, J.—The words in question of s. 622 of the Code are applicable to illegalities or irregularities which are the result merely of ignorance of law or carelessness, and the disposal of a suit on a point taken by the Court itself on appeal, without affording the parties an opportunity of proving what is necessary to meet the point, is an irregularity in procedure within the meaning of s. 622, and that the inadvertent admission of an appeal that is time-barred is an illegality in procedure within the meaning of that section.

Per DAVIES, J.—The clause of s. 622 in question is applicable only to errors of procedure and it is not in every case that the High Court would, in the exercise of the discretionary power granted it by the section, interfere in revision. The interference would be confined to cases where the illegality or irregularity was such as had occasioned or might occasion a substantial failure of justice, as in the present case.

PETITIONS under section 662 of Act XIV of 1882, praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the District Court of Ganjam in Appeal Suits Nos. 80, 82,

* Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 378 to 387 of 1892.

83, 84, 85, 86, 117, 119, 121 and 122 [411] of 1891, presented against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif of Chicacole in Original Suits Nos. 84, 102, 108, 91, 99, 104, 110, 89, 98 and 107 of 1890, respectively.

These petitions came on for hearing on the 17th day of July 1893. The Court (MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and BEST, JJ.) made the following order of reference to the Full Bench.

Order : Best, J.—"These cases being not appealable by reason of the amount of the suit in each of them not exceeding five hundred rupees (see section 586 of the Code of Civil Procedure), these applications are made for revision under section 622 of the same Code.

"The first question for decision is, whether the cases are open to revision under the section last mentioned.

"Such revision is allowable if the Court by which the case was decided (i) exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or (ii) failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or (iii) 'acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.'

"The contention on behalf of petitioners in all the cases is that, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, the Court acted 'with material irregularity,' in that its decision proceeds on a point taken by the Court itself in appeal as to which no issue was recorded and consequently the petitioners (plaintiffs) were afforded no opportunity of proving their case. While in Petitions Nos. 384 to 387 there is a further contention that the Judge 'acted illegally' in admitting the appeals after they had become barred under the law of limitations.

"It has been found in Second Appeals Nos. 604 and 605 of 1892, in which the amount of the suit being more than Rs. 500 appeals lay, that the first of the above two objections is well founded. We have, therefore, ordered the District Judge to try the necessary issues and submit findings thereon; and in Second Appeals Nos. 606 to 608 we have found the second of the above objections to be also well founded and have consequently set aside the Lower Appellate Court's decrees and restored those of the District Munsif. There can be no doubt, therefore, that, if these applications for revision can be entertained under section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we should, in the case of Petitions Nos. 378 to 383, adopt the course taken by us in Second Appeals Nos. 604 and 605, and in the case of Petitions Nos. 384 to 387, set aside the Lower Appellate Court's decrees and restore [412] those of the District Munsif as was done in Second Appeals Nos. 606 to 608.

"The question is, have we power to entertain these petitions ?

"I should have had no hesitation in answering this question in the affirmative had it not been for the dictum of my learned colleague in the Full Bench case Manisha Eradi v. Siyah Koya (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 220) that the words 'act illegally or with material irregularity' apply to those cases only in which there is an error of law or material irregularity on the procedure, by reason of which the Subordinate Court concludes that it has or has not jurisdiction.

"With all deference, I am unable to see either in the wording of section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure or in the decision of the Privy Council in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 6) anything to warrant the placing of any such limited construction on the words. Nor can I see that the decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court in Erajabi v. Mayan (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 118) is in conflict with the decision of the Privy Council in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 6). In the latter case, not only had the lower Courts jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them, but they also decided it—whereas the irregularity of the lower Court in Eradjabi's case was failure to consider the question whether the suit was barred. Nor am I able to think that the cases in Seshadri v. Krishnan (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 192), Sanjivi v. Ramasami (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 494) and Rama v. Kunji (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 375) were not rightly entertained under section 622.

"All that was decided in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (I.L.R., 11 Cal., 6) was that the mere fact of a Court having come to a wrong decision even on a point of law is not sufficient to constitute an illegality or material irregularity in procedure so as to bring the case within the scope of section 622.

"I cannot help thinking that the disposal of a suit on a point taken by the Court itself on appeal, without affording the parties an opportunity of proving what is necessary to meet that point, is an irregularity in procedure within the meaning of section 622, and that the inadvertent admission of an appeal that is time-barred is an illegality in procedure within the meaning of the same section. Of course, if the Court had considered this latter question and decided that the appeals were not time-barred, [413] the case would have been different, for that would have been a case of erroneous decision within the ruling in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 6). But where (as in these cases) there is no such finding, but without any inquiry, the appeals are treated as within time, there is, I think, illegality in procedure within the meaning of section 622.

"I would, therefore, hold that this Court has power to entertain all these petitions under section 622, and I would set aside the Lower Appellate Court's decrees in the cases to which Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 384 to 387 relate with costs in this and the Lower Appellate Court; and in the cases, the subject of Petitions Nos. 378 to 383, I would direct the trial of issues similar to those sent for trial in Second Appeals Nos. 604 and 605 of 1892."

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—"I am unable to concur in the opinion of my learned colleague. I still adhere to the opinion expressed in the Full Bench case, that the illegality or irregularity mentioned in section 622 ought to be taken to refer to such error of law or irregularity as has led the Court below either to exercise a jurisdiction which it did not possess or to decline to exercise a jurisdiction which it possessed.

"The question must be referred to the Full Bench."

Pattābhirama Ayyar for Petitioners.

Ramachandra Rau Sahab for Respondents.

Collins, C. J.—"The questions referred to the Full Bench are whether the cases mentioned are open to revision under section 622, Civil Procedure Code.

"The High Court may exercise its powers of revision if the Court by which the case was decided appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. The reference states that the District Judge decided the case on a point taken by the Court itself as to which no issue was recorded, and it is further contended that the Judge acted illegally in admitting the appeals after they had become barred under the Law of Limitations. It is not stated that the attention of the Judge was called to these points, or that any review petition was presented. That the Judge had jurisdiction to try the cases appears to be [414] certain, and I am of opinion that, although the Judge undoubtedly was wrong in law, that is no ground for revision under section 622. See Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 6). I am inclined to adopt the words in the judgment of WEST, J., in Shiya Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (I.L.R., 7 Bom., 359), and hold that the section applies to an obviously perverse use of jurisdiction or authority which could not be justified even on the premises assumed or found by the Judge.

"The degree of ignorance or bad law which would amount to perverseness must be determined by the facts of each particular case. I would hold that section 622 does not apply to the cases in the reference."

Muttusami Ayyar, J. :—"This is a reference made as to the interpretation to be placed on the words in section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 'If the Court appears to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or acted with material irregularity.' The question submitted for the decision of the Full Bench is what effect is to be given to those words.

"They were introduced into the Code by the amending Act of 1879, and they are not to be found in Act X of 1877. According to the last-mentioned Act, as originally framed, the High Court was authorized to interfere only in two classes of cases, viz., (i) when the Subordinate Court by which a case was decided exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or (ii) when it failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. The class of cases in which the Subordinate Court had admittedly jurisdiction, but acted in the exercise of such jurisdiction in contravention of a rule of law or of procedure, was not then contemplated and provided for. The inference is clear that it was to supply this omission that the words 'act illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction' were introduced in 1879.

"The intention to extend the section to a third-class of cases being thus clear, some effect must be given, according to recognized rules of interpretation, to the words 'act illegally or with material irregularity' in order to carry out that intention. On this ground I am not prepared, on further consideration, to adhere to the opinion which I expressed in my judgment in Manisha Eradi v. Siyali Koya (I.L.R., 11 Mad., 220), viz., that the words 'act illegally or [415] with material irregularity' are referable to those cases only in which by reason of some error of law or of procedure the Subordinate Court either exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. That opinion is not tenable, since it practically treats the additional words as superfluous or unnecessarily introduced.

"Comparing section 622 as altered by Act XII of 1879, with section 584 of the code which states the grounds upon which a second appeal is to be admitted, it is apparent in what cases a decision is considered by the Legislature either to be illegal or to be vitiated by material irregularity. The real question is what is the distinction, if any, indicated by the words 'act illegally or with material irregularity' as contradistinguished from the words in section 584 'decide contrary to law or to a rule of procedure.'

"In Amir Hassan Khan's case, the question raised for decision was whether an erroneous conclusion as to whether a suit is barred either by section 13 or section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure was included in the words 'act illegally or with material irregularity.' The Privy Council decided the question in the negative and observed that though the Subordinate Courts might have decided it wrongly, yet they had jurisdiction.

"Thus, it is clear that where the Subordinate Court applies its mind to a question of law or procedure and arrives at an erroneous conclusion in the exercise of its jurisdiction it is not a ground for interference under section 622.

"This being so, the further question arises, what is the nature of the error contemplated by the words 'act illegally or with material irregularity,' if not an error of judgment in applying a rule of law or of procedure to the facts of a particular case. Looking to the several causes of erroneous decision in applying a rule of law or of procedure, they may consist either in misapprehension of a rule of law or of procedure present to the mind of the Judge or in omission to bear in mind some principle which qualifies or limits the operation of such rule.

"I am therefore of opinion that the case contemplated by the words 'act illegally or with material irregularity' is that of perverse decision on a question of law or procedure. A decision can be said to be perverse only when the matter is pleaded and wilfully disregarded, when there is some conscious violation of a rule of law or of procedure on the part of a Subordinate Court.

[416] "In this view, neither the inadvertent omission in the cases referred to, to consider whether the appeal presented was barred by the Act of Limitations, nor the refusal to hear evidence, on the ground that the stipulation the patta contains as to the rate of interest is such as clearly vitiates it, appears to me to disclose any ground for interference under section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I would answer the question accordingly."

Shephard, J.—"The questions referred relate to two sets of petitions. In the one set the complaint is that the District Judge omitted to observe that the appeals were time-barred. In the other set it is said that he decided the appeals on points not taken by the parties and without giving them an opportunity to adduce evidence. Arguments were addressed to us at considerable length on the operation of section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the question raised is one of general importance. By section 622 power is given to the High Court in certain cases in which no appeal lies to call for the record and pass such orders as the Court may think fit. The cases are three in number. First, the case in which the Court below appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law; secondly, the case in which such Court appears to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested; and, thirdly, the case in which such Court appears to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. Treating the section as if it consisted of three clauses, one may say that, as regards the present petitions, the first and second clauses clearly have no application. The question is whether the District Court has acted illegally or with material irregularity within the meaning of the third clause. Numerous cases have been decided with reference to this clause which, it should be observed, did not appear in the section of the original Code of 1877.

"The most important case decided by the Judicial Committee in 1884 is the case of Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (I. L. R., 11 Cal. 6).

"The appeal to the Judicial Committee was against an order passed by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, reversing the judgment of the Court of First Instance and dismissing the plaintiff's suit as being barred under sections 13 and 43 of the code.

[417] "The Judicial Committee after quoting the third clause of section 622 observed: 'The question then is, did the Judges of the lower Courts in this case, in the exercise of their jurisdiction, act illegally or with material irregularity. It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case; and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.' This decision, as I read it, simply amounts to this, that the erroneous decision of the Court of First Instance in that particular case did not constitute an illegality or irregularity within the meaning of section 622.

"There are two other decisions of the Judicial Committee to which no special reference is required. Muhammad Yusuf Khan v. Abdul Rahman Khan (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 749) and Birj Mohun Thakur v. Rai Uma Nath Chowdhry (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 8).

"The question has been frequently discussed in the High Courts before and since the publication of the decision in 1884 in Amir Hassan Khan's case. I do not think it is necessary to deal with the cases in detail. It is enough to say that the greatest possible diversity of opinions has been expressed. What may be called an intermediate view was propounded by WEST, J., in an elaborate judgment in Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashi Nath (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 369), [see also MAHMOOD, J., in Magni Ram v. Jiwa Lal (I.L.R., 7 All., 336)]. In Allahabad, STRAIGHT, J., took the extreme view that any error affording a good ground of second appeal within the meaning of section 584 would equally form a good ground for revision under section 622, Badmi Kuar v. Dinu Rai (I.L.R., 8 All., 114). On the other hand, in this Court a construction has been put upon the section which goes to the other extreme in limiting the powers of the High Court under section 622. In the judgment reported in Manishu Eradi v. Siyali Koya (I.L.R., 11 Mad., 228), Sir T. MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., reviewed the cases prior to 1887 and held with reference to Amir Hassan Khan's case 'that the last clause of the section must be taken to apply only to those cases in which there is an error of law or a material irregularity in the procedure by reason of [418] which the Subordinate Court concludes that it has or has not jurisdiction.' [Compare Magni Ram v. Jiwa Lal (I.L.R., 7 All., 336), and Badmi Kuar v. Dinu Rai (I.L.R., 8 All., 114)].

"In the same year the question was raised again, and the ruling of the Court, in which KERNAN, J., took part, can hardly be reconciled with the opinion expressed in the earlier judgment of Sir T. MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., Bhashyam v. Jayaram (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 303).

"In this state of things, there being no uniform course of decisions on the point, I am bound to form my own opinion, and I must say that I am unable to concur in the narrow interpretation which has been put upon the section. According to the ordinary rules of construction some effect has to be given to the third clause of the section. That would be so if this clause had been part of the original section, but the intention of the Legislature is still more marked when it is seen that the third clause was added by way of amendment. In construing the section, we have for our guide the opinion of the Judicial Committee in Amir Hassan Khan's case which may be said to amount to this—that the erroneous decision of a lower Court is not by itself any ground for the exercise by a High Court of the powers given by the section. That decision excludes one class of cases, but, as it appears to me, leaves it open for us to consider in what other cases the clause may be applicable.

"As I read the decision, it does not compel us to hold that the Court has no power except in cases where jurisdiction has been wrongly assumed or declined—cases which are sufficiently covered by the first two clauses.

"The possible cases to which it might be thought that the general language used by the Legislature was applicable may perhaps be stated as follows: In failing to apply the rule of law which ought, under given circumstances, to be applied, or in applying a rule which ought not to be applied, or generally in disposing of a matter otherwise than in accordance with law, it may be that the Judge has, owing to misapprehension, wrongly concluded that the law was applicable or inapplicable, or that he has proceeded erroneously owing to inadvertence, or again that he was ignorant of the correct rule applicable, or that knowing the correct rule he refused to apply it. In the first two cases, [419] that is where the Judge has exercised his judgment and decided wrongly or where his mistake is due to inadvertence or carelessness, I think that, with the decision of the Judicial Committee before us, we are bound to hold that the High Court has no power to interfere. In the last case, that is where a Judge consciously transgresses the law, the matter stands on a different footing. There is a material distinction between an erroneous judgment and a perverse judgment, as there is between a wrong verdict and a perverse verdict. If a perverse judgment or a conscious departure from the rules of procedure does not give occasion for the exercise of the powers given by the third clause, I am at a loss to understand in what class of cases it can be said that a Judge has acted illegally or with material irregularity.

"Under the circumstances of the cases referred to us, it is not necessary to say whether the High Court is also at liberty to interfere when it is shown that the Judge has acted in ignorance of the correct rule of law, for it is not suggested that the District Judge did not know the law in any of the cases before us. Perhaps the distinction between ignorance and perversity is not very important, for, while ignorance of a plain rule of law is not likely to be admitted, it would probably in such a case be right to impute knowledge and therefore perversity. On the other hand, it may be noted that the case of a perverse judgment is distinguishable from all the other cases in this respect—that the remedy by way of review is practically unavailable. It may well be supposed that the Legislature did not intend that the High Court should give relief under section 622 in those cases in which the ordinary relief by way of review was open to the party aggrieved. In the cases before us in which the question of limitation arises, it appears to me that there was nothing more than inadvertence—in the other cases the Judge's procedure was certainly not regular and may possibly have led to injustice. It is by no means clear, however, that the petitioners have been prejudiced, and I do not think it can be said that the Judge acted perversely.

"For these reasons I think that in both classes of cases the question should be answered in the negative".

Best, J.—"This reference to the Full Bench was made in consequence of a difference of opinion between Sir T. MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., and myself as to the correctness of the dictum in [420] Manisha Eradi v. Sriyali Koya (I.L.R., 11 Mad., 229), which limited the meaning of words 'acts illegally or with material irregularity,' in section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to errors or irregularities 'by reason of which the Subordinate Court concludes that it has or has not jurisdiction.' It is now admitted that the opinion expressed in the dictum is not tenable, consequently cadit questio.

"New ground has, however, now been taken. The first of the points now newly urged is that the words in question are only intended to apply to cases in which the illegality or irregularity is due to 'perversity' on the part of the Judge—the result of wilful disregard or conscious violation by him of a rule of law or procedure, and that they are inapplicable to illegalities or irregularities which are the result merely of ignorance of law or carelessness. This seems to me to be a distinction that is in no way warranted by the language of section 622. The word 'perverse' is certainly not used in that section, and I am altogether at a loss to understand why this distinction should be made.

"The other ground now newly taken is that section 622 is inapplicable to a case in which it is open to the party aggrieved to apply to the Court which has erred for a review of its judgment. This also seems to me to be limiting the scope of section 622 within narrower bounds than what is justified by the language used, according to which revision is allowed in all cases 'in which no appeal lies.' The privilege of applying for review of judgment under section 623 of the Code, is not intended to be compulsory, as is apparent on a perusal of that section. It may be that the Court to which application for revision is made under section 622 may, in the exercise of its discretion, decline to interfere until application for review has been made under section 623; but I am not prepared to hold that such application for review is an essential condition precedent to an application under section 622. I am unable to accept as valid either of the objections now taken, and I adhere to the opinion recorded by me before this reference was made to the Full Bench."

Davies, J.—"In order to answer the question referred, it is necessary to consider the scope of the last provision in section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure. When is the Court to be [421] deemed to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity?"

"I am clearly of opinion that this clause contemplates cases other than those referred to previously in the same section, namely, where the Court has either exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it or refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it, and that it is intended to refer to the class of cases where the Court having jurisdiction and exercising it violates a rule of law or of practice relating to procedure, that is, in the mode in which it exercises its jurisdiction. The use of the word 'acted' seems to indicate this to be the true position, and the current of authority in the numerous cases that have been cited at the bar also, I think, bears out this construction. The Privy Council has decided that the clause does not apply to erroneous opinions of law, Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 6) and that is intelligible upon the principle that, in forming an opinion on a question of law, the Court merely goes through a mental operation and cannot be said to be 'acting.'

"Taking it, then, that the clause is applicable only to errors of procedure, it is not in every case that the High Court would, in the exercise of the discretionary power granted it by the section, interfere in revision. Their interference would be confined to cases where the illegality or one irregularity was such as had occasioned or might occasion a substantial failure of justice.

"Now, in the first case under reference, that of an Appellate Court disposing of a suit on a point taken by itself in appeal without affording the parties an opportunity of proving what was necessary to meet that point, there is, in my opinion, an irregularity in procedure as grave as it would be to decide a suit without hearing the parties at all, and in that view I would hold it to be a 'material irregularity' in procedure within the meaning of section 622. In the second case, the admission and hearing of an appeal that was time-barred was, in the absence of a special order for its admission, passed after the Court was satisfied that there was sufficient cause for the delay, a patent illegality in procedure, for under section 4 of the Limitation Act 'every . . . appeal presented . . . after the period of limitation prescribed therefor . . . shall be dismissed' subject, of course, to the [422] exception just stated, which did not exist in this case. One of the principles of justice is that there should be finality to litigation in certain events and the law of limitation, among others, supplies instances. So the illegality here was one affecting the interests of justice. In both cases, moreover, apart from theory, there has been, in fact, a failure of justice, because in the allied suits in which a second appeal happened to lie, the Division Bench has set aside the proceedings of the Judge in both the matters now under reference.

"I would, therefore, answer the reference in the affirmative, to the effect that the errors in procedure were such as to be liable to revision by this Court under section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure."

These petitions came on for final disposal after the expression of the opinion of the Full Bench, and the Court delivered the following Judgment :—According to the view of the majority of the Full Bench, these petitions must be dismissed.

They are dismissed accordingly with costs.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE DAVIES.

Ramasami Kamaya Naik(Defendant) Appellant

versus

Sundaralingasami Kamaya Naik.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.

Hindu law—Succession—Manu, Chapter IX, Slokas 122 and 125—Rule of selection as between an elder son by a wife of an inferior class of caste and a junior son by a wife equal in caste—Dagger wife—Meaning of the term bhoga strees—Custom showing preference in succession for the sons by a senior wife to those by a junior wife—Nearness of blood as a ground of preference between brothers of the half and full blood, respectively.

In case of disputed succession to indivisible property between sons who are born of mothers of the same caste but of different classes therein, the right of a junior son by a first married wife, if she be of higher class, is superior to that of an elder [423] son of a wife of lower class. Thus, when a Sudra marries a woman of his caste but of an inferior class, as a dagger wife, in addition to his wife equal in caste to him, the rule of selection is in favour of his son by the latter by reason of the mother being of a higher class.

A valid custom prevails among the Kumbla zamindars whereby the son by a senior wife has a prior right of succession to a son by a junior wife, although the latter may be the elder son, seniority referring to the date of the marriage and not the age of the wife.

Nearness of blood is no ground of preference under the Mitakshara law in case of disputed succession to coparcenary property which is partible, and it is likewise no ground of preference when such property is impartible. When, therefore, family property belongs to a coparcenary family consisting of two brothers of a deceased propositus—one of the whole blood and one of the halfblood—in the absence of a specification to the contrary, the brother that is entitled to succeed to the property is the eldest in years.

APPEALS against the decree of C. Venkobah, Subordinate Judge of Madura (West), in Original Suit No. 21 of 1889.

* Appeals Nos. 78 and 95 of 1891.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report in the judgment of the High Court.

The Subordinate Judge passed the following decree :—

“I disallow the claim of plaintiff to the exclusive possession of the zamindari and its appurtenances as described in schedule A, and to the trusteeship of the devastanams and choultry specified in schedule B, and also to the mesne profits claimed in respect to these properties. I declare the equal right of plaintiff and defendant to such of the pannai lands and gardens as were acquired by their father since he became zamindar in 1861 until his death, and to the lands items 1 to 8 in schedule D, and direct that an account be taken of the former, and that the areas of the latter be fixed, and that the lands, after taking account and fixing the precise areas, be divided into two equal shares, one of which I direct should be put into plaintiff's possession. I declare plaintiff's right to live in the 4th வீடு or new house, the description of which should be supplied by the commissioner who takes an account of the lands. I declare plaintiff's right to receive his half share of mesne profits on the lands above specified from 14th October 1885 till he is put in possession or for three years from this date whichever event first occurs. I declare plaintiff's right to a half share in the jewels, moveables and Government securities, &c., mentioned in schedule E or to such of them as exist; their discovery, values and partition are left to a commissioner, who should be appointed for the purpose, [424] and who should make over to plaintiff his share in them or their value. I think plaintiff is entitled to proportionate costs on the claim allowed. Defendant should pay the same, while plaintiff should pay the costs of defendant on the claim disallowed.

The defendant and plaintiff preferred these appeals to the High Court, respectively.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson), Rama Rau and Subramanya Ayyar for Appellant.

Bhashyam Ayyangar, Desikachariar and Ranga Ramanuja Chariar for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a suit to establish the plaintiff's title to the zamindari of Saptur in the Madura district together with its appurtenances, and for the plaintiff's half share of such properties belonging to the late zamindar as are partible. The suit is valued at some five (5) lakhs of rupees, and the following facts are admitted, namely, that the zamindari and its appurtenances are impartible; that the plaintiff is the son of Nagayasami Kamaya Naik, who was the last zamindar but one of Saptur; that the defendant is another son of the same person; that, after the death of their father in October 1885, his eldest son, also called Nagayasami, succeeded to the zamindari, that this Nagayasami died while a minor under the Court of Wards, unmarried, on the 31st of December 1887, the succession to whom is now the subject in dispute, and that the plaintiff is the eldest surviving son of the previous Nagayasami, being aged 9 years at the time of suit, while the defendant was aged only 7 years at that time. The plaintiff claims the succession by his mother, Nagammal, as his next friend, as the senior in age of the surviving brothers of Nagayasami Kamaya Naik, the last male holder, according to the law and custom of primogeniture. The defendant pleads his right to the succession in preference to plaintiff on four (4) main grounds, namely, first, that plaintiff's mother, Nagammal, was not legally married to their father, and that plaintiff was therefore, an illegitimate son; while he, the defendant, is admittedly the legitimate son by his mother, Muthuveerammal; secondly, that even if the plaintiff's mother was legally married to the late zamindar, she was a lady of a different and inferior caste and rank to that of the defendant's mother ; thirdly that by family custom, the defendant is entitled to succeed by reason of his mother having been married prior to the plaintiff's mother ; and fourthly, that he is a full-[425] brother of the last holder of the zamindari, while plaintiff is only the half-brother.

The first question then for decision is whether the plaintiff's mother was the lawful wife of his, the plaintiff's father ; and this question has branched into two issues. One is whether the plaintiff's mother was married, in fact, to the plaintiff's father, or kept as his mistress, and the other is whether she was of a different and inferior caste to that of the father of the plaintiff, and therefore no valid marriage could be contracted between them. The Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff's mother was married to the plaintiff's father in 1875 in the dagger form ; that a dagger is used by the Saptur zamindars, who are surnamed Kattari Kamaya in the case of inequality in the caste or social position of the bride ; that though the customary rites of the Kumbhla caste were also performed, yet the use of the dagger was an essential addition ; and that, though according to his finding she was of a different and inferior caste to that of the plaintiff's father, yet that did not invalidate the marriage.

In Appeal No. 78 of 1891, the defendant, as appellant, contends that there was no marriage, in fact, between the plaintiff's mother and his father, and that the plaintiff's mother being of a different and inferior caste, could not, according to the custom of the plaintiff's father's caste, have been legally married to him.

The plaintiff, as appellant, in Appeal No. 95, contests the finding of the Subordinate Judge that his mother was of a different and inferior caste to that of his father. As to the factum of marriage, there is voluminous evidence, both oral and documentary, to prove beyond a doubt that, on the 9th of July 1875, the plaintiff's mother was united to the plaintiff's father by a number of ceremonial rites. It is needless for us in appeal to repeat in detail what has been fully set forth on this subject in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, because the defendant himself does not and cannot, dispute that on the date named some ceremonial took place for the union between the plaintiff's mother and his father. That evidence establishes that on the 9th of July 1875, the marriages of three men were celebrated, two of whom were persons of the name of Thumbayasami and Thathaya Naik. On that same day the plaintiff's mother, Nagammal, and her sister, Kumarammal, admittedly went through a form of marriage with the zamindar, the plaintiff's father, in which form a dagger played [426] a very prominent part. The defendant's case is that the zamindar did not appear in person at the ceremonial but was represented by this dagger, and that the third bridegroom who was present was not the zamindar but a bandy driver of his named Ramasami, and that, owing to the non-presence of the zamindar there could not have been a valid marriage between him and the two ladies with whom he was undoubtedly united on that occasion (though as the defendant says only in concubinage) because the mere tying of the bottu in the presence of the dagger was not sufficient to constitute a valid marriage ceremonial. Exhibits XXXII and XXXII-A show that, in the year 1800, it was reported by the Collector that the mere tying of the bottu did not of itself constitute a marriage, but simply signified a promise of constancy. The plaintiff, on the other hand, asserts that the driver Ramasami was not married on this occasion, but six months before, and that the third bridegroom who was present was the zamindar himself, and that the dagger was used only as an addition or an ornament to the ceremony. It is the presence of this dagger which has given rise to all the uncertainty as to whether it was a form of marriage or of concubinage that was adopted on the occasion. The defendant's argument is that the dagger was there to represent the zamindar as he did not attend in person, and that, by his non-attendance, there could have been no joining of hands or other essential for constituting a valid marriage, for, to constitute a valid marriage, there must be, if the marriage is a sacrament, the due performance of nuptial rites [Brindavana v. Radhamani (I. L. R. 12 Mad., 72)] and, if it is a contract, there must be an intention to marry. It is argued that the very absence of the zamindar showed there was no intention on his part to marry, if the marriage was a contract, and that, if it was a sacrament, the essentials for the due performance of nuptial rites could not have been performed. The plaintiff's argument is that the nuptial rites were duly performed, the zamindar being present; that the dagger was there merely as an ornament, and that it was customary for people of the zamindar's caste to have a dagger paraded on the occasion of marriages. The Subordinate Judge has found that the dagger was there for the purpose of indicating that the two ladies, Nagammal and her sister, Kumarammal, whom the zamindar married, were of an [427] inferior caste and rank. We consider that the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff as to the actual presence of the zamindar at the ceremonial is overwhelming. Not only is there the direct evidence of many of the plaintiff's witnesses, who were present on the occasion to the effect that the driver Ramasami was not married at that time, and that the zamindar himself was the third bridegroom, but there is also documentary evidence showing clearly that the zamindar and no one but the zamindar, was one of the three bridegrooms present on the occasion. Thus Exhibit C series, which are the zamindar's own palace accounts showing the money received and disbursed for the marriage festival, is unequivocally headed 'as for the marriage of the zamindar,' and in those accounts there are items of expenditure which could apply only to the zamindar, such as the receipts of moyi or wedding presents which, from the persons who made them, could only have been made to the zamindar. There is an entry for the cost of horses, for the procession called the 'yekalichi' for the outside bridegrooms, with another entry for a similar procession, which, by inference, must be taken as referring to the inside bridegroom, the zamindar. There is an entry for the cost of a toe-ring put upon the zamindar. These accounts read with Exhibit D further show the purchase of two rich silk marriage cloths called kandangi, which could have been intended only for the ladies united to the zamindar; for the other two women, who were married on that day, were poor dependents of the zamindar who would not have had such valuable cloths bestowed upon them. These marriage accounts further show very liberal expenditure in other matters, such as the distribution of rice which was made on far too large a scale, if only persons of ordinary rank had been married. Another account (Exhibit E-I) is proof that drummers were paid for four marriages. This shows that the two ladies must also have been married; for, if the defendant's account were true, there could only have been three marriages.

Against this, defendant has adduced no evidence of any value to prove that the zamindar was not present in person, and he has carefully avoided bringing forward any evidence as to what really did take place on the occasion in question. There is, therefore, no ground whatever for the assertion that the zamindar was not present at the time; and those witnesses who speak to his presence speak also to his going through the necessary acts which were necessary to constitute a valid marriage between people of the [428] Kumbla caste. The defendant's contention, therefore, that there could have been no valid marriage in consequence of the absence of the zamindar falls to the ground. Extraneous evidence, however, has been produced on the defendant's behalf for the purpose of showing that ladies united to the zamindar by marriage ceremonials in which the dagger was used were not deemed to be his lawful wives. For instance, it is shown that Kumarammal, the plaintiff's mother's sister, who was united to the zamindar at the same time as herself, and another lady Muttukamatchi Ammal, who was also on another occasion united to the zamindar according to the dagger form, were called bhoga strees—a word indicating concubine. In common parlance it may be applied to a concubine, as it is the ordinary dictionary meaning of the term. But it is also used in a secondary sense. In Linga Bhattiya, kanda 2, verse 264, the term 'bhogini' is used to denote the wives of kings other than the royal wife, who is called 'mahishi,' because she is anointed. The royal wife is called mahishi, because she is adored, the other wives being called bhogini, for, with them, there is bhoga or enjoyment. Again in Sabdha Ratnacara, page 817, the term bhogini is said to signify (1) a female servant, (2) a dancing girl, and (3) wives other than the one consecrated. Further, in Monier-Williams' Dictionary, page 723, the term 'bhogini' is explained to mean either the concubine of a king or a wife not regularly consecrated with him; we find also that there is other evidence counteracting the effect of the use of the word bhoga stree as applied to these ladies. In the very papers (Exhibits II to IV), in which Muttukamatchi Ammal is referred to as a bhoga stree of the late zamindar, she is spoken of both by herself and by the zamindar as his wife; and with reference to Kumarammal who, at the heading of the account (Exhibit VIa) showing her funeral expenses, is referred to as a bhoga stree, we find that her funeral ceremonies were conducted as only those of a wife would have been. This appears in the account VIa itself, as well as in the accounts JJJ, and LLL series, for it is in evidence that ceremonies therein mentioned such as fixing a grinding stone, with the due performance of the Shastras would only have been performed for a wife. Further, we find that one Mangaleswari, who was an admitted concubine of the zamindar, not married to him in dagger or other form, is referred to by him as a moha stree not a bhoga stree. The defendant has exhibited a document (Exhibit XXV) [429] which purports to be a genealogical tree of the Saptur zamindars, and which, it was said, was approved by the late zamindar himself. In this document his wives are named; but we do not find the names of any of the dagger wives there appearing. This document is, however, one of doubtful authenticity, and there is nothing certain to show that the zamindar ever saw it or approved of it. Besides, at the time that it is said to have been prepared, namely, in 1874, the plaintiff's mother and her sister had not been united to the zamindar. Reference has further been made to two birth registers, the one being Exhibit XXVIIa, in which the plaintiff's birth on the 25th June 1880 is entered with only his mother Nagammal's name, no reference being made to the zamindar, and the other being Exhibit XXVIIb, wherein the defendant's birth on the 23rd of September 1881 is entered with the zamindar as his father, but as we have nothing to show upon whose or upon what information the officers concerned made those registers, and no explanation has been taken from them for the difference in the one case for entering the mother's name and in the other for entering the father's name, the entries are conclusive of nothing. We cannot infer that the reason for the difference was the illegitimacy in the one case and the legitimacy in the other. On the other hand, it has been shown on behalf of the plaintiff that his mother has always been treated as a wife of the zamindar. One of the admitted wives of the zamindar has stated in Exhibit XXXIIIc that for about a year the dagger wives of the zamindar were living together with herself and the other admitted wives. Though it appears that they afterwards lived in separate apartments in the palace, it was in the palace they lived and not outside it as the concubines did. It also appears that when the late zamindar was committed to jail in 1884, and his wives were sent to Bodinayakkanur to be taken care of by the zamindar of that place, the plaintiff's mother, as well as another dagger wife, accompanied them (Exhibit XXXVIII*d*). In Exhibit VVV the defendant's mother herself treated Muttukamatchi Ammal, a dagger wife already alluded to, as a married wife of the zamindar, her husband. In Exhibit WWW the same Muttukamatchi Ammal and the plaintiff's mother joined two of the admitted wives in a petition to the Board of Revenue against the defendant's mother, claiming equality between themselves and the defendant's mother. Plaintiff himself performed the first annual ceremonies of his father jointly [430] with the defendant, as shown in Exhibit JJ, and there is nothing to show that the defendant's mother objected to the plaintiff's doing so; and after the death of the husband, the late zamindar, she, the plaintiff's mother, was treated as a wife by the Government officials concerned with the Court of Wards (see Exhibit S among others). It is unnecessary to refer to all the evidence proving that the plaintiff's mother was lawfully married to the zamindar, and her recognition as his lawful wife, because, except for the circumstances which have been mentioned above, as urged on behalf of the defendant and which have been explained, all the rest of the evidence is in her favour. We have, therefore, no hesitation in agreeing with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff's mother was the lawful, though a dagger wife of his father, provided there was no impediment to their marriage. The impediment pleaded by the defendant is that the lady being of a different and inferior caste to that of the zamindar, could not be lawfully wedded to him. It is not contended that in the absence of a particular custom such a marriage would be invalid in the face of the rulings of the Privy Council in Inderun Valungypooly Taver v. Ramasavmy Pandia Talaver (13 M. I. A., 141) and Ramamani Ammal v. Kulanthai Natchear (14 M. I. A., 346). In the former case it was held that, by Hindu law, marriage between Sudras where the husband is of a superior caste to that of his wife, is valid, and in the latter case that a marriage between a man of one sub-division of the Sudra caste with a woman of another sub-division of the Sudra caste is valid by Hindu law. But, what the defendant sets up is a local or caste custom among the Kumbla Naiks prohibiting such unions. The learned Advocate-General has referred to Mr. Mandlik's work on the Mayukha and Yagnavalkya (pages 400 et seq.) to prove that usage will override the ordinary Hindu law, and contends that he has in this case proved the custom set up. On this point, we find with the Subordinate Judge that there is no reliable evidence whatever of any such custom prevailing among the zamindars of the Kumbla caste. The evidence in respect thereto is only oral and is of a meagre description. It is true that the plaintiff's mother has endeavoured to show by recitals in documents relating to herself or to her relatives (Exhibits B, GG, GGG, and DDD) that she was of exactly the same caste as the [431] zamindar's, and it is true that the defendant has also endeavoured by evidence (Exhibits XA, XB and XIII) equally suspicious because the documents on both sides are all of recent date and after the death of the late zamindar, to prove that she was not so. The Subordinate Judge has, however, found that her caste was not Kumbla Totiya as the zamindar's was, but Parivara which he treats as an inferior caste. But one thing is certain, and that is that they were both of the Sudra caste and that legal marriage was possible between them. The zamindar would never have attempted to marry a woman whom he knew he could not marry, and the legal presumption is that when there is a marriage in fact there is a marriage in law. Inderun Valungypooly Taver v

Ramasawmy Pandia Talaver (13 M. I. A., 158). There is no proof of a special custom in this case prohibiting such marriage.

The second main point for determination in the case is whether, having found that the marriage of plaintiff's mother with his father was a valid marriage, the plaintiff's mother was of a caste and rank inferior to the defendant's mother's and, if so, whether that would entitle the defendant to succeed in preference to the plaintiff. Although they both were of the Sudra caste, we have no difficulty in deciding that the status and rank of the plaintiff's mother was inferior to that of the defendant's mother. The defendant's mother was the daughter of a zamindar, while the plaintiff's mother was the daughter of an ordinary ryot. The defendant's mother had no strain of mixed blood, while the plaintiff's mother was of the Parivara caste or the descendant of parents of illegitimate origin—vide paragraphs 35 and 36 of the Subordinate Judge's judgment—the correctness of the conclusion in which there is no ground for disputing. The inferiority of the plaintiff's mother's status as wife is the only reasonable explanation for the presence of the dagger at her marriage. In the case of the admitted wives of the zamindar, there was no dagger used when they were married, so that the only way to account for its use at the marriage of the plaintiff's mother is that it was intended to indicate her status as an inferior description of wife or as a dagger wife. If it was not intended to denote the inferiority of status of the plaintiff's mother, no other satisfactory explanation is afforded by the evidence for the use of the dagger. The theory [432] for the defendant that it represented the zamindar who was absent has been already exploded. There is no proof that the dagger was invariably used in the case of all marriages between people of this caste. In fact, it is admitted that the use of the dagger is extremely rare, and only two or three instances of it are given in the plaintiff's evidence. There are also other circumstances indicating that the marriage of the plaintiff's mother was not conducted in the same way in which the marriages of the zamindar's regular wives were celebrated. Considerably less money was spent upon it than in the case of the admitted wives, and it was combined with the marriages of two other people of inferior rank—of persons who were poor dependants of the zamindar—one indeed of whom, Thumbayasami, was a brother of the plaintiff's mother. Then the plaintiff's mother and the other dagger wives, as a rule, lodged separately and messed separately from the other wives. It is, therefore, clear to us that the plaintiff's mother was in status and rank inferior to her husband and the defendant's mother. The question then arises whether, having found the plaintiff's mother and the defendant's mother to be of the same main caste, namely, Sudras though not of the same division, the difference in their rank or status would make them of a different class within the meaning of sloka 125, chapter IX, Manu. That sloka is to this effect: "as between sons born of wives equal in their class and without any other distinction, there can be no seniority in right of the mother; but the seniority ordained by law is according to the birth." The learned vakil for the plaintiff maintains that Manu alluded only to caste, as he was there dealing with caste, and that any other construction would be meaningless. But the ancient author seems to have been dealing with the equality of wives generally, and it is quite possible, as in this case, that two ladies may be of the same main caste and yet belong to different subdivisions of that caste, and therefore be unequal in class or rank. The strict literal translation of the phrase rendered as 'wives equal in their class' is 'like wives' which would allow of the wider interpretation that if there were any substantial inequality in the rank or status of the wives they would not be 'like wives.' Within each of the four main divisions of Hindu caste it is notorious that there are many classes or ranks and these are perhaps most numerous in the Sudra caste, and it appears to us that their Lordships of the Privy Council, in making use of the words 'caste [433] and class' in their judgment in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (14 M. I A., 592, 594), contemplated inequalities besides those in the main caste only, for otherwise the word 'class' would be superfluous if it was taken to be synonymous with the main caste.

We are therefore prepared to hold with the Subordinate Judge that what is indicated in the text of Manu is inferiority of the class of the wife more than that of the main caste. In this view, and finding for reasons already stated that plaintiff's mother was of an inferior class to that of defendant's mother, it remains to be decided whether that fact would be ground for preferring the defendant to the plaintiff. Sloka 122 of the same chapter in Manu is to this effect: "A younger son being born of a first married wife after an elder son had been born of a wife last married, but of a lower class, it may be a doubt in that case how the division shall be made."

That is just the case we have here, but unfortunately Manu has not directly decided the doubt that he raises, and, as the Subordinate Judge points out, there appears to be no precedent. The point was noticed but not decided in the Privy Council case, Pedda Ramappa Nayanivaru v. Bangari Sheshamma Nayanivaru (L. R., 8 I. A., 1). The two slokas 123 and 124 following the sloka 122 indicate that in the case therein contemplated the younger son of the first married wife being of a higher class would take a larger share of the property, and we are of opinion that this fact taken with the implication in sloka 125 that there would be a difference between the sons in cases where their mothers were of different classes is sufficient to show that the right of the junior son by a first married wife if she be of higher class is a superior right to that of the elder son of a wife of lower class. It follows that when the competition between them is, as in this case, to an indivisible property, the right of him who has the superior right, if the property were partible, must prevail. We, therefore, agree with the Subordinate Judge in finding on this point in favour of the defendant.

We consider that this view is in accordance with the analogies of general Hindu law as applied to partible property. The decisions of the Privy Council both in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (14 M.I A., 592, 594) and in Pedda Ramappa Nayanivaru v. Bangari Seshamma Nayanivaru (L.R., 8 I. A., 1) are authorities only for [434] the proposition that as between sons born of wives equals in class and without any other distinction, there is no seniority in right of their mothers, but that the seniority recognized by law is according to birth. In the present case, however, the plaintiff's mother and the defendant's mother are not equal in caste or class. There is the further distinction between them, viz., that the former is a dagger wife, whilst the latter was married by the pure Kumbla caste rites without the intervention of a dagger. In the Bangari Palayam case, their Lordships of the Privy Council expressly stated that they did not decide what would be the proper rule of succession when the wives were of a different caste or class. The text of Manu, chapter IX, 125, as interpreted by Kallukka Bhatta, on which their Lordships rest their decision, premises the case of sons born of wives of equal caste and without any other distinction. This case falls, therefore, to be decided on the principle laid down by their Lordships in the Urkad case in the following terms: "Now, no work of authority or decision directly relating to the descent of property, which, at the present day, is governed by the rule of primogeniture was cited at the bar, nor have we found any materially bearing on the question. We must, therefore, decide it upon principle, and by analogy to the existing general law of inheritance and upon what we find laid down in early times when primogeniture by general law conferred some special rights and privileges which no longer exist." The question then is what is the rule suggested by analogy, first, to the existing Hindu law of inheritance and, next, to the Hindu law as it existed in early times when primogeniture conferred by the general law certain special rights and privileges? Under the former we may take, by way of analogy, the cases in which the rival claimants of an impartible estate are a legitimate junior son and an illegitimate senior son or an after-born son and an adopted son. In the first case, among Sudras, both sons take shares in partible property, but the illegitimate son takes only half a share (Mitakshara, chap I, s. XII, sloka 3).

This is the first exception to the general rule that, though sons may share in partible property, the son born of a concubine is only a secondary son and son born of a wife is the primary son and preferable heir to impartible property.

Turning to the case of a disputed succession to an impartible estate in which the rival claimants are an adopted son and the [435] after-born legitimate son, it is stated in Dattaka Chandrika, s. V, 32, that among Sudras, they take equal shares in partible property. But the succession to impartible property, nevertheless, devolves on the after-born son in preference to the adopted son, the reason being that the adopted son is a substitute for the aurasa son, and that, when the latter comes into existence, he excludes the substitute.

This is the second exception to the general rule under which, of two sons, who may be entitled to share alike in partible property, one is the principal or primary and the other as a mere substitute is a secondary son, and as such, excluded by the other, though his junior in years, from succession to impartible property. The succession of a legitimate son to an impartible estate in preference to an illegitimate son, and of an after-born son in preference to an adopted son does not rest on mere inference. In Dattaka Chandrika, s. V, 26, a vedic text is referred to as ordaining that kings shall not appoint to the empire any of the twelve descriptions of sons, which included also the adopted son and the son of a female slave when a legitimate son existed. It is hardly necessary for us to add that the Palayapats of Madura and Tinnevely were, prior to the commencement of the British rule, in the nature of petty principalities or tributary chieftainships.

Looking again to the ancient Hindu law, we find an analogy in 'anuloma' marriages. A Brahmin was in former times at liberty to marry a Brahmin wife, a Kshatriya wife, a Vaisya wife and a Sudra wife; so a Kshatriya was entitled to have a Kshatriya wife, a Vaisya wife and a Sudra wife; so it was permitted to a Vaisya to have a Vaisya wife and a Sudra wife. Hence it is stated in the Mitakshara, chap. I, s. VIII, v. 2, that instances do occur of a Brahmin having four wives, a Kshatriya three, and a Vaisya two, the wives being of different varnas or castes or tribes. This form of marriage with women of inferior castes was called anuloma union and it was a permitted connection, while pratiloma union, that it is to say, of a man of an inferior class or varna with a woman of a superior class, was a prohibited connection. The author of the Mitakshara explains in chap. I, s. VIII, v. 4, how rights of sons of wives of different classes, when partition was made between them, were regulated, and states that the sons of a Brahmin by a Brahmini woman took four shares apiece, his sons by a Kshatriya wife, three shares each, by a Vaisya [436] woman two, and by a Sudra one. In the same manner the sons of a Kshatriya born to him by women of the several tribes had three shares, two or one in the order of the tribes (castes). Likewise the sons of Vaisya by women of the several tribes have two shares and one in the order of the classes. Again, in chap. XI, s. I, v. 47, the author of the Dayabhaga advertising to the texts of Manu, chap. IX, 85, 86 and 87, states that the rank of wife belongs, in the first place, to a woman of the highest tribe, and seniority is reckoned in the order of tribes. Thus, Manu says, when regenerate men take wives both of their own class and others, the precedence, honour and habitation of those wives must be settled according to the order of their classes. Therefore (since seniority is by the tribe) a woman of equal class, though youngest in respect of the date of marriage, is deemed eldest. The rank of wife (patni) belongs to her, for she alone is competent to assist in the performance of sacrifices and other sacred rites. This is the third exception to the general rule in which the son by the dagger wife is by analogy to anuloma marriage only a secondary son who, though senior in age, is excluded by a son of a wife equal in caste and rank.

Thus the rule deducible by analogy from this branch of ancient Hindu law is one of preference in favour of the son by a wife of the same caste or rank. It follows that when a Sudra marries a woman of an inferior division of his caste, as a dagger wife or as a wife of an inferior class in addition to his wife equal in caste to him, the rule of selection is in favour of his son by the latter by reason of his mother being of a higher class, or having the rank of patni.

It is argued by the plaintiff's pleader that the Sudras are all of one caste, though they belong to different sub-divisions. It is so for the purpose of permitting a marriage between a man of one sub-division and a woman of an inferior sub-division, but it does not follow that there are no gradations in respect of caste, status or rank. Surely, it cannot be said that there is no distinction between a man of the purest Vellala or Mudali caste, and a woman of the Palli or Shanar or toddy-drawer's caste, though their main caste is that of Sudras. The ancient conception of Sudras as one of the four leading classes has attained a considerable extension after the Dekkan and Southern India came within the pale of ancient Hindu law. The ancient Brahminical theory was that [437] all the Sudras were intended to do service for, or to be the servants of, the regenerate classes. But this soon vanished when the class of Sudras came to embrace in it kings, rajas, provincial chieftains, aristocratic classes and numerous non-Aryan tribes, independent and influential, with peculiar marriage customs and with peculiar notions of the incidents of a legal marriage. It is notorious that Sudra rajas and zamindars often imitated Kshatriya kings in many respects, especially as regards the number and rank of wives they married and the concubines they maintained.

It is not improbable that the notion of a secondary wife or a secondary son came to prevail among some Sudra zamindars by analogy to anuloma marriages among Kshatriyas. The real question is whether there are traces of such consciousness in the present case. The offspring of the anuloma form of marriage, where the mother was of a caste inferior to that of his father, was not equal in caste to his father. If his father was a Kshatriya and his mother was a Vaisya, though they might legally marry, the wife did not acquire the status of a Kshatriya lady, and the son born of her, though legitimate, had not the caste, status or rank of a Kshatriya, but had an intermediate caste and status. He was called 'mahisya,' and, as compared with the son by a Kshatriya wife, he was only a secondary son. See Brindavana v. Radhamani (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 72). In the same way, it may be that the plaintiff's mother, Nagammal, was, by reason of her descent from a man of the Kumbla caste and a woman of the Vellala caste, of inferior caste. In this view the Parivara caste is inferior to the Kumbla Tottiya caste, as found by the Sub-Judge, though their main caste is that of Sudras. It is noteworthy that when a special form of marriage is adopted to denote the wife's inferior caste or class, and she is since treated in the husband's family differently from a wife of equal class married by the pure caste ritual without the use of a dagger, the reasonable explanation is that she was taken and treated as a secondary wife not having the rank of pātni within the meaning of the text of Manu. (Chap. IX, 85 to 87.)

The next or third point for determination (fourth issue in the lower Court) is whether there is a custom prevailing among the Kumbala zamindars, to which admittedly the parties belong, that the son by a senior wife has a prior right of succession to a son by [438] a junior wife, although the latter may be the elder son, seniority referring to the date of marriage and not to the age of the wife. It is admitted in this case that the defendant's mother was married before the plaintiff's mother, but the alleged custom is not in accordance with the ordinary law of succession among Hindus where primogeniture is the rule irrespective of the seniority of marriage of the mothers. The law has so been clearly declared by the Privy Council in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (14 M. I. A., 570) and Pedda Ramappa Nayanivaru v. Bangari Seshamma Nayanivaru (L. R., 8 I. A., 1). It therefore lies on the defendant to prove the special family custom. It must be borne in mind that the contest here is between two wives, neither of which was the first married wife or 'pattama stree' as the first or royal wife is called. Several instances have been given in evidence where a younger son by the 'pattama stree' has taken precedence of an elder son by a subsequent wife, but those cases are not to the point in this case, and all the evidence in regard to them must be rejected as irrelevant. The first married wife, as Mr. Mayne points out (Hindu Law, para. 87), has precedence over the others and her first-born son over his half-brothers, because a peculiar sanctity seems to have been attributed to the first marriage as being that which was contracted from a sense of duty and not merely for personal gratification, and it may be that among certain classes of people, the preference shown to her first-born son was extended to other sons born of her; so that it would not be fair to treat the case of her sons as on a par with the sons of subsequent wives. It is as between such wives that the question of custom must be considered here. This will eliminate from the record all the evidence which was confined to the competition between a son of a 'pattama stree' and of a junior wife which forms the major portion of the evidence. The evidence adduced in support of the custom falls under three classes.

First, statements giving the opinions of deceased persons who are likely to know of its existence; second, similar opinions by living persons, and third, particular instances in which the custom was recognised and acted on. Under the first class, the evidence was naturally documentary, and much of it was either irrelevant for the reasons above stated, or inadmissible for reasons now to be [439] stated. Section 32 (clause 4) of the Indian Evidence Act, which allows of the admission of such evidence, requires that it should have been given before any controversy as to such custom had arisen; and the statement must refer to a custom or matter of public or general interest, and not to a particular case or instance. Now, to take the documents exhibited under this head in their order of date, we find Exhibits XXVI a and b, the opinions of the zamindars of Valayapatti and Erasakkanayakanur taken in 1826 inadmissible, as they refer only to the line of descent in their own particular estates, and they are irrelevant as they contemplate the case only of the first and a second wife. The next exhibits are the XIX series (a to r), opinions taken in 1849, with reference to the succession in the Perayur zamindari. These are objected to on the score that they were taken after controversy arose, but we find this not to be the case. The correspondence on the subject is to be found in Exhibits XXXIII series, and it shows that there was only a doubt whether the younger son by a senior wife should succeed before an older son by a junior wife. The Collector held the opinion that by custom the younger son should succeed and the Court of Wards being doubtful directed an enquiry to be made as to the custom, and it was found that it prevailed, and it was accepted and acted on. There had been a difference of opinion by the pundits who were at first consulted, but there was no dispute such as to render the evidence inadmissible. In order to effect this "there must be not merely facts which may lead to a dispute but a lis mota, or suit, or controversy preparatory to a suit actually commenced or dispute arisen and that upon the very same pedigree or subject-matter which constitutes the question in litigation." (Taylor on Evidence, page 556.) The competition in this Perayur case was between the second wife's son aged 2 and the eighth wife's son aged 8, and the opinions then taken are, therefore, relevant in the present case, so far as they refer to the general custom and to a contest between sons of wives other than the first married wife. All the persons, who gave them, are proved to be dead, and their original statements have been produced and proved in order to avoid the objection taken in the Urkad case that the originals had not been produced and proved. But some of these opinions must be rejected on other grounds. Thus the opinion of the Thevaram zamindar in Exhibits XIX and XIXa is inadmissible, as the opinion of a deceased person because it refers to the [440] rule of succession in his own particular zamindari only. The opinion of the Bodinayakanur zamindar in Exhibits XIXb and c is inadmissible for the same reason; so also is the opinion of the zamindari of Thottapanaickanur in Exhibit XIXf and those of the zamindar of Kannavadi in Exhibits XIXj and k, and of the zamindar of Mambarai in Exhibits XIX q and r. The opinion of the zamindar of Erasakkanayakanur in Exhibit XIXl is irrelevant, as it refers only to the case of the senior wife, as well as only to the particular estate. Excluding these we have left the opinions of five zamindars, namely, those of Pulyankulam (Exhibits XIX d and e) of Uttapanaickanur (Exhibits XIX g and h) of Gandamanaickanur (Exhibit XIXm) of Kadavur (Exhibit XIXn) and of Edayakottai (Exhibits XIX o and p) all speaking to the general custom among Kumbla zamindars of the son by a senior wife taking the succession in preference to an older son by a junior wife.

The next documents in time are in connection with the Virupakshi case in 1853 (Exhibits XXXIV series). The opinions therein given are irrelevant, as the son by the second wife who succeeded to the allowance was the eldest of the surviving sons.

The last batch of opinions forming the second mainstay in proof of the custom were in 1875, and are to be found in Exhibits XII a to k series, but we find one and all of them inadmissible, as the statements were undoubtedly made after controversy had begun. There was a dispute as to the succession in the Bodinayakanur estate like the dispute in the present case as to whether the younger son by the fifth wife was to be preferred to the elder son by the sixth wife. The Court of Wards recognized the right of the younger son, whereupon a suit was brought on behalf of the elder son in Original Suit No. 5 of 1875 on the file of the Subordinate Court of Madura. The Collector, as Agent of the Court of Wards, was made a defendant in the suit, and, in forwarding a copy of the plaint in the suit to the Court of Wards, applied for instructions to defend the suit. This was on the 13th July 1875 (vide Exhibit XXXVIIa), and it was after this the opinions were called for as appears from the Collector's letters (Exhibits XII b, d, h, and XVII) which are dated in August 1875, and the opinions given are, of course, all of subsequent dates. There are other grounds on which these statements that have been used in evidence are inadmissible, such as that some of them are copies, their correctness as such also not being proved, but it is sufficient to reject them all [441] on the broad ground that they were not given ante litum motam. This closes the first class of evidence adduced. The second class consists of the opinions of living persons as to the general custom, and they are admissible under section 48 of the Indian Evidence Act. There are three such opinions as are relevant in this case, those of the defendant's nineteenth, twenty-fourth and sixty-second witnesses. The nineteenth defence witness says: "In case the first wife had no sons, but the second and third wives had sons, the son of the second wife, even though younger in age, would have the right to the succession, and so on according to the order of wives The rule of succession stated by me is applicable to all divisions of Kumbas," and this follows the opinion he gave in 1875 as a Kumbla zamindar (vide Exhibit XVIIa). The twenty-fourth defence witness is a Kumbla of the Thevaram zamindari, and he says that "the succession in the case of Kumbla zamindars is regulated by the seniority of the mother irrespective of the ages of the sons." The sixty-second defence witness is the father of the first wife of the late zamindar of Saptur, the father of the parties to this suit, and he states as follows: "Among our Kumbla-zamins the right of succession is according to the order of wives. What is meant by the order of wives is that should there be a son to the first wife, the right of succession goes to that son; but, if there be no son to the first wife and the second wife has a son, it goes to that son. It is this what I mean by order. Even if the son of the second wife is older than the son of the first wife, the right of succession is only to the first wife's son. Similarly in the case of the sons of the other wives." The evidence of the defendant's eighteenth witness is to the effect that the sons of the eldest wife succeed one after another, of which there was an instance in his own zamindari, but this does not apply to the matter in question as it relates only to the rights of the sons by the first married wife.

The third class of evidence offered in proof of the custom consists of particular instances, in which it was observed—evidence which is admissible under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act. The Perayur and Bodinayakanur cases referred to above are instances distinctly in point. In the former case the son of the second wife being only 2 years of age succeeded in preference to the son of the eighth wife who was 8 years old, and in the latter case, the younger son of the fifth wife took the succession in [442] preference to the elder son by the sixth wife. But there is this to be said with regard to the latter case that the elder son was an idiot and might have been disqualified on that ground alone, although the correspondence (Exhibit XXXVII) shows that the right of the younger son was recognized on the strength of the custom. Beside these clear instances, evidence has been adduced to prove similar instances in other zamindaris of the same caste, but as all of them appear to relate only to the case of the first married wife or 'pattama stree,' they must be rejected as irrelevant for reasons already stated. Thus the case in 1861 in the Andipatti poliém (Exhibit XXXV series) was between the son of the senior wife, and the son of the second wife, there being only two wives, and it was the same in the Uttapanaickanur case in 1866 (Exhibit XXXVI) to which defence witnesses Nos. 20 and 21 speak. The instances given by the oral evidence of the witnesses Nos. 18, 19, 26 and 41 for the defendant also all refer to the sons of the first married wife, so that under this head of particular instances we have only the two instances of Perayur and Bodinayakanur as applicable to this case. But it must be remarked that cases of competition between the sons of junior wives in so small a community as the Kumbala zamindars are, must of necessity be, of rare occurrence when the son or sons of the first married wife always take precedence as much of the evidence shows they do.

The general result of the evidence as to the custom set up is that we have the opinion of five deceased persons and of three living persons plus two well-authenticated instances of its observance in proof of it, while there is nothing whatever on the other side to disprove it. It was contended for plaintiff that there was an instance in this Saptur zamindari itself where the son of a fourth wife succeeded in preference to the son of a third wife in the fact that in 1803 Vada Kamaya Naik, son of a fourth wife of his father, became zamindar after his elder brother by the first wife was hanged, in preference to Sangaralinga Kamaya Naik, a son of the third wife.

Assuming these facts to be proved by the genealogical table (Exhibit XXV) and by the evidence of the plaintiff's first and forty-first witnesses, and that Sangaralinga Kamaya Naik, the son by the third wife, afterwards succeeded Vada Kamaya Naik, son by the fourth wife, as shown by Exhibit TTT, they do not prove the circumstance they are used for. In the first place Vada [443] Kamaya Naik was treated by the Government as the istimrar zamindar by its sannad SSS after his brother had been executed, and it may have been an act of State and not a case of succession but one of selection; and in the second place, there is nothing to show that Sangaralinga Naik was then born. He might have been born long after his brother had been recognized as the zamindar by the Government. The evidence then being all one way, and extending back as far as living memory and existing records go, can the custom be found to be sufficiently established according to the standard laid down by the Privy Council in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (14 M.I. A., 585). "It is of the essence of special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable; and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence, and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends." Now, out of the mass of evidence adduced, that which we have alone admitted as strictly applicable in this case is undoubtedly clear and unambiguous in favour of the alleged custom, and its antiquity and certainty seem to be proved as well as they can be among a set of people so absolutely lawless as these poligars were in former days. In respect to its certainty the opinions are unanimous, and are supported by two actual instances, while no opinion has been adduced against it, nor any instance given of a departure from it. And in respect to its antiquity it is spoken to as an old-established rule, 'whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary,' so far as is shown to us.

In these circumstances, we consider that the custom has been clearly proved to be ancient and invariable, and therefore one that our Courts must recognize. We accordingly confirm the finding of the Subordinate Judge in this matter.

The next question in the case is the fifth issue, namely, whether, on the death of the last zamindar, his full brother, the defendant, is entitled to succeed to the zamindari, which is admittedly an ancestral, impartible estate held by only one member of the family [444] at a time, in preference to the plaintiff his half-brother. The Subordinate Judge decides it in the negative, and, in that opinion, we concur. [Their Lordships here repeated verbatim that portion of the judgment in Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talavar v. Siva Subramanya

Pillai (I. L. R., 17 Mad., 316), which commences with the word 'apart' in the second line of the second paragraph on page 325 of this volume and ends with the word 'succeed' in the last line of the fourth paragraph on page 334.]

The last points for our determination are matters of detail in regard to what properties in schedules C, D and E of the plaint are to be considered as partible between the plaintiff and the defendant.

Schedule C refers to the 'pannai' lauds, and the Sub-Judge has given excellent reasons for holding that such of them as were acquired by the grandfather of the parties are not partible, but must be considered as appurtenant to the zamindari; but he has held that those acquired by the father are partible. It would appear that the Sub-Judge has here erred in treating the father as the last holder of the estate, because exactly the same reasons which he gives for holding the acquisitions of the grandfather to have been incorporated in the estates apply with equal force to the acquisitions of the father. They all alike descended to the last holder, the brother of the parties to the suit. The principle is laid down in the judgment of this Court in Lakshmi pati v. Kandasami (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 54); that it is a question of intention whether the zamindar, for the time being, who acquires fresh lands, means to incorporate them with the zamindari or to treat them as separate private property. His object in acquiring them as private property could only be for the purposes of alienation, and the presumption is that if he does not alienate them in his lifetime or by testamentary disposition his intention was to add them to the estate.

For this and the other reasons discussed by the Sub-Judge upon the evidence in the matter, we are of opinion that all the lands comprised in schedule C were merged in the estate proper and are, therefore, not partible. The properties in schedule D are ryotwari lands and house properties, and we see no reason to differ from the Sub-Judge's finding in respect to these, namely, that items Nos. 1 to 8 being lands not situate within the zamindari, were [445] distinctly the private properties of the zamindari, and therefore partible, while the other items Nos. 9 to 15 were appurtenant to the zamindari as palaces and places of residence, etc., and therefore impartible. Schedule E relates to moveables which we agree with the Sub-Judge in finding to be partible, as the rule of impartibility applicable to zamindaris does not extend to the personal property left by a zamindar [Maharajulun Garu v. Rajah Row Puntulu (5 M. H. C. R., 13)].

The result of our decision is that the appeal of the plaintiff is dismissed and the Sub-Judge's decree is confirmed in all respects excepting as regards some of the 'pannai' lands comprised in schedule C of the plaint which are now all declared to be appurtenant to the zamindari, and plaintiff has therefore no right to share therein. The lower Court's decree will be modified accordingly, and the proportionate costs there decreed payable by the defendant to the plaintiff will be reduced by that extent and added to the proportionate costs payable by the plaintiff to the defendant.

The appeal of the defendant is otherwise dismissed. In regard to costs in this Court, we shall leave each party to bear his own, each having failed on the main grounds of his appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 8th and 12th December 1893 and 5th April, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR.

Sesham Patter and another.....(Plaintiffs) Petitioners

L. S. Moss.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

.Indian Railways Act—Act IX of 1890, ss. 72 and 76—The Carrier's Act—Act III of 1865—Indian Contract Act IX of 1872, ss. 151 152, and 161—Liability of Railway Companies as bailees.

Subject to the provisions of Act IX of 1890, the responsibility of Railway Companies for loss of goods delivered to them for carriage is that of a bailee under ss. 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act. In a suit for damages occasioned by such a loss the plaintiff need not prove how the loss occurred, but on proof of the loss, the company will, in absence of proof of any ground upon which it can be exonerated, be liable as a bailee.

[446] PETITION under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of V. Kelu Eradi, District Munsif of Palghat, in Small Cause Suit No. 839 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Mahadeva Ayyar for Petitioners.

Barclay, Morgan & Orr for Respondent.

Judgment.— Under section 72 of the Indian Railways Act, the responsibility of the Railway Company for loss of goods delivered to be carried by the Railway is, subject to the provisions of that Act, that of a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161† of the Indian Contract Act. Under section 76‡ of the former enactment, it is not necessary for the plaintiffs to prove how the loss was caused.

* Civil Revision Petition No. 655 of 1892.

†[Sec. 151 :—In all cases of bailment the bailee is bound to take as much care of the goods bailed to him as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed.]

Care to be taken by bailee.

[Sec. 152 :—The bailee, in the absence of any special contract is not responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the thing bailed, if he has taken the amount of care of it described in section 151.]

Bailee when not liable for loss, etc., of thing bailed.

[Sec. 161. If by the fault of the bailee the goods are not returned, delivered or tendered at the proper time, he is responsible to the bailor for any loss, destruction, or deterioration of the goods from that time.]

Bailee's responsibility when goods are not duly delivered or tendered.

Act III of 1865, sections 8* and 9† are declared by section 72 not to affect the responsibility of the Railway Company as defined by the latter section. The plaintiffs must show in the first instance the alleged loss or deficiency, and then the Railway Company will be bound to show that the loss occurred under circumstances which would exempt a bailee from responsibility for it.

The District Munsif finds that the plaintiffs' allegation that the bags of pepper were cut open and their contents were extracted whilst they remained in the custody of the Railway Company is not proved. Adverting to the several possible causes of the loss on which the defendant relied, he finds that they are not made out, but as regards the carelessness of the weighing clerks, he does not record a distinct finding. He eventually dismisses the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs did not prove their allegation that the bags of pepper were cut open and their contents extracted. The District Munsif has not tried this suit with reference to the requirements of the Railway Act and recorded distinct findings as to whether the quantity delivered was proved to be what is alleged in the plaint, or whether the quantity entered in the forwarding note in excess of the quantity delivered is due to a mistake on the part of weighing clerks, and as to whether the Railway Company has proved any ground upon which they can be exonerated from liability as bailees. He will submit distinct findings on the questions mentioned above upon the evidence on record within three weeks of the re-opening of the Court after the Christmas vacation, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections after the finding has been posted up in this Court.

[447] 'APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 23rd, 24th July, and 3rd August, 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE PARKER.

Marian Pillai and others.....(Defendants Nos. 1, 5 and 6)

Appellants

versus

Bishop of Mylapore and another.....(Plaintiffs)

Respondents.

Dharmakartas or headmen of a Roman Catholic Church—Legal powers thereof.

The appointment of a committee of headmen or dharmakartas in a Roman Catholic Church by the Bishop to assist the vicar in the secular affairs of the church gives the Common carrier liable for loss or damage caused by neglect or fraud of himself or his agent.

Plaintiffs, in suits against common carriers, for loss, damage or non-delivery, not required to prove negligence or criminal act.

* [Sec. 8 :—Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, every common carrier shall be liable to the owner for loss of or damage to any property delivered to such carrier to be carried where such loss or damage shall have arisen from the negligence or criminal act of the carrier or any of his agents or servants.]

† [Sec. 9 :—In any suit brought against a common carrier for the loss, damage, or non-delivery of goods entrusted to him for carriage, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to prove that such loss, damage or non-delivery was owing to the negligence or criminal act of the carrier, his servant or agents.]

members of such committee no right to close the church or oust the vicar, and still less to appoint a priest not under the discipline of and obedience to the Church of Rome.

APPEAL from the decree of SHEPHARD, J., sitting on the Original Side of the High Court in Civil Suit No. 48 of 1891.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Shephard, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs, and the defendants preferred this appeal.

Mr. W. Grant for Appellants.

Messrs. Kernan and R. F. Grant for Respondents.

Judgment.—The church, which is the subject of dispute, is called the Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Assumption, and is situated in Big Pancherry in Black Town. It appears to have been built about 1640, and in the list of Roman Catholic Churches (Exhibit C) it is described as supported by the See of Saint Thomé and by private contributions. There is no endowment, and as far as can be gathered it was built by Native Christians with the assistance of a Mr. D'Souza, a rich Portuguese merchant. There appear to have been quarrels from time to time about its management, but for a long time—at any rate more than a century—it has been within the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Mylapore. At the time of the concordat between the Pope and the King of Portugal in 1886, it was placed within the territorial jurisdiction of the [448] Archbishop of Madras. But, subsequently by a decree of 1887, it was transferred back again to the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Mylapore.

The present suit is by the Bishop of Mylapore and the vicar of the church. It appears that the defendants, who style themselves churchwardens or dharmakartas—they claim to be hereditary dharmakartas—have taken forcible possession of the church and its property. They claim a right to dismiss the vicar, to appoint a schismatic priest, to exclude the Bishop of Mylapore and the present vicar from the church at their pleasure, and, in fact, they maintain that the proprietary right of the church is vested in them, and that the building is their own property.

It is not denied that for 250 years the church has been used for the purpose of divine worship according to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of Rome. Not a scrap of evidence exists to show that defendants are proprietors of the building in the sense that they might devote it to any other use than that for which it has been dedicated since it was built. Nor is there any evidence to show that defendants or any of them have succeeded by hereditary right to the office of churchwardens or dharmakartas. There is no evidence of endowment or of the constitution of a trust, and if the defendants are wardens and trustees of the church, it is manifestly absurd to allege that they in such capacity are at liberty to use the property entrusted to their care for purposes not only inconsistent with, but antagonistic to, the objects of the trust. If, therefore, the defendants are churchwardens, the Court would be justified in removing them for such acts as seizing the church by force, expelling the vicar, repudiating the ecclesiastical authority of the bishop, and claiming the right to appoint a schismatic priest. But in order satisfactorily to determine the rights of the parties, it is necessary to consider whether the defendants are dharmakartas at all, and, if so, what are the limits of their powers. It is evident that for more than a century—at any rate from 1792—some of the Native Christians, under the designation of headmen, dharmakartas or directors, have been associated with the priest in charge in matters relating to the upkeep of the fabric and the keeping of the accounts of the church. It is not denied by the plaintiffs that there has been such a committee of directors; but it is contended that these headmen or directors have been appointed by the bishop to assist the vicar, [449] and that they are in no sense proprietors of the church, and no trust property is vested in them.

Exhibit B is an edict issued by the then Bishop of Mylapore on the 10th August 1792. It shows that in earlier times, when the church was under the authority of the Capuchins, the superior of that order was at liberty to nominate directors subject to the approval of the Bishop of St. Thomé. The edict goes on to recite that various misappropriations and peculations have been committed by different headmen, amounting in all to 1,974 pagodas, which sum is ordered to be recovered from them. Seventeen directors are appointed for the functions of the said chapel, and it is provided that in the event of a vacancy by death or other cause, the superior shall nominate any director for the approval of the Bishop. The care of the money received by subscriptions, etc., is vested in the superior, the President of the Committee, and two of the headmen, and it is provided that disputes shall be settled by the body of the directors, whose decision, however, shall not be effectual if not in conformity with the opinion of the reverend superior.

The position of the directors as shown in this document is consistent with that shown in Exhibit O. This is a petition presented to the Episcopal Governor of Mylapore by the Pariahs of Big Parcherry, dated the 27th May 1817, and the order thereon. In the petition the Pariahs state that by a special miracle they have obtained possession of the church from the Reverend Jaao Fidelis, and in order that the Christians may not be deprived of divine worship, the petitioners, as dharmakartas of the church and describing themselves as "regularly appointed by the Bishop of St. Thomé and by your Lordship," pray that the church may be re-opened for mass and divine service. In the order, dated the 29th May 1817, the Episcopal Governor gives a certificate authorising the opening of the church and appointing a vicar for the same.

Exhibit V is a letter from the Vicar-General of St. Thomé, dated the 9th October 1871, cancelling a rule that had been issued by the directors of the church and ordering that the rule which had been previously in force shall be observed. This letter is addressed to Marian Pillai and other dharmakartas of the church and shows that the discipline which was existent in 1792 and 1817 was still observed. This pastoral letter refers to an arrangement [450] for the conduct of church affairs, dated the 30th June 1838, which had been made by Bishop Teixeira, but this document was not produced. A document which was alleged to be a true copy of that arrangement was produced by the defendants, but we will consider this later on in dealing with the defendants' documents. Exhibit L is another pastoral letter from the same Vicar-General, dated the 4th July 1872, giving directions to the headmen regarding the monthly meeting and the income of the church. Exhibit Q is a letter, dated the 25th January 1873, addressed by Marian Pillai as churchwarden to the Vicar-General complaining of the conduct of the vicar and his ecclesiastical superiors and claiming that beyond performing the services of the church the vicar has no further power, but that the administration of it is vested in the churchwardens. Upon this letter the Vicar-General has endorsed the following order: "I do not acknowledge any authorized churchwarden in the Church of the Blessed Virgin Mary of Assumption, Big Parcherry, which was by mutual consent of the headmen and dharmakartas put in 1840 under the control of the prelates of the Bishopric of St. Thomé for onerous title besides the present headmen, president confirmed by me and dharmakartas who obey my orders." Two of the documents produced by the defence, Exhibit XXI, dated the 5th January 1831, and Exhibit XIX, dated the 14th November 1847, go to confirm the contention of the Bishop as to the position and duties of the headmen, President and Directors of Mathuranaiyagiammal's church.

Passing now to the documentary evidence adduced by the defendants, we find that it is of two kinds, first, documents adduced in order to prove that the ecclesiastical authorities have admitted the claims made by the defendants, and, secondly, documents from which it may be shown that defendants have asserted their rights.

In the first class are Exhibits VI, IV and VIII. Exhibit VI purports to be a Tamil translation of the agreement of the 30th June 1838, authenticated in 1871 by Father Amarante, Vicar-General of Saint Thome, which it is said was furnished to the headmen, together with letter IV, in which they were told that the original had been sent to the Archbishop of Goa. The genuineness of both these documents is denied by the plaintiffs, and the learned Judge has found that they are not proved to be genuine. We may observe, in the first place, that Exhibit VI purports to be a copy only; no reason is assigned why the original should not have [451] been procured either from the archives of the Bishop of Mylapore or from those of the Archbishop of Goa. Nor is it clear why defendants themselves should not have made and kept a copy of the original document before transmitting it to the Vicar-General. The learned Judge has set out his reasons for discrediting the document. It is ungrammatical and almost untranslatable, and its alleged contents are such as to raise a very strong presumption against its genuineness. Bearing in mind the high state of discipline always maintained in the Roman Catholic Church, it is inconceivable to us that a Bishop of that church should really bind himself, in the event of his failing to follow the regulations of headmen appointed by himself, not only to forfeit his interest in the church, but to recall the Vicar appointed by him. We have no hesitation in saying that the internal evidence of the letter is to us conclusive against its genuineness. Exhibit VIII is a letter addressed to Marian Pillai by the vicar acknowledging receipt of the key of the harmonium and informing him that on his transfer from the church, he, the vicar, will return it. The letter concludes with the words "and will subject the rules of your church." The contention of the plaintiffs is that these words are an interpolation, and the learned Judge has so found. We agree with him for the words added are neither grammar nor sense.

Finding then that Exhibit VI is unproved, we find no trace of assumption of proprietary right in the church by the dharmakarthas until the letter (Exhibit Q) in 1873, and that claim was then repudiated by the Vicar-General. The next occasion on which we find it brought forward is in 1886, and on that occasion it was rather hinted at than distinctly stated. The year 1886 was, as we have before mentioned, the year in which the concordat was concluded between the Pope and the King of Portugal. Exhibit XVI is a petition addressed by the church-wardens and congregation of this church to His Most Faithful Majesty the King of Portugal, in which the petitioners set forth their objections to the territorial boundaries fixed by the concordat and their strong attachment to the See of St. Thome, whose jurisdiction over them, they pray, may be maintained. But the last paragraph contains a hint that if the prayer be not granted, the petitioners may not submit themselves to the orders of the Pope and the King. It is stated that should the five churches be possibly made over to the Irish missionaries, the members of the said churches will be under [452] the painful necessity of seeking other redress. As we understand these words it is hinted that petitioners may have recourse to the Courts in British India to avoid submission to the authority of the Pope and of His Majesty. This was followed on the 17th January 1887, by a letter (Exhibit XXVIII) from Marian Pillai to the Vicar-General in which the same threat is repeated. Marian Pillai there states he cannot resist the removal of the priest, but he adds "you must know that any interference with the church and its property will be legally proceeded with. For this I must inform you that as soon as the orders for the removal of the priest are known here the church will be closed." Whether any action would have been taken upon these threats it is impossible to say, but the claims of the dharmakarthas were not at that time repudiated by the Mylapore Mission, possibly because, if the transfer was carried out, their control and authority exercised by them would have passed to the Archbishop of Madras. We find, however, from Exhibit XXIX, that the petition was successful and the church was re-transferred to the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Mylapore. The conclusion we have come to, therefore, is that the documents put forward to show the admission of the defendants' claim of right by the Mylapore Mission are not proved to be genuine, and that the evidence only proves there has existed for a long time a committee of Directors appointed by the Bishop and permitted to choose a President from among themselves, but whose orders were subject to the control of the Bishop and the Vicar.

It appears to have been the duty of these headmen to assist the priest in the secular affairs of the church, in return for which they were allowed certain advantages in the payment of half-fees for marriages, funerals and other ceremonials. We agree with the learned Judge that the appointment of such a committee could give the members thereof no right to close the church or to oust the vicar, and still less to appoint a schismatic priest not under discipline and obedience to the Church of Rome.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

[453] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th and 14th March, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Chairman, Ongole Municipality.....(Defendant) Petitioner

Mounsey.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.*

District Municipalities Act (Madras)—Act IV of 1884, s. 55—Profession tax—What amounts to an exercise of profession or the holding of office under the section.

An officer, whose head-quarters are within a Municipality, does not ipso facto exercise his profession or hold such office or appointment within the Municipality so as to render himself liable for the payment of profession tax under Madras Act IV of 1884. Accordingly an officer who is not personally present at his headquarters in the course of duty for a period of sixty days in the half-year is not liable for the tax under section 55 of the Act.

PETITION under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of V. Subrahmanyam Garoo, District Munsif of Ongole, in Small Cause Suit No. 202 of 1892.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgments of MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and BEST, JJ. The District Munsif decreed in favour of the plaintiff, and the defendant preferred this appeal.

Krishnaswami Chetti for Petitioner.

Mr. Brown for Respondent.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—This was a suit to recover back the sum of Rs. 25 which was illegally collected by defendant from plaintiff as profession tax due by him to the Municipality for the year 1891-92. During that year, plaintiff held the office of Sub-Collector of Nellore. Defendant is the Chairman of the Municipality in the town of Ongole which is the head-quarters of the Sub-Collector. His office buildings are at Ongole, but it has been found by the District Munsif, that during the year 1891-92, he resided at Ongole and did his work there, except for 22 days in the first half, and for 20 days in the second half of the year. It is in evidence that he was appointed as the Acting District Judge of [434] Salem on the 15th June, and reverted to his appointment as Sub-Collector on the 19th September. It is also in evidence that he obtained permission to hold his office at Nellore for two months from October. It is clear then that save for the forty-two days mentioned above, he was in circuit and did his work outside Ongole. It appears, however, that some clerk was left at the headquarters when the Sub-Collector was in circuit, and that the whole office establishment did not accompany him. The question is, whether upon these facts, plaintiff is liable to pay profession tax under section 55, Act IV of 1884. The material words "hold office or appointment within the Municipality" mean carrying on business there as the holder of the particular office. The intention was to place public servants like the plaintiff in the same position in which others are, who exercise their profession within the municipal limits. It is the nature of plaintiff's duty often to go out on circuit, and if urgent work outside the Municipality requires his presence there for about six months, it cannot be said that he still works within the municipal limits. The cause of his liability is his participation in the benefit and convenience conferred by the Municipality upon those residing within the municipal limits. By section 59 plaintiff is exempted from liability if he does not hold his office for sixty days or more in any half-year. The contention that wherever he may do business as Sub-Collector, he must be presumed to carry on such business at his head-quarters is one to which I cannot accede as sound within the meaning of the Municipal Act, for, under that enactment, it is an essential condition of liability that the profession should be exercised within the municipal limits. The decision of the District Munsif is right and this petition must be dismissed with costs.

Best, J.—The only question for decision in this case is as to the meaning of the words "exercised such calling or held any such office or appointment, within the Municipality" as used in section 55 of the District Municipalities Act No. IV of 1884 (Madras).

It is conceded on behalf of the petitioner, the Chairman of the Municipality of Ongole (in the Nellore District), that it is only in case of the calling having been exercised or office or appointment held within the Municipality for a period of not less than sixty days within a half-year that the tax is payable; and it is not denied that during each of the half-years in question Mr.

Mounsey, the counter-petitioner, did not personally exercise his calling or [463] hold office within the Municipality for the minimum period of sixty days. It is contended, however, that as Ongole is the headquarters station of the Sub-Collector of Nellore, and as Mr. Mounsey held the appointment of Sub-Collector for more than the minimum period in each of the half-years, he is liable to pay the tax. The question, therefore, is whether an officer, whose headquarters are within a Municipality, is to be considered ipso facto as exercising his profession or calling, or holding his office or appointment, within such Municipality, although as a matter of fact he was absent from the Municipality and discharging the duties of his office elsewhere. If the subordinates left in charge of the office at Ongole could be held to be doing the Sub-Collector's work, there would be ground for holding the contention on behalf of the Municipality to be valid, on the principle of qui facit per alium facit per se. But the Sub-Collector's duties cannot be delegated by him to be done by his clerks. His duties must be discharged by himself alone, and that at the place where he happens to hold his office from time to time. This may be anywhere within his division, or even out of it, if sanctioned by the proper authorities. As appears from the evidence in the present case, Mr. Mounsey was absent for some time of the period in question in the Salem District as Acting Judge of that district : for a portion of the period he held office at Nellore, with permission obtained from the Collector, and during other portions he was out on famine duty. He consequently held his office in Ongole for not more than twenty-two days during the first of the two half-years in question and for even a shorter period during the second of the two half-years.

I think that the District Munsif is right in holding that, under these circumstances, Mr. Mounsey was not liable to pay profession tax to the Ongole Municipality for either of the two half-years in question.

I would therefore dismiss this petition with costs.

Janasetji Nowroji* (I.L.R., 9 Bom., 68) distinguished.

APPEAL against the decree of C. Ramachandrier, District Judge of Nellore, in Original Suit No. 30 of 1890.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the order of reference and the judgment of the High Court.

The District Judge found in favour of the plaintiff, and the defendant preferred this appeal.

Mr. Wedderburn, Mr. Brown and Krishnasamu Chetti for Appellant.

Pattabhiramu Ayyar for Respondent.

This appeal coming on for hearing before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice DAVIES, the Court made the following order of reference to the Full Bench.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO THE FULL BENCH.—This was a suit for damages sustained by plaintiff in consequence of the defendant [467] having cancelled a kararnama. The facts of the case are as follow: The plaintiff put in a darkast in April 1889, offering to take in izara two villages in defendant's zamindari for a term of five years from the 1st July 1889 to 30th June 1893 at a yearly rental of Rs. 1,400. This offer was accepted by the Dewan on 24th October 1889 (Exhibit IV, and see also Exhibit J). On the 30th November 1889 the plaintiff executed and delivered to the defendant's agents the kabuliat (Exhibit VI), and an hypothecation bond for securing the first year's rent (Exhibit VII), and was, on the same day, put in possession of the villages. On the 28th April 1890 the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant (Exhibit O) to register the plaintiff's kabuliat (Exhibit VI), and its counterpart, the cowle (Exhibit V). This latter document has not been executed by defendant. The defendant took no notice of this request, but a few days afterwards cancelled the lease. This cancellation, the District Judge has found, was made without sufficient cause, and we agree with him.

It will be observed that Exhibits IV, V, VI and VII were produced and filed on behalf of the defendant. At the hearing of the appeal the defendant's counsel objected that these documents could not be considered for any purpose by the Court, as they were unregistered (section 49 of the Registration Act). No issue was raised on this point in the lower Court. The point referred to the Full Bench is,—can the Exhibits J, IV, V, VI and VII be considered to ascertain the nature and terms of the contract made between the plaintiff and defendant for the purpose of assessing the damages caused to the plaintiff by the wrongful act of the defendant or for any other and what purpose.

This appeal coming on for hearing before the Full Bench, the Court delivered the following judgment.

Judgment:—In the course of the argument it was agreed that the only document as to which any question of registration arises is Exhibit VI, the kabuliat signed by the plaintiff and given to the defendant.

The question is whether that document, although not registered, can be admitted in evidence in support of the plaintiff's claim. If the plaintiff's action was founded on an alleged title in virtue of a lease granted by the defendant, and his case were that as lessee he had been unlawfully ejected from the demised land, there can be no doubt that the document VI could not be admitted in [458] evidence. The plaintiff would then be seeking to use it as evidence of a transaction affecting immoveable property. But it is clear that that is not the case made in the plaint. The plaint sets out the agreement for a lease of the village which was to run from fasli 1299 and last for five years. It is stated that certain things were done in pursuance of the agreement, among other things, that the plaintiff was put in possession. Then it is charged that the defendant did not register the kabuliati and improperly deprived the plaintiff of possession. The cause of action alleged is the failure on the part of the defendant to act up to the karar (i. e., the agreement for a lease), and the improper resumption of the village.

It is clear that the plaintiff does not assert his title under the incomplete lease, and that he does complain of the breach of contract on the part of the defendant in refusing to register the kabuliati and give him a cowle, and also in disturbing his possession. The act of the defendant in thus disturbing the plaintiff's possession is merely a part of the defendant's conduct which the plaintiff complains of as a breach of the contract made with him. It is not an essential part, for, if the plaintiff had never been in possession, he would have had his right of action.

Having regard to the language of section 49 of the Registration Act, we think there is no doubt that the kabuliati, although not registered, is admissible in evidence to prove the contract. We do not think it is necessary to refer to the cases cited except the case of Hurjivan Virji v. Jamsetji Nowroji (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 63), as to which it has to be observed that although the plaint included a prayer for damages, the judgment makes no reference to it. The decision cannot, therefore, be cited as an authority against the admissibility of a document in this case.

In our opinion the answer to the question referred should be that the document may be admitted to prove the contract and the damages occasioned by the breach of it.

This appeal coming on for final disposal after the expression of the opinion of the Full Bench, the Court delivered the following judgment.

Judgment:—The undisputed facts in this case are that an offer made by the plaintiff to the Dewan of the defendant to take on [459] lease the village of Valamaid attached to the defendant's zamindari for a term of five years from the 1st July 1889 to the 30th June 1893 (fasli years 1299 to 1303) at a yearly rental of Rs. 1,400 was accepted by the Dewan (Exhibit I) on the 24th October 1889. On the 30th of November following the plaintiff, as directed, (Exhibit IV) executed and delivered to the defendant's agents the kabuliati (Exhibit VI), and an hypothecation bond for securing the first year's rent (Exhibit VII), and was, on the same day, under previous orders of the Dewan (Exhibits J and R) put in possession of the village (Exhibits G and L). Disputes subsequently arose between the plaintiff and the ryots of the village, the plaintiff complaining that the ryots were, at the instigation of the village karnam, refractory (Exhibit XXI), and the ryots complaining that the plaintiff was oppressing them (Exhibits I and II), the result of which was that the plaintiff's lease was cancelled by beat of tom-tom in the village. A few days previously, that is, on the 28th April 1890, the plaintiff had given notice to the defendant (Exhibit O) calling on the defendant to have the plaintiff's kabuliati IV and its counterpart the cowle (Exhibit V), which had been prepared on the 30th November, registered, to which demand, however, no attention was paid. Those documents with Exhibit VII accordingly remain unregistered to this day—the cowle indeed never having been executed. The plaintiff now sues, by way of damages, for the loss he had sustained and would sustain by the defendant's failure to carry on the contract of lease.

The defendant contended, in the lower Court, that the contract was not completed and was inoperative, as the lease had not been registered, and that the plaintiff had forfeited the benefit of the lease by his misconduct. The District Judge found the contract was complete and that plaintiff had not by any conduct on his part worked a forfeiture of the lease, and awarded plaintiff as damages for the breach of contract Rs. 3,470 as against Rs. 4,000 claimed by him.

The defendant's appeal is really urged on but two grounds. It could not be contended on the facts as already set forth that the contract had not been concluded, especially when plaintiff had actually been put into possession under it, and on the merits it could not be shown that plaintiff had committed any act coming within the forfeiture clause of lease. He had acted within his rights in letting out fresh land for cultivation, which was in sub-[460] stance the ryot's grievance against him. There was no proof that he unnecessarily harassed them.

The chief ground of appeal then is that it was by plaintiff's own default that the lease was not registered, and not being registered, evidence of its terms was inadmissible, and the other ground is that the damage decreed were excessive and too remote.

The first of these points was not made an issue in the lower Court, and consequently was not argued there. The argument put forward here is that the plaintiff could have registered the document G as embodying the terms of the lease, or he could have compelled the registration of the kabuliat K by taking out process under Sections 36 to 39 of the Registration Act, and, by thus failing to get the lease registered, evidence to prove its terms cannot be received according to Section 49 of the Act. The prohibition in Section 49 is that no document required to be registered (and, in this case, the lease being for five years, undoubtedly required to be registered) shall be received as evidence of any transaction affecting immoveable property. The real nature of this suit is for compensation for disturbing the plaintiff in his possession, and doing the necessary acts to entitle him to possession, such, for example, as not executing the counterpart of the lease and duly registering it; so that the non-registration is itself part of the plaintiff's cause of action. It may be that to save himself he could have adopted one of the courses suggested to effect registration, but that would not absolve the defendant from his liability, because the defendant's was the primary liability. The plaintiff has done all that it lay on him to do. He had executed his muchilika and handed it to the defendant's agent. It was then left for the defendant to execute the counterpart and hand it to the plaintiff. The proper answer, however, to the argument advanced is that this is not a suit brought upon the kabuliat and cowle (Exhibits VI and V), which, it should be noticed, were not filed for plaintiff as part of his case but by defendant, but a suit upon a breach of an implied contract by the defendant to do that which it was necessary for him to do in order to give effect to the agreement he had entered into with the plaintiff. The other unregistered documents that have been put in showing the terms of the lease, have not been put in to enforce the lease, in which case they would not have been admissible as evidence as they would have been evidence of a transaction affecting immoveable [461] property, but they must be deemed to have been put in simply as evidence of the character of the breach of agreement by the defendant, and as a basis for calculating the measure of damages, neither of which things can, in the least, affect the land lying in the village of Valamaid. The first objection must, therefore, be disallowed. We, however, thought it right to refer this point to a Full Bench, as it has never been directly raised and decided by this High Court. In regard to the other objection as to the damages decreed, there is no ground for holding that the District Judge is wrong either in his findings of fact or the principles he has adopted in assessing damages. He finds, on sufficient materials, that the plaintiff could have made on an average an annual net profit of Rs. 694 on his lease, and it is five times that amount for the five years' term of the lease that he has rightly decreed to plaintiff. The plaintiff was as clearly entitled to prospective as to past profits in a suit for damages.

The appeal accordingly fails, and it is dismissed with costs.

assignment by an agreement in writing of all the assignor's property, including a promissory note, was held not to be sufficient to sustain a suit by the assignee on the note in the absence of an endorsement. The ground of decision is that a promissory note cannot be negotiated by the mere execution of a deed of assignment. The right of suit did not pass to the plaintiffs by operation of law, for the company of which defendant was a member was wound up, and it is admitted that the plaintiffs' firm derived its right from assignment by Exhibits B and C. The promissory note purports to be payable to the payee or order, and it is not denied that it is a negotiable instrument. I set aside the decree of the District Munsif, and direct that the suit be dismissed with costs.

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, s. 539—Whether a suit to remove a trustee to a charitable trust lies under the section.

A suit to remove a trustee to a charitable trust does not lie under s. 539† of the Code of Civil Procedure. Narasimha v. Ayyan Chetti (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 157) followed.

* Appeal No. 66 of 1891.

or granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

The powers conferred by this section on the Advocate-General may, outside the Presidency towns, be, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, exercised also by the Collector or by such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf. Act No. X of 1840, sec. 2, is hereby repealed.]

Per SHEPARD. J.—The language of s. 539 is in part borrowed from 52 George III, cap. 101 (Sir Samuel Romilly's Act) and the decisions upon that statute are in a measure reproduced in the section. Section 539 should, accordingly, be construed in the light of the decisions on that statute, so far as they are applicable [463] to the language of the section, and the statute having from the first been held to be inapplicable to cases in which the hostile removal of a trustee is required, s. 539 is likewise inapplicable to such cases.

APPEAL against the decree of H. H. O'Farrell, Acting District Judge of Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 49 of 1889.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgments of the Full Bench of the High Court.

Mr. D Rozario for Appellant.

Ramachendra Rau Saheb for Respondents, Nos. 1 to 5, 7, 8, 10 and 11.

This appeal coming on for hearing before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice WILKINSON, the Court made the following order of reference to the Full Bench.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO THE FULL BENCH.—Narasimha v. Ayyan Chetti (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 157) was dissented from by two of the Judges who took part in Subbayya v. Krishna (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 186). Two other Judges have followed the opinion of the majority of the Judges in Subbayya v. Krishna (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 186) in two unreported cases, Original Suit Appeal No. 4 of 1891 and Regular Appeal No. 199 of 1887. Considering the difference of opinion that exists on the point, we resolve to submit to a Full Bench the question "whether under section 539 of the Civil Procedure Code a suit to remove a trustee will lie."

This appeal coming on for hearing before the Full Bench, the Court delivered the following judgments.

Collins, C. J.—The question referred to the Full Bench for decision is "whether under Section 539 of the Civil Procedure Code a suit to remove a trustee will lie."

There has been a great diversity of opinion amongst the Judges of the Madras High Court on this point. In Narasimha v. Ayyan Chetti (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 157), Mr. Justice KERNAN and Mr. Justice WILKINSON expressed doubts whether Section 539 empowered a Court to remove a trustee, whilst in Subbayya v. Krishna (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 186), Mr. Justice MUTTUSAMI AYYAR in a most exhaustive judgment reviewed the statutes and cases both English and Indian relating to the subject in question, and came to the conclusion that section 539 did not authorize the removal of a trustee. BEST and WEIR, JJ., took the opposite view and held that a trustee could be removed in a suit brought under this section. It appears to me that section 539 of the Civil Procedure [464] Code was drafted on the lines of 52 George III., cap. 101, commonly called Romilly's Act, and the draftsman must have been well aware that it had been held that the Act did not apply when the question arose as to whether a trustee should be adversely dismissed for misconduct. Is it probable, therefore, that if the Legislature intended the section to apply to a case where the removal of a trustee was in question that specific relief would not have been mentioned. The section enumerates the specific reliefs that are given and the first is appointment of new trustees under the trust. We are, however, asked to add words to the section and to say that the Legislature intended to give the power to remove adversely a trustee although the Legislature refrained from saying so. The words "granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require" cannot, under the recognized rules of construction, be said to give a Court the power to remove a trustee.

The words of a statute cannot be construed contrary to their meaning as embracing or excluding cases merely, because no good reason appears why they should be excluded or embraced: see Pike v. Hoare (Eden. 184), per Lord Northington, per curiam in Dean v. Reid (Peters, 524). The duty of the Court is not to make the law reasonable, but to expound it as it stands according to the real sense of the words:—see per CRESSWELL, J., in Biffin v. Yorke (6 Scott's N. R., 234 S. C., 5 M. & Gr., 428). It is far better, says Lord Campbell in Coe v. Lawrence (1 E. & B., 516), that we should abide by the words of a statute than seek to reform it according to the supposed intention.

I agree with the dictum expressed by the Judges in Narasimha v. Ayyan Chetti (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 157), and in the judgment of Mr. Justice MUTTUSAMI AYYAR in Subbaya v. Krishna (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 186), and answer the question referred to the Full Bench in the negative.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I adhere to the opinion expressed by me in the previous decision.

Shephard, J.—The question is whether under the provision of Section 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, two or more persons can, with the consent of the Advocate-General, institute a suit for the removal of a trustee on the ground of fraudulent and improper conduct.

[46.] The terms of the section with reference to the relief which may be obtained are not merely general. The section particularizes the points to which the decree may be directed:

- (a) appointing new trustees under the trust;
- (b) vesting any property in the trustees under the trust;
- (c) declaring the proportions in which its objects are entitled;
- (d) authorizing the whole or any part of its property to be let, sold, mortgaged or exchanged;
- (e) settling a scheme for its management, or granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

The section is significantly silent with regard to that most important head of relief in connection with trusts, viz., the removal of fraudulent trustees. The contention, therefore, that the section was intended to comprehend suits having that end in view can only be rested on the ground that by necessary implication jurisdiction to entertain such suits was conferred by the section. Apart from this section there is no doubt that in the Presidency Town it was competent to the Advocate-General to initiate proceedings either for the purpose of removing a trustee or for the purposes mentioned in the section, including that of having a scheme of management settled by the Court, as was done in the Patchiappa case. The powers of the Advocate-General in this respect to take action for the protection of charitable trusts are the same as those which the Attorney-General in England possesses; Attorney-General v. Brodie (4 M. I. A., 194). In the Mufussil it was different. There was no public official who could take action in the Courts with reference to trusts and it was probably doubtful whether the Mufussil Courts had jurisdiction with regard to trusts such as is undoubtedly given by the present section. At any rate no case can be found in which a Mufussil Court has exercised such jurisdiction.

This being the state of things, while no alteration of the law was required for the Presidency Town, for the Provincial Courts with regard to charities in the mufussil, there was need that jurisdiction should be given to enable those Courts to deal more effectually with trust property. Whether the Legislature had any further purpose in view and intended that District Courts [466] should grant relief generally with regard to such trusts in suits instituted by a public official or by interested persons with his consent is the question we have to determine. In favour of the construction of the section giving the Court this larger jurisdiction it may fairly be said that the case such as the present, in which the removal of the trustee is alleged to be required in the interests of the trust, is eminently one in which it might be thought that a power to invoke the aid of the Court should be given either to a public official or to persons interested in the trust. Legislation to that effect with reference to charities not of a religious character would be in harmony with the enactment already in force with regard to trusts of a religious character; for under the Act of 1863 it is competent to persons interested in a religious establishment, on leave of the District Court being first obtained but without joining as plaintiff any of the other persons interested, to bring a suit against the trustee who has been guilty of breach of trust and to obtain his removal from office or other relief.

It is incorrect to say that charitable trusts which are not within the Act of 1863 are left wholly unprovided for unless a general jurisdiction with regard to them is given by the section: see Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 816). As has been pointed out by two of the learned Judges in Subbayya v. Krishna (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 199, 220), a jurisdiction to remove trustees has always been exercised by the Mofussil Courts. The remedy is not wanting altogether; but except in this section of the Code there is no provision of law empowering any public official to take action.

In the course of the argument stress was laid on the difficulties which would arise if the jurisdiction claimed is taken to be conferred by the section. It appears to me that no construction of the section is altogether free from difficulties. On the one hand if the section is to be restricted to proceedings not involving the removal of a trustee, it may be said that although the suit is launched upon an allegation of breach of trust and a breach of trust of a serious nature requiring the removal of the trustee may be proved, the District Court or the High Court, as the case may be, will have to stay its hand and remit the parties to an inferior Court to obtain the proper relief. Again, it would seem strange [467] that the Legislature should think it necessary to restrict to the High Court and District Court the jurisdiction in such simple matters as appointing new trustees, for although there may be a prayer for the settlement of a scheme the jurisdiction is complete notwithstanding that there is no such prayer. Again, seeing that for the Presidency Towns no amendment of the law was required, it is difficult to understand why the Advocate-General was mentioned and why an alternative jurisdiction was given to the High Court. On the other hand it may be objected that there being already a jurisdiction in the Mofussil Court to remove trustees an enactment giving jurisdiction to certain Courts only in the same matter would be anomalous. It might lead to the most inconvenient results if a suit could be instituted under the section in the High Court and at the same time another suit under the old procedure in a District Munsif's Court. Passing from these considerations from which in my opinion no conclusion can safely be drawn, I come to consider the other enactments with regard to the same subject-matter which the Legislature had before them in 1877. In this country there was the Act of 1863 relating to religious endowments and containing the section already mentioned which gives a general jurisdiction to the Civil Court in the case of any breach of trust. In specifying the relief which may be granted, Section 14 expressly mentions the removal of the trustee or other person incriminated. If in 1877 it was intended to give the District Court a similar jurisdiction in suits launched by persons interested in non-religious trusts, and in the section as originally framed the words 'or religious' do not appear, it is difficult to understand why all mention of this important head of relief, the removal of trustees, was not mentioned.

It is clear, however, that the language of the section was not borrowed from the Act of 1863 and that it was in part borrowed from the statute of George III known as Sir Samuel Romilly's Act. That being so, we are bound to have regard to the interpretation which has been put upon the latter Act—and the more so inasmuch as it appears that the decisions upon the statute are in a measure reproduced in the section of the Code. It is true that the circumstances under which legislation was required in England and in India were widely different. In England the ordinary mode of obtaining redress with regard to charities being by way [468] of information exhibited by the Attorney-General, what was required was not a forum or a new jurisdiction but a new mode of invoking the aid of the Court. The statute is entitled "An Act to provide a summary remedy in cases of abuses of trusts created for charitable purposes" and it enables two or more persons to proceed by petition praying such relief as the nature of the case might require.

In this country what was required at least for the mufussil was the creation of a new jurisdiction. The chapter does not state that the jurisdiction is to be summary (compare title of chapter XXXIX) and I cannot agree that it was intended that the proceeding being by suit should have that character. [See per WEIR, J., in Subbayya v. Krishna (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 216).] Notwithstanding these distinctions which may be drawn between the two enactments, I think we are bound to construe the language of chapter XL in the light of the decisions on the statute, so far as they are applicable to that language. The statute was from the outset held not to be applicable to cases in which the hostile removal of a trustee is required (see cases collected in Lewin on Trusts and Daniell, Ch. P., cap. XXXVIII) and a further Act had to be passed in 1853 (16 and 17 Vic., cap. 137), empowering the Court under certain circumstances on application made to order the removal or appointment of any trustee. When it is found that the Legislature with those statutes and the decisions on them and also with the Act of 1863 before them omitted all reference to removal of trustees, the inference seems to me irresistible that that matter was not intended to be brought within the scope of the chapter. General words, it is true, are used similar to those used in the statute, but those words must be read with the words that go before and cannot be taken to include a distinct and substantive head of relief. In my opinion a jurisdiction to remove trustees as it is not given expressly by the chapter is not given by necessary implication, and therefore the question referred to us must be answered in the negative.

This case coming on for final hearing, after the delivery of the opinions of the Full Bench, the Court delivered the following judgment.

Judgment.—In accordance with the opinion of the Full Bench, we must hold that the suit is not maintainable in the District [469] Court. The plaint ought to have been returned. We must modify the decree accordingly. The appellant must pay the costs of appeal.

NOTES.

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Linga Reddi.....(Defendant No. 4) Appellant

versus

Sama Rau and others.....(Plaintiff and Defendants Nos. 1 to 3) Respondents.*

Transfer of Property Act--Act IV of 1882, s. 68 (c)—Mortgagee's right to sue for the mortgage money where he is kept out of possession by mortgagor's indirect conduct.

Where a usufructuary mortgagee is unable to obtain possession of the mortgaged property owing to his mortgagor having executed a subsequent mortgage and placed the second mortgagee in possession, the first mortgagee may elect to sue at once for the money under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act, instead of for possession of the land.

APPEAL against the decree of R. S. Benson, District Judge of South Arcot, in Original Suit No. 19 of 1890.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

The District Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff, and the fourth defendant preferred this appeal.

Bhashyam Ayyangar and Krishnasami Ayyar for Appellant.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondents.

Best, J --The suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, was instituted by one P. Sama Rau (now first respondent) against Ranga Rao, his son Janakirama (a minor) and brother Ragava Rao (defendants 1, 2 and 3 respectively) as executants of the mortgage bond A (dated 10th July 1890), the other defendants in the suit being Linga Reddi (the present appellant) and three others holding prior mortgages over portions of the property mortgaged to plaintiff under the mortgage bond A.

Plaintiff's case was that of the Rs. 4,500 for which the mortgage bond A was executed, Rs. 3,000 were left with him [470] for redemption of the prior mortgages, and for payment to other creditors of defendants 1 to 3, but that his attempts to discharge the prior mortgage debts were frustrated by the machinations of the fourth defendant (now appellant), who induced defendants 1 to 3 to execute to himself on the 16th September 1890 a usufructuary mortgage of the property for Rs. 2,750, and to put him in possession of the property. Hence plaintiff's suit to recover from defendants 1 to 3, and on the responsibility of the property mortgaged to plaintiff under A, a sum of Rs. 2,256 paid by him to those defendants and certain creditors of theirs, up to 10th October 1890, with Rs. 450 as damages. Defendants 4 to 7 were included as defendants in consequence of their being in possession of portions of the properties.

* Appeal No. 115 of 1891.

First defendant's plea was that it was owing to plaintiff's failure to pay off the other mortgages that he was obliged to make other arrangements. Second and third defendants also pleaded adversely to the plaintiff, but it is unnecessary to consider their pleas for the purpose of this appeal.

Fourth defendant pleaded that plaintiff had no right to recover the money from the plaint property, as Exhibit A contained no pledge of the property. He also denied tender to him as alleged by the plaintiff. He further denied all knowledge of the payments alleged to have been made by plaintiff to, and on behalf of, defendants 1 to 3. He also denied the alleged collusion between himself and those defendants, and insisted on his right as prior mortgagee for a sum of Rs. 1,250 and also under the usufructuary mortgage bond of September 1890 for the further sum of Rs. 2,750.

It is unnecessary to state the pleas to the other defendants as the present appeal is by fourth defendant alone.

The District Judge has found that a sum of Rs. 2,181 was advanced by plaintiff to defendants 1 to 3 and is a valid mortgage-debt, but that of the property mortgaged under A a portion had previously been sold to sixth defendant under Exhibit XI, and that the land so sold must be excluded from liability for the debt due to plaintiff. As for the damages claimed, the District Judge held interest at 10 per cent. per annum on the amount found to have been paid by plaintiff to be a sufficient award. He, therefore, passed a decree against first and third defendants personally and against their shares of the mortgaged property for Rs. 2,181 [471] with interest thereon as above, second defendant's share being held liable only for a portion of the debt, and that only in case it is not satisfied out of the first and third defendants' shares; fourth defendant has been held jointly liable with first and third defendants for plaintiff's costs on the amount decreed to plaintiff, because the Judge found the litigation to be due to the intervention of fourth defendant who "induced first and third defendants to abandon their mortgage to plaintiff and give him one instead."

The present appeal is, as already observed, by fourth defendant, the respondents being plaintiff and defendants 1 to 3.

The points urged at the hearing are—

- (1) That as a usufructuary mortgagee, plaintiff is not entitled to sue for sale of the property.
- (2) That the suit is premature, as under the mortgage bond A, the money is not repayable till after the expiration of three years.
- (3) That plaintiff is entitled to sue only for possession of the property and redemption of prior mortgages.
- (4) That section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act is not applicable.
- (5) That the amount claimed is excessive.
- (6) That the damages cannot be made a charge on the property.

It is true that Exhibit A allows three years for payment of the money, but the finding is that owing to appellant's machinations the plaintiff was unable to get possession of the property. Section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that the mortgagee has a right to sue for the money, inter alia, where the mortgagee being entitled to possession of the property, the mortgagor fails to deliver possession to him or to secure the possession of it to him. No doubt in the present case the money for redemption was left with the plaintiff, and the mortgagor had to take no active part in placing him in possession of the property, and consequently the case is not one coming within the letter of the section, but there can be no doubt it is within the spirit of the rule contained therein; and as it was owing to the combined action of the mortgagors and appellant, that the respondent (plaintiff) was unable to get possession of the property, the latter must be allowed to elect to sue at once for the money instead of for possession of [472] the land, though no doubt a suit for possession was also open to him. I would, therefore, disallow the objections Nos. 1 to 4.

As to the fifth objection the Judge's finding is supported by Exhibit L and the receipts referred to in paragraph 13 of the judgment.

As to the last objection, under the mortgage A, plaintiff was entitled to the usufruct of the land in lieu of interest at 10 per cent. per annum. It is this same interest that is awarded as damages. I think it has been rightly made a charge upon the property. As remarked by ROMER, J., in the recent case of Cradock v. The Scottish Provident Institution [69 L. T. J. (N. S.), 380, 382], to constitute a charge in equity by deed or writing, it is not necessary that any general words of charge should be used. It is sufficient if the Court can fairly gather from the instrument an intention by the parties that the property therein referred to should constitute a security.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Objection has been taken on behalf of first respondent (plaintiff), under section 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the part of the decree which directs the property to be sold subject to the mortgages evidenced by Exhibits IV, V, and VI. As these mortgages are of date prior to that under which this suit has been brought, the Judge's decree is correct. The mere fact of the amounts due under these mortgages being included in the mortgage bond VII executed to fourth defendant by defendants 1 and 3 subsequently to the execution of A is no reason for holding that A is unaffected by them.

I would, therefore, dismiss first respondent's objections also with costs.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.:—I agree.

Evidence—Estoppel—Limitation of the doctrine in respect to a party suing as the representative of another—Stamp Act—Act I of 1879, s. 39—Whether secondary evidence of a lost document can be admitted on payment of penalty.

Where a person claims property as the representative of another, the doctrine of estoppel cannot apply to representations made by any one except that other person.

In the case of a lost document no penalty can be levied and secondary evidence admitted, for s. 89 of the Stamp Act presupposes that the document on which a penalty can be paid is forthcoming.

APPEAL against the decree of H. R. Farmer, District Judge of Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 39 of 1890.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the following judgment of the High Court.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal. *

Rama Rau and Bhashyam Ayyangar for Appellant.

Subramanya Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—Appellant is the zamindar of Bobbili, and respondent's late husband, Sitaramaswami, was the sister's son of appellant's paternal grandfather. The property in litigation is the proprietary estate called Chilikala Jagannathapuram, and it has admittedly been in the possession first of Sitaramaswami and after his death in that of his widow, the respondent, from February 1862. In that year, appellant's paternal grandfather transferred the estate for valuable consideration to respondent's husband under the patta VI. Appellant brought the present suit to eject the respondent from that estate and to recover possession of it with mesne profits for three years, 1887 to 1889. Appellant's mother, Chellayammi, was the daughter of Gopayammi, [474] who was the sister of appellant's paternal grandfather and wife of one Rajagopala Rao. The estate in dispute was first granted to Rajagopala Rao in 1848, and, on his death in 1856, his widow and the grantor applied to the Collector for its being registered in the name of the latter. The Collector accordingly registered the estate in the name of the grantor who, after continuing in possession for six years, transferred it for value under the patta VI to Sitaramaswami, as stated above. The ground on which the appellant rests his claim is that the first grant to his maternal grandfather Rajagopala Rao was absolute and unconditional, that it is not true as stated by his paternal grandfather and maternal grandmother in 1856 (Exhibits XVI and XVII), that the grant was subject to the condition that the estate was to revert to the grantor in the event of the grantee dying without male issue, and that the allegation made to that effect in 1856 was collusive and made in view to defraud the reversioner. He alleged that his maternal grandmother Gopayammi died in March 1872, that his mother died in May 1887, that he was adopted in February 1871 and attained his majority in 1881. It will thus be seen that appellant claims the estate as the daughter's son by adoption of Rajagopala Rao, the grantee of 1848. The respondent resisted the claim on the ground that the grant to Rajagopala Rao was not absolute but conditional, that the estate reverted to the grantor on Rajagopala's death without male issue, that the transfer of 1862 to her husband was valid, and that the appellant's claim was barred by limitation. The Judge held that the grant of 1848 was conditional, and that, although the claim was not barred by limitation, the appellant was estopped from asserting that his paternal grandfather was not competent to transfer the estate under patta VI, and that the transfer was valid. The Judge accordingly dismissed the suit with costs. Hence this appeal.

We are unable to agree with the Judge that the doctrine of estoppel applies to this case. It cannot apply when the person making the representation was not the person as whose representative the plaintiff claims the property, and in the case before us the appellant claims the estate in the right of his maternal grandfather, and not of his paternal grandfather, who was the person that declared that he was competent to transfer it under the patta VI. This limitation of the doctrine of estoppel is mentioned not only in the case referred to by the Judge [Syed Ameer Ali v. Syed [475] Ali (5 W.R. (C. R.,) 289)], but also by the Privy Council in Syed Nurul Hossein v. Theosahai (L. R., 19 I. A., 221). As to the question of limitation, the decision must depend on the further question whether the re-transfer to the appellant's paternal grandfather was the result of collusion between him and his sister Gopayammi. Act XIV of 1859 was the law of limitation in force until April 1873, and if the appellant's right were barred by that enactment, it could not be revived either by Act IX of 1871 or by Act XV of 1877, under which the death of the female on which the reversion becomes an estate vested in possession is the event from which time begins to run against the right of the reversioner to sue. Assuming that there was no collusion between appellant's paternal grandfather and maternal grandmother, and that the re-transfer to the grantor was bona fide, the resumption by the grantor in 1856 would be an act done in enforcement of an adverse title against both the widow and the reversioner, and not merely an act done under an alienation by the widow. The suit would then clearly be barred by Act XIV of 1859. It was also so held in Tarini Charan Ganguli v. John Watson (3 B. L. R., 437) and Aumirtolall Bose v. Rajoneekant Mitter (L. R., 2 I. A., 113).

The real question then for determination is whether the collusion alleged between Gopayammi and appellant's grandfather is proved. The onus of proving the fraud is clearly upon the appellant, and we are of opinion that his oral evidence is not reliable. It is true that his first three witnesses depose to a conversation between appellant's grandfather and maternal grandmother in which it was contrived that they should falsely represent to the Collector that the grant of 1848 was conditional. But we are unable to attach weight to their evidence. In the first place they are all ghosha ladies in a position of dependence on the appellant, and in receipt of maintenance from him. They say they never mentioned what they then heard to any one before this suit, and it is improbable that they should be able to remember, at this distance of time, the particulars to which they depose.

We are further of opinion that the Judge is right in refusing to admit in evidence an alleged copy of the grant of 1848, on the ground that the original was not sufficiently stamped under Regulation 13 of 1816 which was in force in 1848. The copy [476] shows that the stamp used was of Rs. 8 value, whilst it ought to have been of Rs. 50 value. The value of the property is not mentioned in the copy. The Judge was, however, in our opinion, justified in ascertaining the value by reference to Exhibits I and II, and the value of the stamp which should have been used must be calculated with reference to that value. We also agree with him that the copy should not be admitted on payment of penalty, for the provision of the Stamp Act regarding payment of penalty (section 39 of Act I of 1879) prescribes that such payment shall be endorsed on the document, and presupposes that the document is forthcoming. It was also held in Kopasan v. Shamu (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 440) that in the case of a lost document no penalty can be levied and secondary evidence admitted. As regards the contention that the onus of proving that the grant was conditional rests on the defendant, we are of opinion that the contention cannot be supported. In the written statement it was denied that any patta in writing was granted in 1848, and that there was any grant in April of that year at all, but it was alleged that there was a conditional grant in August 1848. Under these circumstances, we think it is incumbent on the plaintiffs to show that there was an unconditional grant in writing, this being part of his case. As was observed in Poslin Beharee

v. Watson and Company (9 W. R., 190) the averment in the written statements is not in the nature of a plea of confession and avoidance so as to shift the burden on to the defendant. Even assuming the onus of proof to have been on the defendant, the Judge's finding that the grant of 1848 was conditional is supported by several of defendant's documents XIV, XVI and XVII, the first of which contains an admission by the appellant's mother in 1874 that the original grant was conditional. The appeal therefore fails and we dismiss it with costs.

[477] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th February and 29th March, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Sivamma..... ..(Petitioner) Appellant

versus

Subbamma..... ..(Counter-Petitioner) Respondent*

Succession Certificate Act — Act VII of 1889, s. 7 (3)—Power to grant certificate to applicant if he has the best prima facie title thereto—Necessity for some inquiry prior to such a grant.

The intention of sub-clause (3) to Section 7 of the Succession Certificate Act is not to save the Court the trouble of making any inquiry at all where the applicant is not heir to the deceased, but it is to allow the prima facie title to the certificate to prevail when a question of law or fact arises on inquiry too difficult to be determined in a summary proceeding.

APPEAL against the order of W. M. Thorburn, District Judge of Cuddapah, dated 16th September, 1892, passed on Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 169 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Appellant.

Krishnamachariar for Respondent.

Judgment.—This was a petition for a certificate under Act VII of 1889 to collect the debts due to one Sesha Reddi, deceased. Sesha Reddi had a son named Venkatanaraina Reddi, and the latter died in November 1886, leaving behind him a widow named Subbamma. The father died on 22nd of March 1889, leaving him surviving, besides Subbamma, a widow named Chalamma and a daughter named Sivamma. The daughter applied for the succession certificate and rested her claim on a will left by Sesha Reddi, dated 4th March 1889, and on a maintenance agreement executed by Subbamma on the 4th August 1889. Petitioner's case was that by the will she was constituted her father's heir, and that his daughter-in-law, Subbamma, acknowledged her preferential right. It is alleged that no application was made by Subbamma, and the order made by the District Judge is "give certificate to Subbamma [478] on security." No reasons are assigned for the order, and it is urged for petitioner (and there is nothing to the contrary on the record) that no inquiry was held at all in regard to the will and the release set up by petitioner. The petitioner's pleader contends that the procedure followed by the Judge is at variance with Act VII of 1889, and we are of opinion that the contention is well founded. The procedure to be followed is prescribed by Section 7 of the Act. It contemplates that in every case there should be a summary inquiry, and the Court should make an order for the grant of a certificate according to the result of such inquiry. In any case in which it becomes necessary, in order to decide the right to the certificate, to determine any question of law or fact which is too intricate and difficult for determination in a summary proceeding, the Court is empowered to grant the certificate to the applicant if he appears to be the person having prima facie the best title thereto. The intention is not to save the Court the trouble of making any inquiry at all where the applicant is not the heir to the deceased, but it is to allow the prima facie title to the certificate to prevail when a question of law or fact arises on inquiry too difficult to be determined in a summary proceeding. In cases in which no complicated issues are involved, and the issues are capable of being decided without difficulty in a summary proceeding, the Court is bound to determine the right to the certificate by summary inquiry. The difficulty felt must be the result of summary inquiry, and not the a priori theory that every inquiry into a special ground of claim urged to the certificate necessarily involves an inquiry too intricate for determination in a summary proceeding.

We set aside the order of the Judge and remand the case for disposal in accordance with law. Costs will abide and follow the result.

In (1913) 24 M. L. J., 198 it was observed that the judgment in this case might be perfectly right on the particular facts of the case but if it intended to lay down a hard and fast rule that the inquiry into any question could not be held to be too intricate or difficult before it was conducted to some extent it must be held to have gone too far.]

[479] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 12th and 29th March, 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE PARKER.

Sankaralingam Chetti.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

versus

Suhban Chetti and another.....(Defendants Nos. 1 and 2)

Respondents.*

Divorce—Caste custom—Whether immoral and therefore invalid or not.

There is nothing immoral in a caste custom by which divorce and re-marriage are permissible on mutual agreement, on one party paying to the other the expenses of the latter's original marriage (parisam).

* Second Appeal No. 696 of 1893.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of T. M. Horsfall, District Judge of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 346 of 1892, reversing the decree of V. Malhari Rao, District Munsif, Srivilliputtur, in Original Suit No. 100 of 1891.

The plaintiff and defendants were members of the potters caste in Tinnevely. Plaintiff sued for the recovery of his wife, the second defendant, who, having left her husband, was living with the first defendant as his wife. The defence raised by the second defendant was that the plaintiff had ill-treated her and that according to caste custom she had repaid the plaintiff the parisam, or expenses of her marriage, thereby dissolving the marriage, and had married the first defendant.

The District Judge, reversing the decree of the District Munsif, dismissed the plaintiff's suit, and the latter preferred this appeal.

Narayana Rau for Appellant.

Venkatasubba Ayyar for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—The question in issue is whether there has been a valid and legal divorce between plaintiff and second defendant, the District Judge finds in the affirmative.

The only point argued before us is whether the caste custom is valid, appellant's pleader contending that it is immoral, and, therefore, that the Courts will not recognize it. Exhibits A and B go [480] to show that it has been recognized by the caste as an ancient and reasonable custom.

We do not think that the case of Uji v. Hathi Lahu (7 B. H. C. R., 133) is in point, since the question there was whether the caste could sanction a woman's re-marriage without a divorce, i.e., without a proceeding to which both husband and wife were parties. Here the finding is that there has been a divorce according to the custom of the potters in Tinnevely.

The finding further is that divorce in this form is consistent with the 'original' customs of the potters, and, if this be so, the custom is sufficiently ancient. We do not see that it is immoral, since it does not ignore marriage as a legal institution, but provides a special mode by which it may be dissolved. The fact that there is a money-payment does not make the custom immoral, and among the inferior castes similar customs are known to prevail.

The second appeal fails and we dismiss it with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 16th April and 11th September, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Eshoor Doss.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

versus

Venkatasubba Rau.....(Defendant) Respondent."

Indian Contract Act—Act IX of 1872, s. 30—Contracts to buy and sell Government promissory notes—Whether wagering contracts or not—Admissibility of oral evidence to contradict the nature of a contract in writing—Indian Evidence Act, s. 92.

A, on various occasions, agreed to sell to B (a sowear) certain amounts of Government of India promissory notes, amounting in all to 4½ lakhs, for delivery on the following 30th of November. On the 28th of November B agreed to sell and A to buy 4½ lakhs worth of the notes for delivery on the 30th of November. A did not perform his contract to sell, and B sued him for damages, amounting to Rs. 7,109-6-0, being the difference between the price at which he (B) had agreed to buy, and the price at which he had agreed to sell. A denied that the transactions were bona fide contracts made in the ordinary way of business, and pleaded that the real contract was only to pay differences as ascertained by the price of the Government paper on the 30th of November, and that such a contract being, by way of wager, was void under s. 30 of the Indian Contract Act :

[481] Held, per DAVIES, J., that neither party intended bona fide purchases and sales for delivery, and that, therefore, the contract was void as a wagering contract :

Held on appeal (1), that the burden of proof that the agreements were wagers, i.e., that they were not in substance what they were in form, lay on A, as the party so alleging ;

(2) that oral evidence is admissible to show that an agreement in writing to sell is really only an agreement by way of wager. (See Indian Evidence Act, s. 92). Anupchand Henschand v. Champsi Ugerchand (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 585) followed ; Juggernaut Sew Bux v. Ram Dyal (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 791), dissented from ;

(3) per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., that, it being proved on the evidence that it was the defendant's intention at the time he contracted to sell to pay differences only, the plaintiff either knew of this intention or he did not. In the former case the contract was a wager and therefore void, and in the latter there was no consensus as to a matter which was of the essence of the contract, and therefore no valid contract ;

* Original Side Appeal No. 36 of 1893.

† [Sec. 30 :—Agreements by way of wager are void, and no suit shall be brought for recovering anything alleged to be won on any wager or entrusted to any person to abide the result of any game or other uncertain event on which any wager is made.

This section shall not be deemed to render unlawful a subscription or contribution, or agreement to subscribe or contribute, made or entered into for or toward any plate, prize or sum of money, of the value or amount of five hundred rupees or upwards, to be awarded to the winner or winners of any horse-race.

Section 294A of the Indian Penal Code not to be affected. Nothing in this section shall be deemed to legalize any transaction connected with horse-racing to which the provisions of section 294A of the Indian Penal Code apply.]

(4) per BEST, J., that a contract is not a wagering contract unless it is the intention of both parties at the time of entering into the contract not to call for or give delivery from or to each other; see Tod v. Lakshmidas Purshotumdas (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 441) and Grizewood v. Blane (11 C. B., 526) and that no such common intention having been proved, the contract was a valid one.

APPEAL from the decree of DAVIES, J., sitting on the Original Side of the High Court in Civil Suit No. 74 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the foregoing and from the judgments of the High Court.

DAVIES, J., dismissed the plaintiff's suit, and the plaintiff preferred this appeal.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson) and Mr. R. F. Grant for Appellant.

Mr. Wedderburn for Respondent.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—This is a regular appeal from the decree of Mr. Justice DAVIES. Plaintiff (appellant) is a sowcar and defendant (respondent) is a Pleader of the High Court, both residing at Madras. On divers dates between the 24th October and the 4th November, 1891, the former agreed to buy and the latter to sell promissory notes of the Government of India, 4 per cent. loan, to the extent of 4½ lakhs of rupees at premia varying from Rs. 5-4 to Rs. 5-11 per cent., the promissory notes themselves being deliverable on the 30th November 1891. On the 28th November 1891, two days prior to the date fixed for delivery, defendant agreed to buy and plaintiff to purchase [sell ?] a similar amount of securities of the same kind to be delivered on the same date but at a premium of 7 per cent. The plaint [482] stated that defendant broke his contract to sell and thereby became liable to pay plaintiff a compensation of Rs. 7,109-6-0, which represents the difference between the price at which he was bound to buy and the price at which he was bound to sell. Defendant denied the claim in toto though he admitted the execution of the agreements. He contended that they were only nominal transactions, that neither he nor plaintiff ever intended that there should be an actual sale or transfer of Government paper, that the real contract was only to pay the differences, and that such contract, being by way of wager on the varying prices of Government promissory notes in the market, was not actionable. Another ground of defence was that plaintiff had agreed not to claim the difference until the expiration of six months from the date on which it became due, and consequently that the suit was premature. It was further urged by defendant that plaintiff neither tendered the price of the securities which he had agreed to buy nor the promissory notes which he had agreed to sell, and that he was not ready or willing to do either. The first four issues raised the question whether the agreements sued on were contracts of sale made bonâ fide in the ordinary course of business or by way of wager, and the fifth and sixth issues related to two other questions, viz., whether the suit was premature and whether the plaintiff was ready and willing to perform his part of the agreement on the 30th November 1891. The learned Judge decided the fifth issue against the defendant, and all the other issues in his favour and in the result he dismissed the suit but without costs. Hence this appeal.

Three questions of law arise for consideration in this appeal and on each of them the decision of the learned Judge is correct. The first is as to the burden of proof. The contracts sued upon are in form agreements to sell promissory notes of the Government of India, and there can be no doubt that it is the party who alleges that those agreements are not in substance what they purport to be, that ought to prove his case. In the absence of proof to the contrary, the presumption is that a transaction is in substance what it is in form. The second question is whether oral evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing that an agreement in writing to sell Government paper is really an agreement made by way of wager on its market price on a future day. On this point, there is a conflict of opinion, the High Court at [483] Calcutta holding that it is not admissible whilst the High Court at Bombay holds that it is. I agree in the opinion of the learned Judge that the Calcutta decision does not give, whilst the Bombay decision gives, due effect to the provisions of section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act; compare Juggernaut Sew Bux v. Ram Dyal (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 791) with Anupchand Hemchand v. Champsu Ugerchand (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 585). The first proviso of that section enacts that any fact may be proved by oral evidence which would invalidate any document or which would entitle any person to a decree or order relating thereto, and assuming that in the case before us, defendant is entitled to a decree in case he shows that the agreements which form the subject of this litigation are gaming contracts, he is clearly entitled to adduce oral evidence in proof of its averment, but not precluded from doing so by that fact not being stated in the documents themselves. The third question is as to the specific incident which distinguishes agreements by way of wager from agreements to buy or sell made in the ordinary course of business. The general rule is that when two parties agree that the one is to sell and that the other is to buy Government promissory notes at a certain premium, and that the promissory notes are to be delivered by the one and accepted by the other on a future day, whatever may be the rate of premium at which those securities may sell in the market on that date, the agreement is perfectly valid, the reciprocal promises to buy and sell being the consideration for each other. An agreement to sell or buy Government paper is a contract which the law permits in common with any other contract to sell or buy goods. To this general rule, however, section 30 of the Indian Contract Act introduces an exception and provides that agreements by way of wager are void, and no suit shall be brought for recovering anything alleged to be won on any wager or entrusted to any person to abide the result of any game or other uncertain event on which the wager is made. If two parties bet, therefore, on the premium at which Government securities may sell in the market on a future date, and the one promises to pay certain sum of money to the other, according as the actual market price on that date is one way or the other, the transaction is not a real sale as recognized in the ordinary course of business, but a gambling on the premium at which Government [484] securities sell in the market from time to time. Such gambling is forbidden on considerations of public policy by section 30 of the Contract Act which enacts that no suit will lie to recover anything won on the wager. It is true that both in contracts of sale and in gaming contracts the market rate of premium on the future date is uncertain and that both may be highly speculative and risky, resulting in considerable profit to one party and loss to the other. But in the one, the actual sale or transfer of Government paper is the basis of the speculation, and in the other, it is a naked speculation, having no connection with any business which is intended to be carried on. The essential difference, then, between the two classes of transactions consists in this—that in agreements by way of wager, there is no intention at the time when they are made to sell or buy Government paper or to do more than to speculate and pay the difference. In Thacker v. Hardy (L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 685), Lord Justice COTTON says that the essence of gaming and wagering consists in the agreement that one party is to win and the other party is to lose upon a future event, which at the time of the agreement is of an uncertain nature, that is to say, that if the future event turns out one way, the plaintiff is to win and if it turns out the other way, he is to lose. In Grizewood v. Blane (L. R., 11 C. B., p. 526) the Lord Chief Justice observes: "We ought to see what was the plaintiff's intention and what was the defendant's intention at the time of making the agreement, whether either party really meant to sell or buy and if they did not, it was a gambling transaction." Thus, in coming to a decision as to whether the agreements which the plaintiff seeks to enforce are agreements by way of wager, we have to consider whether the real intention at the time when those agreements were made was to buy and sell Government paper.

The Privy Council ruled in Ram Loll Thackoorseydass v. Soojummul Dhondmull (4 M. I. A., 346) that a wager upon the average price which opium should fetch at the next Government sale at Calcutta was not illegal or contrary to public policy, but that decision proceeded on the ground that the Statute VIII and IX Vict., c. 109, did not extend to India. But the Contract Act which came into force in this country in September 1872, altered the law as it stood in 1848 when the Judicial Committee decided that case.

[485] I now proceed to consider the evidence so far as it bears on the intention of the parties when the agreements which form the subject of this litigation were made.

As his first witness, defendant states that he entered into the agreements on the understanding that he was to pay only the difference in the premia, that he never considered himself to be under an obligation to deliver Government paper, and that though the sale notes E1 to E7 referred to such delivery, he knew that re-sale notes would be executed so as to cancel them at the end. He goes on to observe that he had no sufficient means to undertake to deliver Government paper to the extent of 4½ lakhs and that he would not have made the contracts in question if he had to deliver Government paper. He has not been cross-examined as to his means and there is no other evidence to contradict him. It appears further from Exhibit A, which is a letter of demand addressed to defendant by plaintiff's solicitors on the 30th November, which is the day fixed in the sale notes for delivery, that defendant was called upon to pay the difference but not to deliver Government paper. If defendant's evidence is reliable, as I think it is, there can be no doubt that at all events he had no intention to deliver Government paper and that the agreements were at their very inception mere contracts to pay the difference in the premia.

The only other witness who was present when three of the seven agreements E1 to E3 were made is the broker, Syed Meah, defendant's third witness. He deposes that though he negotiated three sales as broker, he does not know whether the agreements evidenced by E1 to E3 were intended to be only contracts to pay the difference or bond fide contracts of sale. He admits in his evidence that the majority of dealings in Government paper, as carried on in the bazaar, and without the intervention of a bank, are contracts to pay the difference only. Seeing that the plaintiff, on whose behalf the broker acted, was not present when the agreements were made and that the latter was aware that most of similar dealings in the bazaar were contracts to pay the difference, it is anything but natural or likely that Syed Meah should not have distinctly ascertained whether Government paper was really intended to be transferred. The evidence of this witness appears to me, therefore, to be evasive, and it discloses also traces of bias in favour of Raja Eshoor Doss. This is all the direct evidence [486] bearing upon the specific agreements which form the subject of this suit.

But these agreements were made in the bazaar, otherwise than through a bank. There is strong evidence to show that the majority of dealings in the bazaar in Government paper are only contracts to pay the difference. Defendant and his second witness, a broker, swear that all the dealings in the bazaar are of that description, whilst defendant's third witness, another broker, and plaintiff's second witness, who is a stock broker, and his third witness who often assists him in his business, depose that the majority of them are contracts to pay the difference. This circumstance raises a presumption in favour of the defendant's case.

The extent to which such dealings were carried on in the bazaar both by defendant and plaintiff as contrasted with their means of life renders it probable that they were mere contracts to pay the difference. Defendant states that his transactions in the bazaar amounted to 7 lakhs of rupees in September 1891, to 20 lakhs in October, and to 21 lakhs in November. His position in life is that of a vakil of the High Court who, finding his practice not sufficiently remunerative, has resorted to this form of speculation though on his own showing he has no means to deliver Government paper to the extent of 4½ lakhs. As for the plaintiff, he states that he is worth 6 or 7 lakhs, and I am of opinion that the learned Judge is warranted in saying, after discussing his evidence and Exhibit I, that it is not probable that in one month he would venture the whole of his wealth in speculation.

It is a peculiar fact in the case before us that there is a re-sale note (Exhibit III), or cancelling contract as the defendant calls it, the amount and description of Government securities re-sold to defendant being the same as those originally sold by him. This is generally the case with dealings in the bazaar. Defendant says in his evidence in connection with those dealings: "We exchange, bought and sold notes at first and cancel them at the end with the same parties or other parties whom they nominate, paying the difference. There are 30 or 40 people so speculating and the plaintiff is one of them." On this point defendant's second witness, Muni Subbarayulu, states that the entry about delivery of Government paper in the original sale notes is only nominal. It is a sale in the sense that the difference in the premia is to be [487] adjusted. If the transactions take place in the bazaar, it is the difference only that is adjusted. If there is to be a real delivery of Government promissory notes, it is done through the bank, if the amount is at all considerable.

Considering again what took place on the 28th November, which is called the settling day, there is strong reason to think that the agreements sued on were merely contracts to pay differences. As to what took place on that day, defendant, his second and third witnesses, plaintiff and his third witness, Venkatachalla Chetty, give evidence of which the following is the effect:—

About the 28th November the price of Government promissory notes was rising in the market and plaintiff and others, who had agreements from defendant to sell, attended to call on him to settle with them. Plaintiff's third witness, Venkatachalla Chetty, called on defendant to close his transaction by giving counter-contracts of purchase, and defendant, saying he was in difficulties, offered to pay 8 annas over and above his selling price. Two persons named Krishnasami Chetty and Nambooperumal Chetty agreed to those terms, but Goverdana Doss, plaintiff, and Venkatachalla Chetty insisted on full terms and went away. However, they returned again, according to the evidence, at 6 o'clock in the evening and renewed the discussion and on defendant's repeating his old terms plaintiff went away asking Venkatachalla to settle for him on the same terms on which Goverdana Doss and Venkatachalla should settle for themselves. Some one present then suggested that full differences should be paid and that six months' time should be given for the payment. Defendant agreed to this suggestion and Goverdana Doss accepted those terms. Venkatachala Chetty also did so on his own account and on behalf of the plaintiff. Then Goverdana Doss gave a re-sale note to defendant for 6½ lakhs and took from the latter a promissory note for the difference in the premia. Then Venkatachala resold 4½ lakhs on plaintiff's behalf and 2½ lakhs on his own account. On the 2nd or 3rd December next Venkatachala brought to him from the plaintiff his re-sale note III and delivered it to defendant.

Thus, what took place on the 28th November furnishes strong ground for the opinion that no Government paper was originally intended to be sold. Otherwise it is not possible to account for not a word being said about the delivery of Government paper or about the tender of its price or for plaintiff meeting defendant two [488] days before the date fixed for delivery. The explanation given by defendant is probably true. As it was thought that the price of Government securities might rise or fall by the 30th, each party desired to take advantage of this element of uncertainty and adjust the difference in the best way he could to his best advantage. Nor do I see why, if a real sale was originally contemplated, a re-sale note for the amount of the original sale note should be executed in every case. Looking again to the number of persons that settled with defendant on the 28th November, and the aggregate value of Government paper on which he agreed to pay the difference, it is impossible to believe that with his limited means he could have intended a bonâ fide sale of Government paper or that his original intention could have remained unknown to plaintiff who systematically speculated on the difference in the premia. Passing on to plaintiff's witnesses, the first witness is plaintiff himself. He was not present when the agreements were made and his statement that they were bonâ fide sales of Government paper is not entitled to much weight. He does not explain why a re-sale note was executed. He admits a number of transactions of very considerable value in which he received only the difference.

His second witness is one Mr. Berry, a stock-broker at Madras. His evidence is that sales of Government paper in the bazaar are generally met by native dealers by payment of the differences. He appears to me to overlook the class of cases in which the original intention was only to pay differences and to assume that there is in the first instance a bonâ fide sale in every case. I do not desire to be understood as holding that bonâ fide sales of Government paper may not be adjusted by payments of the difference between the contract price and the market price on the day fixed for delivery so as to supersede the necessity for delivery of Government paper. But what I do hold is that when there is no original intention to deliver Government paper and when the contract is at its inception a contract to pay only the difference, such contract is in law a gaming contract.

Plaintiff's third witness is one Venkatachala Chetty, who had also a similar agreement whereby defendant engaged to sell Government paper for 2½ lakhs to him.

Adverting to the transactions in Government paper in the bazaar the witness states as follows: "I did not expect that Government promissory notes would pass from hand to hand. [189] The profits and loss of each transaction between the selling price and the market price on the day of settlement would be compared, a balance struck and the difference paid. The practice was to buy and sell the same quantity of paper, but it did not matter from whom it was bought and sold. There was no intention at the time of purchase that Government promissory notes should be actually delivered or money paid." He gave a re-sale note to defendant on account of his own transaction, and he states that plaintiff also gave a similar note to defendant.

Thus, in favour of the view that when the agreements in suit were made there was no intention to deliver Government paper, there is first defendant's evidence : there is next the fact that the broker, with whom three such agreements were made does not contradict him and swear to the contrary ; and there is, again, the presumption arising from defendant's and plaintiff's means in life and from the general character of dealings in Government paper in the bazaar. There is further the cancelling contract or a re-sale of the same quantity of paper by plaintiff to defendant. There is also the statement of plaintiff's third witness that at the time of purchase there is usually no intention to deliver Government paper or to pay its price. There is further the fact that plaintiff had a large number of transactions in which differences were alone paid as shown by Exhibit I. There is again the conduct of plaintiff and other dealers with defendant on the 28th November which raises a presumption in favour of his contention.

In favour of the view that the agreements were bond fide sales, there is the form of the agreements and there is Raja Eshoor Doss' statement. Weakened as it is by the circumstances mentioned in the last paragraph, upon the whole evidence there is no reason to doubt that it was the defendant's intention only to pay the differences. That being so, the plaintiff was aware or not aware of such intention. If the former was the case, it was a gaming contract ; if the latter, there was no consensus as to a matter which is of the essence of the contract, and therefore no valid contract. However, the broker's evasive evidence and his omission to contradict the defendant, the position of Raja Eshoor Doss as a sowcar, who is in frequent communication with brokers and dealers in the bazaar, and presumably familiar with the general character of dealings in Government paper in the bazaar, the defendant's statement that plaintiff is one of the thirty or forty in the bazaar that [490] speculate in the manner described by him and the accession of strength which that story receives from the execution of a re-sale note, and from the difference being demanded before the due date and from conduct of the parties on the 28th November, and from the extent of dealings carried on by them as compared with their means—these circumstances lead me to the conclusion that the learned Judge was right in upholding the defendant's contention.

I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

I would also disallow the memorandum of objections.

Best, J.— The suit was brought for the recovery from defendant of a sum of Rs. 7,109-6-0 (with interest thereon) as the amount due to plaintiff from defendant on account of dealings in promissory notes of the Government of India 4 per cent. loan.

Plaintiff's case is that he purchased from the defendant on various dates in October 1891 and on the 4th of the following month at rates varying from Rs. 105-4-0 to Rs. 105-11-0 Government promissory notes of the aggregate value of 4½ lakhs deliverable on the 30th November 1891—and resold the whole lot to defendant on the 28th November at the rate of Rs. 107 per cent., the date of delivery being the same 30th November, and that the amount due to him (plaintiff) on account of these dealings is Rs. 7,109-6-4, which he now seeks to recover with interest at 12 per cent. per annum from 30th November 1891.

The defendant admitted the facts of sale and purchase of Government notes as stated in the plaint, but pleaded (1) that the transactions were of the nature of gambling, and therefore, void under section 30 of the Contract Act; (2) that plaintiff had failed to perform his part of the contract; (3) that the suit is premature, plaintiff having agreed to allow defendant six months' time for making the payments in question.

The learned Judge in the Court below found the two latter pleas to be invalid; but on the first plea he found in favour of the defendant and dismissed the suit.

The question for consideration is, therefore, whether the learned Judge is right in holding the agreements between plaintiff and defendant for purchase and sale of Government securities to be void as gaming transactions.

The law on the subject is clearly stated by FARRAN, J., in [491] J. H. Tod v. Lakshmidas Purshotamdas (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 441, 445) in the following words:—"Contracts are not wagering contracts unless it be the intention of both contracting parties at the time of entering into the contracts under no circumstances to call for, or give delivery, from or to each other." See also Grizewood v. Blanc (L. R., 11 C. B., 526). The question is, therefore, was it the intention of both plaintiff and defendant in this case at the time of making the agreements for sale by defendant to plaintiff of the Government securities that there should be no actual sale and purchase of Government promissory notes, but only payment of differences in the price of the securities on the 30th November. In this latter case the suit has been rightly dismissed, but in the former, defendant's plea under section 30 of the Contract Act must be disallowed. This question is one of fact and no doubt the burden of proof is on the defendant.

Before the evidence is considered, it is necessary to dispose of the objection taken on behalf of the appellant (plaintiff) that oral evidence is inadmissible to vary or contradict the terms of the contracts which are evidenced by the bought and sold notes. Such was no doubt the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Juggernaut Sew Bux v. Ram Dyal (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 791), but as observed in Anupchand Hemchand v. Champsi Ugerchand (I. L. R., 12 Bom., 585), the effect of proviso I to section 92 of the Evidence Act does not appear to have been considered by the learned Judges who decided the Calcutta case, relied on by the appellant. Under that proviso oral evidence is clearly admissible to prove any fact which would invalidate a document, and it is for such a purpose that the oral evidence has been tendered and admitted in the present suit.

I now proceed to consider the evidence. The first witness is the defendant himself. He no doubt says that the understanding with which he sold was that differences (in price) should be paid on the day of settlement, and that he himself "would not have entered into a contract for the actual delivery of 4½ lakhs of Government paper," as he "could not have done it" not having sufficient means. There is every reason to believe that this latter statement is quite true, but his intention alone is not sufficient to make the transactions one of gaming and therefore void. As already observed it is only if both parties intended at the time of [492] entering into the agreement that there should be nothing more than payment of differences that defendant's plea will be of avail to him. Defendant admits that he "never saw the plaintiff personally till 28th November," i.e., the date on which took place the re-sale to defendant of all the 4½ lakhs of Government securities that had been previously purchased by plaintiff from defendant. He says "I don't know that plaintiff said anything to me" even then, and he admits that plaintiff "went away without settling anything, and that it was Venkatachella Chetty (plaintiff's third witness) who re-sold to him the 4½ lakhs on plaintiff's behalf."

Venkatachella Chetty's evidence is to the effect that when he made the contract for plaintiff on the 28th November he was "not instructed to make it specially with the defendant," but was free to make it with any one, plaintiff having simply directed him to sell the 4½ lakhs of paper in the market, without giving any special directions whatever. This witness further states that the broker, through whom the sale to defendant of the 4½ lakhs was effected on the 28th November, was Muni Subbarayalu.

This Muni Subbarayalu has been examined as defendant's second witness. He merely saw plaintiff on that day, as he was coming downstairs from defendant's office, when plaintiff told him that he objected to defendant's offer to pay 4 or 8 annas per 100 rupees. All the above witnesses speak merely to the transaction of 28th November, and not to the understanding between the parties at the time when the original purchases were made by the plaintiff.

The broker by whom the first three of those purchases were made is Syed Meah Sahib, who has been examined as defendant's third witness. He no doubt states that the "majority of dealings in Government paper in the bazaar are contracts merely for the payment of differences," but he also expressly states that he "cannot say whether this was one of those or not," and in cross-examination he further states that he is "quite sure when these contracts were entered into, nothing was said about adjusting differences by counter-sales," and that he himself "did not know at the time whether paper was really to pass or only differences to be paid." He has no doubt stated that a few days after the contracts, plaintiff asked him if defendant would be able to fulfil his contract. "Whether he would pay differences, for he seemed to be dealing recklessly." But in cross-examination he gives a [493] more particular account of the conversation as follows :—What he said was "I hear Venkata-subba Rau (the defendant) is selling papers recklessly and I fear very much about it." Then I said "He is a straightforward gentleman; there will be no fear." Then Raja (i.e., plaintiff) said "Will he pay the differences? If so I shall buy paper from others and give delivery to others to whom I have sold paper." "His meaning was," says the witness, "to close the contracts with the defendant on the delivery day or it may be earlier to save trouble, and buy elsewhere to supply people to whom he had sold."

This is all the evidence for the defence and I am of opinion that it is far from sufficient to prove that at the time of entering into the contracts with defendant for the purchase of the Government securities, the understanding on both sides was that there was only to be payment of differences.

The fact of plaintiff having re-sold the whole of the 4½ lakhs to defendant on the 28th November is not evidence of intention on the several dates of purchase by plaintiff. Nor is the intention on the part of defendant to pay differences sufficient to render the contract void. As appears from defendant's own evidence in the connected case (Original Suit Appeal No. 37) such was also his intention in contract for Government paper entered into by him with the Madras and Agra Banks in which contracts, he says "my intention was only to pay differences." He further admits that he has also entered into what he calls "cancelling contracts" with the banks.

There being a mutual understanding for sale of a certain quantity of Government securities on a fixed date at a fixed price, the mere fact of an undisclosed intention on the part of defendant to pay differences only cannot invalidate the contract. As observed by Sir F. Pollock in his Principles of Contracts, fifth edition, page 5—"the law does not allow a party to show that his intention was not in truth such as he made or suffered it to appear."

Plaintiff declares that he had the intention of buying and was both in a position to pay and willing to do so. He admits that he bought with the intention of selling again and making a profit. This amounts to speculation, it is true; but there is no law against speculation. As pointed out by LINDLEY, J., in Thacker v. Hardy (L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 685, 688) [494] it required in England a statute, VII Geo. II., ch. 8, to prevent gambling in the public funds; and further, "notwithstanding the strong condemnation of such gambling in the preamble, the Act itself was repealed in 1860; and even when the Act was in force, gambling in shares and foreign stocks was held not to be illegal either under the Act or at common law."

I am unable to attach weight to the argument founded on the circumstances of plaintiff's dealings being equal in amount to the value of his whole estate. He is admittedly a wealthy man and there is no reason for supposing he could not have met his liabilities. Nor do I think the fact of his having resold the whole amount to defendant on the 28th November is a circumstance entitled to weight against the plaintiff. Defendant was thus afforded an opportunity of reducing his losses if the price of Government notes should rise during the next two days, and defendant himself has admitted (as observed above) that such "cancelling contracts," as he calls them, are allowed by respectable banks. It is true that plaintiff has admitted that if defendant had paid him the difference between selling price and the market price on the date of delivery he would have been satisfied, that this was the profit he intended to make, and that if the price of Government paper had gone down he himself should have paid the defendant the difference between the contract price and the market price; but he adds "that was not the understanding at the time of making the contract," and explains this last sentence of his by saying that it was only if the defendant had asked him for the difference he should have paid the difference, and that the intention was that the notes should be delivered.

Plaintiff's second witness, Mr. Berry, is a stock-broker, who has been concerned in the purchase and sale of Government paper for the past twelve years. He says "there are many transactions in Government paper, in which Government paper does not change hands. On settling days either the difference is paid or the notes delivered. Native dealers in the bazaar make contracts for the actual delivery of paper, but they generally meet them by asking the purchaser to take delivery from somebody else and paying or receiving the difference or by selling back." He further states "there are fixed settling days once a month, generally at the end of the month, for completing transactions that have been entered into. This is done on the principle of a bank [495] clearing house. The reason is to avoid the risk of large quantities for paper being handed about over the market. Unless there were a settling day, there would have to be a delivery on every purchase. The paper would soon get dirty and want renewal; and numerous endorsements are saved."

Having carefully considered the evidence on both sides, I am unable to concur in the finding arrived at by the learned Judge in the Court below, that the understanding between both the parties was from the beginning that there should only be payment of differences.

As to the memorandum of objections filed on behalf of the respondent, I agree with the learned Judge in finding that defendant failed to prove the alleged agreement to allow six months' time for payment; and I also concur in the finding that there is nothing in the objection as to want of tender by the plaintiff, as there was in fact nothing that plaintiff had to tender.

As to the defendant's costs in the Court below, I am of opinion that, considering the nature of the defence set up, defendant was rightly disallowed his costs.

I would, therefore, disallow all the respondent's objections, and give plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed by him. But as my learned colleague has come to a different conclusion, the decree of the learned Judge in the Court below must be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed under section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[496] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 16th April and 11th September, 1894.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Venkatachella Chetti.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Venkata Subba Rau.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Indian Contract Act—Act IX of 1872, s. 30—Contracts to buy and sell Government promissory notes—Whether wagering contracts or not—Contracts for payment of differences only.

A having on various occasions sold certain amounts of Government promissory notes to B, aggregating on the whole to 2½ lakhs, for delivery on 30th November 1891, B on the 28th of November sold the same amount to A for delivery on the 30th November. On that day B, through his attorneys, called upon A to retain the 'paper' contracted to be sold by A to B in respect of that contracted to be sold by B to A, and to pay the differences in the prices of the two contracts to B, and subsequently sued him for the amount;

Held, that on the evidence B having admitted that the original contract sued on was for payment of differences only, that it was a wagering contract, and therefore void;

Held, on appeal per MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, J., that the above judgment should be confirmed.

Per BEST, J., that on the evidence it was not proved that at the time of entering into the original contract the intention of both parties was merely for payment of differences, and that consequently the contract was not a wagering contract, but a valid one.

APPEAL from the decree of DAVIES, J., sitting on the original side of the High Court in Original Suit No. 75 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the foregoing and from the judgment of Mr. Justice DAVIES, which was as follows:

"The judgment in this case follows the judgment in the connected case No. 74 of 1892, the facts and the pleadings being similar and the evidence in that case having been treated as evidence in this. The differences here are (1) that the amount involved is in connection with transactions for 2½ lakhs of rupees, the amount of difference claimed being Rs. 3,312-8-0; (2) that the plaintiff is not a man of wealth like the plaintiff in the other [497] suit; and (3) that he has put himself out of Court by practically admitting that the contract was for payment of differences only and therefore was a wagering contract in the eye of the law.

* Original Side Appeal No. 37 of 1893.

"For the like reasons as are given in my judgment in the other suit, this suit is dismissed but without costs."

The plaintiff thereupon preferred this appeal.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson) and Mr. R. F. Grant for Appellant.

Mr. Wedderburn for Respondent.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—The learned Judge rests his decision in this case against the plaintiff on his practically admitting that the contract sued on was for payment of differences only, and on the reasons assigned by him for his decision in Original Suit No. 74 of 1892. I concur in that opinion for the reasons mentioned in my judgment in Regular Appeal No. 36 of 1893. I would dismiss this appeal also with costs, and disallow the memorandum of objections.

Best, J.—This suit was tried with Original Suit No. 74 of 1892, which forms the subject of appeal in Original Suit Appeal No. 36 of 1893.

The learned Judge has dismissed the suit for the reasons given in his judgment in the connected suit with the remark added that the plaintiff in this suit has "put himself out of Court by practically admitting that the contract was for payment of differences only." But on referring to the evidence in the case I am unable to find any such admission on the part of the plaintiff. Plaintiff's statement (as his own first witness in the case) is that the "intention was to get actual delivery of paper, but if he sold again to the same party then differences only were to be paid"; and, as a matter of fact, a sale to defendant was made on the 28th November, i.e., two days before the date on which defendant was to deliver under the original contract. I have no doubt whatever the plaintiff was, in a sense, gambling in Government paper, but such gambling, however demoralizing and reprehensible, is not illegal, as observed in Thacker v. Hardy (L. R., 4 Q. B. D., 685). In the absence of proof that at the time of entering into the original agreement the understanding of both parties was that it was merely for payment of differences. I am of opinion—for reasons stated in my judgment in [498] Original Suit Appeal No. 36 of 1893—that the contract between the parties cannot be held to be void within the meaning of section 30 of the Contract Act.

If the same objections have been filed in this case, I would disallow them for the reasons stated in my judgment in that case, and also for reasons stated in that judgment I would allow this appeal; but as my learned colleague's finding is in favour of the respondent, the decree of the learned Judge in the Court below must be affirmed, and this appeal dismissed with costs under section 575 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Bala Pattabhirama Chetti.....(Defendant No. 1) Appellant

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 510†, 524†—Reference to arbitration—Refusal of person appointed arbitrator to act—Appointment of arbitrator by Judge under s. 510—Effect of s. 524, on such appointment.

The words 'so far as they are consistent with any agreement so filed' in s. 524 of the Code of Civil Procedure do not mean that the agreement must contain in every case an express provision as to what ought to be done if any arbitrator is unwilling to act, in order that a Judge may act in conformity to it, and that s. 510† has otherwise no application. The reasonable construction is that the action of the Judge under s. 510 should not be inconsistent with the agreement, if it contains any special provision on the subject.

Ramachandra Rau Sahab for Appellant.

Mr. Grant and Lakshmana Chetti for Respondent No. 2.

Bhashyam Ayyangar for Respondent No. 1.

[499] Muttusami Ayyar, J.—There was a controversy among three brothers governed by Hindu law as to the partition of their family property. They entered into an agreement on the 3rd October 1890, referring the matters in difference between them to two arbitrators and one umpire for decision. The arbitrators named in the agreement were one Kasturi Chettiar, nominated by one of the three coparceners called Bala Pattabhirama Chetti, and one Padmanabha Chettiar named by the other two coparceners, Seetharam Chetti and Subharatnam Chetti. The agreement was filed in the District Court of Coimbatore under section 523 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the Judge made an order of reference in accordance therewith. But Kasturi Chettiar refused to act as arbitrator, and the late Judge, Mr. Irvine, appointed arbitrator or umpire in the place of the person so dying, or refusing, or neglecting, or becoming incapable to act, or leaving British India, or make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit.]

† [Sec. 524 :—The foregoing provisions of this chapter, so far as they are consistent with any agreement so filed, shall be applicable to all proceedings under an order of reference made by the Court under section 523, and to the award of arbitration and to the enforcement of the decree founded thereupon.]

Adinarayana Chettiar in his place under section 510 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The arbitrators, thus constituted made an award on the 3rd August 1891, and the Judge, modifying it in certain matters under section 518, adopted it, and passed a decree in its terms as altered by him. Hence this appeal. For the appellant it is contended that there is no legal basis for the award. It is urged (i) that the words in Section 524, "so far as they are consistent with any agreement so filed," signify that the award should be made by the arbitrators named in the agreement, and that if any of them is unwilling to act, the agreement, which is the basis of the award, becomes inoperative, and (ii) that the Judge's finding that Kasturi Chettiar consented to arbitrate previous to the order of reference is not warranted by the evidence in the case.

As regards the first contention, I am unable to accede to it. The words in section 524, "so far as they are consistent with any agreement so filed," do not mean, as argued by appellant's pleader, that the agreement must contain in every case an express provision as to what ought to be done if any arbitrator is unwilling to act, in order that the Judge may act in conformity to it, and that section 510 has otherwise no application. The reasonable construction is that the action of the Judge under section 510 should not be inconsistent with the agreement, if it contains any special provision on the subject. Section 524 should be read as if it contained the words "in the absence of anything in the agreement to the contrary, section 510 is applicable." This view appears to me to be in accordance with the scheme of arbitration contained in Chapter XXXVII of the Code. That [500] chapter provides for arbitration in three modes (i) by an order of reference in a suit already pending; (ii) by an order of reference based on an agreement filed for that purpose; and (iii) by enforcement of an award already made by arbitrators without the intervention of the Court. It enacts distinct provisions as to various matters in order that the order of reference made in a suit pending may not prove abortive, but result in an award according to the original intention of the parties. In dealing with orders of reference made upon an agreement, the Code gives effect to the intention of the parties embodied in the agreement, in cases to which section 510 would apply, if the order of reference were made in a pending suit, by providing that the foregoing provisions, viz., sections 509 to 522, shall apply, that is to say, be taken to be intended by the parties to the agreement to apply, provided that there is nothing inconsistent in that agreement with such intention. When a number of incidents are considered to be the ordinary incidents of a contract, such as of a lease or mortgage, etc., and the intention of the legislature is to preserve the contractual freedom of the parties, quod those incidents, it is usual for the Legislature to indicate that intention by saying that in the absence of a special provision to the contrary the incidents specified shall be taken to be the incidents intended to be included in the particular contract in dispute. It is a rule of convenience designed to avoid repetition. The first contention must be disallowed.

As regards, however, the finding that Kasturi Chetti consented to arbitrate previous to his nomination, I do not think that the evidence supports it. Kasturi Chetti denies that he was ever consulted or agreed to act as arbitrator. The other arbitrator, Padmanabha Chetti deposes that Kasturi Chetti was unwilling to act when he was communicated with after the reference had been made. He was not asked whether previous to the reference Kasturi had consented or not. These are disinterested witnesses, and their evidence does not show that it was ascertained that Kasturi Chetti had consented to act prior to the order of reference. Though the second defendant says that Kasturi consented to act, yet his evidence is that of an interested party, and it is not safe to rely upon it unless it is corroborated. The reason assigned by Kasturi for his reluctance to arbitrate is that both parties are his relatives, and it is not unnatural that he should be unwilling to [501] occupy a position in which his decision may be obnoxious to one or other of his relatives. It has already been held in the cases of Pugardin v. Moidin (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 414) and Bepin Behari Chowdhry v. Annoda Prosad Mullick (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 324) that section 510 is not applicable unless, as its language implies, the arbitrator who is superseded for being unwilling to act, previously consented to arbitrate. On the ground that Kasturi Chetti never consented to his appointment as arbitrator and that section 510 is not applicable, I would set aside the decree appealed against, and direct that this suit be dismissed with costs.

Best, J.—I concur.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 22nd December, 1893 and 24th January, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR.

Orr.....(Plaintiff No. 1) Appellant

Muthia Chetti.....(Defendant No. 1) Respondent.*

Receiver—Appointment of a receiver by a Court under s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure—Misappropriation by the receiver—Whether, subject to the receiver's liability, the creditor or judgment-debtor must bear the loss.

In cases in which a receiver, appointed at the instance of the judgment-creditor under section 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure, misappropriates moneys collected by him, the decree is not satisfied pro tanto, but the loss falls on the estate or its owner, subject to the receiver's liability.

APPEAL against the order of T. Weir, District Judge of Madura, dated 26th August 1892, passed on C. M. A. No. 8 of 1892, confirming the order of S. Dorasawmy Iyengar, District Munsif of Sivaganga, passed on Execution Petition No. 274 of 1891.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

* Appeal against Appellate Order No. 63 of 1892.

The lower Courts decreed in favour of the defendant and the plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Bhashyam Ayyangar for Appellant.

Sundara Ayyar for Respondent.

[502] Judgment :—In Original Suit No. 415 of 1884 on the file of the District Munsif of Sivaganga, appellant obtained a money decree against respondent. In execution of the same, the produce of the village of Kumbanur in fasli 1299 was attached by appellant, and on his application, a receiver was appointed under section 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure to superintend the harvest and to recover the melvaram. The receiver collected a sum of Rs. 845-2-7 on account of the melvaram, but instead of remitting the amount to the Court, misappropriated it to his own use. Thereupon, respondent instituted criminal proceedings against him, and the receiver absconded and is still absconding. Appellant then applied for execution against respondent in respect of the balance due under the decree, and the latter contended that the decree must be taken as satisfied to the extent of the sum of money misappropriated by the receiver, from whom, it would appear, no security was taken, for the due performance of his office. Both the Courts below disallowed the contention, hence this appeal. The question which arises for determination is, whether in cases in which a receiver appointed at the instance of the judgment-creditor under section 503, misappropriates his collections, the decree ought to be treated as satisfied pro tanto, on the ground that he is the agent of the judgment-creditor on whose application he was appointed.

The only case cited at the hearing is, that of John Tiel and Co. v. Abdool Hye [19 W. R., (C. R.) 73]. That was decided under section 243, Act VIII of 1859. There the manager exceeded the powers conferred upon him by the Court, and mortgaged the attached property with the consent of all the parties concerned, so as to leave some proprietary interest in the judgment-debtor. The question for determination was whether any judgment-creditor coming after the appointment of the manager and the making of the said mortgage, had a right to attach and sell what remained of the judgment-debtor's interest in the property. The Court held that he was entitled to attach, and stated the ground of decision in these terms: "A manager appointed under Act VIII of 1859, section 263*, so far as he is an officer of the Court, is, at the most, the hand of the Court for the purpose of gathering in on behalf of the judgment-debtor the moneys due to him, in order that they may immediately be applied to the satisfaction of the decree. If [503] he does more than this and deals with the subject of the property itself, he must do so as the agent of the judgment-debtor, and not properly as the officer of the Court." In the case before us, the receiver collected the melvaram in the exercise of the power conferred upon him by the Court, but instead of paying the collections into Court, as he was bound to do, in order that they might be applied in satisfaction of the decree, misappropriated them to his own use in breach of his duty as receiver. I am of opinion that the Judge is right in holding that the present case is not on all fours with the other case.

*[Sec. 263 :—If the property sold shall consist of a house, land or other immoveable property, in the occupancy of a defendant or some person on his behalf, or of some person claiming under a title created by a defendant subsequently to the attachment of such property, the Court shall order delivery thereof to be made by putting the party to whom the house, land, or other immoveable property may have been sold, or any person whom he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf, in possession thereof, and, if need be, by removing any person who may refuse to vacate the same.]

I do not think, however, that the decision of the Judge can be supported. He considers that the receiver in the present case was the judgment-creditor's agent, because it was on his application that the appointment was made. The appointment is the act of the Court and once made in the interests of justice or ex debito justitiæ, he is an officer or representative of the Court, and subject to its orders. His possession is the possession of the Court by its receiver, and the tenants in possession, when he is appointed to receive rents and profits of immoveable property, become virtually tenants pro hac vice of the Court, their landlord. His possession is the possession of all the parties to the proceeding according to their titles. The moneys in his hands are in custodia legis for the person who can make a title to them. The Judge observes that very wide powers are conferred upon receivers by section 503 including a power to remove the property in possession, but it does not follow from it that his relation either to the Court or to all the parties interested in the proceeding undergoes any change in proportion to the extent of his powers. For, it has been held in England in similar cases that a receiver appointed by the Court is appointed on behalf and for the benefit of all persons interested, parties to the suit or proceeding. This being so, it is clear that if a loss arises from the default of the receiver, the estate must bear the loss as between the parties to the suit or proceeding. It is true that when the party entitled to an estate is ascertained, the receiver will be considered his receiver and their principle is applicable in the case of a suit in which title to property is decreed, and not to the case before me, for the decree under execution is a money decree, the title in the property under attachment continuing to vest in the judgment-debtor. The first-mentioned rule is only the result of the general principle that the loss must fall on the estate or its owner, subject [504] to the receiver's liability. The terms "receiver" and "manager" are synonymous, and though the appointment of a receiver may, in certain cases, operate to change possession, yet it has no effect whatever on the title of either party to the property which is placed in the possession of the receiver. For any loss arising from his default, the receiver is certainly responsible, but when he cannot be proceeded against the question as between innocent parties is who ought to bear the loss which is imputable to neither, and the only answer is that it must devolve on the estate to which the appointment relates. There is also another reason in support of this view. Moneys in the hands of the receiver belong to the Court which appointed him, and are in custodia legis, and he cannot spend them except under the orders of the Court. If they are lost, whilst in custody of the receiver notwithstanding the exercise by him of due care, it cannot be denied that the loss must devolve on the estate, for the loss is not imputable to his default or that of any other. The Courts below are in error in introducing a theory of agency without reference to the title to the property, for the collection of the rents of which the receiver has been appointed. I set aside the orders of both the Courts below and direct that appellant be allowed to execute his decree without being compelled to deduct from the amount thereof the amount misappropriated by the receiver. Respondent will pay appellant's costs throughout.

*Uraiyama, or rights of Uralan—Trustees and guardians of a temple in Malabar —Melkoima, or right of superintendence inherited by a family— Usage of the

The appellants, who were Uralan, managing as trustees and guardians the affairs of a temple in South Malabar, claimed to exclude the respondents from the management jointly with themselves. The respondents, representing the Nambidi family, the descendants of the former rulers of the locality, were entitled to rights termed Melkoima, of superintendence over the temple. Disputes having arisen, the predecessors of the parties in 1845, and again in 1874 had compromised litigation, and had agreed, with the result that they had since then continued to act upon the agreement that they should jointly exercise the powers of management :

Held, that the compromise so agreed to was binding upon the appellants; that the usage, which had been followed since 1845, was the best exponent of the Melkoima right; and that the compromise could not be re-opened.

APPEAL from a decree (28th November 1890) of the High Court (see I. L. R., 14 Mad., 153) affirming a decree (10th December 1888) of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Palghat.

The principal ground on which both the Courts below decided that the plaintiffs were precluded from claiming exclusive rights in the management of the Kachankurissi temple, an ancient [2] devaswom, in the taluk of Palghat in South Malabar, and from disputing the right of the defendants to joint management thereof with the plaintiffs, was that a compromise of suits relating to such rights had been entered into by persons through whom the plaintiffs claimed, with the predecessors of the defendants. Nothing was known of the early management of the temple. The Nambidis of Venganaid, ancestors of the defendants, were the original rulers, or Naduvayi, of the country in which it was situated; and continued to rule until the British Government was established over Malabar in 1792. As rulers, the Nambidi possessed a right, not well defined, of superintendence over all religious endowments, without having the ownership. This right was termed Melkoima. As to this reference was made to H. H. Wilson's Glossary, Indian Terms, 338, where the word is translated "superior power or function;" and the words "Melkoima sthanam" are said to be "the exercise of chief authority in the affairs of a temple." Though indicating the right of a ruler, "Melkoima" was in this case also applied to the person in whom the right was vested. The plaintiffs claimed that their family (illom) had Uraiya right, or held the office of Uralan, or Urallars, or trustees and guardians, of Kachankurissi devaswom in South Malabar from time immemorial. A second office of trustee had, in course of time, been vested in the family of the second plaintiff Cherumpatee Manakkal. Since 1835 the offices had been held by them without dispute. They claimed to be exclusively entitled to manage the temple affairs, admitting, however, that the ancestors of the defendants, the Nambidi of Vengunaud, had formerly had the Melkoima. This right they contended had been extinguished when the British Government was established, having been possessed by the defendants' ancestors only so long as their power as rulers remained. Resisting the defendants' interference with the temple affairs, the Uralan then in office had, for the sake of peace, executed a karar in 1845, and a razi in 1874. But the plaintiffs' predecessors were not entitled to alienate or confer any right in respect of devaswom affairs; and the karar and razi were not valid on that ground and also for want of parties.

The first and second defendants—the second, Dhatri Valia Amma, being guardian of seven minor defendants—filed separate written statements that their family had originally been proprietors of the temple and its lands; and they relied on the compromise [3] and admissions made by the plaintiffs' predecessors in office. They also set up limitation.

The issues raised questions as to the respective rights of the parties, as to the effect of the compromise effected by the karar of 1845, the razi of 1874, and as to the application of limitation.

In the English year 1773, when Haider Ali ruled in Malabar, he granted to the then Raja of Vengunaud, the predecessor of these respondents, exemption from the full payment of land revenue in respect of the temple lands. From a memorandum in a revenue record of 21st March 1809, this exemption appeared to have been recognized in favour of the appellants' family after the annexation of Malabar by the East India Company. The documentary evidence relating to this exemption and to the other matters of temple management before the year 1845 was summarized as follows by the Subordinate Judge:—

"The earliest document filed is Exhibit I, a certified copy of a statement, dated 985 or A.D. 1809, obtained from the Collector's records, which shows that the lands of the temple were exempted from revenue in 948 (A. D. 1773) by Haider Ali at the request of the Nambidi.

"The document next in date is A, a paimash account of the year 998 (A.D. 1822), in which Cherukunnat and Kariat Nambudripada are described as the Uralers of this temple. The Nambidi is described as the 'Naduvayi or chief of the district.' He is mentioned as being the Uralan of another temple but not of the plaint temple.

"Exhibit B is a decree of the Palghat Munsif in a suit, No. 175 of 1830, brought against first plaintiff's predecessor as Uralan. The predecessor of second plaintiff or of first defendant was not a party to the suit.

"Exhibit AM is the deposition of first plaintiff's predecessor taken by the Tahsildar in 1012 or A. D. 1836 during an enquiry into a petition presented by certain parties alleging that heavy mortgages were raised on devaswom properties by first plaintiff's predecessor. In this deposition the latter stated that he and Tekiniadat Nambudripad were the Uralan of the temple.

"Exhibit A N is a deposition given in the same year by the same person stating that a portion of the temple lands were exempted from revenue in 983 (A.D. 1808). If this statement [4] is correct, it contradicts the statement in defendants' Exhibit I, that the exemption was in 948 or A.D. 1772.

"These are all the exhibits relating to the temple prior in date to the karar C of 1020 (A.D. 1845) and they tend to show that first plaintiff's Illom Cherukunnat was always regarded as possessing the Uraima right in the temple, that the Nambidi as the Naduvayi, or ruler, of the district possessed what plaintiffs assert he possesses, and what the Nambidi himself since 1020 or A.D. 1845 declared that he possessed—a Melkoima right."

In 1845 a suit was brought by the second Uralan against the first Uralan, the Nambidi, and a tenant to set aside a tenancy which had apparently been granted without the consent of the second Uralan. This suit was compromised by a karar (D) of the 18th August 1845 on the basis of an agreement (C) between the two Uralan of the 16th August. The agreement recited the suit relating to land "belonging to Kachankurichi devaswom over which we both have equal Uraima right and the Nambidi of Vengunaud has Melkoima right." It then proceeded as follows :

"As this suit has been compromised on the condition that all the affairs of the said devaswom are to be caused to be managed in future also, the daily expenses of the devaswom being defrayed by the collection of interest, rent, etc., and the ceremonies, etc., being performed just as they were hitherto jointly caused to be managed through the Samudayam by us the two Uralan and the Nambidiri who is the Melkoima, and that the affairs which are to be conducted unanimously by us both and the Melkoima shall be so conducted, and that no management shall be exercised by any one of his own will and pleasure, and that the affairs which are managed under the entrustment made to the Samudayam shall, for the preservation of the property of the devaswom, be conducted with the approval of the three persons, and that the three persons shall jointly examine and settle each year's account in the month of Chingom (August-September) of the same year."

Notwithstanding the above, and the subsequent joint management, on suing certain tenants of the temple lands, the uncles of the present appellants, being then the heads of their family, alleged that a Nambidi defendant had no right whatever regarding the temple, his former right of Melkoima having become extinct.

[5] Valia Nambidi, the second of these respondents, who was then, during the minority of her son, the first respondent, representing the family estate, on the 4th September 1874 filed her written statement in answer to that suit. She denied the plaintiffs' allegations, and asserted the original right of her family to the temple.

On the 24th October 1874, a joint petition was presented to the Court of the Subordinate Judge in which that suit was pending on behalf of the plaintiffs and defendants expressing their mutual desire to have the suit compromised on the footing "of the future joint management of the temple affairs by the plaintiffs and Valia Nambidi," who were to appoint new officers and agents for the temple.

On the 19th November 1874, a joint appointment of a new pattamali or agent was accordingly made, and on the 21st November the second compromise was filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge under section 98 of the then Code of Civil Procedure, Act VIII of 1859, and it was prayed that the suit should be dismissed on the terms of that compromise. This was ordered by the Court on the 3rd December 1874.

Those terms provided for the future joint management of the affairs of the temple by the first and second plaintiffs in that suit, and the second defendant, the present second respondent. The joint management continued down to a short time before the institution of the present suit.

The judgment of the High Court, MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, and BEST, JJ., was the following :—

"The institution in question is an ancient Hindu temple in South Malabar, and the first respondent is the representative of the Nambidi family which ruled in former times over that tract of country in which the temple is situated, whilst the Uraima right is vested in the illom, or family, of the first appellant, a Nambudri Brahmin, from time immemorial. There is no legal evidence before us to show when and by whom the temple was founded, or what was the nature of management prescribed by its original constitution. There are, however, certain facts which are established beyond doubt and which are indeed not disputed by the appellants, and the Subordinate Judge rests his decision upon them. The appellants admit, and there is considerable evidence to show, that at least from 1845 the appellants' and the respondents' families have been in joint management in [a] accordance with the terms of karar C and razi D, dated the 16th August 1845, which were re-affirmed, except in one particular which is immaterial to our present purpose, by document E, dated the 21st November 1874. The circumstances under which documents C, D, and E were executed and their contents are set forth by the Subordinate Judge in paragraphs 16 to 20 of his judgment, and it will be seen that the documents referred to the first respondent's predecessors as Melkoimas and the appellants' ancestors as Uralan, and that they were executed in adjustment of pending litigation regarding the respective rights of those persons. It is not urged, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, that either fraud or a wilful suppression of material facts vitiates the deeds of compromise; but it is contended that they do not bind the appellants because, first, all the members of their families, as constituted in 1845, had not joined in their execution; secondly, that the compromise practically created a new right and thereby varied the original trusts of the institution; thirdly, that the Melkoima right being a right of sovereignty, it ceased on the introduction of the British rule; and fourthly, because no joint right can be acquired by prescription.

"As regards the first ground of claim it is clearly untenable. Prior to 1848 the first appellant's grandfather's brother was the karnavan of his illom, and from 1848 to 1859 it was under the management of the appellant's father. From 1859 to 1876 the appellant's uncle was the managing member, and from 1876 to 1892 the appellant's elder brother was in management. The first appellant has been the head of his family since 1882, and although all the members of the appellants' family in 1845 did not sign documents C. and D., the then head of the family signed them, and the arrangement made by him was acted upon by his successors and expressly recognized in 1874 and acquiesced in by all the junior members of his family for more than two generations and during a period of upwards of forty years. The contention, therefore, that the arrangement had not the sanction of the whole family in 1845 appears to us to be entitled to no weight.

"As regards the second contention, the Subordinate Judge is right in holding that after the compromise of 1845 and its ratification in 1874, the appellants are not at liberty to re-open the question, whether the right of joint management recognized [7] in 1845 was then a subsisting right and whether as Melkoima, the first respondent's family was entitled to participate in management. It is sufficient to say that the right of joint management was brought into controversy in a Court of Justice and that it was, by way of compromise, recognized as a subsisting right, and as being in accordance with the prior usage of the institution. It was held by the Privy Council in Sri Gajapathi Radhika v. Sri Gajapathi Nilamani (13 Moore, I. A., Cal. 497) that when a state of facts is accepted as the basis of a compromise whereby a suit pending decision is amicably adjusted, and when the compromise is not vitiated by fraud, those who were parties to it and their privies should not afterwards be heard to say, for the purpose of reviving the controversy, that the real state of things was otherwise. The principle is the same whether the mistake alleged to have been made is one of law or of fact. We may here draw attention to the words, "as hitherto" in document C., as indicating that it did not purport to vary the prior usage of the institution. Even assuming that the appellants may now be permitted to show that the respondents' family had no joint management prior to 1845, the evidence before us cannot be held sufficiently to establish such contention. In 1821 the Collector of this district called upon the then Nambidi to pay up the arrears of the revenue due on devaswom land and this implies some control on his part over the temple income. Again, in Exhibit A., which is the temple paimash of 1822, the Nambidi is described as having a Melkoima right over it. Further, Exhibit I shows that it was the Nambidi who got the devaswom land exempted from assessment by Haider in 1773. Though the paimash account is of itself no evidence of title, it is of value as confirming the view since taken by the Uralan as to the possession of the Nambidi."

After some notice of arguments by the pleaders on both sides as to parts of the evidence, the Judges further examined the exhibits and stated the opinion that it was impossible to hold upon the evidence that, prior to 1845 the Nambidi had no connection with the temple, nor control over its affairs, and that the recital that document C. recognized and regulated the prior practice was not bonâ fide. The judgment then continued thus :—

"[8] The next contention is that the Melkoima right is the sovereign right of supervision and that when the Nambidis ceased to be rulers, their Melkoima ceased likewise, and that it was therefore not a subsisting legal right in 1845. This is the substantial question raised for decision in this appeal. The learned Pleader for the appellants relies on the definition of Melkoima given by Mr. Græme, the Special Commissioner of Malabar, about 1820, as 'the right which the sovereign power possessed over property of which ownership is in others. It is a right of superintendence, an incident of sovereignty.' The Melkoima right was also described by MR. JUSTICE HOLLOWAY, whilst District Judge of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 118 of 1861 in the following terms :

'This is not only not the same, but absolutely incompatible with ownership. It was the right of the sovereign power possessed over property of which the legal ownership was in others. That sovereign power, and the right of interference which nothing can prevent these Malabar Rajas from asserting, have of course wholly ceased.' Mr. Wigram, a former District Judge of Malabar, gives a similar definition (Wigram on Malabar Law and Customs). On the other hand, the respondents' pleader refers to Logan's Treatise on Malabar, Vol. II, p. 177, where in the Uraima right is included among the four functions of a Desavali, and to Exhibit A. in which the Nambidi is described as Naduvali. It appears from Logan's Glossary, page 211, that no one was called a Naduvali who had not at least 500 Nayars attached to his range; any number below that ranked a person as a Desavali. Our attention is also drawn to the ancient constitution of Hindu temples in Malabar as described by Mr. Conolly, a Collector of Malabar, in his letter to the Board of Revenue which is cited in R. A. 35 of 1887. 'The pagodas of Malabar,' says Mr. Conolly 'generally are, and have always been, independent of Government interference. They are either the property of some influential family, the ancestors of which either built or endowed them or, as is more commonly the case, are claimed and managed by a body of trustees who derive their right from immemorial inheritance and conduct the affairs of the temple under the patronage or superintendence of some raja or person of consideration. This latter state of things, it will be seen, is nearly that which the Government are now desirous of introducing everywhere.' It will be seen that the above passage [9] throws light also on the policy which the British Government was inclined to adopt, viz., that of continuing the supervision of the Raja who was the patron, as it originally existed, in the interests of certain temples, instead of referring that supervision solely to the status of the person exercising it as sovereign for the time being, and declaring it to have ceased on the annexation of Malabar. There is some indication of such policy having been pursued in this case as in the Guruvayur devaswom case (Appeal Suit 35 of 1887), for the Revenue authorities have corresponded with the Nambidi relating to matters connected with the temple, whilst there are traces of the continuance of the right of interference by the Nambidi family subsequent to the annexation of Malabar. The real question then which we have to decide is this: Are we to ignore the state of things which has existed admittedly from 1845, and probably from the commencement of the century, and which was submitted to by the Uralan as one consistent with the ancient usage and constitution of the institution and continued and countenanced by the British Government as conducive to the protection of the interests of the institution; and are we now to deduce a rule of decision from the abstract theory of Malikoima as it existed prior to British rule and to change the usage and unsettle what was set at rest by a compromise forty years ago? We have no hesitation in answering the question in the negative. In cases in which there is a conflict between an ancient theory and the modern usage in a religious institution, Courts of Justice must see whether the usage is referable to some other legal origin with reference to the facts of each case, if not to the ancient theory. As observed by the Judicial Committee in the Ramnad case (12 Moore's I. A., 390) with reference to a theory deduced from the ancient Hindu Law of Niyoga or appointment in connection with the law of adoption, the abstract theory has a judicial value for the purpose of explaining and upholding the existing usage and not for the purpose of ignoring it. It is then urged for the appellants that the joint enjoyment, however long, can be referred to no legal origin. But it must be observed that from what has been stated above such legal origin may be found in the continuance of what was Melkoima in ancient times as a co-trusteeship subsequent to the British rule with the tacit sanction of the British Government, or in the status of the Nambidi family as [10] patrons of the institution as part of its ancient constitution, a status which did not cease on the introduction of the British rule. It must have been well known in 1845 that the sovereign power vested in the British Government, and the term Melkoima in document C must therefore be taken to be a word of description or distinction. The parties concerned took for their guide the subsisting usage of the institution and agreed to continue it without caring to ascertain to what legal relation of the Nambidi to the temple the continued participation in management subsequent to the British rule might be referred.

"As regards the last question, viz., of limitation, it has been decided by the Privy Council that the twelve years' rule is applicable when there is no question for recovering any property for the trusts of the institution and when the plaintiff sues only for his personal right to manage or to control the management of the endowment (L. R., 10 I. A., 96). When two persons have been in joint management for more than forty years, the presumption is that they have a joint right of management. This is not a case of exclusive possession of portions of the same property at different periods or a case of contraria possessio and the case in L. R., 12 App. Ca., 544, is not in point. The decision of the Subordinate Judge that the claim is barred by limitation is also right.

"The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs."

On this appeal Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the Appellants, argued that their predecessors in office as Uralan holding a trust could not effectively transfer the rights and duties belonging to it by the compromises of 1845 and 1874. They had no power to give up a portion of their uraima rights to the Nambidi, or to invest any of the latter with the right of management of the temple. If the effect of the two agreements was to confer on the defendants' predecessors any of the powers held by the Uralan as trustees, the agreements could not be carried out, as the office of trustee of the temple could not be transferred either wholly or in part. It was submitted, however, that the agreement of 1845 with the Nambidi as Melkoima recognized no right in them, but their right of that description; and did not operate to detract from the powers of the Uralan, who remained the sole guardians and trustees, with executive powers. This agreement was acted upon till 1874, when the suit of that year was partly directed at checking the encroachments of the Nambidi [11] as Melkoima, the defence of the latter showing that they asserted rights of exclusive property, rights which the razi of that year was framed to negative. The Melkoima rights could be recognized notwithstanding these documents of compromise, and without any unreasonable construction of them. The plaintiffs asked for a declaration that they were entitled to exercise the full powers of Uralan of the temple, subject only to the superintending influence of the Melkoima as formerly recognized. Reference was made to Raja Vurma Valia, v. Ravi Vurma Mutha (L. R., 4 I. A., 76; I. L. R., 1 Mad., 235) as showing that persons holding such a trust as that of Uralan of a temple are incapable of transferring it at their own will, and to Wigram on "Malabar Law and Custom."

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by Lord Morris.

The appellants are the plaintiffs in a suit which was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar on the 10th December 1888, and was again dismissed on appeal by the High Court of Madras on the 28th November 1890. The appellants sought for a declaration that they as Uralans were entitled to the exclusive management of the affairs of the temple of Kachankurissi, and that the respondents had no right over or right of management in the said temple, an ancient Hindu temple of such antiquity that nothing is known as to its foundation or original constitution. The respondents are the representatives of the original rulers of the district in which the temple is situated, who so continued till the British sovereignty was established over the country in the year 1792. The family of the appellants appear to have always held the office of Urallars or managers of the temple, while the Nambidi possessed certain sovereign rights of superintending the temple, called Melkoima rights. As long since as the year 1845 disputes arose between the ancestors of the appellants and respondents, and a suit was commenced as to the management of the temple, which was settled by a karar on the 16th August 1845; and in accordance therewith the parties two days afterwards filed a razi withdrawing the suit. The karar provides that the affairs of the temple were to be managed and that the ceremonies were to be performed jointly "just as they were hitherto," and for a period of thirty years afterwards, namely, until 1874, that arrangement was carried out. In [12] 1874 fresh disputes sprang up between the Urallars and the Nambidi, and led to a suit in which the Urallars sought to recover certain lands belonging to the temple from a tenant who held under a demise granted by the Samudayam appointed by the Urallars and the Nambidi according to the agreement contained in the karar of 1845. This suit was compromised, and in a razi of the 21st November 1874, terms were set out, which again determined that there should be a joint management of the affairs of the temple by the Urallars and the Nambidi. This razi was acted upon until the date of the present suit, the Urallars and the Nambidi jointly appointing a Samudayam and a Pattawali, and joining in suits to recover temple lands and in applications to execute decrees.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the state of things which has admittedly continued since 1845, and which was probably the state existing before that time and since the establishment of British sovereignty, cannot now be questioned, and that the compromise of their rights entered into in 1845 and 1874 by the Urallars and Nambidi is binding upon them and their successors, and cannot be now re-opened upon any theory of the extent of the Melkoima right in the abstract. The usage which has existed for so long a period is the best exponent of the Melkoima right vested in the respondents, a right twice acquiesced in by the appellants or their predecessors in legal proceedings in which the opportunity was afforded of a definite decision as to the rights of the respective families. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the judgment of the High Court ought to be affirmed and the appeal dismissed. The appellants must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

[13] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 24th, 25th, 26th and 30th July, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Krishnabhupati Devu.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Vikrama Devu.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, s. 13—Res judicata.

Where all the conditions prescribed by section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure as necessary to bar the trial in a subsequent suit of an issue adjudicated upon in a previous suit exist, the fact that in the first suit the defendant was an execution-creditor and in the second he is a purchaser at an execution sale makes no difference as to the second suit being res judicata. A privity exists between an execution-creditor and a purchaser at a Court-sale, the latter representing the former in so far as he had a right to bring the property to sale in execution of his decree. Thus when the plea of estoppel is available to a decree-holder, it is likewise available to the purchaser at the execution sale, as his representative or as one claiming under him. Surat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (L. R., 19 I. A., 203) followed.

APPEAL against the decree of H. R. Farmer, District Judge of Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 28 of 1890.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson) and Subramania Ayyar for Appellant.

Subramania Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises from a suit brought by the plaintiff (appellant) to obtain a declaration that the instrument of gift, (Exhibit E) which his father, Lingam Lakshmaji, executed in his favour on the 13th October, 1878, is true and valid ; that he is entitled under it to the village of Venkatarajapuram and the hamlet of Sitanna Cheruvu Istuva, which is the property now in litigation, and that the execution sale at which respondent purchased them for Rs. 15,900 on the 15th October 1888 is void and inoperative as against him.

The sale was held in Original Suit No. 3 of 1885 on the file of the District Court of Vizagapatam, in which, one Chodimella Ramamurti, had obtained a decree against Lingam Lakshmaji for [14] Rs. 6,456-10-0 for interest on Rs. 5,000 from the date of suit to date of decree at 9 per cent. per annum, for costs of the suit and for interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from date of decree to date of payment. Subsequent to the date of this decree (Exhibit VI), viz., 29th June 1885, the decree-holder, Ramamurti, obtained two other decrees against Lingam Lakshmaji, one in Original Suit No. 374 of 1885 on the file of the District Munsif of Vizianagrum for Rs. 2,253 on the 8th October 1885, and the other in Original Suit No. 355 of 1886, on the file of the same District Munsif. In execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 374 of 1885, Ramamurti attached the village of Venkatarajapuram, together with some other lands, which are comprised in the deed of gift. The appellant intervened under section 271, Code of Civil Procedure, as a claimant, pleaded the gift of 1878 in support of his claim, and prayed that the village, etc., might be released from attachment; but his claim was disallowed and his application dismissed on the 9th March 1887. He then instituted Original Suit No. 13 of 1887 on the file of the District Court of Vizagapatam to have his title recognized and the property released from attachment. The parties to that suit were the decree-holder, Ramamurti, and the plaintiff in the present suit, and the third issue fixed in that suit was "whether the deed of gift or settlement on which the plaintiff bases his claim to the property is valid and can be given effect to, or void and inoperative." The District Judge decided it against the present appellant and dismissed his suit with costs. In support of his decision he observed as follows: "The property attached admittedly belonged at one time to Lingam Lakshmaji. In 1878, he was in jail for forgery, but was released about the middle of the year. He is now undergoing a long sentence of imprisonment in the Vellore Central Jail for another forgery. These facts are notorious and were admitted at the trial. In 1878, just after his release, he executed in favour of his minor son, the plaintiff, then about two years old Exhibit E transferring to him property admittedly worth at least Rs. 60,000. The property now in suit is part of the property so transferred. There is no evidence that this document has ever been given effect to. Ramayya, first defence witness, who was formerly Lakshmaji's confidential agent, deposes that Lakshmaji told him that it was nominal only, intended to shield him from creditors. The witness has since collected the rents of the village and paid them [15] over to Lakshmaji. The witness for the plaintiff was the writer of E and the only reason he can assign for the transfer is that the Madugole Zamindar asked Lingam Lakshmaji to make it. It has been found in another case similar to this, in which case the son was the plaintiff and Lakshmaji one of the defendants, that the alleged transfer evidenced by E was nominal only, inoperative and one that could not be given effect to. My finding is that the plaintiff has not made out any title to the land, and that his suit must therefore be dismissed with costs."

In execution of his decree against Lingam Lakshmaji in Original Suit No. 355 of 1886, C. Ramamurti again attached the village of Venkatarajapuram. On this occasion appellant did not intervene as a claimant, but he brought in the District Court Original Suit No. 19 of 1888 to establish his title to the property under the same instrument of gift, but the District Judge dismissed that suit also with costs. He remarked in his judgment (Exhibit XVII) that the case was "clearly barred under section 13;" that the plaintiff, Lakshmaji's son, brought the then suit "to show that the village is under the deed of gift his, and not his father Lakshmaji's," and that this was "the very point in issue in the former suit and which was decided against the plaintiff."

In execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 3 of 1885, the village of Venkatarajapuram, together with the hamlet Sitanna Cheruvu, was again attached on the 12th January 1888, the decree-debt due on the 19th April 1888, being Rs. 8,809-3-11, and it was advertised for sale on the 12th May 1888. After various adjournments, it was brought to the hammer on the 15th October 1888, and purchased by the respondent—Venkatarajapuram for Rs. 14,350 and Sitanna Cheruvu Istuva for Rs. 1,550. Although the sale took place in Original Suit No. 3 of 1885, it appears from Exhibit XIV that the property was sold not only on account of the decree-debt therein, but also on account of three other debts, viz., the debt in Original Suit No. 374 of 1885 already mentioned, the debt due under the decree obtained by one Putta Ramanna against Lingam Lakshmaji in Original Suit No. 688 of 1886 on the file of the District Munsif of Vizagapatam, and the debt due to one Palakurti Ramamurti under the decree in Original Suit No. 1 of 1886 on the file of the same District Munsif. During the period of attachment and prior to the sale in Original Suit No. 3 of 1885 the appellant did not intervene, though his father objected to the sale and failed. The District Munsif of Vizagapatam disallowed the [16] objections of Lingam Lakshmajji to the sale on the 9th March 1889, by his order (Exhibit XII) and made over possession of the property to the purchaser by his order (Exhibit C), dated the 22nd February, 1890. The appellant brought this suit on the 25th August, 1890.

His case is that the property now in dispute vested in him under the instrument of gift in 1878, and ceased at once to belong to his father, Lingam Lakshmajji, and its sale in 1888 as the latter's property and in satisfaction of a decree passed against Lakshmajji did not operate to divest appellant of what had already become his property. Respondent contended that the gift set up by appellant was a mere sham contrived to defraud Lakshmajji's creditors. The sixth issue raised the question whether the gift was valid and bona fide, and the Judge determined it in the negative.

Apart from the objection to the claim on the merits, respondent raised four preliminary questions, viz. :

- (i) whether the suit is maintainable under section 42, Specific Relief Act ;
- (ii) whether the plaint is properly valued ;
- (iii) whether it is barred by the Law of Limitation, and
- (iv) whether the suit is res judicata.

He abandoned the second preliminary ground of objection, and the Judge held that the suit was neither res judicata nor barred by limitation, but he held that the suit was not maintainable for two reasons, viz., (i) that appellant's omission to intervene as a claimant under section 278 when he was in a position to do so could not better his position, but rendered him liable to the same consequences as if he had intervened and his claim had failed, and (ii) that it was in the discretion of the Judge either to pass or decline to pass a declaratory decree under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and that he would exercise the discretion unwisely if he granted a declaratory decree under the circumstances mentioned in paragraph 7 of his judgment. Whilst stating in paragraph 10 of the judgment that the suit is not res judicata, he observes that, though the principle of res judicata may not apply, the effect of res judicata is indirectly produced. In the result, he dismissed appellant's suit with costs, and against this decision the plaintiff has appealed. The defendant supports it on the ground that the claim is res judicata and that the plaintiff is now estopped from relying on the gift as a valid transaction by reason of the decision in Original Suits Nos. 13 of 1887 and 19 of 1888 which have become final.

[17] The only question which it is necessary to decide for the purposes of this appeal is whether the suit is res judicata. We are of opinion that the question raised by the sixth issue in the present suit is clearly res judicata, and that the adjudication upon it in Original Suit No. 13 of 1887 is conclusive. The appellant is not at liberty to re-open it, and is estopped from doing so by section 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The suggestion made by the Judge that appellant was in a position to have intervened as a claimant under section 278 during the execution of the decrees in Original Suits Nos. 3 of 1885 and 355 of 1886, and that his omission to do so rendered him liable to the same consequences that would have ensued if he had intervened and his claim had been dismissed, is one to which we cannot accede. Section 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure is permissive ; it does not impose an obligation on persons having claims to prefer to property attached in execution to prefer them during such execution and annex in cases of failure to do so, forfeiture of their right to establish their title to the property by a regular suit. As regards the one year's limitation prescribed by article 12, second schedule, Act of Limitations, the article presupposes an order already made under sections 280, 281 and 282, and it has no application in cases in which no claim has been preferred and no order has been made.

Nor do we see our way to adopting the opinion of the Judge that it would be unwise on his part to pass a declaratory decree in appellant's favour, even if he established his title under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, which vests in him (the Judge) a discretion to refuse to make a declaration. The discretion given by that section is a judicial discretion, and the ground upon which it is exercised must be open to no legal objection. It is clearly a mistake to treat section 278, which is permissive, as imperative, and to adopt this erroneous construction as the basis of the discretion to be exercised under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

Again, it is not clear how, if the principle of res judicata does not apply, its effect can be produced either indirectly or directly. The decision reported in Ram Kirpal Shukul v. Mussumat Rupkuari (L. R., 11 I. A., 37) proceeds on the ground that a final decision in execution proceedings cannot be questioned at a later stage of those [18] proceedings upon general principles of law or, in other words, the principle of res judicata applies, although section 13 does not mention execution proceedings.

Upon the facts already stated, however, it is clear that the decision in Original Suit No. 18 of 1887 is conclusive on the question raised by the sixth issue in the present suit, and that on this ground, the appeal must fail. All the conditions prescribed by section 13 as necessary to bar the trial in a subsequent suit of an issue adjudicated upon in a previous suit exist in this case. The issue was substantially the same in both suits, and the District Court which investigated the former suit is competent to entertain the present suit. The question whether the gift was valid and bona fide or a mere sham was a matter directly and substantially in issue in both suits. The only difference is that in the previous suit the execution-creditor, Ramamurti, was defendant, whereas in the present suit the purchaser at the execution sale is the defendant. Does this make a difference? We are of opinion that it does not. It is a well-known principle that a purchaser at a Court-sale represents the judgment-debtor to the extent of such right, title and interest as he had in the property purchased at the date of sale, and represents the execution-creditor in so far as he had a right to bring such right, title and interest to sale in satisfaction of his decree. Hence it follows that the purchaser is a party claiming in this case under the execution-creditor, Ramamurti, within the meaning of section 13, and the Judge has apparently overlooked the privity in law which exists between the two. The decision in Surat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (L. R., 19 I. A., 203) is a clear authority for the proposition that when the plea of estoppel is available to a decree-holder, it is likewise available to the purchaser at the execution sale as his representative or as one claiming under him.

The cases cited at the hearing by the learned Advocate-General in Shivram Chintaman v. Jivu (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 34), Hira Lal Chatterji v. Gourmoni Debi (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 326), Zanki Lal v. Jawahir Singh (I. L. R., 5 All., 94), Jagat Narain v. Jag Rup (I. L. R., 5 All., 452), and Viraraghava v. Venkata (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 287) are only decisions on the question how far a purchaser at an execution sale represents the judgment-creditor for the purposes of section 244 of [19] the Code of Civil Procedure, and they do not appear to us to touch the doctrine of privity in law as part of the doctrine of res judicata. The case in Abedoonissa Khatoon v. Ameeroonissa Khatoon (L. R., 4 I. A., 66) was not that of a purchaser.

It is provided by section 244 that no separate suit shall be brought by a party to the decree or his representative for the determination of questions arising between them and relating to the execution of the decree. The question considered in the cases cited was whether the purchaser was entitled to maintain a separate suit and whether he was a representative within the meaning of that section. The question arising for determination in the case before us is whether a plea of estoppel which would be available if the judgment-creditor were a party to the present suit is likewise available to the purchaser who is a party to it. Moreover, the appellant was not the holder of the decree in the execution of which respondent became purchaser and the respondent was not a party to it but a stranger who represents the execution-creditor and execution-debtor only to the limited extent already mentioned.

We confirm the decree of the District Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs on the ground that the plaintiff is estopped from insisting on the gift in his favour as valid against the respondent.

Insolvent Act (11 and 12, Vic. c. 21), s. 63—Insolvency of married woman—

Property settled on her for separate use without power of anticipation—

Whether comprised in the vesting order or not—Married Women's Property Act—Act III of 1874, s. 8.

A creditor's right to be satisfied out of the separate property of a married woman is, in the case of post-nuptial debts, restricted to the property as to which there is no restraint on anticipation. Section 8[†] of Act III of 1874 was not intended to give married women the power of evading such restraint—Hippolite v. Stuart (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 522) dissented from.

[†][Sec. 8:—If a married woman (whether married before or after the first day of January 1866) possesses separate property, and if any person enters into a contract with her with reference to such property, or on the faith that her obligation arising out of such contract will be satisfied out of her separate property, such person shall be entitled to sue her, and, to the extent of her separate property, to recover against her whatever he might have recovered in such suit had she been unmarried at the date of the contract and continued unmarried at the execution of the decree.]

Wife's liability for post-nuptial debts.

APPLICATION in insolvency. The Official Assignee and the Official Trustee appeared in person.

[20] Judgment:—This is an application with regard to certain funds held by the Official Trustee as trustee of the marriage settlement of Stella Earnstine Dagmar Mantel. She and her husband have filed their petition in insolvency, and the question arises whether the said funds are affected by the vesting order. According to section 63 of the Act the vesting order operates on all property of a married woman "over which she shall have any beneficial power of disposition notwithstanding her coverture, to the extent of the benefit which she might acquire therein by the exercise of such power."

It seems clear that the funds now in question are not Mrs. Mantel's property in that sense, for the property is settled upon her for separate use without power of anticipation. My attention, however, was called to the case of Hippolite v. Stuart (I.L.R., 12 Cal., 522), in which it was held by Sir R. GARTH and WILSON, J., that a creditor in respect of a debt incurred after marriage was entitled to proceed against the separate property of a married woman, notwithstanding the restraint on anticipation. The judgment proceeds on the ground that as the provisions of section 9 of the Married Women's Property Act (which are to the same effect as those of section 12 of the English Married Women's Property Act of 1870, and which deal with ante-nuptial debts) have been held in England [see Sanger v. Sanger (L. R., 11 Eq., 470)] to extend to such property, so section 8 must receive the same construction. The decision has been questioned in Bombay and, as it appears to me, with good reason [see Cursetji v. Rustomji (I. L. R., 11 Bom., 348)]. I fully concur in the observations of FARRAN, J., in that case. To enact that a married woman may contract with reference to her property settled to her separate use without power of anticipation, and bind it by the contract, is tantamount to saying that the restraint on the power of anticipation is inoperative, and that cannot have been intended. Moreover, it is inconsistent with the provision of section 10* of the Transfer of Property Act, which provides that property may be so settled on a married woman as to prevent her from charging it. Full meaning can be given to section 8 of the Married Women's Property Act without importing to the Legislature an intention to ignore conditions in restraint of alienation which are distinctly recognized in the later Act. I cannot find in the English case anything to support the view which has been taken in Calcutta. The authority is, as far as I can see, all [21] the other way, unless I except the overruled judgment of MALINS, V.C., in Pike v. Fitzgibbon (L.R., 17 Ch. D., 454). [See Chapman v. Biggs (L. R., 11 Q. B. D., 27) and the judgment of WILLS, J., in Bickett v. Tasker (L.R., 19 Q.B.D., 7).] In Pike v. Fitzgibbon (L.R., 17 Ch.D., 454), although no reference is made to the statute, the position of a married woman and her separate property as considered in a Court of Equity, is explained by COTTON, L. J., in language which has equally application to the provision of the Act. The argument in the case was that a Court of Equity would deal with a married woman who has separate estate as if she were a feme sole. On this COTTON, L. J., observes that this proposition is only correct if the distinction between a married woman and a feme sole with regard to

Condition restraining from parting with or disposing of his interest in the property, alienation. the condition or limitation is void, except in the case of a lease, where the condition is for the benefit of the lessor or those claiming under him: provided that that property may be transferred to or for the benefit of a woman (not being a Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist), so that she shall not have power during her marriage to transfer or charge the same or her beneficial interest therein.]

the restraint upon anticipation which may be imposed on the former but not on the latter is borne in mind. "She is regarded as a feme sole only as regards property which, under the trust, she is entitled to deal with as if she were a feme sole, but as regards property which she is restrained from anticipating, she is not, as regards a person other than her husband, in the position of a feme sole" (page 464). He goes on to cite a passage from a judgment of TURNER, L. J., which concludes with the words "She is considered in a Court of Equity as a feme sole in respect of property thus settled or secured to her separate use." COTTON, L. J., adds, "that is to say as regards property which, under the trusts, she can dispose of and alienate, she is considered as a feme sole." These observations, when applied to section 8 of the Act of 1874, as they properly may be, make it to my mind abundantly clear that the creditor's right to be satisfied out of the separate property of a married woman is, in the case of post-nuptial debts, restricted to the property as to which there is no restraint on anticipation, and that it was not intended to give married women the power of evading such restraint as can be lawfully imposed on them. In the Consolidating Statute of 1882 I observe that section 19 expressly saves property settled on a married woman without power of anticipation, in so far as concerns post-nuptial debt.

For this reason, I am of opinion that the property comprised in the marriage settlement of Mrs. Mantel is not affected by the vesting order.

*Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 508 and 516—Arbitration—

An award is not invalid merely because no time has been fixed for the making of the award, section 508 of the Code of Civil Procedure being directory and not mandatory—Har Narain Singh v. Bhagwant Kuar (I. L. R., 10 All., 137) followed.

It is necessary, as provided by section 516 of the Code, that all the arbitrators agree to the terms of the award, but there is no provision of law requiring them to sign it in the presence of each other.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of L. A. Campbell, District Judge of Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 125 of 1892, confirming the decree of V. Malhari Rao, District Munsif of Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 569 of 1890.

* Second Appeal No. 1571 of 1893.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Respondents were not represented.

Judgment :—It is argued that no time having been fixed for the making of the award, the award is invalid. We cannot accede to this contention. Section 508 is directory merely and not mandatory, as observed in HarNarain Singh v. Bhagwant Kuar (I. L. R., 10 All., 137), and the mere omission to fix a time is not fatal. In the case before us the award was not made till about a year after the submission to arbitration, but there is no allegation that either party attempted to recede from the submission; and, having regard to the fact that rights to immoveable property were in question, it is not unreasonable to hold that the parties did not consider there was any undue delay. Under these circumstances, we must disallow the objection that the award is invalid under the final clause of section 521.

[23] Another objection is that the award was not signed by the arbitrators in each other's presence. We consider it sufficient, if they all agreed to it as provided in section 516. There is no provision of law requiring them to sign in the presence of each other—Bhabasundari Das v. Makhunlal Dey (8 B. L. R., 128).

It is next urged that some of the arbitrators were absent from a certain meeting. There is no specific allegation or issue as to this, nor is there evidence as to what was the object of that meeting. The evidence of one witness, who speaks to such absence, is contradicted by other witnesses examined in the case, and we are unable to give any weight to the objection.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, and so also is the petition under section 622.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Hanumayya and another.....(Plaintiffs) Appellants

Venkatasubbayya and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, s. 503—Appointment of receivers—Waste or misappropriation of property as a ground for appointing a receiver.

The fact that the acts complained of amount to misappropriation rather than waste makes no difference for the purposes of s. 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

* Appeal against Order No. 9 of 1894.

APPEAL against the order of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, passed on Miscellaneous Petition No. 558 of 1893 in the matter of Original Suit No. 25 of 1893.

In a suit for the partition of the estate of a trading joint family, which estate belonged to the plaintiff and his brother, the eldest surviving member of the family, it appeared that the latter had for some time past misappropriated large sums of money and had thrown the accounts into confusion. The plaintiff therefore applied to have a receiver appointed to the estate.

[24] The District Judge dismissed the petition on the ground that no case had been established under section 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the petitioner preferred this appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar and Sriramulu Sastri for Appellants.

Venkataramiah Chetti for Respondents.

Judgment.—The reason assigned by the Judge for declining to appoint a receiver is that the acts complained of amount to misappropriation rather than waste, and that petitioners can hereafter institute a criminal prosecution. These are clearly not sufficient reasons. Section 503 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorises the appointment of a receiver for the preservation or better custody of property the subject of a suit. Whether property is vested or misappropriated makes no difference for the purposes of this section. The future institution of a criminal prosecution will not enable a party to recover property that may have been misappropriated.

We cannot support the Judge's order.

It is therefore set aside and the case remanded for disposal according to law.

The costs hitherto incurred will abide and follow the result.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

*In re Ackrill.

Deceased insolvent debtor—After-acquired property—Whether it vests in his administrator or in the Official Assignee.

The Official Assignee sold a policy of insurance on the life of an insolvent, who, after obtaining his personal discharge, died. The purchaser having bought the policy mainly for the benefit of the insolvent, paid most of the sum realised by him upon it to the Administrator-General who was about to take out letters of administration to the estate of the insolvent :

Held, that the Administrator-General was entitled to the proceeds of the policy in preference to the Official Assignee.

* Insolvency Petition No. 75 of 1893.

APPLICATION in insolvency. The Administrator-General and the Official Assignee appeared in person.

[25] Judgment.—The facts giving rise to this application are as follows : Among the assets of the insolvent was a policy of insurance on his own life for Rs. 2,500, which was sold by the Official Assignee and realized Rs. 180. Shortly after the sale the insolvent, who had obtained his personal discharge, died, and the purchaser collected the amount due on the policy. It was then brought to the notice of the Administrator-General by the purchaser himself that he had not bought the policy entirely for his own benefit, but mainly for the benefit of the insolvent, and accordingly the money received on the policy minus the price paid for it and a small sum due by the insolvent to the purchaser was paid over to the Administrator-General. The question is whether the money rightly came to the hands of the Administrator-General or whether it is affected by the vesting order.

I think that the money must be treated as after-acquired property. By the sale the Official Assignee parted with all interest in the policy. Under the circumstances, I think it is clear that the personal representative of the deceased insolvent is entitled to take and to administer the money as the assets of the deceased. This is taken for granted in the cases, and must necessarily be so, seeing that future-acquired property does not vest in the Official Assignee from the date of the filing of the petition. It is only by a proceeding subsequently taken during the lifetime of a discharged insolvent that it may be made available for the scheduled creditors when a judgment is entered up under section 86 of the Insolvency Act. See Barton v. Tattersall (Russ. & Mylne, 241), Ward v. Painter (5 Mylne & Craig, 299). Accordingly, if there is a second insolvency, property acquired by the debtor before the date of it, but after the vesting order in the first insolvency, is distributed in the first instance among the creditors in the second insolvency and can only be available to the prior creditors under a judgment in the first insolvency—Curtis v. Sheffield (8 Sim. 176). On the death of the insolvent the Court of Chancery has, notwithstanding the insolvency, jurisdiction to administer his assets [see per NORTH, J., in re Smith (L. R., 24 Ch. D., 672 at page 679)], though at the same time in the administration the claim of the schedule-creditors may be admitted without obtaining an execution order under the judgment ; see in re Clagett's Estate (L. R., 20 Ch., D., 637, 640).

[26] The Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction over the legal representative of the deceased debtor—Ex parte Welchman (L. R., 11 Ch. D., 48, 53). As compared with that case the present is an a fortiori case, as the provision there discussed (section 9 of the Act 5 & 6, Vic., c. 116) is not to be found in the Indian Act.

In my opinion the Administrator-General is entitled to take possession of and administer the moneys arising from the policy of insurance.

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 244 and 258—Payment to decree-holder out of Court—Whether an order having been made under s. 258, a separate suit on the subject-matter thereof lies.

An order under s. 258 of the Code of Civil Procedure is appealable under s. 244 ; no separate suit lies, since the question is res judicata between the parties.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, confirming the decree of O. V. Nanjunda Aiyar, District Munsif of Masulipatam, in Original Suit No. 283 of 1891.

In this case the first defendant held a decree against the plaintiff. In the execution proceedings of that decree the plaintiff put in a petition, pleading payment of Rs. 496, for which he held a receipt. The first defendant asserted that this receipt was fabricated. The District Munsif called for evidence and dismissed plaintiff's petition, because his witnesses were not in attendance. The plaintiff then filed a suit, upon his receipt, to recover Rs. 496 and Rs. 40 damages for first defendant's failure to certify the payment. The District Munsif held that the suit was barred by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Against this decision [27] the plaintiff appealed, but the District Judge affirmed the decree of the District Munsif.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Judgment.—In the Full Bench cases decided in this Court—Virarayhava v. Subbakka (I. L. R., 5 Mad., 397), and Mallamma v. Venkappa (I. L. R., 8 Mad., 277)—it does not appear that any question as to the satisfaction of the debt out of Court was raised in the execution proceedings. So also in the case of Sita Ram v. Mahipal (I. L. R., 3 All., 533) and Shadi v. Ganga Sahai (I. L. R., 3 All., 538). The ground of decision in the Madras cases was that the question was not whether the decree had been satisfied and satisfaction should be recorded, but whether there had been a fraudulent breach of contract which had not formed the subject of inquiry in the suit or in the execution proceedings.

Here, however, the question of payment out of Court did form the subject of inquiry in execution proceedings. Though an order under section 258 is not made appealable under section 588, it is appealable under section 244, being made on a question arising between the parties to the suit, and falling under the definition of 'decree.' The view taken in Lingayya v. Narasimha (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 99) coincides with that taken in Ghazidin v. Fakir Bakhsh (I. L. R., 7 All., 73), Ranji v. Bhaiji Harjivan (I. L. R., 11 Bom., 57) and has been again followed in Tamna Prasad v. Mathura Prasad (I. L. R., 16 All., 129). No separate suit will lie, since the question whether the payment has been made is res judicata between the parties.

The decrees of the Courts below must be confirmed and this second appeal dismissed with costs.

PETITION under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of Venkata Rengaiyar, Subordinate Judge of Madura (East), in suit No. 213 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Narayana Rac for Appellant.

Desikachariar for Respondent.

Judgment.—This was a suit for compensation due to defendant having wrongfully obstructed the flow of water to plaintiff's cowle land, and the question raised for determination on revision is whether sub-clause i, clause 35 of the second schedule of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act does not bar the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes from entertaining such suit. The contest is as to whether obstruction to the flow of water which is referred to by the Subordinate Judge in his judgment must be taken to imply necessarily a 'diversion' of the water within the meaning of the provision of law cited above. It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that mere obstruction does not amount to diversion, and that the use by the Subordinate Judge of the words 'obstructed the flow of water' was not felicitous. It appears from the record that plaintiff has certain cowle lands in Sivaganga, that a channel led off from the Puthur tank to those lands, and that petitioner's obstructions prevented the plaintiff [29] from taking water along it, that loss of crop was the damage which resulted, and that the water obstructed flowed into Ayan channels. This appears to me to be clearly a case falling under the clause of the Small Causes Act already cited. The contention that obstruction is not diversion seems to be absurd, since when the flow of water to the cowle lands along the channel was obstructed, it must be diverted in whole or part from the cowle lands, and since it is immaterial whether the diversion was into the tank itself or into Ayan or zamin channels or elsewhere. It is enough that if by the obstruction the flow of water to plaintiff's cowle lands is diverted from them so as to diminish the water-supply and to cause damage.

I set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge as one passed without jurisdiction, and direct that the plaint be returned to plaintiff for presentation to a Court of competent jurisdiction.

Plaintiff will pay petitioner's costs throughout.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to render invalid mortgages made in the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Karachi and Rangoon, by delivery to a creditor or his agent of documents of title to immoveable property, with intent to create a security thereon.]

Judgment.—It is urged that, though the document cannot be used or proved as a mortgage instrument, it may be proved as containing a personal covenant to pay, and we are referred to the decision in Gomaji v. Subbarayappa (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 253). In that case, however, there was no statutory bar to receiving the document in evidence, though by reason of want of registration it could not affect the immoveable property comprised therein. In the present case the document is itself excluded by the provisions of Section 68* of the Indian Evidence Act, since it purports to create a legal mortgage.

Nor can the plaintiff company fall back upon the deposit of the title-deeds. There was no antecedent debt to secure which the title-deeds were deposited, and it is clear from the plaint itself that the intention from its inception was to effect a legal mortgage. A legal mortgage was prepared and accepted, but owing to neglect to comply with the requirements of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act it is invalid.

We must dismiss the appeal with costs.

The provision of s. 39 of the Rent Recovery Act that the notice of an intention to sell the land should be served 'at his usual place of abode' denotes some [31] place in the neighbourhood of the land in respect of which the patta was tendered, and does not apply when the tenant resides in foreign territory.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of H. H. O'Farrell, Acting District Judge of Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 919 of 1892, reversing the decision of F. H. Hamnett, Sub-Collector of Tanjore, in Summary Suit No. 74 of 1890.

† Second Appeal No. 1601 of 1893.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Sundara Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment :—The District Judge has reversed the decision of the Sub-Collector and dismissed the suit on the ground that there was no proper tender of patta in the manner prescribed by law (sections 7 and 39, Madras Act VIII of 1865).

Defendant was a clerk in the District Court of Cochin at Trichoor and was not residing in the Tanjore district. One Ganapathi Subbier was looking after his cultivation for him in Tanjore, but had no power-of-attorney from him. Ganapathi Subbier denies that any patta was tendered to him, and though the kurnam deposed that there was, there is no finding by the Judge upon that point.

The patta tendered was stuck up on the land in the manner prescribed by section 39, and the question is whether this mode of service was justifiable when the defendant was known to be living in foreign territory and had no authorised agent on the spot.

The procedure is only justifiable when service cannot be effected on the tenant himself or on some adult male member of his family at his usual place of abode, or on his authorized agent (section 39). The section must be construed reasonably and the words 'at his usual place of abode' would seem to denote that it was contemplated that the notice would ordinarily be served upon the tenant himself, his relative or his authorized agent in the neighbourhood of the land in respect of which the patta was tendered. A tender through the post would not be effectual—see Venkatachellam Chetti v. Kadumthusi (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 145) and Saminatha v. Viranna (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 42). We do not think it could have been intended that a landlord should go himself or send an agent into foreign territory [32] to tender a patta, and we, therefore, hold that the service contemplated in the first instance under section 39 could not be effected, and hence that the service by affixing a copy on a conspicuous part of the land was under the circumstances a good and valid service. The decree of the District Judge must be reversed and the appeal remanded to be disposed of on the merits. Appellant is entitled to costs of this appeal, and the costs in the Lower Appellate Court will abide and follow the result.

Perpetual lease granted for consideration—Clause providing for forfeiture on rent being in arrears—Whether repayment of the consideration is a condition precedent to surrender of the lands.

Consideration paid for a lease is exhausted by the grant of the lease, and a tenant's forfeiture of the lease cannot, in the absence of a provision to that effect, operate so as to convert the original consideration into a debt, which must be paid before the forfeiture can be enforced.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of A. Thompson, District Judge of North Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 298 of 1892, confirming the decree of K. Ramanatha Iyer, District Munsif of Cannanore, in Original Suit No. 35 of 1892.

The defendants in this suit held lands on a perpetual lease (Janmu kozhu) which provided that the lease should be forfeited if the defendants allowed the rent to fall into arrears. The rent fell into arrears, but since it appeared that the plaintiff's ancestor had received consideration for the lease, the District Munsif and the District Judge decreed that, although the defendants had forfeited the lease, the forfeiture thereof could not, by analogy to the ordinary kanom, be enforced, until the plaintiff had repaid the consideration.

[33] The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Ryru Nambiar for Appellant.

Respondents were not represented.

Judgment:—We do not agree with the Judge that, if the clause for forfeiture of the perpetual lease is enforceable, plaintiff is only entitled to a decree on refund of the consideration paid by the tenant at the time of obtaining the lease. Exhibit A contains no provision for such repayment, and an obligation to refund cannot be inferred from the clause for forfeiture.

In the case of a kanom referred to by the Judge, what is forfeited is the right to retain possession for the full period of twelve years, the liability to repay the debt being in no way affected. Whereas in the case of a lease the consideration paid for it is exhausted by the grant of the lease, and the tenant's forfeiture of the lease cannot operate to convert the original consideration into a debt.

This is the only point that has been argued for appellant, and respondents have not appeared.

* Second Appeal No. 206 of 1893.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and setting aside the decrees of the lower Courts so far as they disallow plaintiff's claim to possession of the land, we decree that defendants do surrender the land to plaintiff and pay his costs throughout.

Partnership—Suit by one member of an undivided Hindu family—Non-joinder of other persons interested in a family business.

In 1887 the plaintiff appointed the defendant to serve for three years as manager of a business in Moulmein, which was the business of the undivided Hindu family to which the plaintiff belonged. In 1893 the plaintiff, without joining the other members of his family, sued the defendant for damages for breach of the contract of service :

[34] Held, (1) that the suit was not maintainable in the absence from the record of the other partners in the business ;

(2) that, under the circumstances, the name of the plaintiff in the cause-title could not be taken as designating his partners also ;

(3) that, by reason of the fact that the amendment might deprive the defendant of the defence of limitation and of the other circumstances in the case, the plaintiff should not be allowed on appeal to amend the plaint by bringing his partners on to the record.

APPEAL against the decree of C. Gopalan Nayar, Subordinate Judge of Madura (East), in Original Suit No. 4 of 1893.

This was a suit brought by the plaintiff to recover from defendant No. 1 and his son the sum of Rs. 15,495 as damages sustained by reason of the first defendant's misconduct as agent for a business carried on at Moulmein under the name of Pana Ravanna Mana Ana Alagappa Chettiar.

It appeared that the first defendant had been appointed by the plaintiff to the management of the business in question on 19th January 1887, and had then signed a document, designated in the plaint as a salary chit, by which he undertook to serve the business for a period of three years. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that the plaintiff, being a member of the undivided Hindu family to which the business in question belonged, was not entitled to maintain the suit in his sole name. Preliminary issues were framed with reference to this plea, and it was found that the constitution of the firm was as alleged by the defendants, and the above plea was upheld. The suit having been thereupon dismissed, the plaintiff preferred this appeal.

* Appeal No. 65 of 1894.

Subramanya Ayyar, Ranga Ramanujachariar and Desikachariar, for Appellant.

Mr. R. F. Grant for Respondent No. 1.

Sivasvami Ayyar for Respondent No. 2.

Judgment.—It appears from the plaint that the first defendant Vellian was, on the 19th January 1887, engaged by the plaintiff to carry on his business in Moulmein for a period of three years, and that, accordingly, he did act as the plaintiff's agent till the 17th December 1889, when he left Moulmein. It is charged against the first defendant that during the period of his agency he acted in contravention of the plaintiff's orders, and that, on his return to this country, he refused to render proper accounts. The plaint was presented on the 14th January 1893.

On the 14th August 1893, the defendants put in separate [35] written statements, in both of which it is objected that the suit is bad for non-joinder of parties, because the plaintiff is only one of several members of a Hindu family carrying on business in partnership together. On the same day, the 14th August, certain preliminary issues were adjusted with reference to this objection. By the first of them the question of fact is raised whether "(as alleged in the plaint) the plaintiff is sole owner of the firm P. R. M. A. in Moulmein or whether such firm has other partners or belongs to a family which has other members." On the 2nd November certain persons describing themselves as members of the family of the plaintiff Alagappa put in petition stating that Alagappa was the manager of the family business, and that the first defendant was by him alone appointed agent, and asking that the plaintiff might be permitted to proceed against the defendants.

On the 14th November the plaintiff himself filed a petition praying that, if the Court holds the other members of his undivided family should also be parties, they might "also be described as plaintiffs." On the same day the trial of the preliminary issues took place. The plaintiff Alagappa was examined as a witness. He at once admitted that he was not the sole owner of the firm, but that five persons in all named by him and members of his family were interested in it. The witness proves the execution by the first defendant Vellian of the document (A) called a salary chit and explains that the letters P. R. M. A. appearing in that paper before his name Alagappa are not his own initials, but stand for the firm's name.

On the evidence the Judge held that the plaintiff was not competent to maintain the suit in his own name only. He further, with reference to the petition presented on the same day but after he had expressed an opinion adverse to the plaintiff, refused to allow any addition of new parties. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The appeal was supported on alternative grounds. It was argued that the plaintiff Alagappa was competent to maintain the suit in his own name, or in the alternative that the designation of the plaintiff in the cause-title was sufficient to denote all the persons interested in the firm. There can be no doubt that as a general rule all the members of a partnership firm ought to be joined as plaintiffs in a suit brought in respect of transactions with the partnership. It makes no difference that the persons, carrying on business together, were also members of a Hindu family—Kahdas [36] Kevaldas v. Nathu Bhagvan (I. L. R., 7 Bom., 217) and cases cited. The proposition that the manager of a Hindu family can sue without joining those interested with him is one which cannot be supported and no authority was cited in support of it save a dictum in Arunachala v. Vythialinga (I. L. R., 6 Mad., 27). There can be no doubt, in the present case, that the employment of Vellian as agent was an employment in the business of the firm and that the contract was made by Alagappa on behalf of the firm. The appellant's vakil, however, endeavoured to convince us that Alagappa, though acting for the firm, made the contract in his own name under such circumstances as to entitle him to sue alone. The case of Agacio v. Forbes (14 Moore's P. C., 160) was cited, and it was urged that similarly here Alagappa was entitled to sue alone. In Agacio v. Forbes (14 Moore's P. C., 160) it is true that the contract made in Hongkong between the plaintiff and the defendant was made for the benefit of the plaintiff's firm; but the consideration for it, namely, the forbearance by the plaintiff from proceedings threatened against third parties, was a consideration moving from the plaintiff alone, for he alone was in Hongkong representing his firm which carried on business in Valparaiso.

If, instead of being a partner, Agacio had been a mere agent of a foreign principal, the case would have come within the principle recognized in section 230 of the Contract Act. And in considering the question of parties to an action, the case of partners and that of agent and principal stand on the same footing, the question in either case being with whom was the contract made in point of law. Lindley on Partnership, 3rd edition, page 487. For these reasons we think that the authority cited is not applicable. In the present case there is nothing to show that the right of suing on the contract was restricted to the plaintiff—Lucas v. De la Cour (1 M. & S., 249). On the contrary, it appears on the face of the salary chit that the retainer is by the firm and not by Alagappa in his individual capacity. It follows that the general rule above stated requiring the joinder of all the partners must apply. See Lindley on Partnership, 3rd edition, pages 486 and 489.

This being so, we are asked to read the name of the plaintiff given in the cause-title as designating not Alagappa only but his [37] partners or coparceners. It seems to us impossible, in the circumstances of the present case, to say that there is a mere misdescription as was held to be the case in Kasturchand Bahiravdas v. Sagarmal Shriram (I. L. R., 17 Bom., 413). It is abundantly clear that the plaint was not read by the plaintiff's vakil in the manner in which we are now asked to read it, for otherwise the pleader would not have gone to trial on the issue raised by the Judge with regard to the question whether the plaintiff had other partners. It is contended that the pleader misconstrued the plaint, but the mistake is by no means obvious, and we must assume that the party is duly represented by his pleader.

We are clearly of opinion that the defect is one which only could be cured by the addition of the persons who along with Alagappa constitute the plaintiff's firm or family. It remains then to consider the question whether even at this stage those persons ought to be brought on the record. No formal application to that effect was made in the Court below nor is any such application made before us. On the respondent's behalf it is said that the required amendment ought not now to be made, because any claim against Vellian by the partners of Alagappa would be barred by the Statute of Limitation. Even on the 14th August when the informal application was made on behalf of those persons such suit would equally have been barred. On the other hand, the plaintiff had elected to go to trial without offering to amend and therefore ought to be left to the consequence—Dular Chand v. Balram Das (I. L. R., 1 All., 453).

The case of Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Mussumat Thakooranee Rutta Koer (11 M. I. A., 468, 486) was cited in support of the contention that the possibility of the bar of limitation afforded a reason for allowing an amendment. That case is, however, plainly distinguishable from the present and from Weldon v. Neal (19 Q. B. D., 394). In Mohummud Zahoor Ali Khan v. Mussumat Thakooranee Rutta Koer (11 M. I. A., 468, 486) the mistake made consisted not in the non-joinder of parties or the omission of any statement of claim, but in the joinder of parties who ought not to have been joined. In the result, the cause was remitted for trial on the issues touching the liability of the defendant Rutta Koer on the bond in respect of which [38] the suit had been brought. It is not necessary to consider what would be the consequence if the other partners were joined, as to which point several cases were cited—Kalidas Kevaldas v. Nathu Bhagvan (1. L. R., 7 Bom., 217), Narayana Chetti v. Sivaraman Chetti (Appeal No. 31 of 1887, unreported).

In our opinion the amendment which, as has been observed, was never asked for in this Court or in the Court below ought not now to be made.

If by the amendment the defendants were deprived of the defence of limitation, then according to the view taken in Weldon v. Neal (19 Q. B. D., 394) and followed in this Court in Mallikarjuna v. Pullayya (1. L. R., 16 Mad., 319) the amendment ought not to be allowed. On the other hand, if the amendment must, by the operation of section 22 of the Limitation Act, lead to the dismissal of the suit, then it would clearly be useless.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation.

[39] Seemle: that a compromise of a doubtful claim made by the adult members of a tarwad bona fide and in the interest of the tarwad is binding on the minor members.

* Appeal No. 21 of 1893.

APPEAL against the decree of C. Gopalan Nayar, Subordinate Judge of North Malabar, in Original Suit No. 28 of 1891.

Suit to recover possession of lands with mesne profits. The plaintiffs were two adult and twenty-one infant members of the tarwad to which belonged also defendants Nos. 1 to 8. The remaining defendants (other than persons impleaded as tenants in possession merely) were members of a second tarwad to which certain property had been assigned in compromise of various disputed claims by defendants Nos. 1 to 4, the senior members of the plaintiff's tarwad, under a karar (Exhibit BB), dated 30th May, 1878. The lands sought to be recovered in this action were those comprised in the karar above referred to and the prayer of the plaint was in the following terms:—"The karar, dated 18th Edvam 1053, entered into by the first to fourth defendants and the ninth, tenth and thirteenth to sixteenth defendants by which the properties described below were transferred to the ninth to twenty-seventh defendants' Muthalakam tarwad being invalid and not binding on the plaintiffs, it is, therefore, prayed that a decree may be passed directing the ninth to twenty-seventh defendants to surrender possession to us of the properties described in the schedules below with everything therein."

The Subordinate Judge held that the instrument was under the circumstances of the case binding upon the plaintiffs and also that the claim was barred by limitation. He accordingly dismissed the suit against which the plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Mr. Krishnan, Bhashyam Ayyangar and Seshachariar for Appellants.

Sankaran Nayar and Ryru Nambiar for Respondents.

Judgment.—Two questions arise for determination in this appeal, viz., (i) whether the suit is time-barred, and (ii) whether the karar (BB) is binding on the plaintiffs.

As to the first question, the suit was brought on the 6th October 1891 to set aside the karar, dated 30th May 1878, and to recover, for the benefit of the tarwad, possession with mesne profits of the properties, the subject of the karar.

The plaintiffs are members of the tarwad called Thayattum house and were minors at the date of BB, which purports to be a [40] compromise executed in favour of the ninth, tenth and thirteenth defendants by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, who are the mothers of the plaintiffs. Defendants 4 to 8 are also members of plaintiffs' tarwad; of them fourth defendant was a major at the date of BB and consented to it. Defendants 5 to 8, who were then minors, attained majority more than three years prior to the suit and never attempted to get the karar set aside. It is contended for the appellants that their right to bring this suit is in the nature of an individual right, and is saved by section 7 of the Limitation Act for three years after attainment of majority. As pointed out in Seshan v. Rajagopala (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 236) and Vigneswara v. Bapayya (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 436) section 7 cannot apply to a case in which there are also majors having a common right whose suit would be barred. The fact of the suit being brought by the minors alone does not affect the principle of the decision in the above cases. We think, therefore, the Subordinate Judge is right in holding the suit to be time-barred.

We also consider his decision to be right on the merits. The arguments of appellant's Counsel do not satisfy us that the Judge is in error in holding that a compromise of a doubtful claim made by the adult members of a tarwad bona fide and in the interest of the tarwad is binding on the minor members. There is evidence that the claim set up by ninth defendant to the karnavanship of the tarwad was not altogether devoid of foundation as shown by the Subordinate Judge in paras. 19 and 20 of his judgment.

The evidence discloses no trace of fraud or collusion between the parties to the compromise. Defendants 1, 2 and 3 are plaintiffs' own mothers and they were assisted by second plaintiff's father and also by a wakil of the family.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

[41] APPELLATE CRIMINAL.

The 30th July, 31st August and 7th September, 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE PARKER.

Agra Bank, Limited.....(Petitioner)

versus

Leishman.....(Respondent.)*

Criminal Procedure Code—Act X of 1882, ss. 145 and 146.

A Magistrate, in making an order under Criminal Procedure Code, sections 145 and 146, must inquire into the question which party was in actual possession at the time of the institution of the proceedings and not at the time when the order is made. In making this enquiry the Magistrate may presume that when a vendor sells part of a property he retains all that he does not sell.

PETITION under sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge (First-class Magistrate of Nilgiris, Ootacamund), passed in Miscellaneous Case No. 1 of 1894.

The facts of this case appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the following judgment of the High Court.

Mr. R. F. Grant for Petitioner.

Mr. Johnstone for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a petition by the Agra Bank to revise an order of the First-class Magistrate of Ootacamund under sections 145 and 146, Criminal Procedure Code, attaching two plots of land as to which he was not able to decide whether the Bank or the counter-petitioner, Mr. Leishman, was in possession. The admitted facts are that in 1885 the Bank sold a portion of the Bella Vista property in Ootacamund to the Murree Brewery Company. Shortly afterwards, in 1885 or 1886, some sort of survey was made, and the Brewery Company put down demarcation stones to show the limits of their purchase and planted gum trees to mark the boundary. Matters so continued till Mr. Leishman agreed to purchase the Brewery Company at the end of 1892. He was put in possession of the machinery and buildings, but in 1893, after survey of the boundaries by a Mr. De Lima, he [42] became of opinion that the boundaries as defined by the stones put down by the Brewery Company were not in accordance with their title-deed, and that he was entitled to more land than was included within those boundaries. In order to rectify these deficiencies Mr. Leishman took upon himself to remove the boundary stones and to peg out a line and fence to show what his boundaries really were, and it is his action in this respect that led to the breach of the peace which caused the Magistrate to intervene.

The Magistrate held (i) that he had to determine if either of the contending parties was in possession at the time of his writing his order, and (ii) that there was no presumption that the Bank had retained plots 1 and 2 after 1885. In consequence of his holding upon this second point, the Magistrate held he had not to determine whether Mr. Leishman had obtained de facto and physical possession and the language used by the Magistrate appears to intimate that had it not been for this opinion his decision might have been different.

We are of opinion that on both these points the Magistrate was in error. There is a consensus of authority that the possession to be inquired into is the possession at the time of the institution of the proceedings—Krishna Dhonz Dutt v. Trailokia Nath Biswas (I.L.R., 12 Cal., 539), Bechu Sheikh v. Deb Kumari Dasi (I.L.R., 21 Cal., 404), In the matter of the petition of Jai Lal (I.L.R., 13 All., 362) and In the matter of Huchapa and Shivagangava (I.L.R., 15 Bom., 152). It is obvious that the words in section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, "the fact of actual possession," must have reference to some fixed point of time. It cannot, as pointed out in the Bombay case, have reference to some date long anterior to the date of the proceedings being instituted, nor can it refer to a point of time subsequent to the commencement of the inquiry. The time to be taken is obviously the date of the Magistrate being satisfied there is ground for his intervention under section 145, in other words, the date of the institution of the proceedings.

Nor can we agree with the Magistrate in his opinion that there is no presumption that the Agra Bank retained possession of plots 1 and 2. There is a general presumption that when a vendor sells part of a property he retains all that he does not sell. In this case it is admitted that the two plots lie outside the boundary [43] stones put down by the Murree Brewery Company. This would of itself be sufficient to throw upon Mr. Leishman the onus of proving that he was in possession. There is, however, no room for any presumption at all about the matter, for in his evidence Mr. Leishman states :—"On November 4th, 1893, I took possession of disputed block No. 2. Of land on Murree Brewery side of fence in No. 1, I took possession on 4th November, 1893, and the portion of No. 1 on Bella Vista side in March 1894." There is thus a clear admission that up to these dates possession was with the Agra Bank, and the sole question for determination is whether there is evidence that the Bank has been dispossessed since those dates.

From this it appears that no effective possession was taken by Mr. Leishman in March as he claims, and the Bank still remained in possession up to May notwithstanding the trespass.

On these grounds we must set aside the order of the Magistrate attaching plots 1 and 2, declare that the Agra Bank is entitled to retain possession till evicted in due course of law, and forbid all disturbance till such eviction.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th and 16th July, 1894.

PRESENT :

Namasivayam Pillai.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Nellayappa Pillai and others (Defendants Nos. 1 to 3) Respondents.*

Specific Relief Act—Act I of 1877, s. 27—Trusts Act—Act II of 1882, s. 91—Purchaser with notice of prior contract to sell.

In a suit for land it appeared that the plaintiff had obtained a registered sale-deed comprising the property in question from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who had already (to the plaintiff's knowledge) contracted to sell it to another and that the plaintiff had paid no consideration for the sale-deed, which in fact represented a collusive transaction entered into to defeat the prior contract :

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

[44] SECOND APPEAL against the decree of S. Gopalachari, Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 101 of 1891, reversing the decree of H. Kistna Rau, District Munsif of Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 644 of 1888.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of a house with mesne profits from the date of registered sale-deed, comprising the house in question, executed to him by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on 29th November, 1888. Defendant No. 3 had previously, viz., on 11th October, 1888, agreed with the other defendants for the purchase of the house. The District Munsif passed a decree in favour of plaintiff, which was reversed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge, whose findings are stated with sufficient fulness for the purposes of this report in the judgment of the High Court.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Respondent No. 3.

Judgment:—This was a suit brought by appellant as purchaser to recover possession of a house which was alleged to have been sold to him by first and second defendants for Rs. 250 on the 23rd November, 1888. Exhibit A is the sale-deed sued upon, and it was registered on the 7th December 1888. The appellant's case was that on the 6th October, 1888, first and second defendants agreed to sell their house to him for Rs. 250, and received Rs. 12 in advance, that they received afterwards the balance of Rs. 238 and executed and registered the sale-deed A. The third defendant or respondent who resisted the claim contended that first and second defendants contracted to sell the house to him for Rs. 300 on the 11th October, and, receiving Rs. 50 in advance, placed the house in his possession, and that the balance was paid by him on the 11th November, 1888. He urged further that the contract set up by the appellant as made on 6th October was not true, that document D was spurious, and that first and second defendants colluded with the appellant and refused to execute a sale-deed to himself. The Court of First Instance decreed the claim, but on appeal the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit and directed appellant to pay third defendant's costs.

* Second Appeal No. 1669 of 1893.

The lower Appellate Court found that no contract was made with the plaintiff on the 6th October 1888, and that there was no payment of Rs. 12 or of Rs. 238 as alleged by him. It has also been found that first and second defendants agreed on the 11th October to sell the house to third defendant and placed him in [43] possession on receipt of Rs. 50 in advance and subsequently received the balance of the purchase-money. The Subordinate Judge has held further that the plaintiff got the sale-deed A with the knowledge of the prior contract with the third defendant, and that he was therefore not a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. It is argued on second appeal that upon the facts found by the lower Appellate Court, appellant is entitled to a decree. But we are unable to accede to this suggestion. From the fact of appellant having had at the date of his sale-deed A knowledge of the prior contract of sale with the third defendant, it is clear that under section 27 of the Specific Relief Act, his claim, as based on the registered sale-deed, cannot prevail against the third defendant's right to insist on the specific performance of the prior contract, though such right rests merely on an agreement to sell. It is obvious from section 91 of the Indian Trusts Act that, if appellant acquired any property in the house, he must be taken to have acquired it for the benefit of the third defendant to the extent necessary to give effect to his right to enforce specific performance. It is then said that such right is now barred by limitation and that the property, acquired under Exhibit A, though subject to third defendant's right to enforce specific performance at the date of its acquirement, has now become absolute. To this objection, we are not prepared to attach any weight. It is conceded that the right to insist on specific performance vesting by the prior contract in the third defendant was actionable both at the time when the sale-deed A was executed and when the third defendant's written statement was filed. A legal right, which is made the subject of a suit or a plea if actionable when the suit was commenced or the plea was set up, does not cease to be adjudicable by reason of the prescribed period of limitation having since elapsed at the date of decree. For instance, a bond which is not barred at the date of suit or a plea of set off which is not invalid from lapse of time when it is set up, cannot be held to be barred though, at the date of decree, the period of limitation may have expired.

Another fact found by the Subordinate Judge is that for the sale-deed A no value was paid, and that the intention with which it was collusively given and accepted was merely to thwart the third defendant on this point. The Subordinate Judge observes as follows :—"The truth is the house in dispute is inconveniently situated so far as the plaintiff is concerned, and he wants to buy [46] it, but is not willing to pay the price demanded, and when a neighbour arranged to have it, he, with a view to thwart him, induces defendants 1 and 2 to execute a registered sale-deed to himself." In substance the finding is that Exhibit A was contrived as a means of defrauding the third defendant and has the semblance of a sale or legal transaction. The Subordinate Judge has, it must be remembered, discredited appellant's evidence that he paid value for the sale-deed and found collusion between appellant on the one part and first and second defendants on the other. No property passes or is presumably intended to pass when there is in substance no legal transaction, but a mere semblance of it collusively contrived as an instrument of fraud. This second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Towns Nuisances Act (Madras)—Act III of 1869, s. 3—Common gaming house—Vacant unenclosed site.

The accused were found gaming on a vacant site, the property of the seventh accused. The seventh accused was convicted under Towns Nuisances Act (Madras), ss. 6 and 7, and the other accused under s. 7.

Held, that the site in question was not a common gaming house, and that the convictions were accordingly wrong.

CASE referred for the orders of the High Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by H. T. Ross, Sessions Judge of Godavari.

The case was stated as follows : —

" The accused were convicted by the Court of First Instance under section 3, clause (10) of Act III of 1889, for being found gaming in a vacant site belonging to the seventh accused. The Appellate Court, finding that such private site was not a public [47] street, road, thoroughfare or place of public resort, and that section 3 of the Act could, therefore, not be applied to the case, altered the conviction to one under sections 6 and 7 of the Act as regards the seventh accused, the owner of the site, and to one under section 7 as regards the first accused, these being the only two who appealed out of the nine persons convicted by the Court of First Instance.

" These convictions under sections 6 and 7 are, in my opinion, bad in law. The essential point in both sections is that the place used should be a 'common gaming house.' This is not defined in Act III of 1889; but even taking the definition in Act III of 1888, this vacant site of the seventh accused cannot, on the evidence, be brought within the definition. There is no evidence that instruments of gaming are kept or used there for the profit of the owner, and the Appellate Court had no right to assume that such must be the case. It is in fact, simply a case, so far as the evidence goes, of a man and his friends playing a game of chance in his private place, just as one might play loo in one's own house, and it is ridiculous to call the place a 'common gaming house' in the circumstances."

Parties were not represented.

Judgment.—The finding is that the "gaming" took place in a vacant site belonging to the seventh accused adjoining a public street.

The Deputy Magistrate held that this did not constitute an offence punishable under clause 10 of section 3 of Act No. III of 1889 (Madras), which makes punishable gambling or cock-fighting in any "public street, road, thoroughfare or place of public resort." In thus holding the Deputy Magistrate is no doubt right. But he proceeded to find the first and seventh accused (the only appellants in the case), respectively, guilty of offences punishable under sections 7 and 6 of the Act, the latter of which renders liable to punishment any person who "opens, keeps or uses or permits to be used any common gaming house," while the former makes punishable any person "found gaming or present for the purpose of gaming in a common gaming house." The Deputy Magistrate refers to the definition of "common gaming house" as contained in Madras Act III of 1888, and, as it contains the word "place" holds it wide enough to include any "vacant site." It is clear that the word "place" in the definition in question must be read with [48] the words immediately preceding, namely, "enclosure, room or place." It clearly means some "enclosed" place. Even assuming, therefore, that the definition in Act III of 1888 can be used for the purposes of Act III of 1889, the site in question cannot be held to be a common gaming house."

All the convictions in both the Courts are set aside and the fines levied will be refunded.

CASE referred for the orders of the High Court under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by J. Thomson, District Magistrate of Chingleput, in Reference No. 239 of 1894.

The case was stated as follows :—

“One Para Paliathan stood surety for one Munuswami Gramani charged with an offence under section 55 of the Abkari Act (I of 1886) and executed a bail bond before the Police Station-house Officer in the sum of Rs. 25 for the appearance of the accused before the Inspector of Salt and Abkari Revenue, Conjeeveram Circle, whenever required. A summons issued by the Abkari Inspector for appearance on the 11th July 1893 was duly served on the accused, but was disobeyed. Three warrants were then issued for his arrest, but were returned unexecuted, the man having [49] absconded. The Inspector of Salt and Abkari Revenue thereupon sent the bail bond to the Stationary Sub-Magistrate, Tiruvallur, and requested him to proceed against the surety for the recovery of the penalty evidently under section 43 of the Abkari Act. The Sub-Magistrate took a statement from the surety, in which he explained that he was present when the summons was served on the accused and that his responsibility ceased with that. The papers were then recorded by the Sub-Magistrate, and when reminded by the Abkari Inspector, he informed him that he accepted the explanation of the surety and excused him.

Leaving aside the question whether the Magistrate had rightly exercised his discretion in accepting such an explanation and in his final disposal of the matter by simply recording the papers and passing no distinct order, the point on which orders are now solicited by me is whether the Sub-Magistrate has any discretion to remit or reduce the penalty mentioned in the bail bond. Section 43 of Act I of 1886 leaves it to the discretion of the Abkari Inspector to decide whether proceedings should be had to compel payment of the penalty, and when he so decides and applies to the Magistrate having jurisdiction for enforcing it, the question arises whether the latter has any option in the matter, or must simply recover the penalty in the manner provided by the Code of Criminal Procedure for similar default, i.e., by the issue of a distress warrant for the attachment and sale of the moveable property of the person, etc. (vide section 514, Criminal Procedure Code).

That is the literal view. The Sub-Magistrate's reasons for holding a different one are—

- (1) bail bonds being often taken by Station-house Officers under section 40 (2) of the Abkari Act, the amounts as fixed by them would become final, the Abkari Inspector having no power to reduce them if they are excessive ;
- (2) there could be no appeal to the District Magistrate under section 515, Criminal Procedure Code, to reduce the amount or to set aside the order of a Sub-Magistrate ordering its payment.

Possibly, if an Abkari Inspector can decide whether a penalty is to be enforced or not, he has power also to reduce the amount and ask for only a portion being recovered. Under section 515, Criminal Procedure Code, all belonging to such person without such limits, when endorsed by the District Magistrate within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such property is found.

If such penalty be not paid and cannot be recovered by such attachment and sale, the person so bound shall be liable, by order of the Court which issued the warrant, to imprisonment in the civil jail for a term which may extend to six months.

The Court may at its discretion remit any portion of the penalty mentioned and enforce payment in part only.]

orders passed by the Sub-Magistrate [50] under section 514 are appealable to the District Magistrate, and the latter, I infer, could alter the amount levied if he thought that necessary."

The Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor (Mr. Powell) for the Crown.

Judgment.—Section 43, Madras Act I of 1886, provides that when, by reason of default of appearance of a person bailed to appear before an Abkari Inspector, such officer is of opinion that proceedings should be had to compel payment of the penalty mentioned in the bond, he shall forward the bond to the Magistrate having jurisdiction to try the offence of which the person bailed was accused, and the Magistrate shall proceed to compel payment of the penalty in the manner provided by the Criminal Procedure Code for the recovery of penalties in the like cases of default of appearance by a person bailed to appear before his own Court.

The procedure which the Magistrate has to follow is laid down in section 514, Criminal Procedure Code. The question is whether the language of section 43 of the Madras Abkari Act makes the Magistrate a mere executing officer and takes away from him the discretion which he would be at liberty to exercise if the defaulter had failed to appear before his own Court. If the Magistrate is merely an executing officer, the provisions of section 514, Criminal Procedure Code, enabling him to call upon the defaulter to show cause why the penalty should not be enforced would become inapplicable, and the appeal to the District Magistrate given by section 515, Criminal Procedure Code, would also be taken away, since there can be no ground for appeal or revision if the inferior Magistrate could not exercise any discretion, but was bound by law to pass one order only.

The Legislature has not provided for any revision of the orders of the Abkari Inspector, who is not bound even to call upon the defaulter to show cause why the penalty should not be enforced. If, therefore, the Magistrate has no such power, the amounts fixed by the Station-house officer under section 40, clause 2 of the Abkari Act would become final, since no power is given to the Abkari Inspector to reduce the penalty.

We are of opinion that the Legislature could not have intended such a result, and that the intention was to make all the provisions of section 514, Criminal Procedure Code, applicable to a Magistrate enforcing a penalty on the application of an Abkari Inspector[51] under Section 43, Madras Act I of 1886. From the fact that the Inspector is directed to send the bond to the Magistrate "having jurisdiction to try" the offence of which the person bailed is accused, the intention of the Legislature would appear to have been that the Magistrate should proceed in the same manner and with the same powers as if the default had been made by a person bailed to appear before his own Court. This inference is strengthened by the fact that where the Legislature intended as in section 516, Criminal Procedure Code, that the Magistrate should have no discretion, but should merely execute the orders of superior authority, the direction to levy the amount may be addressed to "any" Magistrate.

Nor can we suppose that the Legislature intended to make the orders of the Station-house officers and the Abkari Inspectors final, and to take away by implication the liberty to appeal under section 515, Criminal Procedure Code.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the view taken by the Second-class Magistrate as to his legal powers was correct.

Criminal Procedure Code—Act X of 1882, s. 145—Parties bound by order.

Orders passed under Criminal Procedure Code, section 145, are binding only on the actual parties to the cases in which they are made.

CASE referred for the orders of the High Court under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, by G. Stokes, District Magistrate of Salem.

The case was stated as follows:—

"The facts are shortly that a dispute existed in regard to a piece of land in the Singapore village, and the Head Assistant [52] Magistrate passed an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, declaring that one Krishnayyar was entitled to retain possession of the land till ousted in due course of law. In this order but two persons are mentioned—Nanjunda Sastri and Krishnayyar. Subsequent to the date of this order, the accused in the present case, the Village Munsif and Karnam of the village, entered on and disturbed Krishnayyar's possession and he charged them with mischief. They have been acquitted by the Second-class Magistrate on the ground that, as they were no parties to the proceedings in which the Head Assistant Magistrate's order was passed, they were not bound by these proceedings, and he finds that no criminal intent is proved against them.

"I find, on examining the proceedings in which the Head Assistant Magistrate's order was passed, that the Village Munsif and Karnam were witnesses in these proceedings, and were examined in them by the Police, and distinctly disputed then the complainant's right to the land then in dispute. In fact, the Head Assistant Magistrate finds that the Village Munsif was at the bottom of the whole dispute in that case.

"On the record, therefore, it seems to me that the finding of the Sub-Magistrate is opposed to fact, and that the accused were parties to these proceedings so as to be bound by the order. I am aware that it has been ruled, see in re Gopal Burnawar (3 B. L. R., App. Cr., 13), also in re Nobo Kishore Chackerbutty (7 C. L. R., 291), that in a dispute between A and B and his tenants, where A was by an order declared to be in possession, subsequently tenants of B could not be criminally punished for disobeying this order, but I think this a most mischievous and unnecessary ruling, and one which renders the maintenance of the peace needlessly more difficult. The Magistrate may forbid all disturbance of such possession until the party is evicted in due course of law. The order under section 145 seems much in the same category as an order addressed to the public under section 144, and to be justified by exactly the same reasons. The ruling is a premium on what has been done in this case, viz., to put forward only one disputant, and then another and so on, wasting the Magistrate's time to no purpose and perhaps keeping open a dangerous dispute.

"The Magistrate's proceedings seem further to be defective, [53] for there is nothing on the record to show that he has taken any steps to ascertain whether the land referred to in the Head Assistant Magistrate's order is the same as that to which mischief has been caused. The complainant asserts this; but the accused deny it."

Parties were not represented.

Judgment.—I concur in the opinion expressed in re Gopal Burnawar (3 B. L. R., App. Cr., 13) that an order passed under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is binding only on the actual parties to the case in which it was passed.

The mere fact of a person being examined as a witness in such a case does not make him a "party" bound by the order.

The inconvenience pointed out by the District Magistrate can be avoided by care being taken to include as parties to proceedings under section 145 all persons interested in, or claiming a right to, the property in dispute. Cf. Ram Chandra Das v. Monohur Roy (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 29).

This case is not one calling for interference under section 438 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 31st August and 20th September, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Gurulingaswami.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Ramalakshamma and another.....(Defendants Nos. 1 and 2) Respondents.*

Hindu law—An only son given in adoption by his widowed mother—

Estoppel—Specific Relief Act—Act I of 1877, s. 42—Suit for declaration by a remote reversioner—Parties.

The plaintiff, claiming a remote reversionary interest in the estates of a deceased Hindu, sued for a declaration of the invalidity of an adoption made by the widow. It appeared that the nearer reversioners (who were in the first instance joined as defendants in the suit) refused to call in question the validity of the adoption and that the plaintiff himself had concurred in it at the time when it took place. It appeared further that the alleged adopted son had been given in adoption by his widowed mother, and also that he was an only son :

* Appeal No. 17 of 1894.

[54] Held, (1) that the plaintiff was entitled to bring the suit without proof of fraud on the part of the nearer reversioners ;

(2) that the nearer reversioners were rightly impleaded in the suit ;

(3) that the plaintiff was not estopped from impugning the adoption by reason of his conduct at the time when it took place ;

(4) that the adoption was not invalid under Hindu law.

Semle : A Hindu widow can give her son in adoption without special authority from her husband.

APPEAL against the decree of H. T. Ross, District Judge of Godavari, in Original Suit No. 19 of 1892.

The plaintiff sued for a declaration of the invalidity of the adoption of defendant No. 2 by defendant No. 1, who was the widow of the last male owner of certain estates in which the plaintiff claimed a reversionary interest. The reversioners, less remote than the plaintiff, were in the first instance joined as defendants, but the District Judge held that they were unnecessary parties and removed their names from the record. The plaintiff averred that these persons had either colluded with the first defendant in making the adoption or had otherwise precluded themselves from impugning its legality or had refused to do so. It appeared that the plaintiff, like the other reversioners, had himself concurred in the adoption, but it was alleged that he had done so in ignorance of the following circumstances, viz., (1) that the consent of the sapindas to the adoption had not been given in good faith, (2) that the second defendant was an only son and (3) that he had been given in adoption by his mother who had not been expressly authorized to do so by her husband, deceased. The District Judge held that the suit was not maintainable by the plaintiff in the absence of proof of fraud on the part of the nearer reversioners. He further held on the merits that the adoption was valid. An issue raised by the defendants as to whether the plaintiff was estopped from maintaining the suit by his concurrence in the adoption was not determined by the District Judge who, upon the foregoing findings, passed a decree dismissing the suit. The plaintiff preferred this appeal.*

Mr. J. G. Smith for Appellant. The suit by the plaintiff is maintainable as the nearer reversioners refused, colluded or concluded themselves from suing. Rani Anand Kunwar v. The Court [55] of Wards (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 764). The plaintiff is not estopped as his consent, if any, was given in ignorance of the law. Vishnu v. Krishnan (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 3), Gopalayyan v. Raghupatnayyan (7 M.H.C. R., 250). As to the validity of an adoption of an only son, the High Courts are at variance, whereas the Privy Council have treated such an adoption as undoubtedly invalid—obiter dictum in Nilmadhub Doss v. Bishumber Doss (13 M. I. A., 85, 100). As to the Indian decisions such an adoption was held to be invalid in Waman Raghupati Bova v. Krishnaji Kashiraj Bova (I. L. R., 14 Bom., 249), Raja Upendra Lai Roy v. Srimati Rani Prasannamayee (1 B. L. R., A. C., 221), Manick Chunder Dutt v. Bhuggobutty Dossee (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 443), Nilmadhub Doss v. Bishumber Doss (13 M. I. A., 85, 100). In Allahabad the latest Full Bench decision is in favour of such an adoption, Beni Prasad v. Hardai Bibi (I. L. R., 14 All., 67), following Hanuman Tiwari v. Chirai (I. L. R., 2 All., 164), which cases are in conflict with another Full Bench decision in Tulshu Rani v. Behari Lal (I. L. R., 12 All., 328), but the expression of opinion in the latter case appears to be obiter as the case went off on another point. In Madras such an adoption was held valid in Chinna Goundan v. Kumara Goundan (1 M. H. C. R., 54) and in Narayanasami v. Kuppusami (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 42). In Sri Ammi Devi v. Sri Vikrama Devu (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 490), the question was treated as having been settled by the Privy Council, but the latter tribunal dissented from any such view.

In the Rajah of Tanjore's case the Government of India treated such an adoption as valid, Mayne, § 133. The doctrine of factum valet does not apply in such a case where there is an imperative interdiction. Broom's Legal Maxims, page 175, Gopal Narhar Safray v. Hanmant Ganesh Safray (I. L. R., 3 Bom., 273), Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (I. L. R., 9 All., 253).

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Banson) abandoned the contention that the suit was not maintainable by reason of the remoteness of the plaintiff's interest, and argued that the adoption was not contrary to Hindu law, at any rate according to the view adopted in this Presidency, and even if it were that factum valet [applied]. He pointed out that no suggestion had been made in the lower Courts as to the plaintiff having joined in the adoption any ignorance of law and that this had not been proved.

[56] Muttusami Ayyar, J.—There are two proprietary estates called Kapi-leswarapuram and Kesanakuru in the district of Godavari. Their last male owner was one Buchi Sarvarayudu. He died without male issue, leaving him surviving a widow named Rama Lakshammamma. On the 10th November 1888 she adopted the second defendant, Pattabhiramayya, and this suit was brought to have it declared that his adoption is invalid and inoperative.

It is not alleged in the plaint that Buchi Sarvarayudu authorized Rama Lakshammamma to adopt, and it is the case of both parties that the adoption was made under the sanction or with the consent of his sapindas or gnatis. The plaint alleged that their consent was given under corrupt inducement. It is an undisputed fact that the second defendant was the only son of his father, and he was given in adoption by his mother after the death of his father. On this point the plaintiff's case was that a Hindu widow in Southern India is incompetent to give as well as take a son in adoption, without express authority from her husband. It was contended for the defence that no such authority was needed to validate the gift in adoption, and that second defendant's father had also given such authority prior to his death. The adoption was impeached by the plaintiff on three grounds:—

- (i) the sanction or the consent of sapindas was not given bond fide ;
- (ii) the adopted was an only son ; and
- (iii) a widow was incompetent to give away her only son save under express authority from her husband.

The plaint admits that plaintiff is one of the sapindas of Sarvarayudu who consented to, or concurred in, the adoption, and the pedigree filed in the case shows that defendants Nos. 3, 5 and 7, whose names were struck out by the Judge, on the ground that they were not necessary parties to the suit are nearer in sapinda relationship than plaintiff.

Two preliminary objections were taken to the suit, viz.:—

- (i) that as a remote reversioner the plaintiff could not maintain the suit, and
- (ii) that by his concurrence in the adoption when it was made, he was estopped from impeaching its validity.

These form the subject of the first and second issues, and the averments in regard to the invalidity of the adoption form the subject of the third issue.

[57] There is a note made by the Judge during the examination of the plaintiff as his own tenth witness that his Vakil gave up his contention in reference to the first issue. It is argued by his Counsel on appeal that there was misapprehension on the part of the Judge, and that what was really abandoned was, not the first issue but the first part of the third issue. What contention the plaintiff's Vakil intended to give up in the Court below is also a subsidiary question which has to be dealt with in appeal.

I shall first deal with this question, next with the two preliminary questions, and lastly with the three grounds on which the adoption is assailed by the appellant. As regards the contention which appellant's Vakil gave up in the Court below, there is reason to think that appellant's Counsel is probably right. The Judge's note is in these terms :—"At this point plaintiff's pleader, Mr. Ward, intimates that he will confine plaintiff's case to the question of law that the adoption is invalid by reason of the second defendant being an only son. In reply to this point Mr. Ward gives up the rest of the plaintiff's case." If Mr. Ward gave up his contention as to the first issue it would be inconsistent on his part to reserve his right to question the validity of the adoption, for in that case, he would have no locus standi at all. On the other hand, the suggestion of appellant's Counsel is reasonable because, as will presently appear, there was not even the shadow of a reason to give up the plaintiff's right to maintain the suit, whilst the evidence as to sapindas having sanctioned the adoption otherwise than bond fide was so contradictory or discrepant as to raise a presumption that Mr. Ward might not have desired to press it on the Court.

Passing on to the first issue, there can be no doubt that it must be decided in appellant's favour. The general rule is, no doubt, that a suit of this nature should be brought by the presumptive reversionary heir; but it is a recognized exception to that rule that a more distant reversioner can maintain the suit if he can show that those reversioners who are nearer to the deceased in the line of succession are either in collusion with the widow, or have precluded themselves from interfering, or refused without sufficient cause to institute proceedings, or concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful. The law is enunciated to that effect by the Privy Council in Rani Anund Koor v. The Court of Wards (L. R., 8 I. A., 14, S.C., I. L. R., 6 Cal., 764). There is [59] proof in the case before us that defendants Nos. 3 and 5 who are nearer than plaintiff sanctioned or concurred in the adoption and the seventh defendant who is also a reversioner withdrew the suit he had instituted to set aside this adoption. In passing, I may also observe that the Judge is in error in striking out the names of nearer reversioners. They are legitimate parties to the suit and their Lordships of the Privy Council observe to that effect in the case cited above.

As regards the second preliminary question the decision must be in plaintiff's favour. No estoppel can arise from ignorance of law which both parties must be presumed to know. The adoption took place in 1888, whilst this suit was brought in 1892. There are not in this case equitable considerations consequent on the growth of a new family or rights of property under an invalid adoption concurred in for a considerable interval of time. It must also be remembered that according to true Hindu theory, adoption is both a religious and a secular act, and estoppel cannot take the place of a religious act on which rests the conventional Hindu belief that a valid adoption generates filial relation and religious competency to make funeral and annual offerings with efficacy.

Passing on to the third issue, appellant's Counsel admits that the contention to which the first part of the third issue relates was given up by appellant's pleader and it is unnecessary for me to discuss the evidence regarding it.

Another contention with reference to the third issue is that a woman is not competent to give away an only son in adoption without express authority from her husband. The Judge observes that in fact the second defendant's mother who gave him in adoption had her husband's authority. There is the plaintiff's own admission to that effect in Exhibits V and VII and there is also the evidence of the second defendant's maternal uncle. Again, the question whether such authority is necessary to validate the gift in adoption in Southern India arose in Narayanasami v. Kuppusami (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 43). It was held in that case that a widow's power to give a son in adoption is co-extensive with that of her husband and that no special authority is needed from him. The Smritis and commentaries which bear on the subject are cited in that decision and it is [59] shown that the conclusion arrived at by the author of Datta Chandrika is that in the absence of express prohibition from the husband, the widow has the same power to give that he has.

This brings under our consideration the substantial question in this suit, viz., whether an only son can be given in adoption.

There are several Smritis which forbid such adoption. They are cited in the leading case on the subject, viz., Chinna Gaundan v. Kumara Gaundan (1 M. H. C. R., 54). Several of them state the reason of the prohibition is the desire to prevent the extinction of the natural family or the failure of funeral offerings to the deceased members of that family. The texts are also referred to in Narayanasami v. Kuppusami (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 43) where the question arose but was not pressed on the Court. In 1862, the question was first considered by the High Court in Chinna Gaundan v. Kumara Gaundan (1 M. H. C. R., 54). It was decided in that case that if an only son were adopted, the adoption would be valid; the ground of decision being that the Smritis which forbid it were only directory and not imperative, and that though the adoption was a sinful act, it was not invalid if it took place. In that case prior decisions reaching back to the early part of this century are relied on in support of the decision. The opinions of Sir Thomas Strange and Jagannatha are also mentioned. I may refer to the opinion of Viswanath Narayana Mandlik on the subject. It appears further from Narayanasami v. Kuppusami (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 43), that the decision in 1862 was followed in Vikrama Devu v. Neelamani Patta Mahadevi (Appeal No. 70 of 1882, unreported, but see note at end of this report). In 1886, the appellant's pleader did not press the point that such adoption was invalid in view of the course of decisions in the Presidency. No case is cited in which such adoption was held in Southern India to be illegal. In this state of authorities, I do not think that the question is res integra and I am of opinion that the Judge was right in following the course of decisions in this Presidency for the reasons stated by him. The result is I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Shephard, J.—This is an appeal against the decree of the District Judge dismissing the suit brought by the plaintiff for a declaration of the invalidity of the adoption of the defendant Pattabhiramayya by the defendant Ramalakshamma, who is the childless widow of the last holder of certain estates in which the plaintiff claims a reversionary interest. Although the judgment [60] against the plaintiff is professedly based on the Judge's opinion with regard to the question raised by the third issue, he expresses an opinion adverse to the plaintiff on the first issue, and arguments were addressed to us with regard to that issue as well as the second. The opinion expressed by the Judge is that the plaintiff not being the nearest reversioner cannot maintain the suit without showing collusion on the part of the intermediate reversioners. If it is meant that refusal on the part of those persons to question the adoption is not sufficient to justify the plaintiff in suing, I think that the Judge is wrong, for it is clear that under those circumstances and without proof of fraud a reversioner in the plaintiff's position may maintain a suit to protect his reversionary rights. The plaintiff makes the necessary allegations and there is evidence to support them. The Judge says that the plaintiff's pleader abandoned this part of the case—but I cannot help thinking he must have misunderstood the pleader. I can understand that the pleader resolved to confine his attack on the adoption to the one objection founded on the fact that the subject of the adoption was his father's only son, and that is recorded in the Judge's note. But as long as he persisted in that point he cannot reasonably be supposed to have given up all contest on the collateral question raised by the first issue.

On the second issue raising the question of estoppel, I think it is sufficient to say that in my opinion no estoppel arises as against the plaintiff by reason of the mere fact that he concurred in an adoption which was supposed by all parties concerned to be legal and valid.

The substantial question in the appeal is whether the adoption of an only son is valid according to Hindu Law.

As long ago as 1862 this question was held by this Court to be concluded by authority—Chinna Gaundan v. Kumara Gaundan (1 M. H. C. R., 54). Since then the question has been raised again three times and received the same answer, Sri Ammi Devi v. Sri Vikrama Devu (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 486, 489) and Narayanasami v. Kuppusami (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 43). The authority referred to includes the opinion of Sir Thomas Strange and Colebrooke and decisions in 1801 and 1817. It is not shown that the current of authority is broken by any single decision in this Presidency to the contrary.

[61] It is pointed out to us that some doubt seems to have been entertained by the learned Judges who took part in the decision of 1884. The circumstance may perhaps be accounted for by the fact that the Chief Justice had previously, when a member of the Allahabad Court, expressed an opinion adverse to that entertained by this Court. [See Hanuman Tiwari v. Chirai (I. L. R., 2 All., 164, 169)]. The fact remains that the current of authority is for this Presidency unbroken. The present question is by no means the only question of Hindu law on which the High Courts have maintained different views. On questions of this class it appears to me pre-eminently desirable not to disturb well settled rules of law. I would, therefore, decline to treat the question as an open one and would dismiss the appeal with costs. The point taken with regard to the pleader's fee was dealt with at the hearing. I would decline to interfere with the Judge's discretion.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 4th and 9th April, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Sangu Ayyar.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Cumarasami Mudaliar and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Transfer of Property Act—Act IV of 1882, s. 54—Execution of sale-deed without consideration—Subsequent transfer for value—Priorities.

In a suit for land, it appeared that in 1887, A had executed in favour of B a registered conveyance of the land in question, which purported to be a sale-deed, but that no consideration was in fact paid; and that A who had retained possession sold and delivered it to C and D and that they then discharged a mortgage which was to have been paid off by B. In the interval between the two transactions above referred to, the plaintiff had purchased the land from B and he now alleged [62] that the persons in possession had executed a rent agreement, in fact found to be a forgery, under the terms of which he claimed to eject them.

Held, that the plaintiff's claim founded on the transaction of 1887 did not prevail against C and D.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of O. Chandu Menon, Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 198 of 1892, affirming the decree of C. Subramania Ayyar, District Munsif of Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 313 of 1891.

Suit to recover land with mesne profits. The plaintiff claimed title under a registered sale-deed (Exhibit D) for Rs. 300, dated 5th November 1888 and executed in his favour by defendant No. 1, who had purchased the land under a registered sale-deed in 1887 (Exhibit A) from two persons named Sundara Nadan and Gurusami Nadan. It was further alleged the defendants Nos. 2, 4, and 6, who in 1888 were in possession as tenants of defendant No. 1 under a lease (Exhibit B) had then been directed by him to attorn to the plaintiff and had in fact done so.

Defendants Nos. 3 and 5, who alone contested the suit, claimed title under a registered sale-deed executed in their favour by Gurusami Nadan in January 1890.

It appeared that a mortgage debt due by Sundara and Gurunada Nadan was to have been paid off by defendant No. 1 in 1887, but was in fact subsisting till 1890 when it was discharged by defendants Nos. 3 and 5.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit, finding that the alleged sale to defendant No. 1 was supported by no consideration, and that Exhibit B, which was a document purporting to be signed by the alleged tenants, was a forgery. His decree was affirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge.

* Second Appeal No. 1547 of 164, 1893.

The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Sundara Ayyar for Appellant.

Krishnasami Ayyar for Respondents Nos. 3 and 5.

Judgment.—It is contended that document A being registered the property passed to the first defendant, though it is found that no consideration was paid as specified in A, and that, consequently, the subsequent sale to defendants Nos. 3 and 5 is invalid on the ground that it was made by a person having no title to convey. In support of this contention reliance is placed on Ram [63] Lakhan Rai v. Bandan Rai (I.L.R., 2 All., 711), Bishenmun Singh v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India (I.L.R., 11 Cal., 244), Umedmal Motiram v. Davu Bin Dhondiba (I.L.R., 2 Bom., 547) and also on section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The present case is, however, distinguishable from the above. Here the first purchaser abstained from paying the purchase-money from 1887 to 1890, and allowed his vendor to retain possession, and then to sell the property to defendants 3 and 5, who, in consequence, paid off the mortgage that was to be discharged by the original purchaser.

The plaintiff purchased the same property from the first defendant in 1888, and lay by till 1890, and then, forging the lease B, brought this suit for possession of the property without offering to pay the consideration or accounting for it.

We are unable to say that his conduct discloses an intention to insist upon the original sale as a valid transaction.

After thus lying by for several years, we do not think he should be permitted in equity to turn round on others who have paid valuable consideration and succeed with the aid of a forged document. To do so would be to permit the Registration Act to be turned into an instrument of fraud.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 21st October 1892 and 6th February, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Volkart Brothers.....Plaintiffs

versus

Rutnavelu ChettiDefendant*

Contract Act—Act IX of 1872, s. 39—Shipment at monthly intervals.

The defendant agreed to purchase from the plaintiffs 120 cases of condensed milk which were to be shipped in London and delivered in Madras. The agreement stipulated for shipment in six lots of twenty cases each at monthly intervals, but it contained a proviso, whereby the plaintiffs were excused from monthly shipments if space in ships sailing for Madras were not available. The second shipment was [64] not made within one month from the date of the first shipment, thereupon the defendant repudiated the contract :

Held, (1) that the interval of time contemplated in the contract was one month more or less, regard being had to the time which it might be reasonable to allow to the plaintiffs for finding a steamer available for the required shipment ;

(2) that the plaintiffs having failed to make the second shipment by a steamer of which they might have availed themselves, the defendant was justified in rescinding the contract.

CASE stated by P. D. Shaw, Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Madras, under Act XV of 1882, s. 69.

The case was stated as follows :—

Suit for recovery of Rs. 583-9-1, the loss sustained by reason of the failure of defendant to pay for, and take delivery of, one hundred cases condensed Swiss milk ordered by the defendant from plaintiffs at Madras on 14th May 1890, and which were re-sold on defendant's account on or about 5th and 9th February 1891.

The order or contract on which plaintiffs sue is Exhibit A, and was for one hundred and twenty cases each four dozens—1 lb. round tins condensed milk, Milk Maid brand, at 15 per case, packing as usual with iron hoops.

'Shipment in six lots of twenty cases each at monthly intervals. First shipment within 3-4 weeks from receipt of telegram or sooner if possible.
Stock Mark ^{Cts.}
6 C & R.'

Defendant admitted the contract, but pleaded that as to one hundred cases it was rescinded by him on 18th August 1890, that the milk imported by plaintiffs was not according to contract, and that even if liable for the milk he was not chargeable with the godown rent, interest and charges claimed.

It is well to state at once that defendant offered no evidence of the quality of the milk and practically abandoned this plea. The defendant's case is that the milk was not shipped in due course according to the terms of the contract and that, in consequence, he rescinded, on 18th August 1890, the portion of the contract which remained to be carried out.

The contention for plaintiffs is that the expression in Exhibit A, 'shipment in six lots of twenty cases each at monthly intervals,' means shipment month by month, that is to say, if, as in this case, the first shipment was made in June and others in the following consecutive five months, the condition has been fulfilled, and I find, as a fact, that, with the exception of the month of [65] September, in which two shipments were made, the other shipments were so made.

The defendant's contention is that the expression 'monthly intervals' means that the shipments should be made at intervals of a month from each other. In Exhibit A there is also a proviso, by which the plaintiffs are excused from the monthly shipments if space in ships sailing for Madras was not available, but upon this point no evidence was adduced by either side, though on the plaintiffs' side it was shown that a ship left London on the 19th July and arrived here on the 21st August.

As to the improbability of this contention of plaintiffs being the correct one, we have only to see what happened as to the second shipment : it was made over five weeks from the first shipment, viz., on 27th July, the first shipment having been on 18th June, and the defendant did not get notice of the arrival here of the second shipment till 6th September, thus leaving defendant during the whole month of August without any shipment. The evidence of Thomas Binny and Co.'s shipping clerk, shows that the Golconda, by which the second shipment arrived, arrived here on 30th August. If plaintiffs' contention is to be held good, then it would be necessary to hold that a shipment at any time in the month subsequent to a previous shipment would fulfil the condition, and that although the agreement was for shipments at monthly intervals, the interval to be allowed between them was not to be considered in carrying out the contract.

The defendant's contention seems to be more reasonable, for the importer in giving his order would naturally arrange that he should get his supplies at fixed periods and would not leave the dates of arrival uncertain, and the ordinary mode of doing this would seem to be by fixing the date of departure from the export country. Further, there is the evidence of the defendant's agent corroborated to a certain extent by Exhibits D, E, F and No. 3, that this was the way the contract was understood by both parties originally. The defendant's agent says he received notice of the arrival of the first shipment in July and went to plaintiffs' office and saw Mr. Schultzer and spoke to him through broker Devaji Row. I said to him 'this first shipment has come late, in case the others arrive in thirty days regularly then only will I take them and if not I won't take them: he said all right. The second did not come in time within thirty days [66] from 20th July. So I wrote Exhibit D (18th August 1890).' In Exhibit D defendant stated he had up to date received no invoice of a further shipment and as there was again delay in the delivery he refused to further go on with the contract. In Exhibit E which is reply to Exhibit D, plaintiffs say 'it is quite impossible to ship goods in exactly one month's intervals as we must wait till a steamer is available to ship the same.' This I think shows clearly how the plaintiffs understood the expression monthly intervals, and that it meant at those intervals as nearly as possible; a pencil memorandum on Exhibit D, which was produced by plaintiffs, is to the same effect. This letter, Exhibit E, also to my mind reads as an excuse that no ship was available, but the witness Thomas proves that the Navarino left London on 19th July and, as before remarked, there is no evidence that there was no space available in her. Again, on receiving advice of the arrival of the second shipment he repudiated his liability by Exhibit H and referred plaintiffs to Exhibit D. As to the interview between Mr. Schultzer and defendant's agent in July, Mr. Scholl, plaintiffs' witness and assistant, says he knew there had been a discussion between them and before the writing by plaintiffs of Exhibit 3 (11th September 1890), that Mr. Schultzer told him in July defendant had complained that the first shipment had not come within contract time as it had arrived in July instead of in June, and had agreed to accept it provided the other lots arrived in time, and that he Mr. Schultzer had promised that future deliveries should be made regularly every month. Mr. Scholl also stated originally that Exhibit D set out the complaint Mr. Schultzer had told him of and used the expression 'deliveries' should be made regularly every month, but changed to saying that the expression in Exhibit D, 'future deliveries should be made regularly every month,' had escaped his notice and when he used the expression 'delivery' he meant 'shipment.' With reference to the defendant's agent's evidence and Exhibits D, E, F and No. 3, it has been commented on by defendant's attorney that the plaintiffs have not examined Mr. Schultzer and the broker and it does seem extraordinary, for Exhibit D refers to the interview about the late shipment of the first lot and the alleged promises and Exhibit 3 refers to legal proceedings and the plaintiffs' ability to produce witnesses as to the agreement made.

[67] I am of opinion that the proper construction of the contract A is that contended for by the defendant, viz., that the shipments were to be at monthly intervals from each other and it is proved that a ship left London for

Madras on 19th July 1890, and there is no evidence that there was no room in it for defendant's goods. Plaintiffs further contend that, assuming the shipments were not in accordance with the terms of Exhibit A, the defendant was not entitled to rescind the remainder of the contract, the agreement being for deliveries at different periods and divisible. The points to consider in reference to this question are whether it was one entire contract or several, and whether the time of shipment was of the essence of it, and I am of opinion that it was one entire contract and time of shipment was the essence of it. Upon the question of entirety of the contract the cases of Hoare v. Rennie (5 H. & N., 19), Honck v. Muller (L. R., 7 Q. B. D., 92), Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor Benzon & Co. (L. R., 9 App. Cases, 434) decide that where the agreement is for delivery of goods in monthly fixed portions, and that it is not carried out the contract is considered as a whole. Hoare v. Rennie (5 H. & N., 19) decided that where the quantity agreed to be delivered at a certain time was not so delivered to the vendee it was an answer to a suit for non-acceptance. Honck v. Muller (L. R., 7 Q. B. D., 92) decided that where the purchaser had not taken delivery of the first portion as agreed he could not insist on the vendor delivering the balance. The Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor Benzon & Co. (L. R., 9 App. Cases, 434) decided that where the vendors wrongfully refused to make a further delivery on account of an agreement for monthly deliveries, the vendee was entitled to claim the fulfilment of the contract as a whole. In his judgment Lord Bramwell gave his opinion that Hoare v. Rennie (5 H. & N., 19) had been rightly decided. In this case if the proper construction of the contract is that monthly intervals means shipments at intervals of a month, there was no shipment within that period and thus it is within the principle of Hoare v. Rennie (5 H. & N., 19).

The plaintiffs rely on Simpson v. Crippin (L. R., 8 Q. B., 14) as showing that partial failure as to one instalment or delivery does not entitle the promisor to refuse to complete the contract, and this it certainly does, but Honck v. Muller (L. R., 7 Q. B. D. 92) and Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor Benzon & Co. (L. R., 9 App. Cases, 434) are later cases and were decided by the [68] Court of Appeal and the House of Lords. From the remarks made in Cutter v. Powell (Smith's Leading Cases, vol. ii., p. 40), I am led to the conclusion that these two latter cases are now considered to give the law on the point.

As to time being the essence of the contract I have already remarked that at any rate it was so in the mind of the defendant, for he fixed a specific interval for the shipments to be made and defendant's agent's evidence and the Exhibits E and No. 3 show that plaintiffs also considered that time of delivery was one of the essential ingredients of the contract. Lord Cairns in Bowes v. Shand (L. R., 2 App. Cases, 455) says 'therefore it may well be that a merchant making a number of rice contracts, ranging over several months of the year, will be desirous of expressing that the rice shall come forward at such times and at such intervals of time, as that it will be convenient for him to make the payments and it may well be that a merchant will consider that he has obtained that end if he provides for the shipment of the rice during a particular month or during particular months, and that he will know provided he had made that stipulation the rice will not be forthcoming at a time when it will be inconvenient for him to provide the money for the payment,' and again at page 465 the non-fulfilment of any term in a contract is a means by which a purchaser is able to get rid of the contract when prices have dropped; but that is no reason why a term which is found in a contract should not be fulfilled.

I am of opinion under the circumstances above set out that there was a breach of the contract by the plaintiffs in not shipping the second shipment within an interval of a month from the 18th June 1890, that it was one contract for the purchase of one hundred and twenty cases of tins of Swiss milk, see judgment of Lord Selborne in Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor Benzon & Co. (L. R., 9 App. Cases, 434) and that time was the essence of the contract and defendant was entitled to rescind or cancel the remainder of the contract (section 55,* Contract Act) and that defendant exercised his right by Exhibits D, F and H; and contingent upon the opinion of the High Court upon the two questions hereunder submitted, I give judgment for the defendant and dismiss the suit with costs.

The questions I beg to submit are :—

[69] Whether upon the facts stated in the case the opinion I have formed as to the proper construction of agreement A is correct, viz., that the expression in it shipment in six lots of twenty cases each at monthly intervals means that the shipments were to be at intervals of a month from each other and not month by month, that is to say, in consecutive months?

(2) Whether upon the facts stated in the case, the defendant was entitled to rescind the portion of the contract as to one hundred cases on the 18th August 1890, and did so by Exhibit D or at any time, and did so by Exhibits F (26th August 1890) and H (8th September 1890)?

Mr. K. Anderson for Plaintiff.

Mr. R. F. Grant for Defendant.

Judgment.—The first question referred for our opinion is what is the proper construction of the agreement, Exhibit A. By that document the defendant agreed to purchase from the plaintiffs 120 cases of condensed milk which were to be shipped in London and delivered in Madras. The part of the agreement as to which there is a conflict is in these terms, "shipment in six lots of twenty cases each at monthly intervals."

On behalf of the plaintiffs it was contended that the expression "shipment at monthly intervals" means shipment in consecutive months or, as the learned Chief Judge puts it, shipment month by month, whereas the defendant contended that the expression meant that the shipment should be made at intervals of a month from each other.

It is not suggested on either side that the expression is used among merchants in any technical sense. Now the term "monthly" can only mean once a month or every month and the term "intervals" the time between two shipments. In the ordinary sense of the words therefore the expression

*[Sec. 55. When a party to a contract promises to do a certain thing at or before a specified time, or certain things at or before specified times, and fails to do any such thing at or before the specified time, the contract, or so much of it as has not been performed, becomes voidable, at the option of the promisee, if the intention of the parties was that time should be of the essence of the contract.

If it was not the intention of the parties that time should be of the essence of the contract, the contract does not become voidable by the failure to do such thing at or before the specified time; but the promisee is entitled to compensation from the promisor for any loss occasioned to him by such failure.

If, in case of a contract, voidable on account of the promisor's failure to perform his promise at the time agreed, the promisee accepts performance of such promise at any time other than that agreed, the promisee cannot claim compensation for any loss occasioned by the non-performance of the promise at the time agreed, unless, at the time of such acceptance, he gives notice to the promisee of his intention to do so.]

"shipment at monthly intervals" means that there was to be an interval of one month between each shipment. As the learned Chief Judge observes, the importer wishing to arrange that his supplies should arrive at fixed periods would naturally stipulate that the date of shipment from the export country should be certain. He also refers to Exhibit E, the letter written by the plaintiffs' firm on the 26th August, as showing that the plaintiffs understood that the term "monthly intervals" meant at intervals of a month as nearly as possible. It is urged by plaintiffs' Counsel that it would be [70] unreasonable to hold that the plaintiffs contracted to ship the twenty cases at exact intervals of one month as they would have to wait till a steamer was available or charter a special steamer for the conveyance of the twenty cases. There can be no doubt that in determining what is the construction to be put upon the term "shipment at monthly intervals," regard should be had to the possibility of finding a steamer available for shipment on or about the monthly interval as well as to the necessity for defendant getting his supplies at regular intervals.

The reasonable construction, therefore, is that the interval contemplated by the parties to the document was not precisely thirty days or one month, but one month more or less, regard being had to the time which it may be reasonable to allow to the plaintiffs for finding a steamer available for the required shipment.

This is in accordance with the rule mentioned by CRESSWELL, J., in Wilson v. Bevan (7 Q. B. 673) which he stated in these words :—"When the intention of the parties to a contract is sufficiently apparent, effect must be given to it in that sense, though some violence be thereby done to the words. Where the intention is doubtful the safest course is to take the words in their ordinary sense." In applying the rule it must also be observed that the hardship to either party is not an element to be considered, unless it amounts to a degree of inconvenience and absurdity so great as to afford judicial proof that such could not be the meaning of the parties, Prebble v. Boghurst (1 Swanston, 329).

With reference to the second question referred to us whether the defendant was entitled to rescind the contract, we observe that its decision depends upon a further question which contract was it which defendant claimed to be entitled to rescind. It appears that the first shipment was made on the 18th June and arrived at Madras on 22nd July. Defendant complained that the consignment had arrived late, and at an interview, plaintiffs' agent consented to accept delivery only on the assurance that future shipments or deliveries were regular. In their letter of the 11th September plaintiffs refer to his agreement as an agreement for "shipment in due course". The second shipment was made on the 27th July and arrived in Madras on the 6th September. Meanwhile on the 18th August defendant had written to plaintiffs (Exhibit [71] bit D) in these terms :—"The first twenty cases should have been delivered in the month of June, instead of which you delivered them in July, when you promised that future deliveries would be made every month." It will be observed that the defendant treated the original agreement (A) as one for "deliveries at monthly intervals" and that he regarded the agreement of July as an agreement for "deliveries regularly every month." The original contract was one for "shipment at monthly intervals" and the learned Chief Judge appears to hold that as the second shipment was not within one month from the date of the first shipment, defendant was entitled to repudiate the contract. That would depend upon the question whether the interval between the 18th June and 27th July was under the circumstances reasonable, regard being had to the time ordinarily necessary for finding a steamer available for the shipment.

If it was the agreement of July which defendant claimed to repudiate, there must be a finding what the terms of that agreement were, and whether with reference to the construction we put upon the term "monthly intervals" defendant was entitled to repudiate it.

We will ask the learned Chief Judge to return a finding upon these questions.

In compliance with the above order, Mr. N. Subrahmanyam, the Acting Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, submitted his finding as follows:—

Finding.—My finding on the first question is that defendant claims to repudiate the original contract of 14th May 1890 under Exhibit A. It will be seen by the statements filed by the Attorneys of both the parties that it is not the case of either party that there was any new agreement on 21st July 1891. Exhibits F, H, J and III also confirm their view; what really took place on that date was that plaintiff having made a default in the first shipment, defendant complained on this score and at the interview on 21st July 1890 all that happened was that defendant agreed to waive his right to rescind the whole contract and accept the delivery of the first shipment on plaintiffs' promising that future shipment should be regular as stipulated in the original contract A of 14th May. What happened, therefore, was an agreement to [72] stand by the original contract. The defendant makes plaintiffs understand more clearly, if possible, than before that time was of the essence of the contract.

It becomes unnecessary to give a finding on the second question.

Taking the third question to be whether the defendant was entitled to repudiate such new contract, it becomes unnecessary to give a finding on it. If the question is whether, with reference to the construction put by the High Court on the term monthly intervals, the defendant was entitled to repudiate, I agree with Mr. Shaw for the reasons given by him that defendant was entitled to repudiate the contract as the plaintiffs might have had the second shipment made by the steamer which left London on 19th July and he failed to do so.

This case came on for final disposal when the Court delivered judgment as follows:—

Judgment.—The first question was already answered in the affirmative.

As to the second question also the answer must be in the affirmative on the findings now submitted.

In a suit for partition of family property it became necessary for the plaintiff to prove that his grandfather had been adopted by A, and he tendered in evidence judgments from which it appeared that A's brother who was the grandfather of defendant No. 1, had sued to recover moneys due to A, alleging that the adopted son was an infant living under his protection. An adoption of the father of the defendant No. 1 by D was also put in issue, and to prove it defendant No. 1 tendered in evidence decrees in which the alleged adopted son was so described and also other documents (to which neither defendant No. 5 who denied the adoption nor his father was a party) where the same description was used. It appeared that one of the deceased co-parceners had sold to a stranger his undivided share in almost all the immoveable property of the family, and with part of the proceeds had discharged some debts and with the rest had purchased certain lands, now claimed [74] by his widow as his separate property. One of the defendants claimed to be credited with a sum payable to him as the managing coparcener under a deed of management to which the plaintiff was not a party. A decree was passed declaring the share to which the plaintiff and some of the defendants were entitled in the family property, but reserving all other questions involved in the suit :

Held, (1) that the decree was a provisional decree and was subject to appeal, but that it was irregular in form, in that it should have contained declarations as to all the rights and liabilities which had been adjudicated on and directions as to the accounts and enquiries remaining to be taken and made ;

(2) that the documents tendered in evidence of the two adoptions above mentioned respectively were admissible in evidence ;

(3) that the proceeds of the sale of the coparcener's share so far as they were in excess of the requirements of his creditor's equity were not divested of the character of coparcenary property, and the lands purchased therewith were consequently property subject to partition and not separate property as contended by his widow ;

(4) that the claim under the deed of management was not valid against the plaintiff.

Per cur.: The opinion expressed by a vakil in the course of argument adversely to a claim which he undertook to advocate is not binding on his client.

APPEAL against the decree of C. Venkobachariar, Sudordinate Judge of Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 27 of 1890.

The plaintiff sued for partition of the property of the undivided family consisting of himself and defendants Nos. 1 to 5, of which he claimed to be entitled to a half share. The seventh defendant was the widow of a deceased member of the family who, as was averred in the plaint, had in 1884 effected a partition with defendants Nos. 1 and 5 in fraud of the rights of the plaintiff. With regard to defendant No. 6, the plaint alleged that he had obtained from the late husband of defendant No. 7 a conveyance of his undivided one-third share of a moiety of the family property. It appeared from the conveyance that the transfer comprised only the executant's share of the immoveable property of the joint family excluding therefrom a certain house. The consideration for the conveyance was made up of a previous debt and a sum of Rs. 21,150 then paid. With this money the transferor purchased certain land through his father-in-law who was joined in this suit as defendant No. 8 and who managed the property by his agent, defendant No. 9.

There was a contest with regard to the share of the plaintiff which turned upon the question whether or not his grandfather Varadayangar was the adopted son of Ammalayyangar as alleged by the plaintiff. In order to prove this adoption the [75] plaintiff tendered in evidence certain judgments from which it appeared that the grandfather of defendant No. 1 had brought suits to recover moneys due to the alleged adopted father, then deceased, stating that he sued because Varadayangar, the adopted son of Ammalayyangar, was an infant living under his protection. Another alleged adoption came in question in this suit, viz., that of the first defendant's father by his uncle Dorasami. In order to prove this adoption there were put in evidence two decrees in which the alleged adopted son (then the defendant) was so described and also various other documents (a sale-deed, a lease, a money-bond executed to him and a claim petition filed in a Munsif's Court by third parties) to which neither the fifth defendant who denied the adoption nor his father was a party, where the same description appeared.

Of some of the properties comprised in the plaint, defendant No. 7 alleged that they were self-acquired properties of her deceased husband and claimed to be entitled to them in preference to his coparceners. These were the properties purchased with the money paid by defendant No. 6, viz., Rs. 21,150 as mentioned above. At the hearing in the Subordinate Court the plaintiff's vakil stated that the claim in respect of this property, which had been made the subject of the ninth, tenth and sixteenth issues, was made "unwarrantably," and the Subordinate Judge accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's claim on this head without determining the issues relating that. It appeared further that the seventh defendant's late husband had in 1888 handed over certain title-deeds relating to family property to defendant No. 6 by way of guarantee without the consent of his coparceners.

Defendant No. 1 claimed to be credited with a sum of Rs. 8,000 payable to him under a document referred to as a deed of management which provided for the payment to him of this sum as a remuneration for the management of the family property. The plaintiff was not a party to this deed which was executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 5 and the late husband of defendant No. 7, and the Subordinate Judge held that he was not bound by it.

In the result the Subordinate Judge passed a decree as follows:—"This Court doth order and decree that plaintiff, as the grandson of Varadayyangan, who was adopted by Ammalayyangan, be, and is hereby declared entitled to a half share and defendants Nos. 1, 5 and 6 as well as the third defendant [76] (who was adopted by Sindu Ayyangan, adopted son of Dorasami Ayyangan) to one-eighth share each in the plaint properties, save those detailed in schedule A, and that the other questions involved in the suit be reserved."

Issues raised as to the amount of outstanding debts due to the family and of sums expended by the defendants for family purposes and as to mesne profits payable to the plaintiff, etc., were reserved for determination at a later stage.

The present appeals were filed by defendants Nos. 1 to 5 against this decree, and it was objected that no appeal lay because the decree was incomplete and not a final adjudication.

Judgment —These three appeals are all from the same decree (Appeal No. 7 being by the fifth defendant, Appeal No. 50 by defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and Appeal No. 51 by the first defendant) in a suit brought by plaintiff for partition of family property and recovery of a moiety as the share to which he is entitled.

The relationship of the parties will be seen from the following genealogical table :—

[77] Plaintiff's case is that his grandfather Varadayyengar, the second son of Krishnayyengar, was adopted by the latter's brother Ammalayyengar, and that plaintiff is consequently entitled to a moiety of the property as representative of Ammalayyengar, the other moiety going to defendants Nos. 1 to 5 representing Krishnayyengar's branch to which also belonged the late husband of the seventh defendant.

The adoption of plaintiff's grandfather by Ammalayyengar was denied by all the present appellants as defendants in the lower Court, and the denial is persisted in by them all as appellants in this Court.

The first question for determination now is, therefore, whether or not Varadayyengar was adopted by his uncle Ammalayyengar.

This was the first issue recorded in the Court below; and the finding of the Subordinate Judge is in the affirmative—see paragraph 32 of his judgment, in which he expresses his finding to the above effect, after discussing the evidence at length in paragraphs 14 to 31. We do not think it necessary to do more than notice the documents, which afford unambiguous evidence of the adoption. These are Exhibits L series, O series, A and XIV, C and E.

From Exhibits L, L1, L2, L3 and L5 it is seen that the adoption of Varadayyengar by Ammalayyengar was stated by the latter's brother Krishnayyengar in suits brought by him in 1838, 1841 and 1843 to recover moneys due to Ammalayyengar (then deceased). He explained that the suits were brought by him as Varadayyengar, the adopted son of Ammalayyengar, was under his protection. It has been objected on behalf of appellants that these copies of judgments are inadmissible as evidence, and in support of this objection we were referred to Subramanyan v. Paramaswaran (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 116). Copies of judgments and decrees were there held to be inadmissible with reference to the decision of the majority of Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171). As pointed out by this Court in Byathamma v. Avulla (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 19, 23) the sole object for which it was sought to use the former judgment in Gujju Lall v. Fatteh Lall (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 171) was to show that in another suit against another defendant the plaintiff had obtained an adjudication in his favour on the same right; and [78] it was held that the opinion expressed in the former judgment was not a relevant fact within the meaning of the Evidence Act. The case is clearly different where the previous judgment is produced not in order to prove an adjudication between third parties, but in order to prove a statement made by a predecessor in title of the party against whom the document is sought to be used; cf. Parbutty Dassi v. Purno Chunder Singh (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 586) and Thama v. Kondan (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 378). Such is the case here and we have no doubt that the judgments in question are relevant under section 35 of the Evidence Act. But even were it otherwise, a copy of the plaint in the suit of which L3 is the judgment is filed as fifth defendant's Exhibit LXVIII and affords the same evidence as Exhibits L series. See also fifth defendant's Exhibit LXVIIIa; also the N series of Exhibits. These latter are no doubt signed by Varadayyengar himself as vakil of Krishnayyengar, but O and O1 to 8 show that Varadayyengar was appointed as his vakil by Krishnayyengar, who describes him in all these documents as his natural (Janaka) son, which description would not be used unless there had been an adoption. This description of plaintiff also occurs in the documents P series and others of the years 1841 to 1843. It has been contended for appellants that the O series of documents are forgeries, but the Subordinate Judge has held otherwise and there is no reason for thinking that he is wrong.

The next document to be considered is Exhibit A. From it it is seen that in 1858 Chellathammal, widow of Varadayyengar, brought a suit for maintenance against Krishnayyengar, which suit was continued on the latter's death against his sons (i) Rangasami Ayyengar, the father of the first defendant and grandfather of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and (ii) Periasami Ayyengar, the father of the seventh defendant's late husband and (iii) Chinnasami Ayyengar, father of the fifth defendant, describing Varadayyengar as the adopted son of Ammalayyengar, to which description no objection appears to have been taken.

The statements made by the first defendant in Exhibits C, E and XIV in 1882 also support the adoption alleged by plaintiff, as pointed out in paragraph 28 of the Subordinate Judge's judgment.

It is further contended on behalf of appellants that Varaday-[79]yengar's adoption by Ammalayyengar (even if it is a fact) is invalid in consequence of Varadayyengar being previously married, as appears from the evidence of his widow Chellathammal, who has been examined as eleventh witness for the plaintiff. Considering that the precise date of Varadayyengar's adoption is not known and that no living member of the family has any personal knowledge of it, even assuming that he had a daughter born about 1831 (as would appear from the evidence of the eleventh witness), this circumstance is not sufficient to justify the finding that his first marriage took place prior to his adoption. When we find it recognized in 1838, 1840 and 1841 in the suits to which L, L1, L2, L3, L5, LXVIII and LXVIIIa relate, and not denied in 1858 in the suit brought by his widow for maintenance (Exhibit A), the presumption is in favour of its validity and such presumption must be rebutted by more positive evidence than has been adduced in this suit.

We see no reason, therefore, to doubt the correctness of the lower Court's finding either as to the factum or validity of the adoption of Varadayyengar by Ammalayyengar; and the adoption being found to be a fact and valid, plaintiff is clearly entitled to a moiety of the property as representative of Ammalayyengar's branch.

The next point for consideration merely affects the shares to which defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are entitled inter se out of the moiety belonging to their branch as representatives of Krishnayyengar. On reference to the genealogical table given at the beginning of this judgment, it is seen that Krishnayyengar had five sons, the second of whom, Varadayyengar (the grandfather of plaintiff), was, as found above, adopted by Ammalayyengar; the fourth son Periasami had a son Krishnasami who died in 1889, leaving a widow (seventh defendant) and no male issue (his father pre-deceased him); fifth defendant is the son of Krishnayyengar's youngest son Chinnasami. Rangasami, the third son of Krishnayyengar (died in 1880-81), had two sons, first defendant and one Sindu alias Srinivasan. Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are the sons of the first defendant.

The eldest son Doraisami had no issue. The case of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 is that Doraisami adopted the first defendant's younger brother Sindu; and that this latter adopted the third defendant. If such be the fact, Krishnayyengar's moiety of the [80] property is divisible into three shares, one of which belongs to the third defendant, another to defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4, and the third to the fifth defendant. The fifth defendant, however, denies the alleged adoption (1) of Sindu by Doraisami and (2) of the third defendant by Sindu; and claims that he, as representing Chinnasami's branch, is entitled to a share equal to that of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 jointly as representatives of Rangasami's branch. The questions for decision with reference to this contention are consequently two, namely, (1) was Sindu adopted by Doraisami? and (2) was the third defendant adopted by Sindu? The Subordinate Judge has found in the affirmative with regard to both these adoptions. The evidence is considered in paragraphs 33 to 35 of his judgment.

The evidence of witnesses who speak to the adoption of Sindu by Doraisami is supported by Exhibit IV, an inam statement prepared in 1862, in which Sreenivasa Ayyangar is entered as the adopted son of Komalavallee, the widow of Doraisami Ayyangar. The third defendant's second witness, by whom the statement was prepared, swears that it was prepared on information given by the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 5 and their brother Periyasami, the father of the seventh defendant's husband. Exhibits II and III are decrees in two suits of 1869 in which Sindu Ayyangar was defendant and described as adopted son of Doraisami. There are also a number of other documents produced in which Sindu is described as Doraisami's son. Cf. XIII, XVII, XX, XXIV, &c. It is true that the fifth defendant was not a party to these last-mentioned documents, but, nevertheless, they are admissible as corroborating the oral evidence of both plaintiff's and the third defendant's witnesses.

As to the third defendant's adoption by Sindu Ayyangar, there is the evidence of defendants' sixth and seventh witnesses and also of plaintiff's eighth witness, all of whom say they were present when the adoption took place, while other witnesses speak to the performance by the third defendant of the exequal rites and sraddhas of Sindu and of Doraisami's widow Komalavallee.

The finding of the Subordinate Judge as to these two adoptions is thus supported by evidence which we see no reason for holding to have been misappreciated; nor do we see reason to differ from the finding of the Subordinate Judge on the fourth, fifth and sixth issues. We also agree with him in finding that the seventh [81] defendant's late husband was an undivided co-parcener at the date of his death.

The next question is as to the validity of the transfer evidenced by Exhibit LVIII executed by the seventh defendant's late husband to the sixth defendant. It was the subject of the eighth issue recorded by the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge has found that though the seventh defendant's late husband could not convey any definite portion of the undivided family property, he could convey his undefined interest and share in the same and that to this extent the conveyance under LVIII is valid; and the sixth defendant stated his readiness to accept his vendor's share whatever it comes to. As pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, the consideration for the conveyance is Rs. 40,000, of which Rs. 8,000 and odd were paid to one Sadagopachari under Exhibit XXXIII, Rs. 11,000 and odd to N. Saminathayyar by whom were granted the receipts XXXII series (which are admitted by him as a witness examined on commission) and the remaining Rs. 21,000 were to be paid to the eighth defendant, the father of the seventh defendant, for the purpose of liquidating other debts of the executant of LVIII. The evidence on the point is stated in paragraph 40 of the Subordinate Judge's judgment. There is no reason for holding that this sale to the sixth defendant was not for valuable consideration or that the sixth defendant purchased benamsee for the plaintiff. According to the law administered in this Presidency a sale by a coparcener of his undivided interest in family property is clearly valid and gives the vendee a right to claim the share of his vendor though not any specific property. It is clear, however, from Exhibit LVIII, that what was sold thereby to the sixth defendant is the seventh defendant's late husband's share in the immoveable property only of the joint family excluding therefrom the "old, tiled, full-built dwelling-house," situate in the northern row of Mela Valattur. The decree of the lower Court must be amended accordingly by excluding from the portion to be awarded to the sixth defendant the above house and Krishnasami Ayyangar's share in the moveable property.

The next question is as to the properties specified in schedule H which consist of 34 items. It is contended for the seventh defendant that items 4 to 28 were acquired by her deceased husband, that she had yet realized nothing from the policy of insurance on his life, that item 32 which was also her husband's self-acquisition [82] was conveyed by him for the purpose of conducting a charity to one Tatu Desikachari of Triplicane who was not made a party to this suit, and that under Hindu law she was entitled to take her husband's self-acquisition in preference to his coparceners and that no other items of schedule H were in her possession.

As regards items 29, 30 and 31, it was urged on behalf of the eighth defendant, father of the seventh defendant, that he acquired the first two items by purchase and that they did not belong to the joint family and that item 31 was bought by him on the 19th July 1888 at a Court sale. As for items 29, 30, 31, 33 and 34, he alleged that even supposing that they all belonged to his son-in-law Krishnasami Ayyangar, the latter ceased to be a coparcener in consequence of the sale of his undivided share to the sixth defendant, and that the seventh defendant was the lawful heir entitled to succeed to it upon her husband's death. With reference to items 1 to 3 in schedule H, the ninth defendant's case was that they belonged exclusively to the seventh defendant's husband, and he purchased them at a revenue sale for arrears of revenue due to the Government by Krishnasami Ayyangar. As regards all the above items, the plaintiff averred in paragraphs 5 and 6 of his plaint, that out of the sale amount, viz., Rs. 40,000 due by the sixth defendant to the seventh defendant's husband, the latter paid his father-in-law, the eighth defendant, Rs. 21,500 which was the surplus that remained after payment of his debts, in order that the father-in-law might purchase land for him, that the items in dispute were so purchased, and that the coparceners of the seventh defendant's husband were entitled to recover them from defendants Nos. 6 to 8. As to this sum of Rs. 21,500, the eighth defendant contended that it was paid to him out of the purchase-money, not to be invested as alleged in the purchase of land for the benefit of the seventh defendant's husband, but in payment of debts due by him to the eighth defendant of moneys lent at his intercession and of debts which he was requested to liquidate. The eighth defendant stated also that the sixth defendant executed a promissory note in his favour for Rs. 21,150 at the date of the sale to him and that he obtained a decree upon the promissory note against the purchaser and recovered from him after decree Rs. 7,410. He alleged further that the plaintiff's case that Rs. 9,000 remained with him as unexpended balance of the sale amount, viz., Rs. 40,000, was false.

[83] These contentions formed the subject of the ninth, tenth and sixteenth issues and the Subordinate Judge decided them all against the plaintiff on the ground mentioned in paragraph 41 of his judgment, viz., that the plaintiff's vakil who argued the case said that the properties in schedule H were claimed very unwarrantably. The contention in appeal is that this is not a proper or sufficient disposal and we think that it is entitled to weight. The opinion expressed by a vakil in the course of argument adversely to a claim which he undertook to advocate is not binding on his client when it is not in accordance with the law applicable to the case, and it is clearly not binding on the other contending defendants.

The question arising on these contentions is whether when a coparcener sells his undivided share and when a surplus is left after paying his debts from the sale-proceeds, that surplus is coparcenary property subject to the right of survivorship vesting in other coparceners or his self-acquired property devolving upon his demise on his childless widow. The Subordinate Judge apparently considers it to be the deceased coparcener's separate estate, but we are unable to concur in this opinion. It has been held by this Court that a coparcener can only alienate his undivided share for value and that he cannot alienate it by will or gift.

The law on this subject, as administered in this Presidency was explained by the Privy Council in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (L. R., 61 A., 88, 101, 102). Their Lordships say that "since the decision of the cases in Virasvami Gramani v. Ayyasvami Gramani (1 M.H.C.R., 471), Peddammuthulaty v. N. Timma Reddy (2 M. H. C. R., 270), Palanivelappa Karandan v. Mannaru Naikan (2 M. H. C. R., 416) and Rayacharu v. Venkataramaniah (4 M. H. C. R., 60) it has been settled law in the Presidency of Madras that one coparcener may dispose of ancestral undivided estate, even by contract and conveyance, to the extent of his own share: and a fortiori that such share may be seized and sold in execution for his debt." It is also pointed out that the law obtaining in the Presidency of Bombay differs from that administered in this Presidency to this extent, viz., that in the former the alienation must be for value, whilst in the latter an alienation by gift was recognized. The Judicial Committee proceeded to observe that "there [84] can be little doubt that all such alienations are inconsistent with the strict theory of a joint and undivided family, and the law as established in Madras and Bombay has been one of gradual growth, founded on the equity which a purchaser for value has to be allowed to stand in his vendor's shoes and to work out his rights by means of a partition."

In paragraphs 331 to 334 of Mayne's Hindu Law the learned writer gives the history of Hindu Law on the alienability of an undivided share by a coparcener as administered in this Presidency. The decisions passed subsequent to the date of the decision of the Privy Council, Baba v. Timma (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 357) and Ponnusami v. Thatha (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 273) show that a coparcener is not at liberty to alienate his undivided interest by gift except when he is expressly authorized to do so by a text of Hindu Law, because the equity which exists in favour of a purchaser for value does not arise in favour of a donee who is a mere volunteer. In the former case the question was fully discussed by a Full Bench of this Court, and the conclusion arrived at is that a coparcener has no power to alienate his undivided interest by gift, unless such gift is sanctioned by an express text of Hindu law. As regards devises by will, it was held that at the moment of death, the right by survivorship arises, and as it is in conflict with the right by devise, the former prevails as the prior right against the latter. The law applicable to alienations of an undivided share may thus be summarized. It may be alienated for value but not otherwise except where a gift is expressly sanctioned by Hindu law, and the equity of the creditor or the purchaser is the foundation on which the power to alienate for value rests.

If a coparcener then sells his undivided interest for Rs. 40,000, of which a part only is applied to payment of his debts and the rest is either retained by him, or by some one else in trust for him, or laid out in the acquisition of other property, the right of survivorship attaches to the surplus so retained or to the property in which it has been invested. For the sale, so far as it produces the surplus, was in excess of the requirements of the creditor's equity and amounts to a mere conversion of the coparcenary interest into money or other property, which when warranted neither by Hindu law nor by the equity engrafted upon it, [85] cannot operate to remove it from the domain of survivorship or to divest the surplus of its character of coparcenary property. Suppose that a coparcener alienates his undivided share only in part of the joint property and that it is sufficient to satisfy the equity of the creditor; it cannot be pretended that his share in the rest of the joint property is thereby changed into his separate property, and we consider that the same principle ought to govern the unexpended surplus which it is not necessary to raise or the property in which it happens to be invested. Although the sale may be upheld, because the purchaser has the equity to stand in the place of the vendor and to work out his rights by partition as he has paid value for his purchase,—the purchase money, except so far as it is applied to payment of debts, continues to be coparcenary property. There are no doubt decisions to the effect that when a coparcener's share is alienated, the alienor ceases to be a coparcener quoad the property so alienated, and the coparcenary is thereby determined pro tanto inasmuch as the purchaser, who is a stranger to the joint family, cannot be a coparcener. But they do not establish the proposition that the sale-proceeds, when they are not paid to a creditor in whole or part but retained by the coparcener, cease likewise to be coparcenary property.

The Subordinate Judge must be requested to come to fresh findings on the contention of the plaintiff and the other coparceners and defendants Nos. 7 and 9 in regard to the several items of property mentioned in schedule H including Rs. 9,000 and pass a final decree with reference to those findings and the foregoing observations on the law applicable to the case.

There are several minor points as to which the Subordinate Judge has come to no finding though it was desirable to do so before passing a provisional decree.

It is first urged that the Subordinate Judge has recorded no finding on issues 21 to 24. As to issues 23 and 24 the Subordinate Judge has expressed, as his opinion, in paragraph 40 of his judgment, that the sale to the sixth defendant was not benami for the plaintiff as alleged by him and in this opinion we concur. The question of fraud suggested by the twenty-third issue must also be negatived, for, we are referred to no evidence in its support, whilst it is clear that the sixth defendant paid full value for his purchase. No distinct findings are, however, recorded [86] on the twentieth and twenty-second issues, and we think they must be included among those which remain to be adjudicated upon before a final decree is passed.

Another matter urged upon us is that the seventh defendant's husband acknowledged in Exhibit LXII that he collected moneys due on some of the bonds belonging to the joint family, and that the Subordinate Judge has not expressed his opinion as to the amounts collected by him and as to whether he has duly accounted for them.* The Subordinate Judge must be requested to come to a distinct finding on the matters mentioned above as he probably intended to do whilst deciding the eleventh and twelfth issues which he has reserved for adjudication before final decree.

As regards the sum of Rs. 8,000 claimed under the deed of management, the Subordinate Judge observes, and we think correctly, that plaintiff who was not a party to Exhibit LXXVIII is not bound by it. In the absence of a valid special agreement, the managing coparcener of a joint Hindu family is clearly entitled to no special remuneration as the property which he manages is one of which he is a joint owner.

Another contention urged in appeal is that 89 documents which admittedly relate to family properties were handed over to the sixth defendant under Exhibit LXXV by way of guarantee and that the Subordinate Judge has not noticed the objection raised to the guarantee. As an individual coparcener, the seventh defendant's husband was not entitled to charge joint property (as he did) by way of indemnity without the consent of the other coparceners. The sixth defendant admits as the seventeenth witness for defence that those documents are with him, and we think that the indemnity should be set aside and that provision should be made in the final decree for the return of those documents.

As regards the nineteenth issue* the Subordinate Judge states that there is no evidence in regard to it and we adopt his finding so far as it relates to plaintiff and we leave it, so far as it relates to seventh defendant, to abide the result of the further enquiry which we have ordered.

It only remains for us to notice the preliminary objection taken on behalf of the eighth defendant that the decree passed by [87] the Subordinate Judge is incomplete and that no appeal lies until there is a complete and final decree. We are of opinion that this objection cannot be supported. A decree is defined by section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it implies that an order directing accounts to be taken is separable from the rest of the decree adjudicating on the rights claimed or the defences set up in the suit. A provisional decree is clearly appealable and the decree before us appears to us to be in the nature of a provisional decree. The decision of the Privy Council, Chidambaram Chettiar v. Gauri Nuchiar (1. L. R., 2 Mad., 83), and section 540 of the Civil Procedure Code which allows an appeal from part of a decree support that view. A provisional decree is permitted to be passed by section 215 in a suit for dissolution of partnership and a partition suit which has for its object the determination of the coparcenary is similar to it. The decree before us is however somewhat defective in form. A provisional decree ought to declare the several rights and liabilities which have been adjudicated on and embody an order similar to the one contemplated by section 215 and section 215A. The decree passed by the Subordinate Judge will be so amended as to declare all the rights and liabilities which have already been adjudicated on and to contain directions as to what remains to be done, viz., that an account be taken in respect of the matters mentioned in issues 11, 12, 13, 15, 20 and 22 and that further enquiry be made as to the properties mentioned in schedule H as herein directed and that the result of such enquiry be embodied in the final decree.

* "Are plaintiff and seventh defendant in possession of any moveable or immoveable properties liable to be brought to partition, and if so, what are they?"

The costs in the Original Court will be reserved for adjudication when the final decree is passed. The costs of this appeal will follow the result and be provided for in the decree to be passed by the Subordinate Judge.

[88] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 21st March, and 18th October, 1894.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Damodara Mudaliar and another.....(Defendants) Appellants
versus
Secretary of State for India.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.

Contract Act - Act IX of 1872, s. 70—Repairs by Government to a tank in which zamindar is interested—Suit against zamindars for share of cost.

The Government repaired a certain tank from which were irrigated lands in the zamindari of the defendants and also raiyatwari villages held under Government which had been severed from the zamindari. It was found that the defendants knew that the repairs, which were necessary for the preservation of the tank, were being carried out and did not wish to execute them themselves except as contractors and that they had enjoyed the benefit of the work done, and further that Government had carried out the repairs not intending to do them gratuitously for the defendants. It was not found that there was any request, either express or implied, on the part of the defendants to the Government to execute the repairs. In a suit by the Secretary of State to recover from the defendants their share of the cost incurred :

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled under Contract Act, s. 70† to recover part of the cost incurred, estimated with reference to the irrigable area of the villages owned by the plaintiff and defendants, respectively.

APPEAL against the decree of S. Russell, District Judge of Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 10 of 1892.

Suit by the Secretary of State to recover from two zamindars their respective shares of the cost of repairing a certain tank by which were irrigated certain lands of the defendants as well as raiyatwari lands held under Government. The District Judge passed a decree for a portion of the plaintiff's claim against which the present appeal was preferred by the defendants.

* Appeal No. 38 of 1893.

†[Sec. 70 :—Where a person lawfully does anything for another person, or delivers anything to him, not intending to do so gratuitously, and such other person enjoys the benefit thereof, the latter is bound to make compensation to the former in respect of, or to restore, the thing so done or delivered.]

Obligation of person enjoying benefit of non-gratuitous act.

Sankara Menon and Masilamani Pillai for Appellants.

Mr. K. Brown for Respondent.

Judgment:—The question raised by this appeal is whether the defendants being the proprietors of certain villages irrigated by the Parayankulattur tank, can be made liable for the costs of repairs of that tank incurred by the Government. Inasmuch as other villages held under Government are irrigated by the same tank [89] the Government were under an obligation to make the repairs, and it is found as a fact, and not disputed, that the repairs were necessary for the preservation of the tank. There are no definite findings by the District Judge, and the evidence is not clear as to the circumstances under which the repairs were undertaken by Government. But it seems clear from the defendants' own statements that they were aware that the repairs were being executed (see BB). The averment to that effect made in the plaint is not denied in the written statement, and it is not the defendants' case that they were themselves anxious to execute the repairs except in the capacity of contractors, or that the act of the Government in undertaking the work was in any way wrongful or improper. The contention on the defendants' part is that the Government were bound to do the repairs at their own expense and not entitled to charge the zamindar. A further point of minor importance is also taken, viz., that the District Judge has not made a fair apportionment of the cost of the work, having regard to the interests of the Government villages and zamindars' villages in the irrigation secured by the tank.

On the part of the defendants it was argued that, as there was no contract between them and the Government and no joint liability such as could give rise to an action for contribution, the present action could not be maintained; and the case of Leigh v. Dickeson (L. R., 15 Q. B. D., 60) was relied on. In that case the parties were tenants-in-common of a house, and the claim made was in respect of money expended on substantial and proper repairs. In this view of the facts, the present case may be distinguished, and another ground of distinction is that in the present case the remedy of partition is not available. In his judgment, POLLOCK, B., expressly distinguished the case from those in which "it has been held that, where an outlay is in the nature of salvage, all interested in the thing saved are bound to contribute."—Leigh v. Dickeson (L. R., 12 Q. B. D., 194). But in the Court of Appeal where the judgment of POLLOCK, B. adverse to the claim was affirmed, the decision was put upon grounds which cover cases in which an outlay necessary for the preservation of the thing in which the parties are interested, has been made. Indeed, COTTON, L.J., starts by assuming "that the house was in a bad state of repair" and that the repairs executed by the defendant were [90] necessary.—Leigh v. Dickeson (L. R., 15 Q. B. D., 60.) His decision amounts to this, that, in the absence of a request and in the absence of a common obligation to repair, no action for contribution will lie at the suit of one tenant-in-common against another, and that was the judgment of the Court of Appeal. No reference is made by any of the Lords Justices to the doctrine of salvage. In a later case where the question related to a policy of life insurance and the claim was made in respect of a premium paid by the mortgagor, the Court of Appeal distinctly held that the doctrine of salvage, as understood with reference to maritime cases, had no application, and BOWEN, L. J., states as the general principle that work and labour done or money expended by one man to preserve the property of another do not, according to English law, create any obligation to repay the expenditure. In the course of the argument (page 239) he observes that the law is laid down too widely in the notes to Lampleigh v. Brathwait (1 Smith's Leading cases, 160). It follows also from these decisions, which after all only re-affirm what has been said in earlier cases, that the statement of law made by Chancellor KENT and cited in Leigh v. Dickeson (L. R., 12 Q. B. D., 194) cannot be accepted as correct according to English authorities (see Kent's Commentaries). As a general rule, a man cannot be made liable for good services rendered under circumstances giving him no option of declining or accepting.

In the present case it is clear that the facts do not bring it within either of the two exceptions above mentioned. There was no common obligation to repair the tank, the zamindar and the Government are liable to their tenants, respectively, and the tenants of the one could not, it is conceived, make the other responsible for mere neglect to maintain the tank. The exception which covers the case of joint debtors, one of whom pays the whole debt, cannot apply, and it is at least doubtful whether on any principle of contribution or indemnity the plaintiff could recover—Leigh v. Dickeson (L. R., 15 Q. B. D., 60), Dering v. The Earl of Winchelsea (2 B. & P., 270), Moule v. Garrett (L. R., 7 Ex., 101). Again, there was no request on the part of the zamindars, and though it is possible that if the facts were properly ascertained a request might have been implied, the District Judge has not found that such implication ought to be made. According to [91] the English authorities it would seem, therefore, that the action must fail.

But the plaintiff's counsel relies on section 70 of the Contract Act and invites us to hold that a rule of law, differing from that found in the English cases, has been there laid down. By that section three conditions are required to establish a right of action at the suit of a person who does anything for another. The thing must be done lawfully; it must be done by a person not intending to act gratuitously; and the person for whom the act is done must enjoy the benefit of it. There can be little doubt that the statement of the law is derived from the notes to Lampleigh v. Brathwait, and perhaps indirectly from the Roman law (see Stokes' Introduction to Contract Act). The learned authors of Smith's Leading Cases, when enumerating the instances in which the request necessary to constitute a cause of action in the case of an executed consideration may be implied, give as the second instance "where the defendant has adopted and enjoyed the benefit of the consideration"—Lampleigh v. Brathwait (1 Smith's Leading Cases, 160). That is the very statement of law which, according to BOWEN, L. J., is too wide—nevertheless, it is the law we have to apply and we ought not to be deterred from doing so, because the rule is not in harmony with English decisions [see Lord HERSCHELL's observations—Bank of England v. Vagliano Brothers (1891, App. Cas., p. 145)] or because the application of it may be difficult.

Certainly there may be difficulties in applying a rule stated in such wide terms as is that expressed in section 70. According to the section it is not essential that the Act shall have been necessary in the sense that it has been done under circumstances of pressing emergency, or even that it shall have been an act necessary to be done at some time for the preservation of property. It may therefore be extended to cases into which no question of salvage enters. It is not limited to persons standing in particular relations to one another, and except in the requirement that the Act shall be lawful, no condition is prescribed as to the circumstances under which it shall be done.

In the present instance the relations of the parties are peculiar. Formerly as it appears all the eleven villages irrigated by the tank were zamindari villages. Seven of them have been severed [92] from the zamindari and become ordinary raiyatwari villages. As a consequence of the severance the duty to maintain the tank has, so far as concerns these latter villages, devolved on Government. As has already been observed, the remedy which is open to tenants-in-common who cannot agree about the enjoyment of property is not available to persons situated as are the parties in the present case. In their relation to the tank their position may be compared to that of the owners of two houses supported by a party wall (see Story's Eq. Juris.), in respect of which, if partition is legally possible, it is at any rate in fact impracticable. See Watson v. Gray (L. R., 14 Ch. D., 192), Bell's Commentaries (1085).

Now taking the terms of section 70, we have to see first whether an act was done by the plaintiff for the defendants not intending to do so gratuitously. Here are two questions of fact involved. First, were the repairs executed for the defendants? In a case where the plaintiff has himself no interest in the matter as in the case put in the illustration of A saving B's property from fire, there can hardly be any doubt as to the answer to be given to the question. The case is that to which in the first instance the rule of Roman law giving a right of action to the negotiorum gestor was applicable.

The fact that the plaintiff had an interest in the matter may show that he was acting on his own account only. England v. Marsden (L. R., 1 C. P., 529) affords an illustration. But it is obvious that a person doing an act in which he is himself interested may, at the same time, intend to act for another. Section 69 and the cases on which it is founded [see Moule v. Garrett (L. R., 5 Ex., 132 on appeal; L. R., 7 Ex., 101)] make it clear that a payment made by a party interested may be recovered, and it would be inconsistent to hold that services done would not equally give a right of action. Having mentioned section 69, we ought to add that the plaintiff cannot rely directly upon it, because the interest of the plaintiff and the duty of the defendants related to the doing of work and not to the payment of money.

The question whether the act was done for the defendants is one which must be determined according to the circumstances of the case, for one of two persons having a common interest in property may or may not intend to act for the other in the execution of [93] work upon the property. The fact that the latter was benefited by the work does not necessarily show that it was done for him. We think there must be a finding upon this question. There must also be a finding on the question of intention whether or not the intention of Government was to do the repairs at their own cost without making any charge on the zamindar.

Then comes the question whether in executing the repairs the Government acted lawfully. It is clear that actual consent or request on the part of the defendants need not be proved. It is because the party interested is absent and had given no mandate that the right of action on the part of the negotiorum gestor accrues—Justinian Institutes Lib. III, Tit. XXVII. On the other hand, if the Roman law is to be followed it must be shown that the act done is one to which the party to be charged would have assented had he been consulted and the doing of which he had not forbidden. (See Colquhoun Roman Civil Law, § 1766, etc.)

It is plain that the section ought not to be so read as to justify the officious interference of one man with the affairs or property of another, or to impose obligations in respect of services which the person sought to be charged did not wish to have rendered.

Reimbursement of person paying money due by another in payment of which he is interested.

*[Sec. 69:—A person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other.]

In the present case there can be no doubt that the Government acted lawfully in repairing the tank. The act was lawful whether done with a view of benefiting all the villages under the tank or the Government villages only, and whether or not done with the intention of charging the zamindars. Having regard to the fact that the zamindars knew of the intention to execute the repairs and did not disapprove, we think that if the repairs were done for the zamindars, they were done lawfully for them.

The final condition required by the section is that the person charged should have enjoyed the benefit of the act done. On this question an issue was raised, but the finding on it is not satisfactory. Indeed the District Judge does not purport to deal with it exactly. Seeing that the greater number of the villages irrigated by the tank are raiyatwari villages, prima facie, we should suppose that the benefit derived by the zamindars from the repairs was less than that derived by Government. Regard must be had to the irrigable area of the villages owned by Government and the zamindars, respectively. The fact that kist is paid by the zamindars has nothing to do with the matter. If the cultivated area belonging to the Government villages and [94] watered by the tank is larger than that of the zamindar's villages the Government has in the same proportion been the greater gainer by the preservation of the tank. There must be a distinct finding on the fifth issue.

The finding is to be submitted within one month from the date of the reopening of the Court after the recess, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections after the finding has been posted up in this Court.

In compliance with the above order, the District Judge submitted the finding in the following terms:--

I find that the plaintiff did not intend to do this work gratuitously for the defendants.

There can be no doubt defendants have enjoyed the benefit of the work.

This appeal came on for final disposal, and the Court delivered the following

Judgment :—The finding on the first issue is not questioned.

As to the second issue there is some evidence that the plaintiff did not intend to do the work gratuitously, and there is certainly no evidence to the contrary.

We must accept the finding and dismiss the appeal with costs.

NOTES.

[Messrs. Pollock and Mulla in their Indian Contract Act III Edn. (1913) p. 308 draw attention to this, that "it was not found in the case that there was any request express or implied on the part of the zamindar to the Government to execute the repairs, though the Court expressed the opinion (18 Mad., at 90) that if the facts were properly ascertained a request might have been implied."

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Srinivasachariar.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Rangammal and others.....(Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3)

Respondents.*

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 171, 568 and 582—Remand—Direction by Appellate Court for the taking of further evidence.

In a suit on a hypothecation bond the plaintiff relied in bar of limitation on endorsements of part-payments appearing on the bond. The Court of First Instance held that the endorsements were genuine. The Court of First Appeal remanded the suit for further evidence to be taken with regard to the endorsements and [95] directed the Court to record an opinion on the question of the handwriting of the endorsements; and held upon the return of the evidence that the endorsements were forgeries and dismissed the suit:

Held, that the evidence taken on the remand was legally admitted.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of W. Dumergue, District Judge of Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suit No. 1 of 1891, reversing the decree of P. Dorasami Ayyar, District Munsif of Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 210 of 1889.

Suit to recover principal and interest upon a hypothecation bond, dated 8th September 1886. In bar of limitation reliance was placed on endorsements of part-payments appearing on the instrument sued upon, which were alleged by the defendants to be forgeries. The District Munsif held that the endorsements were proved and passed a decree for the plaintiff. On appeal the then District Judge of Trichinopoly directed that further evidence be taken by the District Munsif as to the handwriting of the endorsements in question.

The then District Munsif recorded further evidence as directed, and found that the endorsements had been forged. This finding was adopted on appeal by the District Judge of Trichinopoly, who accordingly reversed the decree and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Mr. Wedderburn and Rangachariar for Appellant.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondents.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—It is conceded that but for the endorsements on the hypothecation bond A, the suit would be barred by limitation. The District Judge concurs in the finding of the District Munsif on remand that the endorsements are not genuine. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the finding is illegal, as it rests upon evidence improperly admitted on appeal. It is urged that the District Judge was in error in remanding the case for further evidence and that the remand is illegal. The third issue recorded in this suit was whether the claim was barred by limitation; and upon the evidence originally adduced by the parties with reference to that issue, the District Munsif came to the conclusion that the endorsements were genuine and that the suit was not barred by limitation. On appeal, however, defendants objected to the finding. Thereupon, the District Judge considered it desirable that further evidence should be taken [96] as to the handwriting of the two endorsements of payments and that there was a large number of disinterested witnesses well acquainted with the hand-writing of the deceased Tirumala Thatha Chariar, who made the endorsements. On this view, he remanded the suit for further evidence being taken, and this procedure on the part of the District Judge is impugned as illegal. Though the order purports to remand the suit, there was no remand within the meaning of section 562 of the Civil Procedure Code. In substance, it was only an order that further evidence be taken on the third issue and that such evidence be returned to the District Court with the opinion of the District Munsif as to its effect on the question of the handwriting in which the endorsements are made. Our decision must, therefore, depend on the construction we put upon section 568, Civil Procedure Code, and its scope. The first principle to be remembered in connection with that section is that the production of additional evidence in appeal is not a matter of right and the section accordingly confers a discretionary power on the Appellate Court. The general rule is that the Appellate Court ought to decide the appeal on those materials only which the parties think proper to furnish in the Court of First Instance and not on substantially new evidence introduced on appeal to mend the case of either party.

The first exception mentioned in section 568 is where the Court of First Instance refuses to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted. This is founded on the principle that neither party should be improperly precluded from putting before the Court such materials as he desires to furnish for decision, provided that they are proper materials.

The second exception mentioned in section 568 is when the Appellate Court requires any document produced or any witness examined to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause. This is a discretionary power conferred upon the Appellate Courts in the interests of justice. With reference to it LORD WESTBURY observes that the power to take fresh evidence is a power which may be very wholesome, but adds that the reasons for exercising the power should always be recorded. This is necessary to see whether the discretionary power is carefully exercised and new evidence is not lightly introduced into the record. LORD WESTBURY further remarks that the power should be very sparingly exercised, because when it is not done at the [97] instance of the parties but at the suggestion of the Court itself, witnesses may be called who are not the witnesses the parties themselves would have thought fit to call, and it is possible that the new original enquiry by the Court may be itself imperfect and not sufficiently extensive to answer the purposes of justice. Whilst pointing out this danger likely to arise from the Appellate Court lightly introducing new evidence, the Judicial Committee say that no general rule can be laid down, whilst LORD WESTBURY considers that it is a very wholesome power if exercised cautiously and within proper limits, Gunga Gobind Mundul v. The Collector of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs (11 M. I. A., 345). As regards the second case mentioned in section 568, it was held with reference to section 355 of Act VIII of 1859 that the Appellate Court might take fresh evidence where the evidence has been taken so imperfectly by the Court of First Instance that the Lower Appellate Court cannot pass a satisfactory judgment, Joog Maya Debia v. Ramchunder Chatterjee (10 W. R., 379), Mohesh Chunder Doss v. Madhub Chunder Sirdar (13 W. R., 85). In the case before us the new evidence taken was, in my opinion, taken in the proper exercise of the discretion vested in the Appellate Court. The enquiry as to the genuineness of the endorsements was so imperfect and incomplete that the Judge found it difficult to proceed to judgment without the evidence of several disinterested persons who were acquainted with the handwriting of the person, who was alleged to have made the endorsements. The result was that in the light of the new evidence, both Courts came to the conclusion that the endorsements were forged. The new evidence ordered to be taken was ordered to cure a defect in the enquiry made by the Court of First Instance, and to enable the Court to value the existing evidence in the light of disinterested evidence. There is nothing to show that it was one-sided or not sufficiently extensive for purposes of justice.

Again, as for the appellant's contention, that Exhibits III to XI are not proved, it must be observed that the District Munsif refers to the evidence in detail and names the witnesses who prove them. This second appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

Shephard, J.—On the first hearing of the appeal the District Judge, by order, dated 2nd December 1891, remanded the case to the District Munsif for further evidence with a direction to the [98] District Munsif to return such evidence together with his opinion on the question of the handwriting of the endorsements. The reason given by him for taking this course was that, in his opinion, there must be in existence papers signed by the alleged writer of the endorsements and witnesses who would be able to speak to his writing.

It is quite clear that the case was not one in which a remand, as that term is used in the code, was legally possible—nor in fact did the Judge purport to remand the case in the manner prescribed by section 562. Again, it is clear that section 566 cannot be called in aid, for there was no omission on the part of the District Munsif to determine any question of fact or frame or try any issue. The only provision of this part of the code which can be indicated as justifying the order of the Judge is that contained in section 568, and that section does not authorize the Appellate Court to call for an opinion on the new evidence. It was contended that the circumstances were not such as to justify the application of that section at all and that, at any rate, the District Judge who ultimately disposed of the appeal ought not to have treated the District Munsif's opinion given in pursuance of the order of the Judge as a legal finding or judgment. On the respondents' behalf reliance was placed on clause (b) of section 568, and it was said that if the examination of further witnesses was not required to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment, there was at any rate 'other substantial cause' justifying the order of the Judge. We were also referred to the provisions of chapter XIV and especially section 171 which enables the Court, if at any time it thinks necessary, to cause any person to be examined as a witness, and to the provisions of Section 582 giving the Appellate Court the same powers and imposing upon it the same duties as are conferred and imposed by the code on Courts of original jurisdiction. Seeing that by section 568 special provision is made for particular cases in which Appellate Courts may require additional evidence, I think it is impossible to hold that an Appellate Court should in such cases exercise the general powers given by section 171. The two sections must be read together and the conditions imposed by the later section must not be disregarded. I have felt great doubt on the question whether, in the circumstances of the present case, the act of the Judge in permitting fresh evidence to be taken could be justified. According, however, to the cases [99] decided on this section 568 and the corresponding section of the code of 1859, it must be taken that the law does allow a discretion to the Appellate Court and that it cannot be said to be illegal to admit evidence as was done in the present case. It cannot be said that the Judge gave no reasons for this order. I agree with the conclusion at which Sir T. MUTTUSAMI AYYAR has arrived.

APPELLATE CIVIL—FULL BENCH.

The 3rd and 24th March, the 23rd and 24th November, 1893, and 30th April and 18th October, 1894.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE
MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Veeramma.....(Defendant No. 1) Appellant

versus

Abbiah and another.....(Defendant No. 2 and Plaintiff) Respondents.*

Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, s. 7—Registration Act—Act III of 1877, s. 77—Suit by infant to enforce registration—Special rule of limitation.

The Registration Act, 1877, being a special Act complete in itself, the provisions of Limitation Act, s. 7, do not apply to suits instituted under section 77 for a decree directing a document to be registered :

Held, accordingly, that a suit by an infant to enforce the registration of a conveyance having been instituted more than thirty days after refusal on the part of a Registrar to register it is barred by limitation.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 515 of 1891, modifying the decree of D. Raghavendra Rau, District Munsif of Karempudi, in Original Suit No. 63 of 1890.

The plaintiff was an infant and he sued by his next friend to enforce registration of a conveyance, dated 30th August 1889, and executed by one Yegamma, deceased, in his favour.

It appeared that the conveyance was presented for registration to the Sub-Registrar of Narasaraopet, who refused to register it on 15th October 1889, and that by an order, dated 14th January 1890, the District Registrar declined to interfere and direct its [100] registration and that the plaint in this suit was presented on 14th February 1890.

The District Munsif passed a decree for the plaintiff without costs and on appeal the District Judge modified the decree by directing that the defendant should pay the costs of the plaintiff.

The defendant preferred this second appeal.

Sriramulu Sastri for Appellant.

Narayana Rau for Respondent.

* Second Appeal No. 1125 of 1892.

The second appeal came on for hearing before COLLINS, C.J., and SHEPHARD, J., and their Lordships made the following order of reference to the Full Bench.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO FULL BENCH.—The question is whether this suit, being instituted after the thirty days allowed by section 77 of the Registration Act, is nevertheless maintainable by reason of the plaintiff's infancy. The Courts below have given judgment in his favour, holding that the provisions of section 7 of the Limitation Act are applicable to, and govern, a suit for which special provision is made by the above-mentioned section of the Registration Act.

The respondent's vakil in support of this judgment, while admitting that there are decisions to the contrary in the other High Courts, relies on the judgment of this Court in Kuliyappa v. Lakshmipathi (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 471), where it is said that it has been several times decided that the general sections of the Limitation Act are applicable to suits for which periods of limitation are prescribed other than those prescribed in the second schedule to the Act. In that particular case it was held that the plaintiff in a suit to which section 78 of the Rent Recovery Act applied was entitled to the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act. It was unnecessary to decide the point which arises in the present case. In this and in the earlier case, Reference under Forest Act of 1882 (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 210), it seems to have been considered that the language of section 6 justified the inference that the general provisions of the Act were applicable to cases provided for by special rules of limitation so long as the period prescribed by such rules was not altered or affected. As a general rule, a statute prescribing rules for special and exceptional cases is not controlled by subsequent legislation of a general character. Abergavenny v. Brace (L. R., 7 Ex., 170). Accordingly, in a case where a claim [101] was made under Act IX of 1859 to recover confiscated property, and the suit was brought more than a year after the seizure of the property, it was held by the Judicial Committee that the disability of the plaintiff could not save him from the operation of the section limiting the time to one year. The following language is used by the Judicial Committee:—"It was said that the clauses in the General Statute, Act XIV of 1859, relating to disabilities might be imported into this Act, but this cannot properly be done. Act XIV is a Code of Limitation of general application. This Act is of a special kind and does not admit of those enactments being annexed to it." Mohummud Bahadoor Khan v. The Collector of Bareilly (L. R., 1 I. A., 176). See Phoolbas Koonwur v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahoy (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 242). In a recent case decided in Calcutta with reference to section 7 of the Limitation Act and to the Bengal Act VIII of 1869, the Court for other reasons arrives at the same conclusion. Girija Nath Roy Bahadur v. Patani Bibee (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 263). It is noted in that case that the language of section 7 of the Limitation Act referring to "the same period after the disability has ceased as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the second schedule hereto annexed" is not applicable to suits for which a special period is prescribed by another Act and which therefore cannot be governed by any of the articles in the second schedule. This is a consideration which makes the present case further distinguishable from the Madras case decided with regard to section 14 of the Limitation Act. Since the decision in Girija Nath Roy Bahadur v. Patani Bibee (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 263), the question "whether the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act are applicable to a suit for arrears of rent under Act X of 1859" came before a Full Bench, and the question was answered in the negative. The ratio decidendi seems to be that the Act X of 1859, where it is in force, is a Code complete in itself unaffected by the general law of limitation—Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (I.L.R., 18 Cal., 368). This decision can hardly be reconciled with the decision in Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 314), also a case where the rent law was in question, or with the reasoning founded on that case in Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 267)—which latter is one of the authorities relied on in Kullayappa v. [102] Lakshmipathi (I.L.R., 12 Mad., 471) and also in Reference under Forest Act of 1882 (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 210). The cases in Nijabutoola v. Wazir Ali (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 910) and Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 267) are both cases of suits under the Registration Act. The decision in Guracharya v. The President of the Belgaum Town Municipalities (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 529) which follows that in Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 314) and Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 267) is open to the same observation, viz., that the authorities on which it is founded are shaken by the Full Bench decision in Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 368).

In this state of things and considering the general importance of the question, it seems to us best to refer to a Full Bench the question whether a minor plaintiff suing under section 77 of the Registration Act for a decree directing a document to be registered and presenting his plaint more than thirty days after refusal on the part of the Registrar to register such document is barred by limitation?

This case then came on for hearing before the Full Bench.

Sriramulu Sastri for Appellant.

Narayana Rau for Respondent No. 1.

Collins, C.J.—The question referred to a Full Bench is whether the provisions of section 7 of the Limitation Act are applicable to, and govern, a suit for which special provision is made by section 77 of the Registration Act.

Act III of 1877 appears to be a Special Act complete in itself, and according to a well-established rule for the construction of statutes it should be presumed that the Legislature did not intend by a general enactment to interfere with it. LORD HATHERLEY, when Vice-Chancellor, in Fitzgerald v. Champneys [50 L. J. (Ch.), 777] at page 782, thus states the proposition of law :—“The reason is that the Legislature having had its attention directed to a special subject and observed all the circumstances of the case and provided for them, does not intend by a general enactment afterwards to derogate from its own act when it makes no special mention of its intention to do so.”

Section 77 of Act III of 1877 enacts that, when the Registrar [103] refuses to order the document to be registered under section 72 or 76, any person claiming under such document or his representative, assign or agent may within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal institute in the Civil Court a suit for a decree directing the document to be registered.

It appears to me that it was the intention of the Legislature that questions affecting the registration of deeds should be as soon as possible decided; and to allow a number of years to elapse, as in the case of a minor, would be to defeat the intention of the Act.

A Full Bench of the Calcutta Court in Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 368) have decided that the provisions of section 14 of Act XV of 1877 are not applicable for arrears of rent under Act X of 1859, on the ground that Act X of 1859 is a Code complete in itself.

I am, therefore, of opinion that Act III of 1877 being a special Act complete in itself, the provisions of section 7 of the Limitation Act do not apply.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—The question referred for the opinion of the Full Bench is whether section 7 of the General Act of Limitations governs a suit instituted under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act. The latter enactment refers specially to the subject of registration, and section 77 provides that, when the Registrar refuses to order a document to be registered under section 72 or section 76, any person claiming under such document or his representative, assign or agent may, within thirty days after the making of the order of refusal, institute a suit for a decree directing the document to be registered in such office, if it be duly presented for registration within thirty days after the passing of such decree. Section 7 of the General Act of Limitations enacts that if a person entitled to institute a suit be, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor or insane or an idiot, he may institute the suit within the same period after the disability has ceased as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor, by the third column of the second schedule thereto annexed. The question for determination is whether a suit under section 77 of Act III of 1877 may be instituted within the time prescribed therefor after the cessation of the disability. Our decision must depend on the [104] construction to be put on section 6 of the Limitation Act and on the nature of Act III of 1877 as a Code complete in itself on the subject of limitation.

The general rule is no doubt that laid down in Abergavenny v. Brace (L. R., 7 Ex., 170), viz., that a statute prescribing rules for special subjects is not controlled by subsequent legislation of a general character. But the operation of this rule may be precluded in regard to particular enactments either by express legislation or by the inference which may be drawn from the character of a special enactment as a complete code or otherwise. The question must resolve itself ultimately into one of intention of the Legislature either express or implied.

I may here refer to two decisions of the Privy Council which illustrate and explain the principles that ought to guide our decision as to implied intention. The case of Mohummud Bahadoor Khan v. The Collector of Bareilly (L. R., 1 I. A., 167) is an authority for the proposition that Act IX of 1859 is a special enactment complete in itself and that its provisions are such as do not permit of section 6 of the General Limitation Act being imported into them without incongruity. Their Lordships of the Privy Council observe in that case as follows :—“That Act was passed for the special purpose of providing a Court for the adjudication of claims of innocent persons upon the property of rebels which had been forfeited to the Government. It established a special Court consisting of three Commissioners and suspended the action of all other Courts in respect of such claims. Special modes of proceeding are established and various clauses in the Act refer to that special course of procedure. There are also provisions in the Act which relate not merely to the Court so established and the procedure under it, but are of a general character and apply to the property forfeited in whatever court claims may be made regarding it. Section 20 provided that no suits brought by any party in respect to such property shall be entertained unless it be instituted within the period of one year from the date of the attachment or seizure of the property to which the suit relates. It was said that the clauses in the General Statute, Act XIV of 1859, relating to disabilities might be imported into the Act, but this cannot be properly done. Act XIV is a Code of Limitation [105] of general application, while this Act is of a special kind and does not admit of those enactments being annexed to it.”

Again, in Mussumat Phoolbas Koonwur v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahoy (L. R., 3 I. A., 7), the question arose whether a suit brought under section 246 of Act VIII of 1859 is governed by sections 11 and 12 of Act XIV of 1859. The Judicial Committee then held that the appellant in that case was under disability within the meaning of those sections, and that the suit having been brought during disability, though after the expiration of one year, was brought in time. Their Lordships explained the grounds of decision in these terms :—
 “The two statutes (Acts VIII and XIV of 1859) were passed in the same year. The object of the first was to enact a general Code of Procedure for the Courts of Civil Judicature not established by Royal Charter. The object of the second was to establish a general law of limitation in supersession both of the regulations which had governed those Courts and of the English statutes which had regulated the practice of the Courts established by Royal Charter. Looking to the fifth sub-section of the 1st section and the 3rd and 11th sections of Act XIV of 1859, their Lordships have no doubt that the intention of the Legislature was that the period of limitation resulting from section 246 of Act VIII of 1859 should in the case of a minor be modified by the operation of the 11th section of Act XIV, and that this construction has obtained in the Courts in India appears from the case cited—Huro Soondurce Chowdhram v. Anundnath Roy Chowdhry (3 W. R., Civil Rulings, 8).”

Adverting to the previous decision they say :—“That case is distinguishable from the present. It arose upon a very special statute and upon that ground the judgment rests.”

These cases were decided with reference to Act XIV of 1859, section 3 of which is substantially the same as section 6 of the present Limitation Act, and they are authorities for the proposition that, when the Act to be modified by section 6 is of a very special kind, complete in itself, and it does not admit of the several provisions of the Limitation Act being imported into it without incongruity and without defeating the intention of the Legislature, it is not controlled by the general provisions of the Limitation Act.

[106] As regards section 6 of the Limitation Act, it is in these terms :—
 “When, by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India, a period of limitation is specially prescribed for any suit, nothing herein contained shall affect or alter the period so prescribed.” The language of the corresponding section in Act IX of 1871 was to the effect that nothing therein contained shall affect that law. Act XIV of 1859, s. 3, provided that when by any law now or hereafter to be in force, a shorter period of limitation is prescribed, such shorter limitation shall be applied, notwithstanding this Act. The question is how and whether the alteration of the language of section 6 of Act IX of 1871 is material or significant. It is contended that the present Act only explains Act IX of 1871, but I am unable to accede to this contention. It appears to be significant, when regard is had to the course of legislation on the question of limitation. Prior to 1859, there were different systems of limitation laws, not only in different Presidencies but also in different Courts in the same Presidency. In 1842, the Indian Law Commissioners framed a bill embodying a uniform law of limitation for all the Courts in British India. With some amendments suggested by Sir JAMES COLVILLE and Sir BARNES PEACOCK, Act XIV of 1859 was framed on that bill. But the Privy Council since remarked that it was an inartistically drawn statute, and Act IX of 1871 was then framed on a scientific plan, Act XV of 1877 reproducing it with certain important amendments. The scheme of the present Act consists in dividing the limitation law into four parts and in collecting the preliminary rules into the first part, certain rules of general application and rules relating to computation of the period of limitation into the second and third parts and in appending to them a tricolunar schedule, specifying the several descriptions of suits, the period of limitation in regard to each, and the time from which the period begins to run. The scientific arrangement according to which rules of limitation are classified and distributed gives a significance to the substitution of the words 'affect or alter the period prescribed' for the words 'affect or alter that law.' The course of legislation also discloses an intention to limit the operation of special or local laws, as a general rule, to the periods mentioned therein, unless they are Codes complete in themselves, and to restore Act XIV of 1859 which confined their operation to the short periods [107] prescribed and to repeal Act IX of 1871 which excluded all provisions of the general law of limitations.

There is another standpoint from which the alteration of language appears to be material. There are various Local and Special Acts now in force, and all of them are not so framed as to be complete and independent Codes so far as they relate to limitation, and this probably created the necessity for embodying in section 6, a general direction applicable to those Special or Local Acts which are not from their frame complete Codes. There is considerable authority in support of this view. I may first refer to the two decisions of the Privy Council already cited which were passed when Act XIV of 1859 was in force. I shall next refer to three cases decided by the High Court at Calcutta. In Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (I. L. R., 5 Cal. 314), it was held that section 5* of the Limitation Act applied to suits instituted under section 30 of Bengal Act VIII of 1859, and the ground of decision was that the language of section 6 of the present Act of Limitations as compared with that of section 6 of Act IX of 1871 suggests that it was the intention of the Legislature to give to persons suing under the Special Act, the benefit of the general provisions of the General Limitation Act. The next case is that of Nijabutoola v. Wazir Ali (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 910). In that case section 5 of the General Limitation Act was applied to a suit brought under section 77 of the Registration Act, the ratio decidendi being that the proper interpretation to be put on section 5 considered together with section 6 is that, except as defined in section 6, the general provisions of the Limitation Act are applicable to cases for which short periods of limitation are specially provided by local or special laws. The third case is that of Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 267) decided by Sir R. GARTH, C. J., and Mr. Justice O'KINEALY, which approved of the interpretation placed on section 6 in Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 314) and Nijabutoola v. Wazir Ali (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 910) and applied section 14 of Act XV of 1877 to a suit instituted under section 77 of the Registration Act.

* [Sec. 5:—If the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, presented or made on the day that the Court re-opens.

Proviso as to appeals and applications for review.

Any appeal or application for a review of judgment may be admitted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor, when the appellant or applicant satisfied the Court that he had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal or making the application within such period.]

In Guracharya v. The President of the Belgaum Town Municipalities (I. L. R., 8 Bom., 529), the Bombay High Court approved of the decision in Golap Chand Nowluckha v. Krishto Chunder Dass Biswas (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 314) and [108] applied section 14 of the General Limitation Act to the suit before them. In the reference made under the Forest Act, the High Court at Madras followed the Calcutta decision and applied section 5 of the general provisions to an appeal preferred under section 14 of the Forest Act. This decision was again followed in the case of Kullayappa v. Lakshminipathi (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 467), wherein it was held that section 14 of the Limitation Act applied to a suit brought under section 78 of the Rent Recovery Act and in the decision Mahadevi v. Vikramu (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 365, 369). It is true that the decision of a Divisional Bench of the High Court at Calcutta in Girija Nath Roy Bahadur v. Patani Bibee (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 264) and the decision of the Full Bench in Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 371) are in conflict with the previous decisions, but the conflict is rather apparent than real. In the former, the special law under which the suit was brought was Bengal Act VIII of 1869. The Court observed that that Act not only prescribed a special period of limitation for suits to recover arrears of rent, but also prescribed rules relating to other matters. The learned Judges also laid stress on the language of section 7, in particular on the words "in the third column of second schedule hereto annexed" as being words of reference to the General Limitation Act only. The suit referred to in Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 371) was brought under Act X of 1859 and the learned Judges observed that Act X of 1859 had always been considered to be a Code complete in itself and unaffected by the General Laws of Limitation. Relying therefore on the principles laid down by the Privy Council in Mohummud Buhadoor Khan v. The Collector of Bareilly (L. R., 1 I. A., 167) and Mussumat Phoolbas Koonwur v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahoy (L. R., 3 I. A., 7) the conclusion I come to, both on the construction of section 6 of Act XV of 1877 and on authority, is that the general provisions of the last-mentioned Act modifying the operation of Special or Local Acts, unless they are complete Codes in themselves, are not on that ground affected by the General Act of Limitations.

The next question which arises for decision is whether Act III of 1877 is a Code complete in itself, so as to render it incongruous to import into it the general provisions of the Limitation Act. I have already referred to the language of section 77 and certainly [109] it discloses an intention to fix a short period of limitation not only for instituting a suit under that section, but also for the enforcement of the decree mentioned therein.

Again, section 77 pre-supposes an order by the Registrar refusing registration under section 72; and section 71 directs him to state his reasons for such refusal. By section 23 a Registrar is bound to refuse to register an instrument unless it is presented for registration within four months from the date of its execution. By sections 24 and 25 the time prescribed for presentation of the document for registration is extended by four months more subject to certain conditions. Take for instance, the case of a refusal by the Registrar on the ground that the document was not presented within the prescribed time,—and I do not think that the Civil Courts can set aside an order of refusal which is based on those sections which disclose an intention to enforce presentation for registration within a determinate period.

Again, section 32 provides that every document must be presented for registration by some person executing or claiming under the instrument or by the representative or assign of such person or by the agent of such person.

This section does not apparently contemplate the case of disability, and make a special provision in regard to it and the probable inference is that when a document is executed in favour of a minor, his legal guardian is taken to represent him for the purpose of registering it. It must also be remembered that the right to register a document is a right created by the Act and when it prescribes a remedy for its exercise and limits the time for such exercise the remedy must ordinarily be taken to be what is provided therein.

Further, the object of the Registration Act in prescribing compulsory registration within a determinate and short period is to prevent fabrication of documents and that object will be defeated if the time for registration is indefinitely prolonged during the continuance of disabilities.

Thus, there are detailed rules in the Registration Act showing that the intention is to prescribe a determinate time for registration as of the essence of the Act and that indefinite extension is likely to defeat the object of registration. I am of opinion that it would be incongruous to import into it the general provisions of the Limitation Act, and on this ground I hold that the Registration Act is of a special kind, in that it discloses an intention to [110] prescribe a specific and determinate period for registration, and that it contains rules of limitation complete in themselves. I therefore answer the question in the negative.

Shephard, J.—The question is whether the provisions of the Limitation Act with regard to disabilities are applicable to a suit brought under section 77 of the Registration Act. Section 77 is the last of a series of sections directing the course to be adopted on the refusal of the Sub-Registrar or Registrar to register a document. By section 72 provision is made for an appeal against the order of the Sub-Registrar not being made on the ground of denial of execution. The section requires the appeal to be presented within thirty days from the date of the order. In the case of the Sub-Registrar refusing to register on the ground of denial of execution, section 73 provides that the party aggrieved may apply to the Registrar in order to establish his right to have the document registered. That section also requires the application to be made within thirty days of the date of the order. In the enquiry which the Registrar holds on such application the Registrar exercises judicial functions and has the ordinary powers of a civil Court. In the event of the Registrar refusing to register a document whether in the first instance presented to himself or to the Sub-Registrar, section 77 provides for a remedy by a suit in the civil Court. Again, the section requires the suit to be brought within thirty days from the date of the order of refusal. It seems clear that the intention of the Legislature was in all these cases alike to reduce to the shortest limits the time in which parties aggrieved by a Sub Registrar's or Registrar's orders might take action. As is the case with other statutes limiting specially the time in which the acts of public officials may be impugned no provision is made for the case of disabilities or for the other cases in which according to the Limitation Act time does not run against the plaintiff or some deduction is made in computing the period of limitation. The exception in favour of infants is not one which is necessarily implied in statutes of Limitation. "When the words in their ordinary and common signification are sufficient to include infants, the virtual exception must be drawn from the intention of the Legislature, manifested by other parts of the law, from the general purpose and design of the law, and from the subject-matter of it."—Beckford v. Wade (17 Ves., 87, 92).

[111] I cannot find any manifestation of such intention in the Registration Act, nor do I think it can be said that there is any hardship in requiring an aggrieved person to take action within a month although he may happen to be under a disability. In the transaction which has led up to the execution of a document, the person interested as purchaser, if himself incapable of action, must have had some representative or agent to act for him, and section 77 provides that the representative or agent of any person claiming under the document may institute the suit in case of refusal to register.

It was argued for the plaintiff that an intention on the part of the Legislature to engraft exceptions on the general words of the Act has been manifested in the Limitation Act, 1877.

According to the Limitation Act in force when the Registration Act was passed, it is quite clear that no allowance could be made for the disability of the plaintiff not provided for by any special Act, for section 6 of the Act of 1871 expressly saves any law by which a period of limitation differing from that prescribed by the Act is specially prescribed. In the latter Act of 1877, s. 6 appears in a different form, more nearly resembling the language of section 3 of the Act of 1859. In the new section 6 it is provided that nothing therein contained shall affect or alter the period specially prescribed by any special law. It is contended that, although in the absence of any such provision a special rule of limitation should be treated as complete in itself and unaffected by the general law of limitation, the effect of this section is to make the general law of limitation applicable to special cases in all matters save the length of the period prescribed. Thus, in a suit under the Registration Act, the plaintiff could, it is argued, take advantage of any of the sections 5th or 7th or 8th, 14th, 18th or 19th of the Act of Limitation. I cannot believe that this was the intention of the Legislature, nor do I think that section 6 will bear this construction. It appears to me that the period fixed by a special law is affected if not altered, when by virtue of the general law of limitation the starting point is altered and the period is made to begin on the cessation of the plaintiff's disability. According to this contention the plaintiff is entitled to thirty days computed from the last mentioned date instead of thirty days computed from the date of the order as provided in the Registration Act. I am unable to accept the construction put upon the section in some of the cases [112] Behari Loll Mookerjee v. Mungolnath Mookerjee (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 110), Reference under Forest Act of 1882 (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 210) and am clearly of opinion that the language of the section does not evince any intention to qualify the operation of the Registration Act in respect of the provision contained in section 77.

With regard to the authorities I find a great fluctuation of opinion. The most important and recent decision is that of the Full Bench of Calcutta with reference to a case under the Act X of 1859. Being of opinion that that enactment was a Code complete in itself, the Court held that the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act were not applicable to a suit brought under it. Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohan Parhi (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 368). In an earlier case the same Court arrived at a like conclusion with reference to section 7 of the Limitation Act and some stress was laid on the language of this section Girija Nath Roy Bahadur v. Palani Bibee (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 267). The Full Bench decision is in accordance with the principle laid down by the Privy Council in a case relating to a claim to recover confiscated property for which special provision was made by Act IX of 1859. See Kery Kolitany v. Moneeram Kolita (13 B. L. R., 60), Mohammad Buhadoor Khan v. The Collector of Bareilly (L. R., 1 I. A., 167, 176), Phoolbas Koonwur v. Lalla Jogeshur Sahoy (I. L. R., 1 Cal., 242), Poulson v. Madhusudan Pal Chowdhry (B. L. R., Sup. Vol., 101). The present case is, I think, within the principle of these decisions. On the other hand, there are certainly several decisions in the other sense including decisions of the Bengal High Court and of this Court. In two of them a suit under the Registration Act was in question, Nijabutoolla v. Wazir Ali (I. L. R., 8 Cal., 910), Khetter Mohun Chuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (I. L. R., 10 Cal., 265). Here there have been similar decisions with reference to the Forest Act and the Rent Act. Reference under Forest Act of 1882 (I. L. R., 10 Mad., 210), and K. Sanyappa v. Lakshminpathi (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 471), see however In re Syed Mohidin Hussien Saheb (8 M. H. C. R., 44) and Thir Sing v. Venkataramier (I. L. R., 3 Mad., 92). Except the case in Girija Nath Roy Bahadur v. Patani Bibee (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 267), no decision with reference to the provision for disabilities was cited. I am unable to find any similar English case and this want of authority is, I think, significant, as there are several statutes [113] relating to public bodies and official acts prescribing special rules of limitation and not providing for disabilities (see Darby and Bosanquet's Treatise on Limitation in page 669).

In my opinion the question submitted to us must be answered in the negative.

This second appeal then came on for final disposal before COLLINS, C.J., and SHEPHARD, J., and the Court delivered the following judgment :—

Judgment :—The decree must be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th and 21st August and 26th September, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD

Ramasami Chetti.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Mangaikarasu Nachiar and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Hindu law—Mortgage of zamindari lands by zamindar's widow to secure her husband's debts—Appropriation of the assets of deceased towards payment of his debts.

In a suit on a mortgage of lands forming part of a zamindari, it appeared that the zamindar died without issue, being indebted to the plaintiff, and that his widow subsequently borrowed money from the plaintiff for her own purposes, including litigation successfully prosecuted by her to make good her claim to the estate. The widow being pressed for payment executed the mortgage sued on and afterwards paid to the plaintiff two sums, being the proceeds of the sale of her husband's jewels and of the execution of a decree in his favour realized after his death. These sums were appropriated to the payment of the widow's debt by the mortgagee who, after her death, brought the present suit against the deceased zamindar's mother then come into possession of the estate, his undivided half-brothers being joined also as defendants :

Held, (1), that the widow was entitled to mortgage the estate for the payment of her husband's debts, and was not bound to discharge them out of income ;

(2), that the two payments by the widow of money belonging to the estate of the deceased zamindar should have been applied in liquidation of his debt.

APPEAL by the plaintiff against the decree of Venkataranga Ayyar, Subordinate Judge of Madura (East), in Original Suit No. 36 of [114] 1890, and a memorandum of objections by the defendants against the same decree.

Suit to recover principal and interest due upon a hypothecation bond, dated 5th July, 1888, and executed in favour of the plaintiff by one Thanga Nachiar, the widow of the late Zamindar of Pandalkudi, who had died without issue on 29th November, 1887. It was stipulated in the bond that the obligor should pay the principal sum on the 4th July, 1889, together with interest at 12 per cent. per annum, and that in default of payment on the specified date compound interest should be paid.

The consideration of the instrument sued upon was made up of the principal and interest of debts contracted by the late zamindar, and the property subject to the charge formed part of his estate. Thanga Nachiar had died before the institution of the present suit which was in the first instance brought against the mother of the late zamindar as sole defendant, it being averred that she was entitled to be and in fact was in possession of his properties. Subsequently his two divided step-brothers were brought on to the record as defendants by the orders of the Court.

The following were the issues framed in the suit :—

(1) Whether the items of consideration set forth in the hypothecation bond of 5th July 1888 were genuine debts due by the late Seemaichami Taver or not ?

(2) Whether assuming they were so, Thanga Nachiar was under any legal necessity to execute the hypothecation bond and whether it is a bona fide transaction and is binding on the defendants ?

(3) Whether the sum of Rs. 46,405-15-7 or any other and what sum was received by the plaintiff from the estate of the late Seemaichami Taver during the lifetime of Thanga Nachiar, and whether the plaintiff was bound in the first instance to have given credit for such sum towards the debt, if any, due by Seemaichami Taver as pleaded by the defendant ?

(4) Whether the provision in the hypothecation bond regarding compound interest is binding on the defendant ?

(5) Whether the plaintiff's claim is in any view barred by limitation ?

(6) What decree, if any, is plaintiff entitled to ?

The first and second issues were determined in favour of the plaintiff as also was the fourth, with regard to which the Subordinate [115] Judge quoted Chhab Nath v. Kamta Prasad (I. L. R., 7 All., 333), and also referred to evidence which showed that the deceased zamindar used to pay to the plaintiff compound interest on the sums from time to time borrowed by him.

The third issue was dealt with in paragraphs 22 to 27 of the Subordinate Judge's judgment. It appeared that two payments aggregating Rs. 16,200-11-6 were made to the plaintiff after the death of the late zamindar and out of his estate. These sums had been applied by the plaintiff towards the discharge of a debt due to him from Thanga Nachiar and not of that of the late zamindar ; these debts, theretofore treated in his accounts as one entire demand, being split into two with the object of effecting this appropriation. It was sought to be proved by the plaintiff that it was agreed between him and Thanga Nachiar or her agent that the payments should be appropriated in the above manner. The Subordinate Judge held that such an agreement if it were made in fact was opposed to the principles of the Hindu law and would have the effect of defrauding the reversionary heirs, and accordingly held that the payments should be treated as made in discharge of the husband's debts.

In the result the Subordinate Judge passed a decree for the plaintiff that the defendants do pay him Rs. 19, 106-1-4 within six months and in default that the property in question be sold.

Against this decree the plaintiff and defendants respectively preferred an appeal and took objection under Civil Procedure Code, section 561, on grounds which appear sufficiently for the purposes of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Subramanya Ayyar, Bhaskyam Ayyangar and Desikachariar for Appellant.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar, Srirangachariar, Bhaskiachariar and Thiruvengkatachariar for Respondents.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Madura (East), in so far as it disallows appellant's claim upon the hypothecation bond Z, dated the 8th July, 1888. Respondents object to the decree so far as it allows his claim under section 561 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 39,013-3-5, as principal and interest, simple and compound, due under Exhibit Z, but the decree awarded Rs. [116] 19,106-1-4 only. The contention on appeal is that the difference, viz., Rs. 19,900 and odd, has been improperly disallowed, and the objection taken by respondents is that the bond Z is not binding on the estate.

The five issues upon which the parties proceeded to trial are set forth in paragraph 5 of the original judgment, and the Subordinate Judge decided the first, second, fourth and fifth in appellant's favour, but on the third issue he upheld respondents' contention and credited to the debts sued for two sums of money, viz., Rs. 3,905-3-6 and Rs. 12,295-8-0. Whether the Subordinate Judge was right in doing so is what we have to determine in this appeal.

Appellant is a money-lender in the District of Madura. The first respondent is the mother of the last male owner of the hypothecated property, and she succeeded to it on the death of his widow, Thanga Nachiar. The second and third respondents are the half-brothers and the reversionary heirs of the late male owner Seemaichami alias Sivagyanaswami Taver.

Sivagyana Taver, commonly called the Pandalkudi Zamindar, borrowed from the appellant from time to time various sums of money. He borrowed first Rs. 6,761-5-0 on a promissory note, dated the 21st October, 1884. On diverse occasions he since obtained loans from the appellant on 48 letters (F1 to F48) which, on a settlement of accounts made on the 27th April, 1887, resulted in a balance in his favour to the extent of Rs. 17,542-14-7. The Subordinate Judge has found that on the last mentioned date the debtor consolidated the two debts, executed the promissory note C and took back the prior promissory note and the 48 letters. Subsequently, Mangalasami Taver, his agent, borrowed Rs. 1,800 upon the authority conveyed by Sivagyana Taver by yadasts S to S6. On the 29th November, 1887, the debtor died leaving him surviving a widow named Thanga Nachiar, the first respondent, his mother, and the second and third respondents, his divided step-brothers, Kottaisami Taver and Pandi Dorai. Thanga Nachiar desired, on her husband's death, to enter into possession of his estate, but her attempt was resisted by the other members of the family who wished the Court of Wards to take up its management on plea of the widow's youth and sex. Their opposition, however, failed, and the Court of Wards declined to supersede the widow who assumed management in March 1888. During this quartel she had occasion to borrow from time to time and the appellant accommodated her with loans and [117] as is alleged, probably took her side. She also borrowed monies for other purposes, and her own debts were considerable. On the 5th July 1888, she executed the hypothecation bond Z in favour of the appellant for Rs. 30,740-7-10, which was made up of Rs. 24,304-3-7 due under Exhibit C, of Rs. 1,800 borrowed under yadasts (S series) and of Rs. 4,636-4-3 interest due thereon. The hypothecation bond provided for interest on the consolidated amount at 12 per cent. per annum, and in default of payment, for consolidating the interest and the principal at the end of each year. It is in evidence that Sivagyana Taver's estate yielded Rs. 30,000 or Rs. 32,000 a year, that the peishush, cesses and poruppu amounted to about Rs. 14,000, that the cost of establishment was about Rs. 5,000, that the cost of repair and contingent charges amounted to Rs. 1,000, that the amount paid to the first defendant on account of her maintenance was Rs. 1,800 a year, and that the widow's net income was about Rs. 10,000 a year. She had to incur an expenditure of Rs. 6,000 or Rs. 7,000 in connection with the dispute about her management. It is also in evidence that she made payments to a large extent on account of her personal debts and placed part of the collection of her estate in view to their discharge under the direct and immediate control of the creditor.

Among the sums of money so paid to and appropriated by the appellant there are admittedly two payments, viz., (1). 12,295-8-0, (2) Rs. 3,905-3-6, which require to be noticed. The first item of payment represents the sale-proceeds of Sivagyana's jewels and the second item represents the produce of a decree in favour of Sivagyanam realized after his death by his widow. It was conceded by the appellant's pleader that at the date of appropriation the appellant was aware that the first item was made up of the sale-proceeds of Sivagyana's jewels. There is also reason to think that, in the circumstances of the case, the creditor had means of knowledge as regards the nature of the second item. Upon these facts the Subordinate Judge has held that the two items formed part of the corpus of Sivagyana's estate and that they ought to have been appropriated by the appellant to the debt due by the estate on the hypothecation bond. He discusses the question in paragraphs 22 to 27 of original judgment, and I agree in the conclusion at which he has arrived. The hypothecation debt was a charge on the estate, whilst it is not proved for the appellant that monies borrowed by Thanga Nachiar were mostly other than her personal debts. This being so, [118] what was recovered on account of the estate and what was realized by the sale of part of it ought to have been applied in its reduction, as the reversionsers would otherwise be defrauded.

In the case before us the creditor knew that the monies formed part of the estate, and the Subordinate Judge finds, and properly, I think, that the appropriation was the result of collusion between the widow's agent and the creditor. The splitting of the debts referred to by the Subordinate Judge in paragraph 25 of his judgment lends material support to this view of the facts. Moreover, the decision of the Subordinate Judge is in accordance with the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Hurro Nath Rai Chowdhri v. Randhir Singh (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 311; S.C. L. R., 18 I. A., 1). I disallow the first contention in appeal.

Another contention in appeal is that the Subordinate Judge ought to have awarded interest on the amount decreed from the date of plaint to date of realization, and I am of opinion that it must be upheld. Appellant is entitled to interest on the amount decreed at the contract rate from the date of plaint to that of the decree, and at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of decree to that of realization. The decree appealed against must be modified as indicated above with reference to interest and confirmed in other respects. The costs will be proportionately assessed.

As regards the memorandum of objections, respondents object to the whole decree.

The first ground of objection is as to the correctness of the Subordinate Judge's finding on the first issue and he deals with it and the second and fourth issues in paragraphs 6 to 21 of his judgment. I agree in the conclusions at which he has arrived. During the argument, respondents' pleader pressed on us four objections to the finding, viz., (i) that there was a considerable interval of time between the date on which document C was drawn up and the date on which it was signed by Sivagyana; (ii) that the evidence of plaintiff's second witness Somasundaram so far as it explains the delay is contradictory; (iii) that several others who might have been called as witnesses have not been called; and (iv) that a sum of Rs. 1,800 was twice included in the amount of debt entered in document Z. As to the first objection the evidence of Somasundaram affords satisfactory explanation. Although he made two conflicting statements, he made the second [119] statement of his own accord and corrected the first, and there is no sufficient reason to think that the discrepancy is not due to defective memory consequent on lapse of time. There is further the evidence of plaintiff's fourteenth witness as to the execution of C and it corroborates that of the second witness. It is true that certain persons who might have been called as witnesses have not been called. But taking the evidence as a whole it is so cogent and varied that it is not possible to come to any other finding than that to which the Subordinate Judge has come. The objection as to Rs. 1,807 being included twice over has no foundation in fact, and the appellant's pleader has shown by reference to the accounts that it is founded on a misconception of certain entries in Exhibit OOO. As regards the contention that there was no necessity for the execution of the mortgage, there is evidence that the creditor insisted on the payment of Sivagyana's debts due on the estate. Under Hindu law, a widow is at liberty to sell a portion of the estate to pay those debts, as the heritage she or any heir is entitled to consists of Sivagyana's property less his debts, or is the aggregate of his property and his debts which are in the first instance payable out of it. A mortgage therefore in lieu of the sale of part of the estate is an act ordinarily beneficial to the reversioners unless special circumstances show that the intention was otherwise. The rate of interest provided by the mortgage is 12 per cent. per annum, and the provision for annual rests is what her husband had entered into in some of instruments executed by him. As Thanga Nachiar was a young widow, she might have hoped to live long and to pay the interest every year as soon as her own debts were paid off. It must be remembered that she died in October 1889 while the document Z was executed in July 1888.

It is next contended that she was bound to apply the income of her husband's estate first in discharge of his debts instead of executing the mortgage. The net income is, under Hindu law as administered in this Presidency, her own exclusive property as widow, and she is not bound either to save or apply it for the benefit of the reversioners. She is no doubt bound to pay her husband's debts from it, because she had taken charge of the whole property left by him whilst her right of inheritance extends only to the property as diminished or affected by his debts. As between her and the reversioners she is entitled to say, 'I will pay my husband's debts by the sale of his property and take the residue, [120] and I desire to keep the net income derived from it and to spend or invest it as I please.' I do not, however, desire to be understood as holding that she is entitled to ignore the charges which are legally payable out of the gross income, such as the peishcush and maintenance due to other members of the family and thereby add to the debt left by the husband so as to prejudice the reversion. Applying these principles to the case before us, I am of opinion that the gross income less the charges she is legally bound to pay from it is her exclusive property as between her and the reversioners. Another objection taken to the decree is that a personal decree has been passed against the first defendant. This is founded on a misconstruction of the decree which only purports to give her the option of paying the decree amount within six months if she desires to prevent the creditor from bringing the property to sale.

I would dismiss the memorandum of objections with costs. The decree should, however, be so varied as to grant the six months from the date of the appeal instead of the original decree.

Shephard, J.—By the decree in this case there is made payable to the plaintiff the sum due on the footing of the bond executed by the widow on whose death the defendants came into possession less the sum of Rs. 16,200-11-6 which is found to have been received by the plaintiff. The plaintiff appeals against the decree on the ground that this deduction ought not to have been made and also on the ground that interest up to the date of realization is not provided for. The defendants object to the whole decree on several grounds. They contend that the whole basis of the suit is false, that the widow was under no necessity to execute the bond, that the bond comprises sums not really due and that interest at the contract rate ought not to have been allowed. The contention of the defendants which goes to the root of the whole decree forms the subject of the first and second issues. The debt secured by the widow's bond was made up of two sums, one, a sum claimed in respect of a promissory note alleged to have been made by her late husband Sivagyanam; the other, consisting of monies advanced to the widow herself. As to the former, there is a mass of evidence, oral and documentary, brought before the Subordinate Judge to prove the promissory note was made by the late Sivagyanasamy under the circumstances described. That evidence was accepted by the Judge, and there really was no attempt to meet it by counter-evidence. The evidence as to the handwriting of [121] Sivagyanasamy stands uncontradicted. I see no reason to think that the Judge was wrong in his finding on the first issue with regard to the promissory note. It was not denied that the other sums which make up the consideration for the bond were advanced to the widow, but it was said that they had been paid off on a settlement of accounts between her and the plaintiff. This contention founded on a misconception of the evidence was sufficiently disposed of during the argument. The more substantial contention was that the widow was under no necessity to hypothecate the property in which she enjoyed only a limited interest. Sivagyanasamy died on the 29th November 1887. The bond was executed on the 5th July 1888. At the former date the treasury of Sivagyanasamy was empty. On the 30th June 1888, there is evidence to show that about Rs. 21,000 remained in hand including the mohathala account. It also appears from the evidence that the gross income of the estate was between 32 and 39 thousand rupees. The particular income for the year succeeding Sivagyanasamy's death is not stated. Assuming that it was about Rs. 35,000 gross, the net available income for the widow would seem to have been about Rs. 11,000. With this income the widow had to face the debt due under the promissory note exceeding Rs. 24,000 in amount. There is evidence, which the Judge believes, that the plaintiff pressed for the payment of this debt as well as the small advances made by him to the widow. Under these circumstances, it seems to me the finding that the hypothecation was made in good faith and under pressure of necessity is fully justified. Nor do I think that the Judge was wrong under the circumstances mentioned by him (paragraph 20) in allowing compound interest. These observations dispose of the defendants' objections. I think they should be dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff's appeal relates firstly to the sum allowed to the defendants on account of monies belonging to the estate of Sivagyanasamy which are found to have come into the hands of the plaintiff. The Judge has proceeded on the authority of the decision in Hurro Nath Rai Chowdhri v. Randhir Singh (I. L. R., 18 Cal., 311; S.C., L. R., 18 I. A., 1). There can be no doubt that the plaintiff was well aware that the monies received by the sale of the jewels as well as those realized by the decree were part of the estate which the widow took from her [122] husband. His object clearly was, as the Judge finds, to secure himself with regard to the sums he had advanced to the widow personally, and to throw the whole burden of the other debts on the estate. It was argued here that the former debts were also binding on the reversioners, but that was not the contention in the Court below. Then it was said that the appropriation was the result of an arrangement between the widow and the plaintiff. It appears to me that the Judge was right in holding that the plaintiff ought to have applied the two sums, which came to his hands, to the liquidation of the husband's debt.

No reason was given for refusing interest from the date of the suit till the date of decree and thereafter till realization. The decree should be modified by allowing the agreed rate till date of decree and further interest at 6 per cent. till realization. In other respects I would dismiss the appeal with proportionate costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Narasimha Charyulu and others.....(Defendants)

Appellants

Appa Rau.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Stamp Act—Act I of 1879, s. 51 (a)—Allowance for spoiled stamps—Whether applicable to ordinary use in which a mistake has been made.

Section 51 † (a) of the Stamp Act, which permits an allowance being made for spoiled stamps, applies only to cases of accidental spoiling of the paper of which the stamp is made, and does not cover cases of the use of the paper in an ordinary way, in which a mistake has been made.

APPEAL against the decree of M. B. Sundara Rau, Subordinate Judge of Ellore in Original Suit No. 28 of 1892.

The defendants in this suit executed a mortgage deed in favour of the plaintiff's father, since deceased, conveying certain immoveable property to him as a security for a loan of Rs. 12,000, it being provided that "the sum of Rs. 12,000 should be repaid in twenty-four annual instalments, commencing with the 30th [123] June 1888, and that each instalment of Rs. 500 should be accompanied by the interest thereon at Re. 1 per cent. per mensem from date of bond to date of instalment."

The deed further contained the following clause :—

"According to these instalments in case of default in payment of the amount due on the date of any instalment, the total amount due for that instalment, both on account of principal and interest, we will pay with additional interest thereon at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem without any objection and will have it endorsed on the back of the bond. Of the amount of this bond in paying the amounts of the principal and interest according to instalments in case of default of payment of instalments 1, 2 and 3 without reference to future instalments, we shall pay the whole (amount) at once and take this document."

The defendants paid the first two instalments, but made default in payment of three succeeding instalments. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit to recover the whole sum remaining due, i.e., some Rs. 18,000. Subsequent, however, to the drawing of the plaint on stamped paper, the defendants paid to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 2,771.

The defendants contended that the instalments 1, 2 and 3 specified in the deed had reference only to the first three instalments, but not to any subsequent ones, and further that the plaintiff might have recovered Rs. 75, or at least

* Appeal No. 58 of 1894.

† [Sec. 51:—Subject to such rules as may be made by the Governor-General in Council as to the evidence which the Collector may require, allowance shall be made by the Collector for impressed stamps spoiled in the cases hereinafter mentioned, namely :

(a) The stamp on any paper inadvertently and undesignedly spoiled, obliterated or by any means rendered unfit for the purpose intended, before any instrument written thereon is executed by any person.]

some part of the value of the stamped paper used for the plaint, under section 51 of the Stamp Act.

The Subordinate Judge decreed in favour of the plaintiff and gave him costs calculated on the amount originally claimed in the plaint, notwithstanding the defendants' payment of Rs. 2,771 made before the plaint was filed.

The defendants preferred this appeal.

Seshagiri Ayyar and Gopalasami Ayyangar for Appellants.

Krishnasami Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment:—We agree with the construction placed by the Subordinate Judge on the clause relating to default in payment of three instalments. The suggestion that the clause provides only for the case of the first two instalments not being paid on the due dates is an unreasonable one and it is not supported by the language of the instrument.

We also think the Judge was right in charging the defendant [124] with the full amount of the costs calculated on the amount originally claimed in the plaint, notwithstanding that Rs. 2,771 was paid before the plaint was filed. It is said that the plaintiff might have recovered Rs. 75 or at least some part of the value of the stamped papers used for the plaint, and we are referred to section 51 (a) of the Stamp Act and section 54.

In our opinion, clause (a) of section 51 applies only to cases of accidental spoiling of the paper of which the stamp is made, and does not cover cases in which a person has used the paper in the ordinary way, but has made a mistake in using it. Section 54* clearly has no application.

The next point argued is that raised by the fifth ground of appeal. There is clearly nothing in the nature of a penalty, for it is from date of default only that the higher rate is made payable.

Another contention is that the Subordinate Judge was in error in awarding 2 per cent. interest on all the overdue instalments. On the true construction of the document we are of opinion that interest is payable at the enhanced rate only on the three instalments due at the date of the suit, and not on the whole balance which fell due under the clause relating to the defaults of those instalments.

The decree awards further interest at 24 per cent., while the plaint asked for such interest at the rate of 12 per cent. only. No relief can be awarded in excess of what is asked for. We must, therefore, modify the decree by giving 12 per cent. up to date of decree and 6 per cent. from that date till payment.

The substantial question argued is whether there was a tender of the fifth instalment as alleged and consequently the suit was premature. The defendants' case is that on 3rd June 1892 he tendered Rs. 755-10-8 for acceptance in satisfaction of the fifth instalment, and that the manager refused to accept it. He attempted to show that the sum was tendered on that day thrice over, at 5 P.M., again at 7 P.M., and lastly about 11 P.M. The first tender was made by the second defendant, and the other two by the first. There is no doubt evidence (Defence witnesses 1, 2, 3, 4, and plaintiff, witness 4) in proof

Allowance for stamps which he has no immediate use, the Collector shall repay to such person the value of such stamp in money, deducting one anna for each rupee or portion of a rupee, upon such person delivering up the same to be cancelled, and proving to the Collector's satisfaction that it was purchased by such person with a bond fide intention to use it, and that he has paid the full price thereof, and that it was so purchased within the period of six months next preceding the date on which it is so delivered.]

of first tender. The Subordinate Judge, however, characterises the evidence as false. The second defendant does not refer to the presence of the first witness. There does not seem to have been any necessity for the defendant to refer to the shroff to introduce him to the manager, [125] and it seems strange that he went to the shroff without an irsalnamah. The most suspicious feature is that the alleged tender is not mentioned in the letter said to have been written by the other defendant on the same evening. The manager, supported by the duffadar, says that the second defendant never came at all on the 30th. Moreover, it is extremely doubtful whether the defendant had on that day the sum required. Even if there was such a tender, as is spoken to, it was insufficient as it fell short of the amount due for the fifth instalment. We are unable to say that the Judge was wrong in disbelieving the evidence as to the tender. As to the second tender, there is evidence of the two defendants and the clerk. The evidence of the latter does not impress us favourably. Admittedly, he had nothing to do with the business. The other witnesses are interested and their story as to funds is open to grave suspicion, and wholly uncorroborated. Boyi Shetti, who is said to have lent them Rs. 400, is not called, and no accounts are produced either as to this sum or as to the sum realized by sale of grain. It is true that the manager admits that the first defendant came to him and had a conversation, and was told that the money could not be accepted unless the prior instalments were paid. In this respect the manager was mistaken, for it was for the defendants to determine to what instalment the payment should be applied, and he had good reason for wishing to have the fifth instalment paid first, as otherwise the whole balance would become due. We cannot, however, infer from the evidence that the manager refused absolutely to accept a tender which the first defendant promised to make. All that the manager admits is that the first defendant said he would arrange for the payment, not that he was ready and willing to make the payment then and there. We are inclined to believe that the defendant had not really sufficient money with him. It is in evidence that on the same evening after 7 P. M. the defendant borrowed Rs. 200. This strongly supports the opinion of the Subordinate Judge.

As to the last tender it was really no tender as the manager had left the office. The evidence of the defendants is extremely unsatisfactory.

We see no reason to disturb the findings of the Judge on the fourth, fifth and sixth issues.

The decree will be modified in two respects as above observed. Otherwise the appeal is dismissed. Proportionate costs

Mortgage—Part breach of contract by mortgagee—Contract Act—Act IX of 1872, s. 39—Rescission—Acquiescence—Suit by mortgagee for interest due under the mortgage as regards the part fulfilled.

A mortgaged certain land to B for Rs. 800. Under the terms of the mortgage-deed B was to pay Rs. 500 of the advance to C in discharge of a previous mortgage executed by A in favour of C. Of the balance of Rs. 300, B was to retain Rs. 200 in payment of a previous debt of A due to him, and the balance of Rs. 100 was to be paid to A. B paid the said Rs. 100, retained the Rs. 200, but neglected to pay the said Rs. 500 to C, who sued A and recovered the debt by attachment and sale of A's moveable property. After eight years from the date of the mortgage, B brought a suit to recover the interest due under the mortgage on Rs. 300 only :

Held, that under section 39 of the Contract Act, A was entitled to cancel the contract of mortgage owing to B's conduct, but that he was bound to give up the benefit he had received, viz., Rs. 300, and pay interest thereon up to the date of cancellation. B was not entitled to treat the original mortgage as a mortgage in force with all its stipulations for Rs. 300 instead of Rs. 800, and on that view to sue for interest alone.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of O. Chandu Menon, Subordinate Judge of South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 373 of 1892, confirming the decree of U. Babu Rau, District Munsif of Udipi, in Original Suit No. 103 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgments of the High Court.

Pattabhirama Ayyar and Madhava Rau for Appellant.

Narayana Rau for Respondent.

Best, J.—The mortgage bond executed by defendant in favour of plaintiff was for a sum of Rs. 800, of which Rs. 500 were left with plaintiff to pay off a prior mortgage-debt and of the balance Rs. 200 are stated in A to be the amount previously borrowed from plaintiff and the remaining Rs. 100 as received on the date of A.

It appears that plaintiff did not pay off the prior mortgagee, [127] who therefore sued the defendant, and recovered his debt by attachment and sale of defendant's moveables.

Plaintiff's present suit is to recover the proportionate interest due on the Rs. 300 only for a period of eight years.

I am unable to agree with the lower Courts in holding that he is not entitled to this proportionate interest, Cf. Chinnayya Rawutan v. Chidambaram Chetti (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 212) ; but I think the suit as brought has been rightly dismissed.

Under the circumstances, the plaintiff must wait till he can sue for the principal amount also, when the defendant will be able to set off the amount claimed by him as damages for plaintiff's failure to pay off the prior mortgagee.

I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—The facts found in this case are (1) that by the instrument of mortgage the plaintiff was bound to pay Rs. 800, (2) that he paid the mortgagor only Rs. 300, (3) that he never paid Rs. 500 to a prior mortgagee as stipulated in the instrument, (4) that by reason of his default the prior mortgagee sued the mortgagor, obtained a decree against him and recovered the sum from him. The Subordinate Judge considered that, owing to appellant's failure to perform his part of the contract in regard to Rs. 500, and of the respondent being compelled by his default to satisfy the prior mortgagee, the latter was not bound to perform his part of the contract to pay interest on Rs. 300 at the rate stipulated in the instrument of mortgage. Under section 39 of the Contract Act, the mortgagor was entitled to cancel the contract of mortgage on the ground that the mortgagee by acting in contravention of his agreement incapacitated himself from performing it in its entirety. Though no less than eight years passed subsequent to the payment of the prior mortgage by respondent, the appellant never attempted to tender Rs. 500 to respondent to keep the prior mortgage in force. Upon the facts found the Subordinate Judge obviously considered the original mortgage as lawfully cancelled, and held that the stipulation therein as to interest as not being since in force. I am of opinion that he was right in treating the original contract as at an end. In putting an end to it, however, respondent was bound to give up the benefit he had received and to pay back Rs. 300 with interest up to date of cancellation. Appellant might [128] have sued respondent to enforce this obligation and to recover Rs. 300 and interest as damages on the security of the property. He was clearly not entitled to treat the contract of mortgage for Rs. 800 as still subsisting after acquiescing in its cancellation by respondent for eight years and then bringing this suit to recover only the interest due on Rs. 300 as due under the original contract. The only obligation which he can now enforce is the obligation to repay Rs. 300 with interest, which respondent was bound to pay when he put an end to the mortgage as regards Rs. 500. He was not entitled to treat the original mortgage as a mortgage in force with all its stipulations for Rs. 300 instead of Rs. 800, and on that view to sue for interest alone. I would also dismiss this appeal with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Seeta Patta Mahadevi.....(Defendant) Appellant

Suryudamma and another.....(Plaintiffs) Respondents.*

Costs—Whether an unsuccessful plaintiff is liable for costs unnecessarily incurred by the defendant owing to his vakil's negligence.

The costs which a defeated plaintiff should be required to pay are those necessarily incurred by the successful party in the defence of the suit. Costs cannot be deemed necessary if by reasonable diligence on the part of the defendant or his pleader the expenditure of them could have been avoided.

APPEAL against the decree of N. Swaminadha Ayyar, Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 51 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgments of the High Court.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Respondents were not represented.

Shephard, J.—This appeal relates to the costs which the Subordinate Judge refused to allow to the defendant when dismissing [129] the plaintiff's suit. So far as regards the vakil's fee, the appeal must, I think, be allowed, for the defendant's vakil is at least entitled to the sum for which he has certified, that sum not exceeding a moiety of the full ad valorem fee. With regard to the other costs incurred in connection with witnesses summoned by the defendant, there is more room for doubt. It is said that, as issues had been settled on all the questions of law and fact supposed to arise on the pleadings, the defendant was bound to have his witnesses ready, and that, if anybody was to blame, it was not the defendant's vakil but the Judge, who ought to have discovered that on the face of the plaint the suit as framed would not lie. This contention appears to me wholly unreasonable. The costs which a defeated plaintiff should be required to pay should be only the costs necessarily incurred by the successful party in the defence of the suit. Costs cannot be deemed necessary if by reasonable diligence on the part of the defendant or his pleader the expenditure of them could have been avoided.

In the present case it was open to the defendant's pleader to have the plaint rejected under the provisions of sections 53 and 54 of the Civil Procedure Code. That is the course which he ought to have adopted. Instead of doing this, he filed a written statement raising a variety of defences but not raising the very point which has ultimately caused the shipwreck of the suit; and when the time came for settling the issues, he again let slip the opportunity of pressing the matter on the attention of the Court. It is said that it is the business of the Judge to peruse the plaint and to frame the requisite issues. That is perfectly true, but it does not follow that the vakils on either side have no duty to perform. It is, I apprehend, the clear duty of a party's vakil to bring to the Judge's notice any allegation on which he relies and to ask for the requisite issue. If he overlooks the allegation and does not ask for the issue, and costs are occasioned by the omission, it is his client and not the other party who ought to be saddled with them. In the present case it may be said that at the outset the fault lay with the plaintiffs; they launched a suit which, on the face of the plaint could not be maintained. I do not think we ought to assume that they acted in bad faith any more than we should assume that anything worse than negligence was imputable to the defendant's vakil. Let it be assumed that on both sides there was a lack of skill and due care. The defendant is entitled to the costs so far as [130] they were occasioned by the plaintiffs' fault, but, as he is not by reason of that fault absolved from the duty of himself taking due care, he ought to bear the loss which by dint of such care he might have avoided. To hold otherwise would be to make the plaintiffs answerable for the mistake of their adversary's vakil.

For these reasons I would decline to interfere with the Judge's ruling as to the costs of witnesses, and dismiss the appeal.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I am also of the same opinion.

As regards the vakil's fee, the amount certified should have been allowed. It is less than the ad valorem fee, and the sum awarded by the Court below, viz., Rs. 25, is certainly inadequate. I would award the fee certified as received.

I doubted if the Subordinate Judge was not also in error in refusing defendant's costs incurred by taking out summons for his witnesses. It is true that it was necessary to take out these summonses when regard is had to the ground upon which the suit was ultimately decided. But the objection to the suit which eventually prevailed was not noticed either by the defendant's vakil or by the Subordinate Judge when issues were framed. Though the vakil was certainly negligent in not pressing the preliminary objection at the first hearing and in not insisting upon its prior determination, yet as the Subordinate Judge also overlooked the defect and as the issues framed by him constituted the proximate cause for defendant's taking out summons for witnesses with reference to those issues, I first doubted whether the party concerned should be mulcted in costs which he incurred bona fide to be ready to prove the recorded issues. As the defendant's vakil contributed to the error on the part of the Subordinate Judge, I think on further consideration that I cannot say that the ground upon which the Subordinate Judge exercised his discretion in refusing costs was illegal. On taking time to consider the matter, I do not think that the Subordinate Judge's order on this point should be disturbed, as the Code leaves the adjudication of costs to the discretion of the Subordinate Judge.

I concur in the decision proposed by my learned colleague.

Code of Civil Procedure—Act XIV of 1882, s. 158—Act VI of 1892, s. 4.Proceedings in execution—dismissal of petition for default.

The dismissal of a petition for execution for default does not bar a fresh application, section 158 of the Code of Civil Procedure being inapplicable, since by reason of section 4 of Act VI of 1892, it does not apply to proceedings in execution. Dhunkal Singh v. Phakker Singh (I. L. R., 15 All., 84), Hujrat Akramnissa Begam v. Valiunnissa Begam (I. L. R., 18 Bom., 429) and Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard (L. R., 4 I. A. 127) followed.

APPEAL against the order of W. C. Holmes, District Judge of South Canara, presented against the order of U. Babu Rau, District Munsif of Udipi, in Execution Petition No. 311 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgment of the High Court.

Ramachandra Rau Saheb for Appellant.

Madhava Rau for Respondent.

Judgment.— This was an application for execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 121 of 1882 on the file of the District Munsif of Udipi in the district of South Canara. The appellant is the representative of the Puttige Mutt at that station, and respondent, Annappayya, is the execution-creditor. The decree was passed against appellant's predecessor, but on his dismissal from his office and on appellant's succession to the office, respondent attempted to execute it against the latter. The District Munsif refused the execution, but on appeal the Judge held that execution should be granted if respondent showed in execution proceedings that the decree debt was one contracted for purposes of the Mutt. From this order respondent preferred no second appeal and it became final. The application for execution in which the above orders were made was not further proceeded with.

[132] Meanwhile, execution was taken out by other decree-holders against the appellant and similar orders were passed by the District Munsif and by the Judge. In one of them, in which one Budan Saheb was execution-creditor there was a second appeal.

As reported in Sudindra v. Budan (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 80) the High Court held in that case that the decree should be executed against appellant unless he set it aside by a new suit for fraud and collusion. Thereupon, appellant instituted suits to set aside several decrees passed against his predecessor, and brought Original Suit No. 334 of 1882 against respondent in September 1889. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, and in December 1891 the Judge confirmed the decision in Appeal Suit No. 441 of 1889. From this decision, a second appeal is still pending.

Meanwhile, another application for execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 121 of 1882 was made in No. 455 of 1889. The District Munsif called upon respondent to prove that the decree debt was binding on the Mutt and allowed him time for that purpose till the 28th June 1890. However respondent produced no evidence, and the District Munsif dismissed his petition for execution. On the 14th August 1893, respondent again applied for execution by attachment of immoveable property. In support of his claim, he alluded to the order of the High Court in the execution of Budan Saheb's decree in Original Suit No. 334 of 1888, brought by appellant against respondent, and to the dismissal of that suit. Appellant opposed this application as barred by the order on respondent's former application, which was passed in No. 455 of 1889. The District Munsif observed that that order operated as a decree under section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and barred the present application. On appeal, the Judge considered that the mere striking off of the application did not amount to an adjudication, that the order granting time to prove that the debt was binding on the Mutt was not one passed under section 158 of the Civil Procedure Code, that appellant was under no obligation to produce his evidence, and that he was therefore not barred from renewing his application for execution. It is contended on second appeal that the order dismissing the application for execution No. 455 of 1889 was passed under section 158, Civil Procedure Code, and that it precludes, under [133] section 13, Civil Procedure Code, any fresh application for execution of the same decree.

I agree in the opinion of the Judge that the dismissal of a petition for execution for default does not bar a fresh application. The Judge states that section 158 is inapplicable, because the order on the prior application does not purport to have been made under that section, and that there is nothing to show that time was granted at the instance of the respondent. I also think that section 158 is inapplicable, but I prefer to rest my opinion on the general ground that by reason of section 4 of Act VI of 1892, nothing in Chapter VII or XIII of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to proceedings in execution. It was held by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Dhonkul Singh v. Phakkar Singh (I. L. R., 15 All., 84) that when an execution case is struck off the file or dismissed upon a ground other than a distinct finding that the decree is incapable of execution, or that the decree-holder's right is barred by limitation, or by any other law, or on some ground touching the merits, its dismissal whether termed as dismissal for default or as struck off the file does not operate to bar a fresh application for execution.

In Hajrat Akramnissa Begam v. Valiulnissa Begam (I. L. R., 18 Bom., 429) the High Court of Bombay held that while there is no statutory authority for restoring to the file an application for execution which has been once dismissed for default, the order of dismissal is ineffectual to bar a subsequent application for execution. In Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard (L. R. 4 I. A., 127) the Privy Council held that an order refusing an application to execute a decree is not an adjudication within the rule of res judicata. The real question is whether the order of the District Judge that respondent's right to execute the decree against appellant can only be recognized on proof that the decree-debt is binding on the Mutt is still in force, and whether it bars execution until the condition mentioned therein is complied with. I must answer the question in the affirmative. That the order in question was made is not denied. That it became final is also admitted. It is clear that whatever order the High Court made in execution of Budan Saheb's decree cannot affect the respondent who was no party to that order. The former order being then still in force, it must be complied [134] with and the decree could not be executed as if it had no existence. It is open to respondent to apply for a review of that order and to have it vacated.

It is suggested that by instituting Original Suit No. 334 of 1888 respondent waived the benefit of the previous order and that he is not now at liberty to fall back upon it. But the suit and the order are not necessarily inconsistent with each other. The judgment may not be tainted by fraud and the debt may yet not bind the Mutt. I am unable to hold that, as a matter of law, there was a waiver. I am therefore of opinion that, so long as the order of the District Judge is legally in force, execution must be refused unless the condition mentioned in it is complied with. On this ground I reverse the order of the Judge and restore that of the District Munsif. In the special circumstances of the case, each party will bear his costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Partnership—Advance made by one partner to another in respect of the latter's share of a partnership debt—Whether a suit for contribution lies.

A and B were partners. A decree was passed against them for the payment of a certain debt, each partner being liable for the whole sum and being bound to indemnify the other against the payment of more than his share. A paid B's share as well as his own and brought a suit against B for contribution. B contended that A's claim, being in respect of a partnership transaction, ought to be adjusted when the partnership account was settled, and that the suit did not lie :

Held, that the advance made by A to B by paying his share was not an advance to the partnership, but to the other partner in respect of what he had to contribute, and that, consequently, A was entitled to contribution from B.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff and the original defendant were partners. The former paid the amount due by the latter under a decree passed in Original Suit No. 911 of 1890. Thereupon he brought the present suit in the Small Cause Court for contribution. It was contended for defendant that the suit did not lie, and that the claim is one which ought to be adjusted when the partnership account is settled. The District Munsif decreed the claim.

It is urged on revision that the suit does not lie and is not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. It is no doubt a settled rule of law that advances made by one partner to the partnership concern can only result in matters of account and cannot be made the subject of a separate suit. But to this general rule there are exceptions when advances are made by one partner not to the partnership concern, but to the other partner in respect of what he is to contribute to the joint capital, as in French v. Styring (2 C. B. N. S., 365); or when two partners borrow from a bank on their joint promissory note and apply the money borrowed to the partnership concern and one of the partners is compelled to pay more than his share of the debt, the transactions have been considered to be separate and altogether dehors the partnership, and as such capable of sustaining an action for contribution. The present case is governed by the same principle. Under the decree each partner was bound to pay the whole decree-debt and bound to indemnify the other against the payment of more than his share. This cannot be considered as a partnership transaction, see Sedgwick v. Daniell (2 H. & N., 319). The petition cannot be supported and is dismissed with costs.

* Civil Revision Petition No. 600 of 1893.

NOTES.

[In (1908) 32 Mad., 203 it was observed that it was not easy to see how the making of a decree against the partners imposed upon them any liability which did not attach to them as partners before the suit. [136] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 11th January and 22nd October, 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Minakshisundrum Pillai.....(Defendant No. 4) Appellant

Ayyathorai.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Malicious prosecution—Prosecution by a Police Constable – Whether acting in his official capacity or not—Malice.

A Police Constable, who is in effect the prosecutor and not acting merely in his official capacity, who does not take reasonable care to inform himself of the truth of the case and who does not honestly believe in the charge preferred by him and is actuated by an indirect motive in preferring it, is liable in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of J. W. F. Dumergue, District Judge of Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 416 of 1892, reversing the decree of A. David Pillai, District Munsif of Tirumangalam, in Original Suit No. 256 of 1891.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the finding returned by the District Judge.

Mr. K. Brown, Subramania Ayyar and Sundara Ayyar for Appellant.

Sankaran Nayar, for Respondent.

Order.—"The first question, which does not seem to be prominently brought to the notice of the District Judge, is whether the appellant, the constable, was in effect the prosecutor in the case or whether he was only acting in his official capacity. The first branch of the first issue was evidently based on this question. But the District Judge only notices it in the introductory part of his judgment. We must observe that in considering this question as also the other questions arising, the District Judge must confine himself to the evidence before him, and must not be influenced by the Magistrate's opinion or depositions taken before him and not made evidence in this case.

[137] "In respect of the other questions arising in the case, the issues as framed do not raise them in the proper form. The proper issues are those stated in the summing up in Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway Company (L. R., 11 Q. B. D., 440, 444). Assuming that the District Judge finds the first-mentioned issue in the affirmative, we must request him to return findings on the other three issues as stated in the case cited.

"The findings are to be returned within one month from the date of the receipt of this order, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections after the findings have been posted up in this Court."

In compliance with the above order, the District Judge submitted the following finding:—

Finding:—"The leading facts of the case are that the house of one Shanmuga Velayudan Pillay in Tirumangalam was broken into on the night of the 28th April 1889, when jewels valued at Rs. 500 were stolen. The plaintiff in the suit and two others were arrested by the fourth defendant, who is the Station-house Officer of Tirumangalam, on the 10th May 1890. The plaintiff was charged with abetment of the offences of house-breaking and theft, and was discharged by the Second-Class Magistrate of Tirumangalam in Calendar Case No. 55 of 1890. The plaintiff then sued to recover damages from the fourth defendant among others for malicious prosecution.

"2. The first question on which I am directed to return a finding is whether the fourth defendant, the Station-house Officer, was in effect the prosecutor or whether he was acting in his official capacity. With regard to the first branch of this question, I think the record leaves no doubt that the fourth defendant was really the prosecutor. No accusation had been laid against the plaintiff specifically by the complainant; the plaintiff was arrested by the fourth defendant on information said to have been given by one Andravana Chetti (eighth witness for plaintiff) more than a year after the commission of the alleged offences and five months after the fourth defendant had recommended that the case should be struck off, as it was useless taking any further steps in the matter; and when the plaintiff applied for bail the application was opposed by the [138] fourth defendant, not by the complainant. The complainant was made the first defendant in the suit and was examined as the first witness for the defence. He opposed an application made by the plaintiff for a transfer of the criminal case to the file of another Magistrate, but on the other points he makes the following statements: 'I never implicated the plaintiff in the case nor did I even suspect him. I never complained to the Police or the Magistrate that the plaintiff was one of the thieves or that I suspected him. . . . I never opposed the application for bail presented on behalf of the plaintiff.' The charge-sheet (Exhibit E) was prepared by the fourth defendant on the 11th May 1890, and with the exception of the occurrence report of the 10th May 1890 (Exhibit D) also prepared by the fourth defendant, this was the first time that the plaintiff was accused. Under these circumstances, I find on this part of the first question that the fourth defendant, was in effect the prosecutor.

"3. It follows from this finding that in my opinion the fourth defendant was not acting only in his official capacity. No doubt the fourth defendant was bound, as a Police Officer, to detect offenders and bring them to justice, and hence it is now argued that he was really acting in his official capacity. But in the first place it seems to me that Police Officers are protected against suits brought against them for acts done in their official capacity only by section 43* of Act V of 1861, which provides that a Police Officer is entitled to a decree if he shows that any act in respect of which he is sued was done under the authority of a warrant issued by a Magistrate. In this case the fourth defendant was certainly not acting under such authority. Then in the next place it is expressly declared by section 23 of Act V of 1861 that it is the duty of a Police Officer to apprehend persons 'for whose apprehension sufficient ground exists.' Unless sufficient ground does exist, then it appears to me that a Police Officer cannot be said to be acting in his official capacity, but under colour of his official capacity. Hence I would submit that unless the findings on the remaining issues show that the fourth defendant had or in good faith believed he had sufficient ground for arresting and prosecuting the plaintiff, he was not acting in his official capacity.

"4. The next question on which I have to return a finding is [139] the first propounded in Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway Company (L. R., 11 Q. B. D., 440, 444). Did the fourth defendant take reasonable care to inform himself of the true state of the case? On this issue the plaintiff has proved that the fourth defendant himself reported on the 9th December 1890 (Exhibit G), after months said to have been occupied in investigation, that he had failed to detect the real culprits and that it was useless to take further steps. Notwithstanding this fact, the fourth defendant might have obtained trustworthy information subsequently to his report. But, according to his own case, the only person from whom he could have obtained any information justifying the arrest and prosecution of the plaintiff was Andravana Chetty, and Andravana Chetty examined as the plaintiff's eighth witness, swears that he never gave the fourth defendant any information on the subject. This evidence is contradicted by an acting Head Constable, who is the second witness for the defence, and the fourth defendant has proved that Andravana Chetty is a thief. If he had acted solely on information given him by a disreputable and discreditable individual, he cannot be said to have taken reasonable care, but it would be a fair argument that he verified the statements made and actually found the plaintiff dealing with the stolen property. The story of the plaintiff's arrest must therefore be examined. According to the second witness for the defence Andravana Chetty came to the police station at 3 P.M. on the 10th May and said he had seen the plaintiff and others dividing the stolen jewels in a certain mantapam, 3½ miles distant from the police station. The fourth defendant and the second witness for the defence and others reached the mantapam at 5 P.M. and found the plaintiff and his *[Sec. 43:—When any action or prosecution shall be brought or any proceeding held against any Police Officer for any act done by him in such capacity, it shall be lawful for him to plead that such act was done by him under the authority of a warrant issued by a Magistrate.

Plea that act was done under a warrant.

Such plea shall be proved by the production of the warrant directing the act, and purporting to be signed by such Magistrate, and the defendant shall thereupon be entitled to a decree in his favour, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in such Magistrate. No proof of the signature of such Magistrate shall be necessary, unless the Court shall see reason to doubt its being genuine. Provided always that any remedy which the party may have against the authority issuing such warrant shall not be affected by anything contained in this section.]

confederates still in the act of weighing and dividing the jewels. There were admittedly only nine articles of jewellery, and it is represented that more than two hours were occupied in weighing and dividing those articles. This story is, in my opinion, altogether incredible, and I think it also incredible that the plaintiff, a village officer, was found making a division of stolen property, a year after it had been stolen, in a place which must have been open to public view or the transaction could not have been observed by Andravana Chetty. Besides the inherent [140] incredibility of this account, the plaintiff's second, third and fourth witnesses depose that the plaintiff was arrested near the Sub-Registrar's Office, which is also known as Poochy Nadan's Chavadi, in Tirumangalam. Since then, the statements made by and on behalf of the fourth defendant as to the plaintiff's arrest are, in my opinion, false, and since the plaintiff was not arrested at a mantapam $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Tirumangalam, I think the statements that Andravana Chetty gave information which led to the arrest at the mantapam is also false. Hence I find that the fourth defendant so far from taking reasonable care to inform himself of the true state of the case made no enquiry and did not act on any information, but acted with a total want of reasonable and probable cause.

"5. The third question is—Did the fourth defendant honestly believe the case which he laid before the Magistrate? [Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway Company (L. R., 11 Q. B. D., 440, 444)]. In respect of this issue it is proved in evidence that no suspicion was entertained against the plaintiff until the 10th May 1890, the day he was arrested. But the fourth defendant's report of the 9th December 1890 (Exhibit G) filed by the plaintiff proves more. It shows that the result of the enquiries made by the fourth defendant from the date of the offences (28th April) to the date of the report was that the greater portion of the stolen property had been recovered through one Shonia Pillay, the father-in-law of the complainant, and that the complainant himself was conniving at the acts of his father-in-law and suppressing information. Clearly, therefore, it was not the plaintiff that the fourth defendant then suspected of abetment and he was guilty of falsehood in attempting to repudiate his report. I have already found that he acted without reasonable or probable cause, and that the reasons he has assigned for prosecuting the plaintiff are false. The only inference which can, in my opinion, be drawn from the circumstances is that he did not honestly believe the case he laid before the Magistrate to be true, but knew it to be groundless.

"6. The last question is—Was the fourth defendant actuated by any indirect motive in preferring the charge [Abrath v. North Eastern Railway Company (L. R. 11 Q. B. D., 440, 444)] or, as the same question is stated on page 443 of the case cited,—Was he actuated by malice, that [141] is to say, was he actuated by some motive other than an honest desire to bring a man whom he believed to have offended against the criminal law to justice. Here it is argued that no malice was alleged and none proved. But the action itself was an action for malicious prosecution. As to proof there is certainly no direct evidence of any weight, but according to the Indian Evidence Act (section 4) a fact is said to be proved if the existence is so probable from matters under consideration, that a prudent man ought, under the circumstances of the particular case, to act upon the supposition that it exists. It must, therefore, be seen whether this probability exists in the circumstances of this case. According to the second form of the present issue quoted above, malice consists, in such a case as this, of some motive other than an honest desire to bring a man, who is believed to have offended against the criminal law, to justice, and Brett, M. R. (same case, page 448) defined a malicious intention as 'not the mere intention of carrying the law into effect, but an intention which was wrongful in point of fact.' If, as it seems to me, the fourth defendant acted without reasonable or probable cause, and if, as it seems to me, he did not honestly believe the case which he laid before the Magistrate, then he could not have believed that the plaintiff had offended against the Criminal law and he could not have been actuated by an honest desire to bring the plaintiff to justice, but must have been actuated by some indirect motive, that is to say, in the words of CAVE, J., already quoted, by malice. To institute a groundless prosecution, knowing that it is groundless, is acting not in furtherance of justice, but with an intention wrongful in point of fact. Therefore, the answer I would submit to the last question is that the fourth defendant was actuated by an indirect motive, that is to say, malice.

" 7. To sum up these findings they are—

" (1) That the fourth defendant was in effect the prosecutor and not only acting in his official capacity.

" (2) That he did not take reasonable care to inform himself of the true state of the case.

" (3) That he did not honestly believe the case he laid before the Magistrate.

[142] " (4) That he was actuated by an indirect motive in preferring the charge."

This second appeal came on for final disposal, and the Court delivered the following judgment :—

Judgment.—We must accept the finding. We cannot say that the Judge dealing with the whole evidence has omitted to take into account that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Letters Patent—Clause 12—Whether an order under this clause may form the subject of an issue for trial in the suit.

The legality of an order granting permission to institute a suit under clause 12 of the Letters Patent may form the subject of an issue for trial in the suit so instituted.

APPEAL from the decree of SHEPHARD, J., sitting on the original side of the High Court in Civil Suit No. 391 of 1892.

* Original Side Appeal No. 84 of 1893.

This was a suit for redemption of a mortgage. Leave to sue under clause 12, Letters Patent, was granted, but a preliminary issue was taken as to whether the Court had jurisdiction in the case, the mortgage property being alleged to be beyond the Court's local jurisdiction. This issue was decided against the defendant on the ground that the leave to sue stood uncanceled. The defendant preferred this appeal.

Sivagnana Mudaliar for Appellant.

Subramanya Ayyar for Respondent.

Best, J.—This is an appeal against the order of Mr. Justice SHEPHARD, deciding against the defendant, the preliminary issue "whether this Court has jurisdiction in the case, the mortgaged [143] property being alleged to be situated beyond the Court's local jurisdiction."

The learned Judge says, "In the face of the leave which stands uncanceled I must decide for plaintiff."

The cases cited before the learned Judge appear to have been De Souza v. Coles (3 M. H. C. R., 384), and Vythelinga Mudelly v. Cundasawmy Mudelly (8 M. H. C. R., 21).

In the former it was held that an appeal lies from the decision of a Judge refusing an application made under clause 12 of the Letters Patent for leave to institute in this Court a suit on a cause of action which arises in part only within the local limits of this Court's jurisdiction. In Vythelinga Mudelly v. Cundasawmy Mudelly (8 M. H. C. R., 21) it was held that where such an application was refused by one Judge, it was not proper for another Judge in Chambers to grant the application when renewed on precisely the same grounds.

The above two decisions are authority for the propositions (1) that an order of a Judge refusing an application under clause 12 of the Letters Patent is appealable, and (2) that such order of refusal by one Judge cannot be superseded by another Judge in Chambers. But neither of them is in point when the question is whether an order granting permission to institute a suit under clause 12 may form the subject of an issue for trial in the suit so instituted.

In the present case the leave to sue was granted by the Registrar in exercise of the power conferred on him under sections 637 and 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure "and all other powers thereunto enabling;" see appendix 1 of the rules published in the Fort St. George Gazette Supplement, dated 16th June 1891.

The order was passed ex parte without even issue of notice to the defendant.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that defendant was entitled to take the objection in his answer to the plaint, and that the question is one that should be decided as an issue in the suit.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal and setting aside the order of the learned Judge, remand the issue for disposal on the merits.

The cost of this appeal will abide and follow the result.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I concur.

Delivery of immoveable property in possession of judgment-debtor—Suit by assignee of purchaser at Court sale for possession—Limitation.*

The purchaser at an execution sale of a house, of which the judgment-debtor was in possession, sold it, agreeing at the same time to obtain the sale certificate and to deliver possession of the house. After more than three years had expired he applied for the certificate, which, however, was refused on the ground that his application was time-barred. On the purchaser's death his widow made a second application which was granted. In a suit by the purchaser's vendee to recover possession, she set up a title thereto under a sale by the original owner (the judgment-debtor) to herself and others executed more than three years after the Court sale:

Held that, since the execution purchaser would be barred, the plaintiff was equally barred. Arumuga v. Chockalingam (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 331) followed.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of M. D. Bell, District Judge of Cuddapah, in Appeal Suit No. 107 of 1892, modifying the decree of T. R. Malhari Rau, District Munsif of Cuddapah, in Original Suit No. 16 of 1891.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the foregoing.

Judgment.—Here the judgment-debtor was in possession at the date of the sale and is now defendant. Plaintiff bought from the purchaser at the Court sale and can be in no better position than his vendor. Nothing was done upon the writ of possession issued at the suit of the vendor's widow. The execution purchaser would be barred and therefore the plaintiff is equally barred [Arumuga v. Chockalingam (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 331)]. The decision in Kishori Mohun [145] Roy Chowdhry v. Chunder Nath Pal (I. L. R., 14 Cal., 644) is distinguished by the fact that in that case there was formal delivery. We must reverse the decree and we dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Hindu law—Adoption—Estoppel by conduct.

A childless Hindu widow, aged 19, agreed with the plaintiff's father to adopt the plaintiff, stating that her husband, who died at the age of 12, had given her authority to adopt. Subsequently she adopted the plaintiff and had his upanayanam performed in the adoptive family next day, and administered her husband's property as the minor's guardian for about 18 months, when she repudiated the adoption and refused to maintain the plaintiff:

Held, that the adoption being invalid on the ground that the widow had not, as a fact, acted under authority from her husband, she was not estopped from denying the adoption by the fact of her having treated it as effective for the period of 18 months.

In order that estoppel by conduct may raise an invalid adoption to the level of a valid adoption, there must have been a course of conduct long continued on the part of the adopting family, and the situation of the adoptee in his original family must then become so altered that it would be impossible to restore him to it.

Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan (7 M. H. C. R., 250) followed.

APPEAL against the decree of E. C. Rawson, District Judge of Vizagapatam, in Pauper Original Suit No. 11 of 1892.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the foregoing and from the judgments of the High Court.

Kolhandarama Ayyar for Appellant.

Ramachandra Rau Saheb and Narayana Rau for Respondent.

Shephard, J.—The plaintiff claims as the adopted son of the late Seetharamiah. This title he fails to make good because he has not proved that the widow by whom the adoption was made [146] acted under authority from her husband. There is admittedly no evidence of such authority having been given, and the circumstances are not such as to raise any presumption in the plaintiff's favour. This being so, the plaintiff charges that the defendant is estopped from denying his adoption, and on the strength of that estoppel claims to recover the property to which as adopted son he would be entitled.

At first sight it certainly would seem somewhat anomalous to hold that an adoption, invalid according to Hindu law, may nevertheless become effectual so as to confer on the person concerned the right in the family of a stranger which he could only acquire by a valid adoption. No doubt under certain circumstances the law may raise a presumption in favour of the validity of an adoption as it may in questions of marriage or legitimacy. But the principle contended for goes further than this and is one which I conceive could never be extended to marriage. Nevertheless, in the case of adoption, the principle has been admitted, and the question we have to consider is within what limits it can properly be applied. In Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan (7 M. H. C. R., 250), the defendant claimed as the adopted son of the plaintiff's brother. It was found that the adoption although true in fact was invalid in point of law ; but having regard to the allegation that the conduct of the plaintiff's family had "debarred them, in consequence of their acting as if the law allowed the adoption and the changed situation induced, from now taking the benefit of the ordinary rule of law," the High Court directed the following issue to be tried: "Has the conduct of the plaintiff and that of the members of his family been such as to render it now inequitable for him to set up as against the present defendant the rule of law upon which he now insists?"

Subsequently in dealing with the finding on this issue, which was in the defendant's favour, the Court observed: "The situation is the result of the conduct of the whole family of plaintiff continued through a long course of years, and we think that we cannot properly decree for the plaintiff upon the footing that the defendant is wholly unentitled to any part of the family property. On the contrary we are of opinion that although the adoption was invalid and inadequate of itself to create communion, that communion [147] has been created by the course of conduct of the plaintiff and his family, coupled with the defendant's changed situation which has resulted."

This case was cited in a recent case before the Judicial Committee, and although it was not considered that any question of estoppel arose in the case, stress was laid upon considerations similar to those mentioned in the Madras case. "It is no slight matter for a boy to be passed from one family into another. Even in England such a thing cannot be done without a serious effect, for good or ill, on the boy's welfare. In India the ties of family life are far stricter, and if a boy has been transplanted from his own family into another by a de facto adoption, and then the adoption turns out to be invalid in law, and he is rejected out of his adopted family, his relations to his natural family must be seriously disturbed. Whether his previously existing legal status would be taken away is a point not calling for any opinion. Assuming that the plaintiff could return after an absence of five years, and so resume his legal position, it is impossible that his personal position should be the same as if the tie to his family had never been broken." Several other cases were cited to show that the principle of estoppel may be applied to claims founded on alleged adoption: Sadashiv Moreshtar Ghate v. Hari Moreshtar Ghate (11 Bom., H. C. R., 190), Ravji Vinayakrav Jagannath Shankarsett v. Lakshimibai (I. L. R., 11 Bom., 381), Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan (7 M. H. C. R., 250), Kannammal v. Virasami (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 486). In Sadshiv Moreshtar Ghate v. Hari Moreshtar Ghate (11 Bom. H. C. R., 190) the estoppel was founded on the fact of a long and general recognition of the adoption by the family into which he was brought by the adoption. In Ravji Vinayakrav Jagannath Shankarsett v. Lakshimibai (I. L. R., 11 Bom., 381) the plaintiff, whose adoption was questioned had been brought up and married by his adoptive mother, and although the period during which his adoption had been recognized had not been long, it had exceeded six years, and therefore it was no longer open to the persons who would have taken in default of adoption to challenge it. The judgment in Kannammal v. Virasami (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 486) proceeds on the authority of these cases. There too the adoptee had been married in the family in which he had been affiliated.

[148] From these cases it appears that estoppel like limitation may, for purposes not of a religious character, raise an adoption ab initio invalid to the level of a valid adoption. The members of the family by which the adoption is recognized or by whom it is not questioned within the six years from their learning of it—which are allowed by the law of limitation—cannot deny to the adoptee the property-rights in the family which a legal adoption would have given him. See Jagadamba Chowdhurani v. Dakhina Mohun (L. R., 13 I. A., 84). If the claim is rested simply on estoppel, as it was in Gopalayyan v. Raghupatiayyan (7 M. H. C. R., 250), I think the true limits, within which the doctrine is to be applied, are those stated in that judgment. The claimant has to show that by a course of conduct long continued on the part of the family which has purported to affiliate him, his situation in his original family has been altered so that it would be impossible to restore him to it.

Now in the present case there is no question of limitation. At the date when the suit was filed, it was not too late for the defendant's family to challenge the alleged adoption, for the six years had not elapsed, and, on the other hand, as the plaintiff was, as he still is, a minor, he had not by force of the law of limitation lost his rights in his original family. The material facts proved are these:—In 1875 the defendant's husband died at the age of 12, leaving his widow aged 10; in 1884 a kararnamah was drawn up between the widow and the plaintiff's father which is said to have been executed by the widow; in 1887 the adoption of the plaintiff by the widow took place and immediately afterwards the ceremony of upanayana was performed. The suit was instituted in 1892, the widow having meanwhile repudiated the adoption and refused to maintain the plaintiff. The plaintiff rests the claim by estoppel chiefly on the representation of authority from her husband contained in the kararnama executed by the defendant. On the faith of that representation it is said that he was given by his father in adoption to the defendant and her deceased husband. It might be objected that there is no evidence of the circumstances under which the karar was executed or of any explanation of it having been afforded to the defendant. She was only 19 at the time. There is also an entire absence of evidence to prove that the plaintiff's father in 1887 [149] really acted on the faith of the statement made three years before. No doubt, assuming that the assertion of authority was really made by the defendant, there was a positive statement which might under ordinary circumstances have put the plaintiff's father off inquiry, and it might be assumed that he had acted upon it. But here the circumstances were peculiar. The statement was not in itself a probable one having regard to the ages of the husband and wife at the time when the authority was supposed to have been given. No reasonable parent would have taken serious action upon such a statement standing by itself and uncorroborated. The plaintiff's father had access to other means of ascertaining the truth. He was not called as a witness and there is absolutely no positive evidence to prove that when he gave his son in adoption in 1887 he had in his mind the statement made in 1884 or had ever believed that it was true. Under these circumstances, we think the plaintiff has failed in establishing this part of his case.

Then it is said that upanayanam was performed in the adoptive family and that the plaintiff was, therefore, debarred from returning to his natural family, the suggestion being that the performance of upanayanam irrevocably fixes the subject of it in the family in which it takes place. That this, however, is not the correct view is pointed out in Viraragava v. Ramalinga (I.L.R., 9 Mad., 161). It is by gift and acceptance of the boy and not by upanayanam that filiation is constituted. So from the text of Prajapati cited in that case (page 162) it appears that an adoption made after upanayanam, although inferior, is not invalid. The evidence does not show whether or not the defendant's husband and the plaintiff's father belonged to the same gotra. However that may be, I do not think that the mere performance of upanayanam altered the position of the plaintiff or prevented his restoration to his original family.

third party. Here the plaintiff's title is found to be established, and the defendants' plea of non-payment of melvaram is found not to have been accompanied by assertion of adverse title.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and decree as above and direct respondents to pay appellants' costs in this Court and in the Lower Appellate Court.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 12th December, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Venkatanarasimhulu.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, arts. 62, 97—Suit to recover price paid on a void sale.

In 1885 the plaintiff obtained from the defendant a sale-deed of a certain land and paid part of the purchase money. Subsequently a judgment-creditor of the defendant's husband sought to execute his decree against the land in question, and eventually, in October 1889, obtained a decree in the High Court under which the plaintiff was ejected. The plaintiff now sued in 1892, less than three years from the date of the last-mentioned decree, to recover the sum paid by him to the defendant as above mentioned :

Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of N. Swaminadha Ayyar, Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 346 of 1893, confirming the decree of Y. Janakiramayya, District Munsif of Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 632 of 1892.

Suit to recover from defendant Rs. 800. It was averred in the plaint that on 16th April 1885 the defendant executed a [174] sale-deed of certain land and received the agreed consideration and placed the plaintiff in possession ; that the defendant sued in Original Suit No. 414 of 1885 in the Court of the District Munsif of Bimlipatam for the cancellation of the sale-deed, but her suit was dismissed ; that subsequently a judgment-creditor of the defendant's husband sought to execute his decree against the land in question, and eventually, on the 31st October 1889, obtained a judgment in his favour in the High Court, where it was held that the present defendant had no title to convey to the present plaintiff ; and that the present plaintiff was ousted in consequence of the decision of the High Court. This suit was instituted less than three years from the date of the judgment of the High Court. The District Munsif held that the suit was barred by limitation and his judgment was upheld on appeal by the Subordinate Judge.

* Second Appeal No. 1827 of 1894.

The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Ramachandra Rau Saheb for Appellant.

Respondent was not represented.

Judgment:—The article applicable is clearly No. 97 * of schedule II, and the cause of action accrued on the date of failure of the consideration, i.e., the date of the High Court's decree, dated 31st October 1889. This suit brought within three years from that date is in time.

It has been found in a former suit between the same parties that Rs. 737 were paid and that the sale-deed could not be set aside by the respondent by whom it was executed voluntarily.

In order that the cause of action should run from the date of the sale, it must be found that the sale was void ab initio.

It is only in such a case that article 62 † can apply, cf. Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 123). It was found, no doubt, in the former suit that the plaintiff had the means of knowing that defendant's husband had been absent for only three or four years. But the ground of the present suit is failure of consideration, which must depend upon the result of the suit and not on a particular finding in that suit.

We set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and remand the suit for replacement on the file and the disposal on merits. *

The costs hitherto incurred will abide and follow the result.

[176] APPELLATE CIVIL.The 6th and 18th September, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Gopaludu.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Venkataratnam and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Contract Act—Act IX of 1872, s. 74—Penal sum—Enhanced interest—Mortgage—Construction of covenant to pay.

In a suit to recover principal and interest due on a mortgage, dated 19th April 1882, it appeared that the instrument provided that the principal should be repaid with interest at 21 per cent. per annum in two instalments on 8th May 1883 and the 27th April 1884, respectively, and proceeded as follows :—“ if the amount of each instalment be not paid on the date of such instalment, we shall make payment with interest at three rupees per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond.” No payment had been made on account of principal or interest :

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the principal, together with interest calculated at 21 per cent. up to the dates when the instalments respectively became due, and at 12 per cent. from those dates to the date of the plaint and at 6 per cent. from that date until payment.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of H. T. Ross, District Judge of Godavari, in Appeal Suit No. 83 of 1893, modifying the decree of P. Lakshminarasu Pantulu, District Munsif of Amalapur, in Original Suit No. 311 of 1892.

Suit to recover principal and interest due upon a mortgage bond, dated 19th April 1882, and executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of plaintiff. Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 were brought on to the record as being the undivided sons of defendant No. 1.

The mortgage in question was executed to secure the repayment of Rs. 200 with interest at the rate of 21 per cent. per annum in two instalments on certain days therein mentioned and it provided as follows :—

“ If the amount of each instalment be not paid on the date of such instalment, we shall make payment with interest at three rupees per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond.”

In his plaint the plaintiff claimed interest at the enhanced rate from the date of default only, and the District Munsif passed a [176] decree for the amount claimed up to the date of the plaint. On appeal, the District Judge modified the decree by allowing to the plaintiff in respect of interest the sum of Rs. 84-14-11 only up to the date of the plaint, together with interest at 6 per cent. on the whole debt from that date to the date of payment. He held that on the right construction of the mortgage it contained no provision for the payment of interest from the due date to the date of discharge, and the sum awarded in the decree on account of interest was calculated on this basis.

The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Sundaru Ayyar and Subramanya Ayyar for Appellant.

Srirangachariar for Respondent.

* Second Appeal No. 736 of 1894.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—This was a suit on a hypothecation bond dated the 19th April 1882. As regards the principal amount Rs. 200, both the Courts below decreed the claim. As regards interest, the bond provided that the principal shall be paid back in two instalments with interest at 21 per cent. per annum—Rs. 100 with interest on the 8th May 1883 and the remainder with interest on the 27th April 1884. The bond then proceeds to stipulate that if each instalment is not paid on the due date, then interest shall be paid at 36 per cent. per annum from the date of the bond. The plaintiff stated that there was default in paying both instalments and claimed Rs 699-1-0 as interest due at the enhanced rate from the date of default. Relying on Nanjappa v. Nanjappa (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 161), the District Munsif decreed the interest claimed. But on appeal, the Judge was of opinion that there was no provision in the bond for interest from the due date to date of payment, and that the agreement to pay the enhanced rate extended only to the due date. Upon this construction of the document the Judge decreed interest at the enhanced rate as provided in the bond up to due date, refused interest from the due date to that of the plaint, and awarded interest at 6 per cent. per annum from date of plaint to date of realization. To this decision the plaintiff (appellant) objects on three grounds, viz., (i) that the Judge has misconstrued the document, (ii) that he ought not to have refused interest from date of default to date of payment, and (iii) that the interest is payable till date of payment as provided in the [177] bond. I am of opinion that the Judge is in error in holding that the bond contains no provision for payment of interest after the due date. The words 'from the date of the bond' are used in contradistinction to the words 'from the date of default,' which is premised, and they are not designed to limit the time up to which interest is payable. The natural construction is that in case there is no default, interest shall be paid at 21 per cent. per annum, and that in case there is default, interest shall be paid at 36 per cent. per annum, and that the payment at such higher rate shall be not only prospective from the date of default, but shall also be retrospective from the date of the bond. This being so, the next question is whether the agreement to pay interest at 36 per cent. in case of default is in the nature of a penalty, and as such governed by section 74 of the Contract Act. That section pre-supposes a case in which a contract is broken and a sum is named as the amount to be paid on such breach, the party complaining of the breach is entitled to receive reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount so named. The general rule is that effect is to be given to the intention of the parties as expressed by the contract in the absence of any rule of law to the contrary. When the contract is to pay a higher rate of interest from the date of breach, its operation is prospective, and the proper construction is that the debtor who commits default intends to pay the alternative rate and to return the money lent. On this point all the High Courts are agreed. When the agreement is to pay the higher rate on default from the date of the contract, the question arises whether it falls under section 74, and as to this there is a conflict of opinion. The Full Benches of the High Courts at Calcutta and Bombay have held that section 74 is applicable and that the agreement is penal and ought to be relieved against. Kalachand Kyal v. Shri Chunder Roy (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 392) and Umarkhan Mahamadkhan Deshmukh v. Salekhan (I. L. R., 17 Bom., 106). But the Full Bench of the High Court at Allahabad has held that section 74 does not apply to agreements to pay alternative rates of interest. In Nanjappa v. Nanjappa (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 161), a Divisional Bench of the High Court at Madras held that such agreement falls under section 74, and that though no sum is named in rupees, the extra sum payable is fixed and ascertainable beforehand, or at any rate at the time when the default is made. In [178] Basavayya v. Subbarazu (I.L.R., 11 Mad., 294), where a mortgage bond provided for repayment of the debt in four instalments with interest at 6 per cent., and, in default of payment on the due date, provided for interest at 12 per cent. from the date of the bond, another Divisional Bench held that the stipulation being reasonable, the higher rate of interest was payable from date of the bond. This may be reconciled with Nanjappa v. Nanjappa (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 161) by the fact that the alternative rate provided by the contract was one which might be adopted under the measure of reasonable compensation. In Narayanasami Naidu v. Narayana Rau (I. L. R., 17 Mad., 62, 65), in which I took part, I followed Basavayya v. Subbarazu (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 294). In the present case the contract was to pay interest at 36 per cent. from the date of the bond, and it is therefore governed by section 74, according to Nanjappa v. Nanjappa (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 161) and the High Courts at Calcutta and Bombay. I would therefore award interest at 21 per cent. per annum from date of bond to due dates, 12 per cent. from these dates to date of plaint, and 6 per cent. from date of plaint to date of realization. Costs will be assessed proportionately.

Shephard, J.—The question is, to what sum the plaintiff is entitled on account of interest payable in respect of the sum of Rs. 200 due under the bond executed by the defendant. The District Judge has held that there is no stipulation in the bond for payment of interest after the dates when the two instalments became due. The words used are . "If the amount of each instalment be not paid on the date of such instalment, we shall make payment with interest at three rupees per mensem per hundred rupees from the date of the bond." There is a terminus a quo given, but no express terminus ad quem, and the Judge has accordingly held that the interest was to run only up to the dates fixed for the payment of the instalments.

In this construction it appears to me that the Judge is wrong. The provision for enhanced interest pre-supposes a case of default. The date at which the instalment with interest at 21 per cent. fell due having passed, it is reasonable to suppose that it was intended that the substituted interest should run until the date of payment, and there are certainly no words indicating the contrary intention. The question then is whether the provision for enhanced interest is [179] of such a character as to make section 74 of the Contract Act applicable.

According to the view expressed in Nanjappa v. Nanjappa (I. L. R., 12 Mad., 161) and adopted elsewhere, a stipulation for retrospective enhancement of interest is generally a penalty which has to be dealt with by the Court under the provisions of section 74. The Court has to give a reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount named. In addition to the interest at 21 per cent. on the two instalments up to the dates when they respectively fell due, I would allow interest from those dates at the rate of twelve per cent. up to the date of the institution of the suit and subsequent interest at six per cent.

NOTES.

[It has been uniformly held that a stipulation for enhanced interest from the date of the bond is a penalty, (1907) 34 Cal., 150 at 157.]

Hindu law — Partition of family property — Suit by plaintiffs against their father and uncles.

In a suit for partition of family property, the plaintiffs were the sons of one and nephews of others of the defendants who defended the suit :

Held, that the suit was maintainable.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of T. Ramasami Ayyangar, Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, in Appeal Suit No. 253 of 1893, modifying the decree of T. Venkatarama Ayyar, District Munsif of Valangiman, in Original Suit No. 183 of 1892.

Suit for partition of the family property. The plaintiffs, of whom the second being an infant sued by the first as his next friend, were the sons of defendant No. 2 and the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 were his brothers. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 were the sons of defendant No. 1; the other defendants were strangers to the family who were in possession of part of the property of which the plaintiffs claimed their share. It was objected by the contending [180] defendants that the suit was not maintainable. This contention was overruled by both the lower Courts, who passed decrees in favour of the plaintiffs.

Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 preferred this second appeal.

Subramanya Ayyar for Appellants.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondents.

Judgment.—Appellants are brothers and respondents are the sons of the second appellant Natesayyan. Respondents sued appellants for partition, and the question raised for decision in this appeal is whether the suit is maintainable under the Mitakshara law.

The property, of which partition is decreed by the Subordinate Judge, is admittedly ancestral, and it is conceded that if the second appellant had no brothers the suit would lie. The contention on appellant's behalf is that when the father has brothers, and when he is alive, the sons cannot enforce partition against his will according to the Mitakshara. We are of opinion that both in principle and on authority the contention must be disallowed. The son's right to demand partition from his father arises from the coparcenary right of the former by birth, and it is confined to ancestral property, because the son and the father confer equal spiritual benefit upon the grandfather and ancestors and they have equal right in such property, whilst in paternal property the father has a dominant right as its acquirer. The basis on which the son's right of partition rests is the same whether the father has brothers or not, and there is therefore no legal foundation for the contention.

* Second Appeal No. 1297 of 1894.

It is further at variance with placita 8 and 11, Mitakshara, chapter 1, section V.

Placitum 8 shows that the partition takes place by the will of the son, though the mother is capable of bearing more sons and the father does not desire partition.

Placitum 11 refers to Manu, IX, 209, and draws an inference from it to the effect that the father, however reluctant, must divide with his sons, at their pleasure, effects acquired by the paternal grandfather.

Placitum 3 refers to the Smriti of Yajnavalkya to the effect that the ownership of father and son is the same in land which was acquired by the grandfather. Placitum 5 contains Vigyaneswara's comment upon it. "In such property which was acquired by the paternal grandfather through the acceptance of gifts, by [181] conquest or other means, the ownership of father and son is notorious and therefore partition does take place. For, or because, the right is equal or alike, therefore partition is not restricted to be made by the father's choice nor has he a double share."

Thus, the Smritis of Yajnavalkya and Manu, as commented on in the Mitakshara, recognize the son's right to enforce partition against the father's will of immoveable property acquired by the paternal grandfather on the ground that they have equal ownership in the same.

Appellant's pleader relies in support of his contention on placita 1, 2, and 6.

Placitum 1 refers to the equal division of paternal estate and states that a special rule is propounded by Yajnavalkya concerning the division of grandfather's effects among grandsons. That special rule is among grandsons by different fathers, the allotment of shares is according to the fathers. Placitum 2 comments upon that rule and explains and illustrates it. Placitum 6 repeats the rule. It is contended that since the grandson's share has to be carved out of the father's allotment, there can be no partition at the instance of the grandson when the father is alive, has brothers and does not desire partition, and consequently, the son's right of partition is taken away in the case suggested. Reliance is placed in support of this view on a passage in Mayne's treatise on Hindu Law, section 432, and on West and Bühler, page 295. This suggestion rests on a misconception of the reason of the special rule. Placitum 2 commences with the words, "although grandsons have by birth a right in the grandfather's estate equally with the sons," and goes on to say "still the distribution of the grandfather's property must be adjusted through their fathers and not with reference to themselves."

Thus the very text which prescribes the special rule postulates the existence of the equal right of father and son in the grandfather's property. It is therefore not correct to infer from the text a negation of that right. It is then asked how is the father's allotment to be ascertained if he does not desire partition? The answer is it is to be ascertained against his will, leaving him, after the son separates, to reunite with his brother if he desires to do so, or in the same way in which a brother's share is ascertained when one of three or more brothers desires partition and the others desire to continue in coparcenary. The right to demand partition is in the [182] son and it is by his will, and not by the father's desire, the partition takes place. Placitum 8 gives the same answer.

It is again asked why then is division per stirpes enjoined between class and class whilst partition per capita is prescribed among the sons of the same father?

The answer is that a coparcenary family is, according to Hindu theory, to be disintegrated in the same manner in which it is constituted. When several brothers or sons of the same father live in union by choice, on the understanding that when they elect to separate, they are to take equal shares in their father's property, we have before us a coparcenary family in its simplest form. When the brothers have sons, grandsons and great-grandsons who stand in their shoes by right of representation, we have a coparcenary family in its complex form. When death removes some and birth introduces others, the complexity is enhanced. According to Hindu law, partition is but a mode whereby the coparcenary family is disintegrated into individual or single families, without prejudice to the natural rule of inheritance that sons take like shares in their father's property. Hence it is that division per stirpes is sanctioned between class and class, in order that no violence may be done to the understanding on which the coparcenary family was first constituted.

Appellants' pleader next lays stress on placitum 3, section 5, chapter I. In this placitum the commentator anticipates an objection and answers it, and the rule of decision is to be sought for, not in the anticipated objection but in the answer given to it. The first part of the placitum states the objection and the answer to it is contained in these words. To obviate this doubt the author Yajnavalkya says "for the ownership of father and son is the same in land which was acquired by the grandfather" implying thereby what is stated in placitum 5. "For, or because, the right is equal or alike, therefore partition is not restricted to be made by the father's choice nor has he a double share." Thus it appears to us that on the correct interpretation of section V, chapter, I, Mitakshara, there is no exception to the rule that a son is entitled to demand partition from his father of ancestral property.

The foregoing is the view taken by this Court in 1862 in Nagalinga Mudali v. Subbiramaniya Mudali (1 M. H. C. R., 77). In that case the [183] ancestor who acquired the property was one Tirumalai Mudali who died many years before, leaving two sons, the defendants Subramania and Veerasami. The defendant Subramania had two sons, one named Perumal, the plaintiff's father who died in 1850, the other was the defendant Dharmalinga. It was held by Sir COLLEY SCOTLAND, C.J., and BITTLESON, J, that a grandson may by Hindu law maintain a suit against his grandfather for compulsory division of ancestral family property. The same view of the law under the Mitakshara was also taken by the Full Bench of the High Court at Allahabad in Jogul Kishore v. Shib Sahai (I. L. R., 5 All., 430), and Viramitrodaya, chapter II, part 1, verse 23, is also cited in support of the decision. A similar view was also expressed in Laljeet Singh v. Rajcoomar Singh (12 B. L. R., 373). We should have considered ourselves concluded by authority had it not been for the decision of the majority of the High Court at Bombay in Apaji Narhar Kulkarni v. Ramchandra Ravji Kulkarni (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 29). After carefully reading the judgments in that case and comparing them with the Mitakshara and the decision in Nagalinga Mudali v. Subbiramaniya Mudali (1 M. H. C. R. 77), we agree in the opinion of Mr. Justice TELANG who has reviewed at length all the authorities on the subject and dissented from the conclusion arrived at by the majority of the Court. This appeal must therefore fail and we dismiss it with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 1st and 13th August, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR.

Ramasami Ayyar.....(Plaintiff) Petitioner
versus

Municipal Council of Salem.....(Defendant) Respondent*

District Municipalities Act (Madras)—Act IV of 1894, s. 53, sch. A—Profession tax—District Court pleader—Court situated outside Municipal limits.
The plaintiff, who was a pleader, lived and had his office and occasionally practised in Courts within the limits of the Municipality of Salem, but he claimed to be entitled to the refund of a sum levied on him for profession tax under the [184] District Municipalities Act for the reasons that he practised as a District Court pleader and that the District Court was situated outside the municipal limits.

Held, that the plaintiff was liable to pay profession tax to the Municipality of Salem.

PETITION under Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, section 25, praying the High Court to revise the decree of S. Dorasami Ayyangar, District Munsif of Salem, in Small Cause Suit No. 1390 of 1892.

Suit to recover the sum of Rs. 25 which had been levied from the plaintiff as profession tax under the District Municipalities Act of 1884 (Madras).

The facts of this case are stated sufficiently for the purposes of this report in the judgment of the High Court.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Petitioner.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar for Respondent.

Judgment:—The plaintiff is a first-grade pleader, and defendant is the Municipal Council at Salem. On the 29th June 1892, the latter assessed the former at Rs. 25 for exercising his profession as a pleader of the District Court under class III, schedule A, of Madras Act IV of 1884. Plaintiff paid the tax under protest and brought this small cause suit for its refund. Two questions were raised for decision before the District Munsif at Salem, viz., (1) whether the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and (2) whether the plaintiff is entitled to the refund claimed by him? The District Munsif held that he had jurisdiction and that plaintiff was lawfully taxed. It is urged in revision on petitioner's behalf that he was not liable to pay profession tax and that if he was, he could only be taxed under class IV.

Schedule A, class III, specifies "a pleader practising in any Civil and Sessions Court, Subordinate Judge's Court or Court of Small Causes" as liable to pay a profession tax of Rs. 25. Class IV specifies "every Pleader and practising vakil not included in class III" as liable to pay a tax of Rs. 12. It is an undisputed fact that the District Court of Salem and the Subordinate Courts of Salem and Bellary are situated outside the municipal limits. The District Munsif's Court, which is invested with the powers of a Small Cause Court up to a certain limit, is located within the municipal limits. There is, however, no separate [185] Court of Small Causes in the district constituted as was formerly the case under Act XI of 1865. Although the District and Subordinate Courts are outside the municipal limits, the plaintiff admitted before the District Munsif that he receives his clients, takes instructions from them, accepts vakalats, and draws up pleadings in his house which is situated within the municipal limits. He admitted also that he has his office within the municipality and that he practises in other Courts within the Municipality. It is provided by section 53, Act IV of 1884, that if the Municipal Council notify, under section 50, that a tax on arts, professions, trades and callings, and on offices or appointments shall be levied, every person who within the municipality exercises after the date specified in the said notification, any one or more of the arts, professions, trades or callings or holds any one or more of the offices or appointments specified in schedule A, shall, subject to the provisions of section 59, pay in respect thereof the sum specified in the said schedule as payable by persons of the class in which such person is placed. It is argued that petitioner can be said to practise only in the District Court outside the limits and that neither the other acts ancillary to such practice nor his practising as a pleader in the Courts of District Munsifs by reason of his status as District Court Pleader constitute the basis of his liability to be taxed. I am of opinion that the District Munsif has arrived at a correct conclusion. It is section 53 that defines the cause of liability to pay a profession tax and that section describes the tax as a tax on professions and declares the cause of liability to be the exercise of one of the professions specified in schedule A, within the municipality. Schedule A, class IV, declares every pleader and practising vakil as liable, whilst class III refers to every pleader practising in any Civil and Sessions Court, Subordinate Judge's Court or Court of Small Causes as liable to be placed in that class for purposes of taxation. The real question then is—Does the petitioner exercise his profession as pleader within the municipality?

The term 'profession', is not defined by the Act. In ordinary parlance any act done by a pleader which is incidental to his profession is an exercise of his profession, and it is not necessary that all the acts incidental to that profession must be done by him before he can be said to exercise that profession. It often happens that a junior vakil takes instructions, prepares the brief, draws up [186] the memorandum of appeal, prepares a summary in his house of the arguments and of decided cases and handing them over to a senior, accompanies him to the Court where the senior addresses the Court. Do not both the senior and the junior alike exercise the profession of pleaders?

In the case before us, all the acts ancillary to pleading in Court are done within the municipal limits as already mentioned. It appears further that by reason of petitioner's status as a District Court pleader he practises in the Courts of District Munsifs which are within the municipal limits. I see no warrant either in the language of section 53 or of schedule A for eliminating from his profession all acts preparatory to pleading and acting in Court and saying that pleading and acting in Courts alone constitute the exercise of his profession. Even on the view that the location of the District and Subordinate Courts outside the municipality was not foreseen when the local area was defined, there remains the fact that all acts save pleading and acting in Court are done within the municipal limits, and the former constitutes as much as the latter the exercise of the profession of a District Court pleader within the meaning of section 53 and schedule A. Nor do I see any sound reason for excluding from our consideration petitioner's practising in other Courts within the municipal limits. The case of Kali Kumar Roy v. Nobin Chander Chuckerbutty (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 585) is not in point. The point decided there is that a person, who looks after a regular appeal and gives instructions to pleaders in connection with it, is not practising as a Muktyar within the meaning of section 13 of Act XX of 1865. The words in that section are "who shall practise as a muktyar in any Civil or Criminal Court without having previously obtained a certificate." The words in schedule A, "practising in any Civil and Sessions Court," are intended to be descriptive of his rank as a pleader and practising vakil and not to be words which limit his liability or constitute pleading and acting alone as the exercise of a pleader's profession.

I dismiss this petition with costs.

[187] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 20th February and 14th November, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Andi Achen.....(Defendant No. 2) Appellant

Kombi Achen.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Pensions Act—Act XXIII of 1871, ss. 4, 6—Suit for malikana without certificate of Collector.

In a suit against the Rajah of Palghat and other members of his family for a declaration of the plaintiff's status as the third Rajah, and to recover a sum of money payable to him as such on account of his share of malikana, it appeared that the plaintiff had obtained no certificate under Pensions Act, 1871, section 6 :

Held, that the suit was not maintainable.

APPEAL against the order of E. K. Krishnan, Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 901 of 1891, reversing the decree of V. Rama Sastri, District Munsif of Palghat, in Original Suit No. 298 of 1891.

The plaintiff sued the Rajah of Palghat and three other members of the family for a declaration of his status as third Rajah of Palghat and to recover Rs. 769, being the malikana due and payable to him as such. The plaintiff had brought a previous suit [see Kombi v. Aundi (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 75)] asking for declaration of his status only. The present suit was dismissed by the District Munsif on the ground that the malikana being a pension the suit was not maintainable without a certificate under Act XXIII of 1871, section 6. This decree was reversed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the ruling of the District Munsif was contrary to the judgment of the High Court in the case above referred to, and he accordingly remanded the suit to be disposed of on the merits.

Defendant No. 2 preferred this second appeal.

Bhashyam Ayyangar and Desikachariar for Appellant.

Sankara Menon for Respondent.

Best, J.—As observed by the Subordinate Judge, the difference between the present suit and the former one is that in his former suit [188] plaintiff asked only for a declaration of his status without seeking further relief in the shape of payment to him of his share of the malikana, whereas he now seeks both for the declaration and the further relief.

* Appeal against Order No. 124 of 1892.

The former suit was expressly held to be not barred by the Pensions Act XXIII of 1871 on the ground that it was merely for a declaration as to the plaintiff's status and that though "no doubt malikana is paid by Government on behalf of the stanom of the fifth Raja," the suit "did not seek a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to anything so payable."

As the malikana in question is clearly money paid by Government within the meaning of section 4 of the Pensions Act [cf. the recent decision of the Privy Council in Deo Kuar v. Man Kuar (L.R., 21 I.A., 148)], the present suit is, in my opinion, not maintainable in the absence of a certificate under section 6 of that Act.

I would therefore allow this appeal and, setting aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, restore the decree of the District Munsif and direct the respondent (plaintiff) to pay the appellant's (second defendant's) costs in this Court and also in the Lower Appellate Court.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—In this case judgment was reserved on account of an opinion expressed by me in my judgment in Kombi v. Aundi (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 75), to the effect that unless the suit is brought against the Government, no certificate is perhaps necessary under section 6 of Act XXIII of 1871. It was not necessary to determine the question for the purpose of the previous suit which could not be maintained under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

On reconsidering the question which arises for adjudication in this suit and taking time to consider it, I see reason to alter my opinion. I think that upon the proper construction of section 4 of the Pensions Act, it is enough that the suit relates to a "malikana" and it is not necessary that it should be instituted against the Government or its officers. I was influenced by the notion that the Legislature did not probably intend to shut out the co-sharers from the ordinary Courts, even in regard to the determination of their relations inter se which must prevail in regard to other property. But having regard to the language of section 4 and the scheme of the Act suggested by sections 5 and 6, the [189] narrower construction, viz., that it is enough that the suit relates to malikana, appears to be the true construction. Possibly, the intention was that the distribution of what is regarded as the bounty of Government among the co-sharers should remain under its control or that of its executive officers. This view is the result of the grammatical interpretation of section 4 confirmed by the scheme of the Act embodied in sections 5 and 6. It is also the view taken in Babaji Hari v. Rajaram Ballal (I. L. R., 1 Bom., 75) and Syed Mahommed Isaack Mushyack v. Azeezoon Nissa Begam (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 341) and recently in Deo Kkuar v. Man Kuar (L. R., 21 I. A., 148) by the Privy Council. On the ground that a certificate from the Collector is necessary to give jurisdiction to the Civil Courts to entertain the suit relating to the malikana in dispute, I concur in the judgment proposed by my learned colleague.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 19th and 20th February, and 6th March, 1894.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE DAVIES.

Srirangachariar and others.....(Defendants Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 6)

Appellants

Ramasami Ayyangar and others.....(Plaintiffs) Respondents.*

Contract Act—Act IX of 1872, s. 23—Consideration in part illegal—Stifling a prosecution—Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, s. 22, sch. II, arts. 91, 120—Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, s. 13—Res judicata Decree in suit of small cause nature—Subsequent suit for declaration.

The plaintiff, claiming to be entitled together with two of the defendants to the office of archaka of a temple, sued in 1889 for a declaration of his title, and for a declaration that an agreement entered into by them in 1886 with the other defendants was void as having been executed under coercion, and because part of the consideration was the withdrawal of a pending criminal charge of trespass and theft against them. These averments were proved. The first-named defendants were made plaintiffs in the suit more than three years after the execution of the agreement. The remaining defendants pleaded that the validity of the agreement was res judicata for the reason that they had brought a previous action upon it against the plaintiffs and had obtained a decree for Rs. 75 :

[190] Held, (1) that the validity of the agreement was not res judicata, because the previous suit was of a small cause nature :

(2) that the agreement was void although the withdrawal of the criminal proceedings formed part only of the consideration for it :

(3) that the first plaintiff was entitled to a declaration of the invalidity of the agreement, but not the others who had been joined as plaintiffs more than three years from its date.

APPEAL against the decree of W. F. Grahame, District Judge of South Arcot, in Original Suit No. 4 of 1889.

Suit filed on 18th February 1889 by the plaintiff against nine defendants for a declaration that he was an archaka of the Thillai Govindarajaswami temple, Chidambaram, with a hereditary mirasi right thereto, and that he was entitled to the perquisites of the office unaffected by certain recent arrangements made by defendants Nos. 1 to 7, and for a further declaration that an agreement, dated 16th February 1886 and executed by the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 8 and 9 to the remaining defendants was void, and for a decree that the key of the temple be delivered to him and for further and other reliefs.

The plaintiff's case was that he and defendants Nos. 8 and 9 were the hereditary archakas of the temple and that they had been induced to enter into the agreement above referred to surrendering their rights to defendants Nos. 1 to 7, who claimed that office by a similar title, under coercion and undue pressure and to procure the withdrawal of a charge of criminal trespass and theft which had been brought against them. Defendants Nos. 8 and 9 were made plaintiffs by an order bearing date subsequent to 16th February 1889. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that the suit was barred by limitation and that the claim with reference to the agreement was res judicata by reason of the decree in Appeal Suit No. 269 of 1887 on the file of the District Court of South Arcot, reversing the decree of the District Munsif of Chidambaram in Original Suit No. 790 of 1886, in which the validity of the agreement was directly in issue. In that case the plaintiffs were the present defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4, and they sued the present plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 75 on the footing of that agreement.

The District Judge overruled the pleas of limitation and res judicata, held that the agreement was void for the reasons appearing in the judgment of the High Court, and passed a decree as prayed.

[191] Defendants Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 6 preferred this second appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellants.

Subramania Ayyar, Bhashyam Ayyangar and Sivasami Ayyar for Respondents.

Judgment.—There can be no doubt that part of the consideration for the agreement A was the withdrawal of a pending criminal charge of trespass and theft laid against the plaintiffs and others (vide Exhibit B) on the 14th February 1886, that is, two days before the execution of A. The first plaintiff as plaintiff's third witness has sworn that it was so and his evidence stands uncontradicted, not even one of the defendants denying it. It is further proved that the very Magistrate, who would have tried the charge laid if it had been proceeded with, was present taking part in the negotiations that led up to A. There is also no doubt of the law that a consideration that proceeds upon the withdrawal of criminal proceedings that have been instituted is illegal as being opposed to public policy, as it is held to be the stifling of a prosecution. And even if this illegal consideration is only part of the consideration, it renders the whole agreement void, because there is not good and sufficient consideration. Lound v. Grimwade (L. R., 39 Ch. D., 605). We therefore confirm the District Judge's finding in this respect. It is next contended for the appellant that the question of the validity of the agreement could not be re-opened, because it was res judicata by reason of the previous decision of the District Court in Appeal Suit No. 269 of 1887 holding it to be valid. That appeal, however, was made in a suit of a small cause nature before the District Munsif of Chidambaram (Original Suit No. 790 of 1886), and the subject-matter thereof was consequently not open to second appeal. It has been held by the Bombay High Court [Govind Bin Lakshmanshet Anjorlekar v. Dhondbarav Bin Ganbarav Tambye (I. L. R., 15 Bom., 104)] that a decision in a suit of that character will not operate as res judicata and that ruling has been more than once followed by this Court, vide Vithilinga Padayachi v. Vithilinga Mudali (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 111) and Namasivaya Gurukkal v. Kadir Ammal (I. L. R., 17 Mad., 168), and we see no reason to depart from it now, and must therefore disallow this contention.

We find however that the second and third plaintiffs are not entitled to the declaration setting aside the agreement A, because [192] we find that they did not sue in time for this relief. The agreement A is dated the 16th February 1886, and this suit was brought by the first plaintiff alone on the last day allowed by a three years' limitation. The second and third plaintiffs not having joined the first plaintiff in bringing the suit, he made them defendants. It was not until the 25th January 1892 that, by an order of the Judge passed under section 32, Code of Civil Procedure, they were made plaintiffs. They were therefore not made co-plaintiffs till more than three years after their cause of action arose, and under section 22* of the Limitation Act, the suit should be deemed to have been instituted when they were so made parties. The period of limitation for setting aside a document is under article 91† of the second schedule to the Limitation Act three years from the time the plaintiff knew of it. These plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 knew of it on the 16th February 1886 when they executed it, and therefore their inclusion as plaintiffs in the suit on the 25th January 1892 was made too late. It is contended on their behalf (i) that being defendants in the suit they were already parties thereto when it was brought, and section 22 of the Limitation Act is therefore not applicable to their case, and (ii) that the relief as prayed for was not to set aside the document, but merely to declare it invalid and the article of limitation applicable was article 120‡ of the second schedule, allowing six years' time as for a suit for which no period of limitation is otherwise provided, under which these plaintiffs would be in time. We cannot accede to either of these views and the cases quoted, Nagathal v. Ponnusami (I.L.R., 13 Mad., 44) and Khadir Moideen v. Rama Naik (I.L.R., 17 Mad., 12) do not support either contention. As to the first point the second and third plaintiffs were 'added' as such only on the date they were taken from the ranks of the defendants, and it is only then they were so made parties. Section 22 of the Limitation Act therefore clearly applies to them. As to the second point there is no such suit as for a mere declaration to declare an instrument invalid. Section 42§ of the Specific Relief Act shows in what matters mere declaratory suits are admissible. The only suit possible under that Act in regard to an instrument is one under section 39§ to have the document adjudged void and

Effect of substituting or adding new plaintiff or defendant.

Suit for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule.	Six years.	When the right to sue accrues.]
--	------------	----------------------------------

§[Sec. 39. Any person against whom a written instrument is void or voidable, who has reasonable apprehension that such instrument, if left outstanding, may cause him serious injury, may sue to have it adjudged void or voidable, and the Court may, in its discretion, so adjudge it and order it to be delivered up and cancelled.

If the instrument has been registered under the Indian Registration Act, the Court shall also send a copy of its decree to the officer in whose office the instrument has been so registered, and such officer shall note on the copy of the instrument contained in his books the fact of its cancellation.]

to have it cancelled, and article 91 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act is the particular article applicable to such a case. The result [193] is that the decree so far as it sets aside the agreement A must be modified by declaring that it is not set aside against plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. It is then argued by appellants' vakil that first plaintiff cannot alone sue for that relief, as the agreement is a joint agreement of all three plaintiffs. If there was any technical defect in this respect, it was cured by the addition of the second and third plaintiffs before the decree was passed. But in our opinion, had the name of first plaintiff stood alone throughout, he was entitled to sue to evade his individual responsibility under the agreement because there was a several as well as a joint liability under it.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs as against first plaintiff. It is allowed as against second and third plaintiffs to the extent indicated above, and the decree of the lower Court will be modified accordingly.

These plaintiffs will bear their own costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 17th and 18th January, and 2nd May, 1894.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Sundrammal and another.....(Defendants Nos. 4 and 5) Appellants

Rangasami Mudaliar and others.....(Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 3) Respondents.*

Hindu law—Inheritance—Bandhu ex parte paterna—Bandhu ex parte materna—Limitation—Adverse possession—Alienation of an infant's property by his mother and guardian.

Suit filed in 1891 to recover possession of certain land, the property of a Hindu, who died an infant leaving him surviving his adoptive mother, who entered into possession and enjoyed the property till her death in 1890. It appeared (1) that in 1861 the deceased and his adoptive mother had conveyed absolutely certain of the properties to the widow of one of his first cousins on his adoptive father's side for her maintenance and that of her daughter, and that it had been assigned by her to A, B and C; (2) that other portions of the property had been conveyed in 1889 by the same persons, with the concurrence of D, as a gift to the daughters of the adoptive sisters of the deceased; (3) that D was the son of a sister of the [194] adoptive mother. The plaintiffs were grandsons of the brother of the deceased's adoptive father, being respectively the sons of his daughters:

Held, (1) that the plaintiffs being bandhus ex parte paterna were preferential heirs to D, who was a bandhu ex parte materna.

(2) that the sister's daughters had no title whether by the law of inheritance or under the gift asserted by them.

(3) that the plaintiffs' claim to the lands in the possession of A, B and C was barred by limitation.

APPEALS against the decree of L. A. Campbell, District Judge of Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 7 of 1891.

The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of certain land as the heirs of Venkatachala Mudali, deceased, the adopted son of Chidambara Mudali whom he survived. On the death of Venkatachala Mudali, which took place before he attained his majority, the properties passed into the possession of his adoptive mother Muttammal who died in May 1890. The plaintiffs claimed that they and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who refused to join in the suit, were entitled to inherit under Hindu law as being the grandsons of Chidambara Mudaliar's undivided brother named Venkatachala Mudali whose daughters were their mothers respectively. The third defendant, who was in possession of part of the property, claimed to be entitled to retain it on two grounds, firstly, because it had been conveyed to his wife by way of gift by Muttammal above referred to, secondly, because he was a preferential heir to the plaintiffs as being both a cousin in the male line of the deceased and also the son of his maternal aunt. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5, who were in possession of other portions of the property, were, respectively, the daughters of Sornatammal and Parvatiammal, the adoptive sisters of the deceased, and they claimed title under a gift made as they averred under his directions by his adoptive mother to them. They also pleaded that the gift had been acquiesced in and the deed relating to it attested by defendant No. 3. Certain other items of property, to which issue No. 8 related, were alleged to have been given in 1861 by the deceased and his adoptive mother to one Tanatiammal, the widow of one of Chidambaram's nephews, for her maintenance and that of her daughter; and the persons in possession of this part of the property, viz., defendants Nos. 7 to 11 and 13 to 20, claimed title in various ways through Tanatiammal. During the hearing the plaintiffs entered into a compromise with defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6 and 12.

* Appeals Nos. 63 and 64 of 1893.

The District Judge held that the plaintiffs' claim was preferable [195] to that of defendant No. 3 as the son of the deceased maternal aunt and that it was not established that defendant No. 3 was a cousin in the male line as alleged. With regard to the defence of defendants Nos. 4 and 5, it was held that the consent of the deceased to the alleged gift was not proved, and even if established that it would not prevail against the claim of the reversioners. With regard to the gift to Tanatiammal the Judge was of opinion, regard being had to the amount of the property conveyed and to the wealth in possession of the family, that the grant was not beyond the powers of the mother and guardian of the deceased, and accordingly that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover possession during the life time of Tanatiammal. In the result the District Judge passed a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiffs as against defendants No. 4 and 5 and made a declaration that the alienations by Tanatiammal were not binding upon the reversioners after her death. The rest of the decree was in conformity with the compromise above referred to.

Against this decree the contending defendants preferred the present appeals. Appeal No. 63 being preferred by defendants Nos. 4 and 5 and Appeal No. 64 by the persons claiming title through Tanatiammal.

Bhashyam Ayyangar and Jivaji for Appellants.

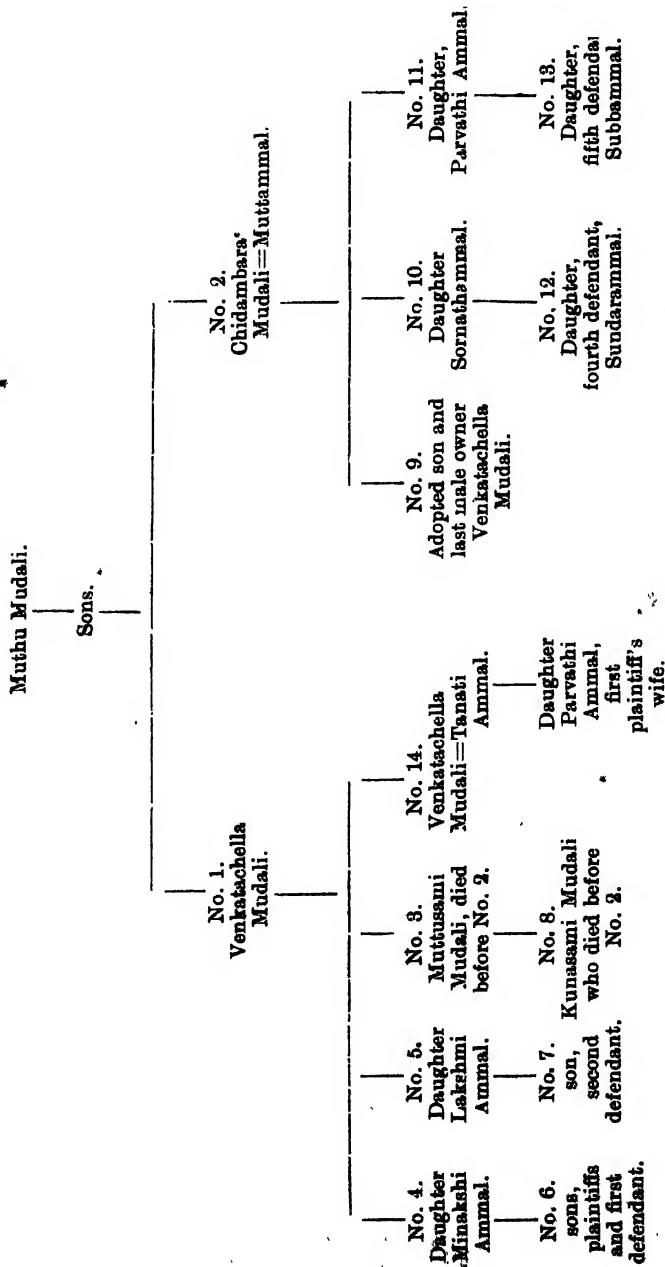

Subramanya Ayyar and Ranga Ramanujachariar for Respondents.

Judgment:—These two appeals are preferred from the decree of the District Court of Coimbatore in Original Suit No. 7 of 1891. No. 63 by defendants 4 and 5 and No. 64 by defendants 7, 10, 11, 13 to 15 and 17 to 20.

The properties in dispute belonged to one Chidambara Mudali. Upon his death, they devolved on his adopted son Venkatachella Mudali, the last full owner. He died unmarried during his minority and his adoptive mother Muttammal succeeded him. Upon her death in May 1890, several persons claimed the right of succession.

The three plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the third defendant and defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are the several classes of relations who claimed the succession. The third defendant claimed to be a dayadi or sapinda of Venkatachella Mudali the last male owner, and also his mother's sister's son. The fourth and fifth defendants are the daughters of two sisters of Venkatachella [196] Mudali, and the plaintiffs and defendants, Nos. 1 and 2 are the daughter's sons of Venkatachella Mudali, the senior, who was the paternal uncle of the last male owner. The subjoined genealogical table shows how the several claimants are related to each other and to Venkatachella Mudali.

[197] The eight issues fixed in this case indicate the contentions of the parties now in possession of the several items of property and the several defences set up by them. The Judge decided the first issue for plaintiffs and the second and third issues against third defendant. As to the fifth and eighth issues, his decision is that Muttammal did make a gift of the lands to the several defendants, but that it is not proved that she had authority to do so.

As plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 6 and 12 entered into a compromise pending decision, the Judge has recorded no findings on the fourth, sixth and seventh issues.

Against his decision two sets of defendants have appealed.

Appeal No. 63.—The appellants' first contention is that the Judge's finding that third defendant is not a dayadi is contrary to the weight of evidence. The Judge has stated his reasons for his finding in paragraphs 4 to 6 of his judgment. On reading the evidence, we see no sufficient reason to come to a different conclusion. The evidence consists in the main first of declarations made by Muttammal, and secondly of those alleged to have been made by Chidambaram Mudali, her husband, and thirdly of statements of witnesses that he is a dayadi and that he performed the funeral and other obsequies of both Chidambaram Mudali and his widow. The witnesses who depose in appellants' favour and to admissions of third defendant's relationship are mostly unconnected with the family and their statements are not consistent with each other. In endeavouring to help the appellants several go too far when they say that third defendant was not only a gnati but also a coparcener or undivided gnati and that he performed Chidambaram's obsequies while the last male owner, his adopted son, was alive. It is true that there is documentary evidence in support of Muttammal's admission, but, as observed by the Judge, it is not safe to attach weight to it. Admittedly the third defendant is her sister's son and she made the admission on occasions when she had reason to be specially kind to him. The contention that he is a gnati or sapinda must be disallowed as not proved. Another contention in appeal is that fifth defendant's first witness Subbaraya Mudali is also a sapinda of the last full owner. The Judge refers to Subbaraya Mudali in paragraph 4 of his judgment and remarks that he has made no attempt to secure the reversion. We observe further that fourth and fifth defendants did not plead his status as a sapinda in answer to plaintiff's claim or ask for an issue in regard to it.

[198] It is, however, admitted, that third defendant is the son of Muttammal's sister and therefore mother's sister's son of the last male owner. The Judge finds and it is also proved, that during her life, Muttammal gave portions of the property in dispute to fourth and fifth defendants who are her daughter's daughters, with the consent and approval of third defendant. It is in evidence that she gave other portions of her son's property to third defendant and his wife and to other defendants. As plaintiff's relationship to Vencatachella Mudali is admitted, the question of law arising for decision is whether as the sister's daughters of Vencatachella or by reason of the consent of his mother's sister's son, the third defendant, fourth and fifth defendants exclude plaintiffs from succession. In paragraph 2 of his judgment the Judge relies on the table of succession in Mayne's Hindu Law, sections 466 and 535 and concludes that uncle's daughter's sons are preferable heirs as compared either with sister's daughters who have no place among bandhus or with the maternal aunt's son who is only related on the mother's side. Appellant's pleader contends that male bandhus are to be preferred to females only when they belong to the same class and that appellants are entitled to the reversion. In support of his contention he relies on Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 23, 29). On the other hand, it is urged for plaintiffs that as bhinna gotra sapindas on the father's side they are the next reversioners and reliance is placed on the decision in Umaid Bhadur v. Udoi Chand (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 119).

We are of opinion that the contention on appellant's behalf cannot be supported. As sister's daughters they are not bandhus in the sense that bandhus are bhinna gotra sapindas as stated in chapter II, section V, sloka 5 of the Mitakshara, and if they are heirs they can only take after them as female relatives—according to the decision of the High Court in Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 23, 29). There can be no doubt that whatever their rights may be as relatives, they cannot exclude male relatives who as bhinna gotra sapindas or regular bandhus are entitled to succeed under the Mitakshara law in preference to them.

The learned pleader for appellant argues that under Hindu law males exclude females only when they belong to the same class of relatives, but to this proposition we cannot accede. Take, for instance, the case of competition between a sister and the son of [199] another sister, and it cannot be denied the latter excludes the former, because he is a bhinna gotra sapinda, whilst the sister is a mere relative and being a female can offer no funeral oblations. Again, it is a well-known principle of Hindu law that when, in the table of succession, one class of heirs ranks above another, the class that is named first must be exhausted before the class that is named next can be let in, as in the case of a brother and nephew or of nephew and brother's grandson. As female relatives form a class inferior to male bhinna gotra sapindas as in the case of a sister and sister's son, plaintiffs as daughter's sons of the last male owner's paternal uncle are preferable heirs to appellants, who are only his sister's daughters who, if as such in the list of heirs at all, have a place therein as mere relatives before the property escheats to the Crown. As between plaintiffs and the third defendant the latter is a bandhu ex parte materna, whilst the former are bandhus ex parte paterna. The decision in Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 23, 29) is not in point. There the competition was between a maternal uncle and the father's paternal aunt's son, both of whom were bhinna gotra sapindas and bandhus. This appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 64.—As regards Appeal No. 64, it refers to the contention which forms the subject of the eighth issue. The properties to which it relates passed into appellant's possession from that of one Tanatiammal, a widow of one of the first cousins of the last male owner, No. 14 in the pedigree. The Judge finds as a fact that Muttammal, the widow of Chidambara Mudali, and his adopted son, the last male owner, executed a deed by way of partition assigning certain lands to the mother and daughter in 1861. He was of opinion that Muttammal had no right to convey the lands absolutely and that her son was then a minor, but that effect could be given to the alienation as a provision for maintenance which it was competent to Muttammal to make. On this view he held that alienation was not binding upon the reversioners as a body after the demise of Tanatiammal, and that in the meantime, the plaintiffs were not entitled to claim possession and passed a decree accordingly. He declared the title of plaintiffs as reversioners and as a body after Tanatiammal's death, because he did not desire to adjudicate on the effect of first plaintiff's attestation [200] of document IX, whereby Tanatiammal and her daughter Parvati, who is first plaintiff's wife, conveyed the lands in dispute for Rs. 6,000 in July 1876 to one Aravan Pusari. The contentions on appeal are—(1) that no declaration ought to have been made; (2) that defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 are as bandhus preferable heirs; (3) that a suit for a declaration of title was barred by limitation; and (4) that it was competent to Muttammal as the guardian and adoptive mother of her minor son to alienate absolutely a portion of the property in lieu of maintenance. We do not think that the Judge's decree can be supported so far as it is against these appellants. He finds as a fact that the alienation was made by Muttammal and her minor son and that what was conveyed was an absolute estate. As the last male owner was alive the alienation was not that of a widow's estate by a widow but that of an absolute estate by the guardian of the last male owner. It was open to any next friend of his to have stepped forward during his minority and set aside the alienation on the ground that it was an act done without adequate necessity or in excess of the limited authority of a guardian. As the alienation took place in 1861 whilst the present suit was brought in 1891, a suit to set it aside would be barred, if the minor were still alive and his reversioners cannot take a higher position. The plaintiff's claim must, therefore, be held to be time-barred.

This appeal must be allowed and the decree of the Judge set aside, so far as it refers to the properties in appellant's possession with costs throughout.

[201] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 1st October and 23rd November, 1894.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE PARKER.

Kaleloola Sahib.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Nuseerudeen Sahib.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Muhammadan law—Wakf—Charitable and religious trusts—Perpetuities, rule against.

A Muhammadan, by an instrument in writing, dedicated certain moveable and immoveable properties for the upkeep of her husband's tomb and "for the daily, monthly and annual expenses of the aforesaid mausoleum, such as lighting, frankincense, flowers, and the salaries of repeaters of Koran and readers of benedictions, etc., as well as for the annual fathcha ceremonies of the deceased and after my death for my annual fathcha ceremony." It was found that a travellers' inn was erected by the endower of the property as an appurtenance to the tomb, and that the performance of the ceremonies necessarily involved the distribution of charity, and that the lights at the tomb were of use to passers-by :

Held, on appeal reversing the judgment of DAVIES, J., that the instrument was not a valid wakf and was void as contravening the rule against perpetuities.

APPEAL against the decree of Mr. JUSTICE DAVIES sitting on the Original Side of the High Court, in Civil Suit No. 199 of 1892.

Suit to recover, with mesne profits, certain land, the property of Ghousee Begam Sahiba, deceased, whose heir the plaintiff was. The defendant was in possession of the properties in suit under an instrument, dated 20th December, 1886, and executed by the deceased whereby she purported to impress them with certain trusts of a religious character and appointed the defendant to be the superintendent of the same. The plaintiff averred that the instrument above referred to was void for among other reasons those stated in paragraphs 13 and 14 of the plaint as follows :—

“ That the said endowment or wakf of properties in schedule A aforesaid is entirely invalid and void under the Muhammadan law, as the object or purpose thereof is entirely illegal and sinful.”

“ That the same (endowment or wakf) is also void by reason of its having been brought about by the defendant while the endower was in a state of deep mental affliction as aforesaid.”

Davies, J.—The matter in dispute in this case is the property of the late Ghousee Begam Sahiba, the widow of the late Prince Oomduth-ud-Dowlah Bahadur. It is admitted that she was the absolute owner of the properties and that the plaintiff is her sole heir, being the son of her brother. She died on the 4th of June 1892, leaving, as alleged by the plaintiff, jewels and other moveable properties of the value of about Rs. 8,000, the details of which are given in the schedule B to the plaint. Several years before her death, that is on the 20th of December 1886, she made an endowment of certain immoveable properties worth, according to the plaint, Rs. 16,000, together with moveables worth Rs. 2,500 for the upkeep of her husband's tomb and for ceremonies connected therewith, including ceremonies to be performed for herself after her death. The plaintiff alleges that this endowment is not a valid endowment according to the Muhammadan law and that he as heir is therefore entitled to the properties which are the subject of endowment, as well as to the moveables, of which the deceased lady was possessed at the time of her death. The defendant, who married a daughter of the late Prince Oomduth-ud-Dowlah Bahadur, the mother being one Moham, was appointed Muttuvali or manager of the endowment by the deceased lady. He contends that the endowment was a valid endowment binding on the plaintiff, who also acquiesced in it at the time when it was made, that as to the property left by the deceased at the time of her death, it consisted of but a few articles worth only Rs. 300, of which the deceased lady made a gift to his daughter, and that consequently the plaintiff is entitled to nothing. The following are the issues framed in the suit :—

First.—Is the deed of endowment void for the reasons stated in paragraphs 13 and 14 of the plaint ?

Second.—If not altogether void, is it valid for more than one-third of the estate of the deceased as being executed during her death illness ?

Third.—Is plaintiff estopped from disputing the validity of the endowment by reason of his having attested the document which he admits having done ?

Fourth.—Is the suit barred by the law of limitation ?

[203] Fifth.—Is defendant in possession of all the properties mentioned in schedule B and is plaintiff entitled to the same ? and Sixth.—To what relief, if any, is plaintiff entitled ?

Dealing with these issues seriatim, the first is whether the deed of endowment is void for the reasons stated in paragraphs 13 and 14 of the plaint. The reasons there stated are that the endowment is invalid, as the objects or purposes thereof are entirely illegal and sinful, being contrary to, and prohibited by, the Muhammadan law, and that it is void as having been brought about by the undue influence of the defendant at a time when the endower was in a state of deep mental affliction. The second ground may at once be dismissed. There is no evidence to show that the defendant exercised any undue influence over the deceased. Her husband had died in 1831, and after his death she had erected his tomb and had herself performed ceremonies thereat; and it was on the eve of her departure on a pilgrimage to Mecca that she entrusted the defendant with the sole management thereof, as it was impossible for her in the circumstances to continue it herself. As to the first ground, it will be best first to set forth terms of the endowment as they appear in the deed of endowment A, dated the 20th of December, 1886. After reciting the properties which were made the subject of the wakf consisting of a house and its site valued at Rs. 10,000, a garden valued at Rs. 6,000 and the ground upon which the mausoleum of Prince Oomduth-ud-Dowlah Bahadur and its connected buildings were built together with articles of moveable property appertaining to the tomb, such as grave cloths, incense burners and so on valued at Rs. 2,500, the deed proceeds as follows:—"I have appointed Mahomed Nuseerodeen Khan, son-in-law of the deceased Junnath-ma-ab (may he be in paradise) as the Muttuvalli of the aforesaid three immoveable properties and the moveable articles. It is required that the aforesaid Muttuvalli shall, out of the income of Kasmahal and the ground of Narayana Pillai's garden, which I have delivered into his possession, after deducting the expenses of repairs and taxes relating to the endowed buildings, &c., spend so much of what remains as he may consider fit, or as the funds may permit, for the daily, monthly and annual expenses of the aforesaid mausoleum, such as lighting, frankincense, flowers and the salaries of Hafizes (repeaters of the Koran) and Daroodies (readers of benediction, &c.), as well as for the annual [204] Fatheha ceremonies of the deceased (may he be in paradise); and after my death, he should also spend for my annual Fatheha ceremony." It then provides for the continuance of the management in the family of the defendant and for the removal of any manager who shall be guilty of mismanagement, ending up by declaring the property to be inalienable. Now, the plaintiff's case is that a wakf of this nature to be valid must be a dedication of property to the service of God in such a way that it may be beneficial to man, in other words it must be for a religious and charitable purpose. This is no doubt the accepted law in the case of public wakfs. See McNaghten's Muhammadan Law, Book I, Chapter X, Abdul Ganne Kasam v. Hussien Miya Rahimtula (10 Bom., H. C. R., 7, 13), Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Huq (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 744 747), and Syed Ameer Ali's Law relating to gifts, trusts, &c., among the Muhammadans (Tagore Law Lectures, 1884, page 179). It is contended that in this case the endowment is neither for religious nor for charitable purposes, as none of the objects stated is a lawful religious object, the building of mausoleums over graves, the sprinkling of flowers and frankincense thereat, the repeating of the Koran, &c., at the grave and the lighting thereof being all prohibited by the Muhammadan law, and there being no provision for any charitable object. As regards the latter contention, there is good evidence to show that, in the performance of the religious ceremonies, charitable objects are also involved. It is proved that on the occasion of the annual ceremony at the grave, alms are given to the poor either in money doles or in cooked food, and it is also proved that among the buildings attached to the mausoleum there is an inn for travellers where they may halt and rest. This was erected by the deceased lady, the endower herself and with perhaps a two-fold object, for the defendant says that sometimes rest-houses are built by the side of tombs for the benefit of the soul of the deceased, so that the travellers' repose may be communicated to him. So that it cannot be said that there was no charitable object in this endowment. Of course the plaintiff has denied the existence of the charities referred to, but beyond his denial there is nothing to establish their non-existence. The only witness on behalf of the plaintiff who speaks to this matter is his fourth witness, who, while agreeing with him in denying the existence of the [205] "travellers' inn, admits that at the annual ceremonies the poor are fed, while on the defendant's side the existence of the travellers' inn is proved beyond all doubt as well as the fact of alms being given to the poor. It is argued for the plaintiff on the strength of the cases, Fatmabibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 42) and Pathukutti v. Avathalakutti (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 66), and that these objects, if they exist, should have been expressly set forth in the deed of endowment; but as it is clear from the evidence that the travellers' inn was erected by the endower of the property as an appurtenance to the tomb and that the performance of the annual ceremonies entailed as a matter of course the distribution of charity, it was unnecessary to specify these matters in detail. Finding then, that there were charitable purposes in view, the arguments addressed to the Court with the object of showing that the present endowment offended against the law of perpetuities must fail.

To come now to the further question whether the other purposes were not religious on the ground that they were opposed to the Muhammadan law, a number of authorities were quoted from ancient texts. Thus, to prove that it was unlawful to erect a monument over a grave, the Mishcat-ul-mashabih was quoted. In a translation of this work from the original Arabic by Captain A. N. Mathews, printed at Calcutta in 1809 at chapter VI, part I, "on burying the dead," the Prophet is reported to have said that tombs must be low and made with unburnt bricks, and in a Persian work Shurhai-safar-us-Saadat, printed in the Afzululmatba Press at Calcutta (in the Hijri year 1252) at page 349, it is said "thou shalt not raise grave nor shalt thou construct it with stones, granite and bricks, nor shalt thou harden it with compounded chunam and mud, or otherwise than that. Thou shalt not construct a building or tomb over the grave. These are altogether invented acts and are contrary to the precedents laid down by the Prophet." As opposed to these texts there is quoted for the defendant an extract from another Persian work the Madaraj-un-naboowah, printed in the Muzhurul-Ajaib Press (in Hijri year 1271), in which at page 410 it is said: "It is stated in Mattabil-ul-Moumoneim that (the learned persons of) former times considered it a lawful pleasure (any indifferent action, which incurs neither praise nor blame) to superstruct the graves of holy [206] persons and the renowned learned, so that people may perform pilgrimage and take rest therein, and also they may sit under their shelter. That has been transcribed from Mafathih-i-shurhai Masabeeh. The author of it had said that he had seen the graves in Bokhara having buildings of cut bricks. It had been approved by Ismail-i-Zahid (Ismail the pious) who is one of the distinguished law officers (lawyers or theologians)." This passage would, however, seem to refer only to the tombs of saints or sages and not to those of private individuals however lofty their station in life may have been. So that it would seem that the Prophet disapproves of the erection of stately sepulchral monuments. But it is contended that there is a difference between things sinful and things merely disapproved, and that in the texts quoted for the plaintiff it is not said that the erection of such structures is sinful and therefore forbidden as such. It is an admitted fact that now a days it is a common practice of Muhammadans all over the world to have substantial tombs erected over their graves. The defendant's fifth witness says that all the graves of Muhammadans of respectable class in this city have tombs built over them. The Moulvi who appears as tenth witness for the plaintiff, while he allows the existence of this practice, declares it to be illegal, and he even goes to the length of stating that the well-known Taj Mahal at Agra, which is a monument over a grave as well as the erections over the Prophet's tomb at Medina, are contrary to law. "Such monuments of Mussulman piety or magnificence exist in all Muhammadan countries and in none more than in Hindustan" (see Introduction to Hamilton's Hedaya, page LXXIII); and although in primitive times there may have been a moral precept against them, there can be no doubt that in the present time they have been sanctified by long use and custom. It would unsettle the minds of the whole of the Muhammadan community in India, if such a well-established practice were now declared to be illegal, and no Court of justice in India; where the approved customs of any race are recognized and accepted as law, would be justified in making such a declaration.

Then as to the ceremonies that are to be performed, under the deed of endowment, at the tomb of the deceased Prince Oomduth-ud-Dowlah, it is contended also on the authority of old texts that they are, one and all, illegal. The recital of the Koran, [207] &c., at the grave, the lighting of lamps there, the strewing of flowers and the sprinkling of frankincense are, it is said, all condemned. The following are the authorities quoted :—In the Shurhai-safarus-saadat, already referred to, it is said at page 350 : "He (the Prophet) directed abstinence from erecting mosques on the top of the grave, or lighting lamps upon them. He pronounced curse (of God) upon the perpetrator thereof"; and again at page 352 : "There was no practice for persons to congregate, out of time, for prayers, and read the Koran, or repeat khatams (benedictions) either at the grave or elsewhere. All these are invented and abominable acts." In the Madaraj-un-Naboowah, also referred to before, it is said at page 410 "it is prohibited to light lamp at the grave. . . . But this gathering of people, especially on the third day, and other grand observances. . . . are abominable and prohibited," and at page 411, "but inasmuch as, to sit around the grave and repeat (the Koran and the benediction) at it is abominable." At page 149 of the same work, it is said "it is mentioned by Sheikh Abdul-Kareem-i-saloosy that should the reader of the Koran, while reading it, have the object that its virtue should be for the dead, it will not reach him." Against these texts there are quoted for the defendant extracts from the Arabic work Fathava-i-aulum ghiri, printed in the Education Press, in Calcutta, in Hijri year :243, wherein at page 233 it is said "repeating the Koran near the graves is not abominable with Mahomed (may blessings of God be upon him). And our (spiritual) sages have adopted it from his saying (if it is asked) whether any benefit is derived by it? It is an adopted doctrine (to say) that benefit is really derived from it. In this manner, it is mentioned in Muzmerath"; and at page 529 it is stated to place flowers and sweet basils upon the graves is good, and if alms are given of the value of the flowers it is better." It is so in Gharaiib. In the Madaraj-un-Naboowah, already referred to, it is said at page 149 "Khazhi Hussain has decided that to make contract for repeating the Koran at the grave is permissible. It is just as making contract for calling out for prayers and teaching the Koran," and at page 410 it is said "to light lamps at the graves is forbidden, except when any work is done under it or any road goes near it." And lastly an extract was quoted from Thufseer-i-Futhhool Azeez (commentary in Hindustani on the Koran), printed in the Moham-madi Press, Bombay, wherein at [208] page 168 it is said "and the assistance rendered by the living persons to the deceased in this state, approaches them readily, and the dead, on such occasion,*expect impatiently help from this side (of the world), and they suppose themselves as if they are still alive. For this reason, it is mentioned in the holy traditional sayings (of the Prophet) about the circumstances in the grave that the Mussulman person says there "leave me, so that I may pray (to God)." And it is also mentioned that "a deceased man in this state is like a drowning person, as if expecting (some one) impatiently who would attend to his complaint. At this time, alms, prayers and fatheha (prayers for the souls of the dead) become very useful to him. And, therefore, most of the people exert themselves in such sort of works up to one year, especially for forty days after death. And the soul of a dead person, during the days shortly after his death, also visits the living people in their dreams, as well as in their waking state and relates its condition." It will be seen that on every point except the lighting up of the grave, there is a conflict of authority in the texts quoted, that by the one set of authorities quoted for the defendant it is lawful to recite the Koran at the grave (even the Moulvi for the plaintiff admits this, provided the recital is not in a loud tone), to strew flowers and sprinkle frankincense there, and that it may also be lighted, if the light is of use to passers-by or to carry on work. It is stated that the lights at the tomb in this case being in a frequented place are of use to passers-by. I am therefore unable to find any proof that the practices referred to are in any way illegal. They are also proved to be of everyday practice. Defendant's second and third witnesses say that there are very many tombs in Madras where these things are done. Defendant's fifth witness says that strewing flowers on graves is permitted, and so is frankincense to attract angels near them. At Medina, which he has visited, the Prophet's grave is lighted up with a thousand lights and scented wood is burnt. "All the Muhammadan people of this city, who can afford it," he says, "have the Koran read by their graves." In the face of these facts, it would be absurd to hold that any of the practices are repugnant to the Muhammadan law when every Muhammadan performs them. What were considered "grand" observances in the days of the Prophet may well have become common place now. It has been held in Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti [209] Churn Ghose (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 412), that the words "charitable" and "religious" must be taken in the sense in which they are understood in the Muhammadan law. Mr. Justice AMEER ALI in that case observes at page 427 that the words "piety" and "charity" have a much wider signification in Mussulman law and religion than perhaps in any others; and it would be very difficult to say in this case that from a Muhammadan point of view the objects of the endowment are not both pious and charitable.

Having disposed of the alleged illegality as regards the objects of the endowment, the next contention for the plaintiff is that the endowment of moveable property is invalid. This objection does not appear to have been taken in the pleadings, nevertheless it is no doubt a fact that moveable, and therefore perishable, properties are ordinarily not fit subjects for endowment. But there is an exception to this rule when the moveables are appurtenant to the immoveable property. (See Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol II, pages 342-344.) In an Arabic work Shurhai—Vakaya, Vol. II, printed in the Anwar-i-Mohammadi Press (in the Hijri year 1302) at page 418, it is said, "and the endowment of lands is valid, but not of moveables. With Mohamed, endowment of moveables that are usually endowed is valid, such as hatchet, spade, adze, saw, coffin, its cloth cover, mud pots and copper pots and the Koran. Most of the doctors of law act upon this in other countries"; and the plaintiff himself admits that in this case all the moveables endowed are kept at the tomb of the deceased Prince Oomduth-ud-Dowlah and are appurtenant thereto. This objection therefore also fails. Another objection was also taken at the hearing, though it was not seriously pressed, viz., that the plaintiff should have been chosen as the Muttuvalli of the endowment in preference to the defendant who is a stranger. Admitting for the sake of argument that defendant is a stranger, there is no clear law prohibiting his appointment. For the plaintiff is quoted page 507 of Fathava-i-aulum ghiri, previously referred to, wherein it is said "and really the ruler (Judge) cannot appoint a manager, out of strangers, when there may be (a person) amongst the family of the endower competent for it. If a competent person amongst them is not forthcoming, and a stranger is appointed, and if a competent person is found amongst the relatives [210] afterwards, he should cause the same to be reverted to the relatives of the endower." For the defendant, on the other hand, is quoted a text from Ruddul Mohihar, an Arabic work, in which at page 448 it is said "in spite of the existence of the donor's children, who are competent, if a stranger is appointed it is justified." This objection, therefore, also fails, no allegation being made that the endowment is not properly managed by the defendant. This disposes of the first issue.

With regard to the other issues, the learned Judge held that the suit was not barred by limitation, that the plaintiff was not estopped by reason of his having attested the deed of endowment and having acquiesced in its provisions and that the deed was not executed during the death illness of the executant. He also decided the fifth and sixth issues against the plaintiff.

The result is that the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Mr. H. G. Wedderburn for Appellant.

Sundaram Sastri and Kumarasami for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff is the sole heir of the late Ghoussee Begam Sahiba, widow of the late Prince Oomduth-ud-Dowlah Bahadur. This lady died on 4th June 1892, and by an instrument, dated 20th December 1886, she endowed certain immoveable and moveable properties for the upkeep of her husband's tomb and for ceremonies connected therewith including ceremonies to be performed for herself after her death. The sole question argued in this appeal is whether an endowment for such a purpose is a valid wakf under Muhammadan law. Other pleas have been abandoned.

The objects of the endowment as stated in the deed are "for the daily, monthly, and annual expenses of the aforesaid mausoleum, such as lighting, frankincense, flowers, and the salaries of Hafizes (repeaters of the Koran) and Daroodies (readers of benediction, etc.), as well as for the annual Fatheha (prayers for the dead), ceremonies of the deceased (may he be in paradise); and after my death for my annual Fatheha ceremony."

The learned Judge held that none of the above practices were illegal under Muhammadan law. He pointed out that, though there were texts disapproving of such practices, there was a distinction between things sinful and things merely disapproved;—that as a matter of fact such practices were not uncommon either in India or in other Muhammadan countries, and that at Medina itself the [211] Prophet's grave was lighted up with a thousand lights and scented wood burnt. On these grounds he held that, though there were moral precepts against such practices, they had at the present time become sanctioned by long use and custom. To the objection that the endowment was not for any charitable object, he pointed out that, as a matter of fact, alms were given to the poor, and there was an inn for travellers, &c.

We may at once say we do not think the fact that the Muttuvalli has dispensed certain charity in connection with this tomb can at all affect the case. The object of the trust must be judged from the terms of the instrument, and there is not a word in Exhibit A to indicate any charitable purpose, or purpose for the benefit of mankind. The objects indicated are of a religious character. [See Pathukutti v. Avathalakutti (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 66) and Fatmabibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 42).]

Admitting that the practices referred to by the learned Judge are not uncommon, and may have become to a certain extent sanctioned by usage, we must point out that the evidence on record fails to show that the expenses for such observances either at Medina or elsewhere come from endowments of the nature of wakf. There is nothing to show that the expenses are not paid for by the contributions of the faithful or by the voluntary offerings of the families of those who desire to commemorate their deceased ancestors.

It is urged by the learned counsel that the object of this endowment, though in a sense religious, is not for the advancement of religion, and that unless it is intended to benefit mankind by the advancement of religion, it is not a valid wakf. It is pointed out that McNaghten, chapter X, defines an endowment as the appropriation of property to the service of God when the right of the appropriator becomes divested and the profits of the property so appropriated are devoted to the benefit of mankind, and in the appendix to that work we are referred to two decisions—the first of the Bengal Sudr Adawlat of 6th December 1798, in which it was held that wakf implies the relinquishing the proprietary right in any article of property and consecrating it to the service of God that it may be of benefit to man, Moohummud Sadik v. Moohummud Ali (1 S. D. A., Beng., 17); the other a decision of 21st February 1857 [Syed Khodabundha Khan [212] v. Musst. Oomutul Fatima (S. D. A., Beng., (1857), 235)], in which it was held that inasmuch as wakf implied consecration for the above purpose, the provisions for reading the Koran at and lighting the tomb of a testator did not create a valid wakf (McNaghten, App. to Madras reprint, 423).

In Baillie's Muhamnadan Law, chapter III, regarding the proper objects of appropriation, we find (page 576, 2nd edition) that the appropriation of an estate for those who may read at a tomb is not regarded as valid.

A great many cases were quoted to show the nature of wakf, but none of them bear directly upon the present point. They go to show the nature and requisites of a valid wakf, and that whatever be the interposed interests, the appropriation must be for an ultimate charitable trust which will not fail. The question here is whether the ultimate object is for a charitable purpose at all. [(Vide Abdul Ganne Kasum v. Hussien Miya Rahimtula (10 Bom. H. C. R., 7), Fatmabibi v. The Advocate-General of Bombay (I. L. R., 6 Bom., 42), Limji Nowroji Banaji v. Bapuji Ruttonji Limbuwalla (I. L. R., 11 Bom., 441), Nizamudin Gulam v. Abdul Gafur (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 264), Abdul Gafur v. Nizamudin (I. L. R., 17 Bom., 1), Mahomed Hamidulla Khan v. Lotful Hug (I. L. R., 6 Cal., 744, 748), Luchmiput Singh v. Amir Alum (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 176), Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (I. L. R., 17 Cal., 498), Bikani Mia v. Shuk Lal Poddar (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 116).]

In Luchmiput Singh v. Amir Alum (I. L. R., 9 Cal., 176), the deed directed that the manager should in the first place pay certain debts and afterwards apply the property for the expenses of the masjid and the tomb of the holy personages of the settlor's family, the servants of a certain Asthana, and for performing urs and fathеха at the tomb, as well as for the maintenance of the settlor's grandsons and their male issue. The Subordinate Judge (a Muham-madan gentleman) held that the endowment was valid, but the only question raised in appeal was whether the provisions for the payment of debts and maintenance invalidated the wakf. The question now in issue was not discussed.

Similarly no question appears to have arisen regarding the validity of a similar endowment in Delroos Banoo Begum v. Nawab Syud Ashgur Ally Khan (15 B. L. R., 167), but in that case the fathehas to be [213] performed were those of Mahomed and the twelve Imams, and the expenses of the first ten days of the Mohurruum, etc. The ceremonies there to be performed were at the tomb of the saints and not at the settlor's own tomb. In that case the decision in Syed Khodabundha Khan v. Musst. Oomatul Fatima (S. D. A., Beng. (1857), 235) that a provision for the lighting of the testator's own tomb and reading of the Koran was invalid was referred to.

It was urged that in the construction of a deed of wakf the words "charitable" and "religious" must be taken in the sense in which they are understood in Muhammadan law, and we were referred to the judgment of Mr. Justice AMEER ALI in Meer Mahomed Israil Khan v. Sashti Churn Ghose (I. L. R., 19 Cal. 412). In that case, however, the question was whether a provision for the settlor's children and kindred was a charitable and religious act, and the learned Judge held that according to the Muhammadan law it was.

The result therefore of an investigation of the authorities seems to be that endowments purely for purposes like the present seem to be against the principles of Muhammadan law, and that in such cases when wakfnamahs for such purposes have been upheld, the dedication has had relation to the tombs of saints only and has been intermixed with charitable purposes either for the poor or for the settlor's own kindred.

In the absence of any express authority showing that a dedication for ceremonies at a private tomb—and for that purpose only—is valid under Muhammadan law, we do not think we ought to uphold the deed. It creates a perpetuity of the most useless description which would certainly be invalid under English Law. The observance of these ceremonies may be considered by the Muhammadans as a pious duty, but it is certainly not one which seems to fall within any definition of a charitable duty or use. These observances can lead to no public advantage, even if they can solace the family of the lady herself. The case bears a close analogy to one in which a Roman Catholic has devised property for masses for the dead, which has been held to be invalid in India on grounds of public policy irrespective of any territorial law, Colgan v. Administrator-General of Madras (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 424, 446). A similar bequest in a Chinese will has also been held to be invalid in an appeal to the Privy Council from the Supreme Court of the [214] Straits Settlements, Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo (L. R., 6 P. C. 381). Had it been shown that such perpetuities were recognised as valid under Muhammadan law, we should have felt constrained to uphold the deed; but in the absence of such proof, we think the general rule of public policy should prevail.

We must reverse the decree of the learned Judge and direct that a decree be passed in plaintiff's favour as prayed. As the point is a new one, we shall make no order as to costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL—FULL BENCH.

The 15th September, 1892, and 23rd November, 1893 and 14th December, 1894.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE
MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Pichuvayyangar.....(Defendant No. 1) Petitioner

Seshayyangar.....(Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, s. 206—Amendment of decree—Power of Court of First Instance after appeal.

In a suit for land with mesne profits the District Munsif delivered judgment for the plaintiff and recorded therein a finding that he was entitled to mesne profits as from a certain date, it having previously been arranged that the amount, if any, awarded for mesne profits should be determined in execution. In the decree no mention was made of the date from which the mesne profits were to be calculated, but it was stated merely that the amount was to be determined in execution. The case went on appeal before the District Judge, who modified the decree in certain particulars unconnected with mesne profits. With a view to execution the plaintiff applied to the Court of First Instance to bring the decree into conformity with the judgment. The Court having made an order accordingly, it was objected in the High Court on revision that the order was made without jurisdiction :

Held, that the jurisdiction of the Court of First Instance to amend the decree under section 206 was ousted by the confirmation of his decree on appeal.

PETITION under Civil Procedure Code, section 622, praying the High Court to revise the order of S. Dorasami Ayyangar, District Munsif of Valangiman, dated 28th December 1889, and made on Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1037 of 1889.

In the last-mentioned petition the plaintiff in Original Suit No. 137 of 1886 on the file of the District Munsif, applied under Civil [213] Procedure Code, section 206, for the amendment of the decree in that suit by bringing it into conformity with the judgment. In the suit above referred to the plaintiff sought to recover his half share in the property of his family together with mesne profits, and in its judgment the Court recorded that the plaintiff was entitled, inter alia, to recover mesne profits from the month of August 1885 ; but there was no declaration with reference to this matter inserted in the decree, which provided merely that the amount to be paid to the plaintiff on account of mesne profits should be ascertained in execution. An appeal was preferred against this decree which was modified by the District Court in regard to certain particulars not relating to the mesne profits. On the plaintiff proceeding to execution in respect of mesne profits, he was met with the objection that the decree was too vague to be executed by reason of the omission to fix the period for which the plaintiff was entitled to recover mesne profits. He accordingly preferred his petition for amendment above referred to, and the District Munsif passed an order as prayed by him.

Defendant No. 1 preferred this petition under Civil Procedure Code, section 622.

* Civil Revision Petition No. 364 of 1891.

Subramanya Ayyar for Petitioner.

Sadagopachariar for Respondent.

This petition first came on for hearing on the 15th September 1892 before MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and WILKINSON, JJ., when the Court made the following order :—

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO FULL BENCH.—The decision in Sundara v. Subhanna (I. L. R., 9 Mad., 354) was dissented from in Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (I. L. R., 11 All., 267), and in Chathappan v. Pydel (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 403), the learned Judges said that if it had been necessary to decide the question, they would have referred the matter to the Full Court. The final decree in the present case was the decree of the Appellate Court, and the only Court which had jurisdiction to amend that decree was the Court of the District Judge. See Manavikraman v. Unniappan (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 170) and cases quoted there.

We therefore refer the following question to the Full Bench :—Whether the jurisdiction of the District Munsif to amend the decree under section 206 was ousted by the confirmation of his decree by the District Court on appeal.

[216] This petition came on for hearing on the 23rd November 1893 before the Full Bench.

Mahadeva Ayyar for Petitioner.

Rajagopalachariar for Respondent.

Reference was made in the argument to Civil Procedure Code, sections 230, 235, 545, 579, 582, 587, 610 ; Limitation Act, schedule II, article 176 ; Kristo Kinkur Roy v. Rajah Burrodacant Roy (14 M. I. A., 465, 490), Noor Ali Chowdhuri v. Koni Meah, (I. L. R., 13 Cal., 13), and Daulat and Jagjivan v. Bhukandas Manekchand (I. L. R., 11 Bom., 172), as well as to the cases mentioned in the order of reference.

Judgment.—We are of opinion that when there has been an appeal against the decree of the District Munsif and a decree has been passed thereon, the District Munsif has no longer any power to amend his decree.

We therefore answer the question in the affirmative.

This petition coming on for final disposal before MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and SHEPHARD, JJ., the Court delivered the following judgment :—

Judgment.—Following the ruling of the Full Bench we dismiss the petition for amendment and cancel the amendment made with reference to it.

The petitioner is entitled to his costs.

NOTES.

[When there has been an appellate decision, the only decree that can be executed or amended is the appellate decree, (1888) 11 All., 267 ; (1889) 11 All., 314 ; (1898) 20 All., 304 ; 493 ; (1893) 18 Bom., 542 ; 18 Bom., 203 ; (1894) 19 Bom., 258 ; (1894) 18 Mad., 214 ; (1898) 22 Mad., 293 ; (1900) 10 M. This principle, it was held, does not involve the proposition that the act of a party in filing an appeal deprives the Court of First Instance of power to dispose of an application which had been properly made to it in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and it was held accordingly that the jurisdiction of the Court to hear review was not taken away by the presentation of an appeal. APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th July, 1893, 10th and 16th July and 20th December, 1894.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Venkata Narasimha Naidu.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Ramasami and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Rent Recovery Act (Madras)—Act VIII of 1865, ss. 9 and 11—Enforceable terms of patta—Established rates of rent.

The zamindar of Vallur sued certain raiyats in his pargana of Gudur to enforce the acceptance of pattas providing, among other conditions, that the raiyats should relinquish their holdings at the end of the term unless fresh pattas were tendered to them, that they should pay half the cost of repairs by a cess proportioned to the wet rate, that if they irrigated dry land they should pay a wet rate to the [217] zamindar, as well as the water rate due to Government, that they should not cut crops without permission and should supply grass and vegetables to the zamindar's servants. It appeared that in 1853 the pargana in question was surrendered to Government who restored it subject to the payment of a newly-assessed peishcush in 1862, a date when the present defendants were already in occupation of their respective holdings. In the interval, Government collected village rents in money. The pargana was not surveyed and a money assessment fixed prior to 1859. The District Judge expunged the conditions in the patta above referred to and held that the zamindar was entitled to collect by way of rent from the raiyats respectively the quota of the village rents which each raiyat paid in 1861. He found, however, that there was no contract express or implied as to the rent to be paid; and that prior to 1851 the raiyats held their lands under the zamindar on the sharing system, and that for the first year after the restoration of the pargana the arrangement enforced by Government had remained in force, but that from 1863 to 1870 the sharing system was in force and varam was paid by the raiyats, after which for five years individual money rents were collected, and then there were two leases with money rents each for a period of five years:

Held, (1) that the conditions in the patta above referred to were unenforceable and had been rightly expunged;

(2) that the plaintiff's rights were not limited by the rates of rent paid to Government in 1861, but that the rent should be discharged in kind according to the established rate of varam in the village;

(3) that the plaintiff was entitled to recover from the raiyats half the water tax payable on the porainboke lands irrigated from the Kistna anicut.

SECOND APPEALS against the decrees of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suits Nos. 1388 to 1395 of 1890, modifying the decisions of W. E. Hall, Assistant Collector of Kistna, in Summary Suits Nos. 452 to 459 of 1889.

Suits under Rent Recovery Act by the zamindar of Vallur against certain tenants on his zamindari to enforce the acceptance of pattas and execution of muchalkas. The Assistant Collector directed that certain modifications be made in the pattas tendered by the zamindar. Against this decision the zamindar and tenants preferred appeals and memoranda of objections, respectively, with the result that the District Judge modified the decision of the

* Second Appeals Nos. 449 to 456 of 1892.

Assistant Collector and declared what should be the terms of the pattas which the zamindar could impose upon his raiyats. From the pattas actually tendered he directed that certain conditions should be expunged, viz., conditions that the raiyat should relinquish his holding at the end of the term unless a new patta is tendered to him, (2) that the raiyat should pay half the cost of repairs by a cess proportioned to the wet rates, (3) that the raiyat irrigating dry lands should pay a wet rate to the zamindar as well as the water rate due to Government, (4) that the raiyat [218] should not cut crops without the zamindar's permission and that he should supply grass and vegetables to the zamindar's servants. With regard to the rates of rent the Judge found that there was no implied contract and held that the settlement rates were the proper rates for falsi 1299, to which these suits related. He pointed out that in 1853 that portion of the plaintiff's zamindari in which were situated the lands now in question, viz., the village of Mukkollu, had been given up to Government because it hardly defrayed its peishcush. In 1861, the Government, by Government Order, No. 1214, dated 18th June, restored the Gudur estate to the zamindar "as an act of grace and not of right on such peishcush as may be adopted to its improved condition." During the time when the estate was in the hands of Government, a period to which dated the tenancy of the present defendants, the settlement rates were imposed by Government, but it was left in doubt whether this took place before or after 1st January 1859. The District Judge referred to Palaniappa v. Raja (I.L.R., 7 Mad., 325) as an authority for saying that the zamindar was entitled, under the re-grant of 1861, to collect the revenue at those assessed rates only.

The plaintiff preferred these second appeals against the decrees of the District Judge.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Appellant.

Parthasaradhi Ayyangar and Seshagiri Ayyar for Respondents.

These second appeals came on for hearing on 13th July 1893, when the Court (MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and DAVIES, JJ.) made the following order:—

Order.—There is no finding as to what are the rates that the Judge considers to be binding. The Government Order to which he refers is not in evidence. Nor do the judgments of either of the Courts below specify the settlement rates. The parties were at issue on the question of rates and the appellant is therefore clearly entitled to a finding as to what those rates are. There is no decree of the Assistant Collector on record and the decree of the District Judge does not mention any rates. Under section 11 of Madras Act VIII of 1865, the settlement rates prescribed for adoption must have been on a survey made previous to 1st January 1859, as noted by the Judge, but the Judge has not decided this [219] question. It does not appear that the plaintiff had an opportunity of showing that what was assigned under the Government Order was not limited to the Government revenue. We must, therefore, ask the Judge to return findings on the following questions:—

- (1) Whether the lands have been surveyed by Government previous to 1st January 1859, and if so, what money rent was fixed thereon?
- (2) If the first issue is found in the negative, what was the nature of the interest assigned under the Government Order of the 18th June 1861?
- (3) What are the rates to be inserted in the patta?

The Judge finds there was no implied contract, and as this is a question of fact, we must accept the finding.

The Judge also finds that certain conditions in the patta are unreasonable and has expunged them. We see no reason to differ from his findings on this point.

The return to the issues specified above will be made within eight weeks from the receipt of this order. Each party will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence. A copy of the Government Order of the 18th June 1861, and the issue paper (if any) should also be forwarded to this Court with the findings. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections after the finding has been posted up in this Court.

In compliance with the above order, the District Judge submitted the following finding:—

Finding :—The Gudur pargana in the Vallur zamindari is said to have been attached for arrears in 1851 by the Collector of Masulipatam. In 1853, the zamindar surrendered the pargana to Government, but in 1861 Government decided to restore it, and it appears to have been restored in 1862.

The defendants in the present suits have called five witnesses, who say that, when the pargana came under the Collector of Masulipatam in 1851, the villages were surveyed, and that money rents were imposed upon the fields. The zamindar calls six witnesses, who say that the system followed by the Collector of Masulipatam was to impose a lump sum on each village, and that the raiyats, amongst themselves, classified their lands and arranged what each was to pay, so as to make up the total which the Collector required from each village. Both sides rely upon documents. The raiyats produce the village accounts which show classification of fields and money rents due by individuals. The zamindar relies upon a village rent lease for a [220] whole village signed by Mr. T. D. Lushington, who was Collector of Masulipatam from 1849 to 1855.

Although I have studied Act VIII of 1865 for the last twenty-four years, I have never been able to find out why the date 1st January 1859 was inserted in section 11 of that Act or what survey and money assessment in zamindari tracts, the framers of that section had in mind. I do not know of any survey or any money assessment on fields in any zamindari estate in the Madras Presidency. I have never met any person who could give any explanation of this section and I can find nothing in the statement of objects and reasons for the Act.

I am disposed to believe the zamindar's witnesses who say that the Collector of Masulipatam imposed village rents from 1851 to 1861. That would be in accordance with the revenue administration which then existed in the Masulipatam District. (See page 355 of the Kistna District Manual.)

These village rents were fixed by the Collector upon the best estimate he could frame of the capability of the land and for the purposes of this estimate the fields were classified and individual money rents were imposed by the villagers themselves, but, so far as the Collector was concerned, all the raiyats of the village were jointly and severally liable for the whole village rent. I cannot find that this system of village rents with a rough individual adjustment of the burden was a survey and a fixing of money assessment on the fields, within the meaning of section 11 of the Rent Act.

I am next directed to find what was the nature of the interest assigned under the Government Order of the 18th June 1861. That order restored the pargana to the zamindar and the view I take of the matter is as follows:—

It may be that Government has the power to increase a raiyat's sist, but, when Government assigns that land revenue to a zamindar, the zamindar can collect only the sist which the raiyat was then paying to Government and cannot increase the amount. As authority for the proposition, I cited Special Appeal Suit No. 15 of 1812 in which the Sudder Court reinstated a raiyat at the rates prevailing before the permanent settlement, and Palaniappa v. Raya (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 325) where TURNER, C. J., and HUTCHINS, J., held that section 11 of the Rent Act does not enable a landlord to collect more. It appears to me that these two decisions have conferred this right upon the raiyats who hold under Government in the Madras Presidency. It appears to me that when the zamindar of Vallur surrendered this pargana to Government in [221] 1853, the raiyats in that pargana at once became raiyats holding under Government with all their rights. It follows that in 1861 Government had not the power to thrust back these raiyats into their former status. Government in 1861 might make what stipulations seemed fit about peishcush and such matters, but could not confer upon the zamindar against the raiyats powers which the case-law of this Presidency does not permit.

This is a large question in this district. Except the Palnad taluk, all this district was once held by zamindars. Many of these estates were attached and sold for arrears and bought in by Government, so that now the greater part of the district is directly under the Collector. The raiyats in those tracts which once were zamindari estates are treated in every respect by the Courts as are raiyats in tracts that have always been under Government. It would astonish these raiyats to be told that Government could now hand them back again to the old pensioned zamindars who live in their ruined forts in the Kistna district and that these zamindars could then enhance the rents of all raiyats who could not prove occupation from 1801. But this consequence will follow if the High Court now decides that Government had power to reduce defendants to their former status. Most of zamindaris in this district were sold in 1846. That is only forty-seven years ago. If the eight years from 1853 to 1861 will not protect the defendants, the forty-seven years from 1846 to 1893 will not protect the mass of raiyats in the Kistna district.

Whether this view be unsound or not, the presumption is that the grant in 1861 was a fresh grant. It will be remembered how the Privy Council held that there was a fresh grant of Nuzvid in 1802. Raja Venkata Rao v. Court of Wards (I. L. R., 2 Mad., 128). The burden is upon the zamindar to show that the grant purported to restore to him the rights he had over his raiyats in 1853. This the zamindar has not shown. All he has produced is Board's Proceedings, No. 1878, dated 20th March 1862, which cites a sentence from the Government Order, proposes certain settlement rates as a basis for the calculation of the new peishcush and recommends Government to distinctly provide that the zamindar shall settle with the raiyats at the rates assumed in this calculation. It is not known what orders were passed by the Government upon this recommendation.

I therefore find that the grant of this pargana in 1861 was a fresh grant and that the zamindar cannot levy from defendants more than the rates which they were paying to Government at the time of the grant.

[222] The question next arises what these rates were. It is admitted that before 1851 the defendants held under the zamindar on the sharing system. Their second witness, the karnam, has extracted from the accounts which were the basis of the Collector's village rents a statement showing what defendants then paid and those are the rates which they now claim. The zamindar made no change in the first year after he got back the pargana, then for seven years the sharing system was in force, then for five years individual money rents, and for two periods of five years there were leases with money rents, and in fasli 1296 and subsequently there have been disputes and the defendants have refused to pay more than what they called "settlement rates," that is, the rates which they paid when under Government. I am of opinion that the subsequent payments do not constitute an implied contract to pay higher rates and that defendants are entitled to pattas at the rates which they paid to Government.

These rates are as follows, as detailed in the statement prepared by the karnam :—

The High Court calls for the issue paper. The only issue paper is the remarks printed at the opening of the Assistant Collector's judgment.

This finding will be submitted to the High Court.

These second appeals next came on for hearing on 10th and 16th July 1894, when the Court made the following order.

The parties were represented as before.

Order.—Appellant is zamindar of Vallur in the District of Kistna and respondents are raiyats cultivating lands in the pargana of Gudur which is part of the zamindari. For fasli 1299 the former tendered pattas which the latter refused to accept. Thereupon the zamindar brought the suits from which these second appeals arise to enforce acceptance of the pattas under section 9 of Act VIII of 1865. But the Judge found on appeal that they were not such as the tenants were bound to accept and that the latter properly objected to certain conditions and rates of [223] rent embodied in the pattas. The Judge then proceeded under section 10 of the Act to decide what pattas ought to be offered and in so doing declared, inter alia, that respondents are liable to pay only those rates of rent which they paid to Government at the time when the pargana was restored to the zamindar, viz., 1862. It is urged on appellant's behalf that this declaration is contrary to the provisions of section 11 of Act VIII of 1865.

It was admitted before the Judge that prior to 1851 the raiyats held their lands under the zamindar on the sharing system. In 1851 the Collector of Masulipatam attached the pargana for arrears of peishcush, in 1853 the zamindar surrendered the pargana to the Government, in 1861 the Government decided to restore it, and in 1862 it actually restored the pargana to the zamindar subject to the payment of a peishcush which was fixed with reference to its then improved condition. During the period when the pargana was under the Government, village rents were levied according to the Revenue Administration then in vogue in the District of Masulipatam. The village rents were money rents. The Collector fixed the rent due on each village upon the best estimate which he formed of the capability of the lands situated therein, and held the raiyats jointly and severally responsible for the entire amount charged on the village. The raiyats without his intervention apportioned the rent so fixed upon their individual holdings and recognised this rough individual adjustment of the burden imposed by the Collector as regulating the quota payable on each holding. It is the quota each raiyat paid at the time of the re-grant that is now claimed by the respondents and recognised by the Judge as the rent payable by them to appellant. After the pargana was restored in 1861, the zamindar made no change for the first year. For the next seven years the sharing system was in force and varam was paid by respondents. Then for five years individual money rents were collected. Afterwards there were two leases with money rents, each for a period of five years. Upon these facts the Judge found with reference to the provisions of section 11 of the Rent Act, that there was no contract, express or implied, as to the rent to be paid. He also found that the pargana was not surveyed and a money assessment fixed upon the fields prior to 1859 as contemplated in that section. Upon these findings, which we must accept on second appeal, it is clear that rules I and II contained in section 11 of Act VIII of 1865 do not [224] apply. Instead of then proceeding to apply rule III, embodied in section 11, the Judge held that the rate of money rent paid by respondents to Government at the time of re-grant is the proper rent now payable to appellant by respondents. In his judgment, however, he specified only the name of each raiyat, the aggregate extent of his holding and the amount of rent paid by him to the Government instead of the rate of rent and the description of land comprised in each holding and its extent. We are unable to concur in the opinion that the rent paid in 1861 to the Government is all that is payable to appellant. It must be observed that even on the view that the grant of 1861 was a new grant, it was the grant of a permanently-settled estate in the pargana, and the incidents attaching to such grant have to be determined with reference to the provisions of Regulation XXV of 1802 as explained by Regulation IV of 1822 and to the terms of the grant. In the cases before us the grant or the Government Order, No. 1214, dated 18th June 1861, under which it was made, is not in evidence. Subsequently to the date of the grant, the rents levied for more than twenty years were, as already shown, not limited to the money rents paid to the Government in 1861. There is no proof nor finding that the grant expressly limited the rent which the grantee was entitled to collect. In support of his opinion, however, the Judge relies on two decisions as constituting the case-law of this Presidency on the subject. Palaniappa v. Raya (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 325) was a case decided between a raiyat and an inamdar whose inam did not consist in the grant of land but in the assignment of one-third of the revenue due thereon and in an arrangement made in 1868 by the Collector with the inamdar to the effect that the remaining two-thirds, which the raiyat paid direct to Government till then as quit-rent, should thenceforward be collected by the inamdar and paid by him to Government. The ground of decision was that the limited character of the inam tenure showed that the only patta which the inamdar was entitled to grant was a patta prescribing payment of the revenue. In the cases before us, the appellant is the grantee of a permanently-settled estate who is entitled to waste land and to lands relinquished by raiyats in the pargana and who has an interest in occupied land as landholder though only subject to the prior rights already vested in the tenants. The raiyats [225] in occupation at the date of the grant in 1861 may have rights of occupancy as against appellant, but we see no reason to hold that the rent actually paid then was rent fixed in perpetuity. The Judge himself observed that it might have been competent to Government to revise it. Even assuming that assessment paid in 1861 constituted the assets upon which peishoush was fixed, we think that by reason of the permanent settlement the relation of landlord and tenant which existed between the Government and the raiyats with such incidents as the law and the condition of the grant attached to it passed to the zamindar.

The other decision relied on by the Judge is that in Sadr Adaulat No. 15 of 1812. In that case one Ramaswami Ayyan holding lands under a mirasi tenure of which he had been deprived, sued the zamindar of Ponneri to recover possession of those lands and damages sustained in consequence of his dispossession by the zamindar, and further to compel the latter to grant him a patta under section 9 of Regulation XXX of 1802. The Zilla Court, the Provincial Court and the Court of Sadr Adaulat upheld the claim to recover possession of the lands and damages and to obtain a patta. As regards the rent for which a patta should be tendered, the Zilla Court and the Provincial Court held that it should be a money rent at the annual fixed beriz of star pagodas 60-6-16, which amount was assessed on the land in question and paid by the raiyat to the Government in the year Raudri (when the permanent settlement was made); but the Court of Sadr Adaulat set aside this decision, observing that there was not a tittle of evidence to show that a right to a patta with money rent paid to Government in the year Raudri existed on the part of Ramaswami Ayyan, that the evidence showed that the rent was not fixed, but was derived from a division of the produce which must fluctuate with the seasons and the commutation price, and that Ramaswami Ayyan was only entitled to receive a patta defining the rate of division of the produce, which rate was, as prescribed by section 9, Regulation XXX of 1802, to be determined according to the rates prevailing in the year preceding the assessment of the permanent zamma on those lands. This decision does not appear to us to support the proposition put forward by the Judge, that the beriz paid to the Government in the year in which the permanent settlement was made is the rent properly payable by the raiyats to the zamindar. On the other hand, it appears to be an authority against such proposition. The [226] reference to section 9 of Regulation XXX of 1802 was a reference to the rent law which then prescribed the mode in which the rates of assessment in money or of division in kind were to be determined.

Thus, there being no case-law, as stated by the Judge, the decision should be that the rent be discharged in kind according to the varam. The appellant makes that claim before us and it is in accordance with the proviso of rule III embodied in section 11 of Act VIII of 1865.

Before we finally dispose of these appeals, we must ask the Judge to ascertain what is the established rate of varam in the village. On this point additional evidence can be admitted.

The finding is to be submitted in a month from date of receipt of this order in the Lower Appellate Court, when seven days will be allowed for filing objections after the finding has been posted up in this Court.

In compliance with the above order the District Judge submitted his finding.

These second appeals came on for final disposal, when the Court delivered the following judgment:—

Judgment:—Though the Judge concludes his finding with the remark that there "is no established rate of varam in the village," it is clear from his return on the finding called for that the rate of varam prevailing in the village was 460 seers to the raiyats and 440 to the zamindar out of every 900 seers, the raiyat's 460 including 57 seers, costs of cultivation, and the zamindar's 440 including 37 seers for karnam's and others' fees. As regards water-tax on poramboke lands irrigated from the anicut, the zamindar is entitled to recover a moiety from the raiyats. The patta will be amended as indicated in our former order and in accordance with the above finding.

Each party will bear his own costs of this appeal.

[227] APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 7th August, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Chakrapani.....(Counter-Petitioner No. 1) Petitioner

Varahamma.....(Petitioner) Respondent.*

Scheduled Districts Act—Act XIV of 1874—Guardian and Wards Act—Act VIII of 1890, s. 1, cl. (2)—Scheduled District—Agency Rules.

A petition of appeal was presented to the Governor in Council against an ex parte order made under the Guardian and Wards Act, 1890, by the Agent to the Governor in the scheduled district of Vizagapatam, the ground of the petition being that the petitioner's vakil had not been heard. The appeal was referred to the High Court.

Held, (1) that the Guardian and Wards Act, 1890, is in force in the Agency Tracts, although no notification to that effect had been made under the Scheduled Districts Act :

(2) that the High Court had jurisdiction to set aside the ex parte order.

PETITION referred to the High Court under rule XXXI made under Act XXIV of 1839.

The Agent to the Governor in the Vizagapatam district, purporting to act under Guardian and Wards Act, 1890, appointed a woman to be a guardian of the person and property of an infant. The natural father of the infant, in whose possession the property was, objected to the appointment on various grounds, but he was ill and did not appear when the appointment was made. A subsequent application to have the order of appointment set aside as having been made ex parte was rejected. The natural father appealed to the Governor in Council complaining that his pleader had not been heard and the petition of appeal was referred to the High Court as above.

The Agency Tract of Vizagapatam is a district scheduled under Act XIV of 1874, and no notification had been [published ?] under that Act extending the operation of the Guardian and Wards Act, 1890, to that district.

Mr. J. G. Kernan for Petitioner.

Seshagiri Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—It is urged on behalf of petitioner that the Guardian and Wards Act is not applicable to the scheduled districts [228] in the absence of a notification under section 5 of Act XIV of 1874. We find, however, that the Act VIII of 1890 extends to the whole of British India (see section 1, clause 2). Therefore no notification under Act XIV of 1874 is necessary.

* Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 565 of 1893.

It is urged, on the other hand, on behalf of counter-petitioner, that, under Act VIII of 1890, section 47, the appeal lies directly to this Court, and that, therefore, the petition was wrongly presented to Government in the first instance, but we observe that the order appealed from is not that of a 'District Court' but of the Governor's Agent, and therefore we derive our jurisdiction not directly from Act VIII of 1890, but by the reference made by Government under Rule XXXI of the Agency Rules passed under Act XXIV of 1839. We are also not prepared to attach weight to the objection that it was not competent to Government to refer to us a petition such as the present, which is an application to set aside an ex parte order as to which no appeal is provided in the Act. Section 48 of the Act allows us to interfere under section 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure and we observe that, in the present case, the order in question was passed without hearing the petitioner's vakil. The vakil should have been heard before disposing of the petition.

We set aside the order and remand the case for disposal afresh in accordance with law after hearing the petitioner's vakil.

The costs hitherto incurred will abide and follow the result.

Railways Act—Act IX of 1890, s. 125—Permitting a cattle to stray upon a railway—Discretion of Magistrate

When the owner of cattle which have been allowed to stray upon a railway, is prosecuted under Railway Act, 1890, section 125 (1), the Magistrate is bound to ascertain whether the person charged was himself guilty.

[229] CASE referred for the orders of the High Court by H. Moberly, Acting District Magistrate of Malabar, under Criminal Procedure Code, section 438.

The case was stated as follows :—

In Calendar Case No. 2063 of 1894, on the file of the Calicut Town Sub-Magistrate, one Mataparambath Andi was prosecuted under clause (1) of section 125 of the Indian Railway Act, because his cow trespassed on the Madras Railway, which is provided with fences suitable for the exclusion of cattle. Admittedly a cow belonging to the accused did stray on the railway. The Sub-Magistrate acquitted the accused on the ground that he had appointed a person to be in charge of the cow, and that it was owing to that person's negligence that the cow strayed on the line.

Clause (1) of section 125 of the Act runs thus :— "The owner or person in charge of any cattle straying on a railway provided with fences suitable for the exclusion of cattle shall be punished with fine." In the present case a cow strayed on a railway properly fenced, yet nobody was fined. I submit that if the railway authorities prosecute the owner, the owner must be fined, no matter whether he had placed anybody in charge of the cattle or not. To support this view, I would refer to clause (2) of the same section, which leaves it to the railway authorities to decide whether, in the case of cattle being wilfully driven on any railway, the person in charge or the owner shall be punished.

In my opinion section 125 of the Act leaves nothing to the discretion of the Magistrate. If an offence has been committed, the Magistrate must fine the person prosecuted, whether he be the owner or the person in charge of the cattle.

The Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor (Mr. Powell) for the Crown.

Judgment.—Section 125, clause (1) of the Railway Act, makes punishable the negligence of the owner or person in charge of any cattle which stray upon the line. The section recognizes the obligation of the owner to prevent the cattle from straying, while at the same time it provides that the negligence of the person in charge may be punished. There is nothing in the clause to restrict the discretion of the Court in ascertaining upon whom the fault really lies and awarding the punishment accordingly.

[230] The second clause of the same section makes punishable wilful acts of driving or knowingly permitting cattle to be upon a railway line, and provides that, at the option of the railway administration, the owner, instead of the person in charge, shall be punishable. This provision is of a very penal character, and it removes the discretion as to the person to be held liable to punishment from the Court to the Railway authorities. No such discretion is given to the railway administration when the straying of the cattle has been through negligence. There is nothing to restrict the power and duty of the Magistrate to ascertain in such cases whether the person charged has himself been guilty.

In the case referred we are of opinion that the acquittal of the owner was correct.

Christian Marriage Act—Act XV of 1872, ss. 3, 68—Unauthorised marriage of a Christian child—Persons professing Christian religion.

The accused who was charged with having committed an offence under Indian Christian Marriage Act, section 68, was acquitted on its appearing that the Christian whose marriage he purported to solemnize was a child of the age of three years. The child had been baptized and her father was a Christian :

Held, that the child was a person professing the Christian religion within the meaning of section 3 of the Indian Christian Marriage Act, and that the acquittal was wrong.

CASE of which the records were called for by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction being Sessions Case No. 22 of 1894 on the file of the Sessions Court of Masulipatam.

The facts of the case and the grounds of the judgment of acquittal were stated by E. C. Rawson, the Sessions Judge, as follows:—

The prisoner is charged under section 68 of the Indian Christian Marriage Act (Act XV of 1872) with having solemnized a [231] marriage between Jalatati Kabulaya and Nakka Martha (the latter being a Christian), he not being authorized to do so under section 5 of the Act.

The facts alleged are that the marriage was fixed for the 11th April last, but that the first four prosecution witnesses (who are respectively a catechist, a sub-catechist, a preacher, and an unofficial member of the Lutheran community) protested against it, and it was accordingly put off till next day. On the evening of the 12th, the marriage was performed by the accused. The witnesses give a detailed description of the ceremony.

The fifth prosecution witness, the Rev. Dr. Uhl, of the Lutheran Mission, deposes that he received a report of the marriage and filed a complaint. He also proves that accused has no license to perform marriages.

I do not think it necessary to discuss the prosecution evidence at length, as I am of opinion that, even assuming it to be true, no offence has been committed within the meaning of section 68 of the Act.

It is admitted that the girl Martha, who was married, is only three years old. Now section 68 renders penal the unauthorized solemnization of a marriage "between persons one or both of whom is or are a Christian or Christians." And the word "Christian" is defined for the purposes of this Act as meaning a "person professing the Christian religion."

In order, therefore, to convict the accused, it would be necessary to hold that the girl Martha is a "person professing the Christian religion."

It is argued by the Public Prosecutor that there is a general presumption that the children of Christian parents are also Christians. And he relies on the Privy Council case of Skinner v. Orde (14 M. I. A., 309) wherein it was held that a child born in India, whose father was a European British subject and a Christian, must be presumed to have the father's religion and his corresponding civil and social status. But that was a case in which the question was one of guardianship, and I do not see how the ruling can be applied to the facts of this case. The Indian Christian Marriage Act is a special law creating certain special offences in connection with Christians. For the purposes of this Act, the Legislature has [232] specially defined what they mean by a Christian. They say it is a person who "professes the Christian religion." It is not pretended by the Public Prosecutor, and it would of course be an absurdity so to pretend, that a baby of three years old can "profess" the Christian or any other religion.

* Criminal Revision Case No. 398 of 1894.

While I fully admit, therefore, that for ordinary purposes (for instance in questions relating to the girl's civil or social status), the presumption that she was a Christian might be made; I am unable in dealing with a special penal Act, creating a special offence, and containing a special definition, to read anything more into the definition than has been deliberately put there. If it be argued that it is not likely that the Legislature intended to exclude a marriage of this sort (which from a Christian point of view is of course more objectionable than that of a grown up woman) from the penal provisions of the Act, I can only say that Judges have power simply to administer the law as it is, and not to introduce things which they may think ought to be the law, into Acts which do not contain them.

For the above reasons I am compelled to hold that the evidence for the prosecution does not show that the accused has committed the offence charged, and I, therefore, under section 289 of the Criminal Procedure Code record a finding of not guilty, and order that the accused be set at liberty.

The Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor (Mr. Powell) for the Crown.
The accused was not represented.

Judgment:—The words "person who professes the Christian religion" as used in Act XV of 1872 mean in our opinion not only adults who profess that religion, but also their children, who are in law presumed to follow their father's religion; and it is in evidence that the child in this case was baptized.

We must set aside the order of acquittal and direct that the case be re-tried.

Stamp Act—Act I of 1879, s. 3, cl. (11), sch. I, art. 54—Partition-deed—Release.

A Hindu executed in favour of his father, as representing the interests of the other members of his family, an instrument by which he relinquished his rights over the general property of the family in consideration of certain lands being allotted to him for life, and certain debts incurred by him being paid. The instrument further provided that the lands allotted to the executant for life should go towards the shares of his sons at any partition effected after his death :

Held, that the instrument was not a deed of partition, but a release and should be stamped accordingly.

CASE referred for the opinion of the High Court under Stamp Act, 1879, section 46, by the Board of Revenue.

The case was stated as follows :—

The document is termed a deed of release and purports to be executed by a son in favour of his father who is treated as representing the interests of himself, another son, and the executant's minor sons. It sets forth that, in consideration of certain lands being allotted to the executant for life out of the joint family property, and of certain debts incurred by him being discharged by his father, he relinquishes all claim on the other properties held by the joint family ; that he has no power to alienate the said lands allotted to him so as to affect the reversionary right thereto ; that the relinquishment made by him will not affect his son's right to a share in the family property, but that such right will be subject to a deduction of the value of the life estate allotted to him ; and lastly, that on his death the reversionary right in the said estate will be allotted to his sons at any future division.

The first question is whether the document should be charged as deed of release under article 54†, schedule I of the Stamp Act, or whether it should be charged as a deed of partition under article 37 of the same schedule. As the document secures to the executant [234] the enjoyment for life of a portion of the joint family property with a reversion to his sons at any subsequent division of the property and does not merely renounce the executant's claim against any or all of the property, the Board is of opinion that the document must be stamped as a deed of partition.

If the document is to be stamped as a deed of partition, the further question arises is whether the stamp duty should be calculated on the value of the entire family property or only on the value of the share assigned to the executant. The Collector of Madras is of opinion that the decision of the Allahabad High Court on this point (Reference by Board of Revenue, N.-W. P., under Act I of 1879, I. L. R., 2 All., 664) is at variance with that of the Madras High Court (Reference under Stamp Act, s. 46, I. L. R., 15 Mad., 164). This, however, does not appear to be the case. The Allahabad High Court held that the stamp duty on an instrument of partition is chargeable on the value of the entire property to be divided and not on the portion allotted in partition. The Madras High Court merely decided that the stamp duty payable on partition should be apportioned with reference to section 29 (e) of the Stamp Act. The Board presumes that the decision of the Allahabad High Court should be followed in calculating the stamp duty, but desires to receive the ruling of the Madras High Court on this point also.

The Government Pleader and Public Prosecutor (Mr. Powell) for the Crown.

Krishnasami Ayyar for the executant of the deed.

Judgment.—We are of opinion that the deed is not an instrument of partition within the meaning of section 3, clause 11 of the Stamp Act since it is not a deed by which co-owners agree to divide the property in severalty. It is a deed by which one co-owner renounces his claim for partition against the family property in consideration of a certain income to be enjoyed by him for his life out of certain lands over which he has no power of alienation. The case is similar to Eknath S. Gownde v. Jagannath S. Gownde (I. L. R., 9 Bom., 417).

We are of opinion that the deed is a release and should be stamped under schedule I, article 54 of the Stamp Act.

Reference under Stamp Act, s. 46.*

Stamp Act—Act I of 1879, s. 51—Spoiled stamp—Accidental injury to stamp.

The purchaser at a Court-sale presented a stamped paper for the engrossment of the sale certificate. The stamp was inadvertently punched by some officer of the Court, but the paper was used as intended, and delivered to the purchaser. Subsequently a Deputy Collector, treating the certificate as unstamped, levied the stamp duty together with a penalty :

Held, that the document was duly stamped, and that the amount levied should be refunded.

* Referred Case No. 11 of 1894.

CASE referred by the Board of Revenue for the decision of the High Court under Stamp Act, 1879, section 46.

The case was stated as follows :—

On the 24th July 1893, Mr. R. Fischer of Madura purchased certain immoveable property sold in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 67 of 1892 of the Subordinate Court, Madura (East), and on 30th October 1893, he presented (through his pleader) a stamp paper of the value of Rs. 45 to that Court for engrossing the sale certificate thereon. The stamp was inadvertently punched by some officer of the Court; the instrument was afterwards drawn up on it and delivered to Mr. Fischer. The Deputy Collector of Madura, under the orders of the then Collector, treating the stamp as a spoiled one, ruled that the certificate of sale was not duly stamped and levied a stamp duty of Rs. 45 and a penalty of Rs. 5. Against this order Mr. Fischer now appeals to the Board.

The present Collector of Madura contends that there is nothing in the Stamp Act or the rules passed thereunder, which invalidates a stamp paper with a hole in it, and that it is nowhere laid down that cancellation is conclusively proved by punching. He holds that the stamp in the present case was not a cancelled one, as it was punched by mistake, and that the document was duly stamped, and he considers that the penalty and the duty levied from Mr. Fischer should be refunded to him.

[236] The Board agrees with the Collector and is prepared to remit the penalty of Rs. 5, but has no power to revise the Deputy Collector's decision so far as the stamp duty is concerned. The case is therefore referred for the orders of the High Court. After the decision of the High Court is received, the Board will proceed to dispose of the case conformably with that decision.

Counsel were not instructed.

Judgment.—The reason for making an allowance for a spoiled stamp under section 51 is that the stamp has become unfit for use, but in this case the stamp was not rendered unfit for use by punching, for the Court itself engrossed upon the paper the deed for which the stamped paper was presented. We are of opinion that the Deputy Collector was in error in treating the document as unstamped.

The 22nd and 27th March, 1895.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE

High Court, powers of, to make rules as to Small Cause Court—24 and 25 Vict, cap. 104, s. 15— Civil Procedure Code—Act XI of 1882, s. 652—Presidency Small Cause Courts Act—Act XV of 1882, ss. 6, 18, cls. (a) and (c), 33.

In 1885 the High Court made a rule under Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, section 33 † whereby it was declared that the granting leave to sue a defendant out of the jurisdiction under section 18, clauses (a) and (c) of that Act was a non-judicial or quasi-judicial act within the meaning of that section and might be done by the Registrar of the Court of Small Causes, Madras.

Held, that the rule was ultra vires and void.

CASE referred for the opinion of the High Court by R. B. Michell, Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Madras, under Civil Procedure Code, section 617, and Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, section 69.

Before the hearing of the case out of which this reference arose, the Chief Judge and the other Judges of the Small Cause Court had, in a similar case, delivered judgment as follows :

[237] " This is an application to the full Court preferred under section 37 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, against the order of the second Judge of this Court in Suit No. 11239 of 1894, dismissing the suit on the ground that the Registrar, by whom, acting, as he understood that he had authority to act, under section 18, sub-section (a) of that Act, leave to institute the suit had been granted, had no legal power to grant such leave. By a rule passed by the High Court of Judicature of Madras, dated 23rd November 1885, and published in the Fort St. George Gazette of 2nd December 1885, the High Court declared that certain acts were non-judicial or quasi-judicial acts within the meaning of that section, which might be done by the Registrar of the Court of Small Causes, Madras.

* Referred Case No. 32 of 1894.

† [Sec. 33 :—Any non-judicial or quasi-judicial act which the Code of Civil Procedure as applied by this Act requires to be done by a Judge, and any act which may be done by a Commissioner appointed to examine and adjust accounts under s. 394 of that Code as so applied may be done by the Registrar of the Small Cause Court or by such other officer of that Court as that Court may, from time to time, appoint in this behalf.

The High Court may, from time to time, by rule declare what shall be deemed to be non-judicial and quasi-judicial acts within the meaning of this section.]

Among the acts so declared to be non-judicial or quasi-judicial was the following :—

(1) Granting leave to sue defendant out of the jurisdiction under section 18, clauses (a) and (c) of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882.

Mr. Robert Grant, who argued the case for the applicant (the plaintiff in the suit), conceded that under section 33 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, under which the rule abovementioned purported to be passed, the acts which the High Court was empowered to declare to be non-judicial or quasi-judicial acts within the meaning of that section were limited to acts provided for by the Code of Civil Procedure, as applied by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, and did not include acts provided for by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, but he contended that, under section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure and under section 15 of the 24th and 25th Vict., cap. 104, read with section 6 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, the High Court had powers which comprehended, inter alia, a power to declare what acts should be deemed non-judicial or extra-judicial and exercisable by the Registrar of the Court of Small Causes of Madras. The learned Counsel also referred to the rules of the High Court of Judicature, Madras, Original Side, 1891, published in the Fort St. George Gazette of 16th June 1891 by Appendix (i) whereunto, relating to "non-judicial or quasi-judicial powers possessed by the Registrar," the Registrar of the High Court on the Original Side has been empowered, except where he shall see fit to direct the matter to be laid before a Judge, to [238] pass an order allowing a suit to be filed in the High Court—which appears to involve a power to grant leave to sue in the High Court in suits (not being suits for immoveable property) where, though the defendant does not dwell or carry on business or personally work for gain within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court, the cause of action has arisen in part within those limits. And he contended that, inasmuch as it is under clause 12 of the Letters Patent, 1865, that the High Court, in its ordinary original jurisdiction (in suits other than suits for immoveable property) has power to grant leave to sue defendants in such cases and not under section 17 of the Code (Act XIV of 1882), which does not apply to the High Court on its Original Side, and inasmuch as section 637 of the Code like section 33 of the Small Cause Courts Act, does not extend to non-judicial or quasi-judicial acts other than those provided for by the Code, it could not have been by virtue of section 637 of the Code, but must have been by virtue of section 652 of the Code or by virtue of section 15 of 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, or by virtue of some other (if any) law empowering it in that behalf, that the High Court declared that such granting of leave to sue was a non-judicial or quasi-judicial act which the Registrar of that Court should have power to perform; and that if the High Court could thus under one or other or all of those laws, other than section 637 of the Code make such a declaration, it had also the power, under one or other or all of those same laws and section 6 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, and independently of section 33 of that Act, to make a similar declaration with reference to the Registrar of the Court of Small Causes of Madras. So far as this argument relates to section 652 of the Code, it is to be observed that at the time when the rule of the High Court of 23rd November 1885 under consideration was passed, section 652 did not extend to the Presidency Small Cause Courts, and it was not until the amending Act X of 1888 was passed that that section 652 was extended to those Courts. As section 652 relates only to action to be taken by a High Court, the exclusion of that section from the original second schedule to the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, must, we think, be taken to have meant that the High Court could not take such action in respect to the Presidency Courts of Small Causes. There still remain, however, the powers under section 15 of the Statute 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104. But, [239] assuming, for the sake of argument, that the High Court had power, if not under section 652 of the Code, yet under section 15 of the 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, or under some other law thereunto enabling it, to pass a rule or order declaring the granting of leave to sue defendants out of the jurisdiction under section 18, clauses (a) and (c) of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, to be a non-judicial or quasi-judicial act performable by the Registrar of this Court, it appears to us that we are precluded by the terms of the rule of the High Court now under consideration, from holding that the High Court did in fact make the declaration in question as to such granting of leave under any other law than section 33 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882. That rule is as follows:—"Under section 33 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, the High Court declares the following to be non-judicial or quasi-judicial acts within the meaning of that section which may be done by the Registrar of the Court of Small Causes, Madras"—then follow the acts so declared non-judicial or quasi-judicial acts of which the one now in question is the first-mentioned. On the other hand, the order of the High Court (in the rules above referred to passed and published in 1891) passing the rule empowering the Registrar of the High Court on the Original Side to pass an order allowing a suit to be filed in the High Court, is expressed to be made "under sections 637 and 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) and all other powers thereunto enabling." From the fact that, on that occasion, in addition to section 637, section 652 and all other powers thereunto enabling, are mentioned, in declaring under what authority the rule was made, we think that we ought, upon sound principles of construction, to conclude that if the rule now in question (under which the High Court declared the granting of leave to sue under section 18 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, sub-sections (a) and (c), to be a non-judicial or quasi-judicial act, performable by the Registrar of that Court) was intended to be passed, and was passed, not under section 33 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, but under section 652 of the Code or under any other power thereunto enabling, the High Court would, in declaring under what authority this rule was passed, have mentioned in addition to section 33 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, section 652 of the Code, and all other powers thereunto enabling, and that, not having done so, the High Court intended [240] to pass, and did pass, this rule, only and solely as under section 33 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882.

In one of the three other and similar applications, Nos. 48 of 1894, 56 of 1894, 55 of 1894, which were heard together with this application (viz., Application No. 55 of 1894 against the decree of the third Judge in Suit No. 20930 of 1893, dismissing the suit on the ground that the Registrar had no power to grant leave to sue) it was contended by Mr. Venkatramayya Chetti who appeared for the applicant, that if there was any law under which the portion of the rule of High Court of 23rd November 1885 now under consideration was valid, it ought to be upheld as valid, notwithstanding that it purported to be passed under section 33 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, and no other law was mentioned in it as authority under which it was passed; and that from the fact that the Registrar has been, ever since that rule came into operation, exercising the power of granting leave to sue in the suits in question, it should be presumed, unless and until the contrary is shown, that he has been duly and legally empowered to do so, and he relied upon the case of Queen-Empress v. Ganga Ram (I. L. R., 16 All., 136). In that case, the appointment by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces of Mr. W. K. BURKITT to officiate as fifth puisne Judge of the High Court, North-West Provinces, which purported to be made in virtue of the authority vested in the Lieutenant-Governor by sections 7 and 16 of 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, was held by a Full Bench of that Court to be ultra vires of the Lieutenant-Governor and illegal, if it depended for its validity upon sections 7 and 16 of 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104. But having regard to the fact of the notifications published in the Government Gazette, North-West Provinces and Oudh, relating to Mr. Justice BURKITT's appointment, to the fact that apparently the Secretary of State for India in Council sanctioned the appointment of a fifth puisne Judge as a temporary appointment, and to the fact that he had in fact since his first appointment in November 1892 acted in all respects as a Judge of the High Court, which "last fact is according to a well-known principle of the law of evidence, presumptive proof, until the contrary be shown, of his due appointment to act as a Judge of this Court," the Full Bench held, that, being in [241] ignorance as to whether or not any power existed under which Mr. Justice BURKITT might have been lawfully appointed to act as a Judge of the Court, the presumption that he was duly appointed, which arose from the fact of his having acted as a Judge of the Court since November 1892, had not been rebutted. Whatever justification there may have been in that case for the presumption omnia rite et solemniter esse acta being acted upon in the manner in which it was; we are of opinion that we ought not in the present case to presume from the fact that the Registrar has de facto been exercising the power now under consideration for many years, that he was legally invested with such power, notwithstanding that the rule of the 23rd November 1885 so far as it purported to make the power one exercisable by him was, in our opinion, ultra vires.

We regret that we have felt ourselves compelled to come to the conclusion at which we have arrived upon the point in question; there are a considerable number of suits pending, which are affected by the decision of the point.

We were asked by the vakil for the applicant in Application No. 55 of 1894 to refer the question to the High Court for its opinion under section 69, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, but much though we should have preferred that this question should have been brought before the High Court for decision, we have no power to refer it under section 69 of the Act. [See Oakshott v. The British India Steam Navigation Company (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 179)]. Nor have we any power to make a reference of the question under section 617 of the Code, as there is no suit, nor appeal, nor proceeding in execution of a final decree, now before the Court. The Chief Judge asked the vakil why he had not taken the case before the High Court under section 622 of the Code, instead of coming to this Court under section 37 of the Act and then applying under section 69, and he replied that he had considered the latter the preferable course.

We must, with regret, dismiss this application.

In the present case the same objection was taken by the defendant, and the Chief Judge referring to the above judgment dismissed the suit, making his decree contingent on the opinion of the High Court upon the following question:—

[242] Was the Registrar of this Court legally empowered to give leave to institute this suit in this Court and such leave having been granted by him has this Court jurisdiction to try this suit?

Mr. R. F. Grant for the plaintiff argued that the rule empowering the Registrar to grant leave was a valid rule; that it was competent to the Court to make such a rule and that the power was none the less effectually exercised, because a wrong section was quoted. He referred to Queen-Empress v. Ganga Ram (I. L. R., 16 All., 136).

Sivagnana Mudaliar for Defendants.

The further arguments adduced in the case appear sufficiently for the purpose of this report from the judgments.

Collins, C. J.—This is a case stated for the opinion of the High Court under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, by the Chief Judge of that Court.

On the 23rd November 1885, the High Court declared under section 33 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act XV of 1882, that the granting leave to sue a defendant out of the jurisdiction under section 18, clauses (a) and (c) of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, was a non-judicial or quasi-judicial act within the meaning of that section which might be done by the Registrar of the Court of Small Causes, Madras.

The question the High Court has now to decide is—Had the High Court power to make such a rule or is the rule ultra vires.

The 33rd section of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, enacts that "any non-judicial or quasi-judicial act which the Code of Civil Procedure as applied by this Act requires to be done by a Judge may be done by the Registrar of the Small Cause Court or by such other officer of that Court as that Court may from time to time appoint in this behalf. The High Court may from time to time by rule declare what shall be deemed to be non-judicial and quasi-judicial acts within the meaning of this section."

Chapter 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, in sections 15 to 19, regulates the place of suing, and those sections are not applied to the Small Cause Court by Act XV of 1882 and the reason is obvious, as, by the 18th section of Act XV of 1882, the Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to try suits of a civil nature, where the cause of action has arisen either wholly or in part within the [243] local limits of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, or if any of the defendants at the time of the institution of the suit actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain within such local limits provided the leave of the Court has been given or the defendants acquiesce in such institution.

Section 6 of Act XV of 1882 enacts that the Small Cause Court shall be deemed to be a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court and the High Court shall have in respect of it the same powers as it has under 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, section 15. That Act gives power to the High Court to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of such Courts, provided that such rules be not inconsistent with the provisions of any law. Section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure gives the High Court power to make rules consistent with the Code to regulate any matter connected with the procedure of Civil Courts subject to its superintendence. It is argued by counsel for the plaintiff that either under 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, or section 652, Code of Civil Procedure, the High Court had power to make the rule in question. It would be enough to say that the rule does not purport to be made under the Act or under section 652, but under the powers conferred by section 33 of Act XV of 1882—but I am of opinion that neither under the Act nor under section 652 has the High Court the power contended for.

Under section 18 of Act XV of 1882, it is enacted that the leave of the Court must be given—the High Court by the rule has set aside that provision of law and has said that the leave of the Registrar is sufficient; it is impossible to say that a Registrar is a Court for such a purpose as this—the duties and powers of a Registrar are strictly defined and limited. It is also impossible in my opinion to say that granting leave to sue a defendant out of the jurisdiction under section 18, clauses (a) and (b), was a non-judicial or quasi-judicial Act which the Code of Civil Procedure as applied by that Act requires to be done by a Judge.

For these reasons, therefore, I hold that the Registrar's order granting leave to sue is not a valid leave within the meaning of section 18 of Act XV of 1882 and that the rule of the High Court of the 23rd November 1885 is ultra vires.

Shepherd, J.—The question raised by this reference is whether leave given by the Registrar in cases in which the leave of the Court is required by the 18th section of Act XV of 1882 is [244] a valid and lawful leave within the meaning of that section. In 1885, a rule was passed by the High Court purporting to declare under the 33rd section of the Act certain acts to be non-judicial or quasi-judicial. Among such acts is that of "granting leave to sue defendant out of the jurisdiction under section 18, clauses (a) and (c) of the Act." If the particular act of granting leave had been one which the Code of Civil Procedure as adopted by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act required to be done by a Judge, then there is no doubt that such act being declared by the High Court to be a quasi-judicial act might be done by the Registrar of the Small Cause Court. But the section of the Code requiring leave to be given before institution of a suit is not one of the sections made applicable to the Presidency Small Cause Court by the 23rd section of the Act. It was unnecessary to make it applicable, because the matter is provided for in the 18th section of the Act itself.

The 33rd section makes no reference to matters regulated by the Act itself and therefore any declaration or rule made under it cannot affect the provisions of the 18th section. The rule of the High Court must be ultra vires, unless justification for it can be found in some other enactment. The power to make rules for regulating the procedure of Courts subject to the appellate jurisdiction or under the superintendence of the High Court is vested in the High Court by the Statute 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, section 15, and also by the 652nd section of the Civil Procedure Code. By the 6th section of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, the Small Cause Court is declared to be a Court subject to the superintendence of the High Court within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code. It is further declared that the High Court may exercise in respect of the Small Cause Court the same powers as it has under the 15th section of the Statute in respect of Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction. Either under this section of the Statute or under the 652nd section of the Code the High Court has power to make rules regulating the procedure of the Small Cause Court. I do not agree with the opinion which has been expressed that the exclusion of the 652nd section from the second schedule annexed to the Act XV of 1882 shows that it was not intended that the powers of the High Court under that section should be exercised in respect of the Presidency Small Cause Courts. That opinion, as it appears to me, ignores the plain [245] words of the 6th section of the Act which make the latter Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Code. It has to be seen whether this particular rule of November 1885 is a rule which it was competent to the High Court to pass under either of the above enactments, either under the Statute or under the Code. The power given in the former enactment is "to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of such Courts"; in the latter enactment "to make rules consistent with the Code to regulate any matter connected with the procedure of the Courts subject to its superintendence.* Now it is a recognized principle of law that the rules made in pursuance of a delegated authority to that effect must be consistent with the Statute under which they came to be made. The authority is given to the end that the provisions of the Statute may be better carried into effect, and not with the view of neutralizing or contradicting those provisions. The case of Wetherfield v. Nelson (L. R., 4 C. P., 571) illustrates the manner in which the principle is applied. In the present case, there is a distinct provision of the Act requiring in certain cases that leave of the Court shall be given before the institution of a suit. Under clause (a) of the 18th section "the leave of the Court for reasons recorded in writing" has to be given. The effect of the rule is to dispense with the leave of the Court and substitute the leave of the Registrar. In my opinion, the rule is manifestly inconsistent with the section. It is a rule which has the effect of neutralizing the section, not of carrying it into effect. It is impossible to say that the Court and the Registrar are one and the same person.

Any doubt which might otherwise exist seems to me to be removed by a consideration of the 33rd section. That section and the similar section in chapter XLVIII of the Code of Civil Procedure would be superfluous if the matter provided for in these sections were one with which the High Court could deal under its general powers of making rules. It is precisely because it was desired to give the High Court a dispensing power, a power to delegate to the Registrar acts which according to the law needed to be done by the Court, that the special section 637 was required. It may be by oversight that the 33rd section was not extended [246] to acts regulated by the Act itself; but as the section stands it appears to me strongly to indicate that in cases not within the scope of the section the High Court has no power to make such rules as under the section it may make.

For these reasons, I have come to the conclusion that the rule is ultra vires, and I must therefore hold that the leave given by the Registrar is not a valid leave within the meaning of the 18th section of the Act.

Best, J.— I concur.

Subramanya Ayyar, J.—The question for determination is whether under section 33 of Act XV of 1882, or section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure or the Statute 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, section 15, it was competent to the High Court to declare that the power which a Judge of the Court of Small Causes has under clauses (a) and (c) of section 18 of Act XV of 1882 to grant leave to sue a defendant out of the jurisdiction is one which the Registrar also of the Small Cause Court may exercise.*

I am of opinion that the High Court had no authority to make such a declaration under any of the said provisions of law.

Now, it is quite clear that the first of these provisions, viz., section 33, has no application to the present case. For that section only provides, (i) that the Registrar of the Small Cause Court may do any non-judicial or quasi-judicial act which the Court itself is empowered to do under any of the sections of the Civil Procedure Code extended to the Small Cause Court by Act XV of 1882; (ii) that the High Court may by rule declare what shall be deemed to be non-judicial and quasi-judicial acts within the meaning of the section 33. The portions of the Civil Procedure Code extended by Act XV of 1882 to the Presidency Small Cause Courts are specified in the second schedule of the Act. But none of these portions relate to the granting of leave to sue defendants out of the jurisdiction. It follows, therefore, that under section 33 the Registrar has no power to grant leave to sue a defendant out of the jurisdiction, and consequently the High Court has no authority to make the declaration under the latter part of the said section. Whether the omission to include the power to grant leave to sue the defendant out of the jurisdiction among those powers which the Registrar may exercise under section 33 was due to a mere oversight on the part of the Legislature or not, it is unnecessary to consider. It is sufficient to say that as section 33 stands the High [247] Court is not empowered under it to make the declaration in question.

It is next contended that since section 6 of Act XV of 1882 makes the Presidency Small Cause Courts subject to the superintendence of the High Court within the meaning of section 652 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Statute 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, section 15, the declaration in question is valid. No doubt under the former, viz., section 652, the High Court may, from time to time, make rules consistent with the Code to "regulate any matter connected with the procedure" of the Courts of Civil Judicature subject to its superintendence: and under the latter, viz., the Statute 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, section 15, the High Court "may make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings" of such Courts. But in my opinion, the High Court is not entitled under either of the last-mentioned sections to make a declaration by rule on the matter of granting leave to sue defendants out of the jurisdiction. I arrive at this conclusion notwithstanding the wide construction put upon the words "practice" and "procedure" by the Court of Appeal in Poyser v. Minors (L. R., 7 Q. B. D., 329, 333), where LUSH, L. J., explains that those words in their larger sense denote "the mode of proceeding by which a legal right is enforced, as distinguished from the law which gives or defines the right, and which (sic) by means of the proceeding the Court is to administer the machinery as distinguished from its product." It seems to me that the declaration made by the High Court is altogether outside the scope of the regulation of "practice" and "procedure" contemplated by section 652 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the Statute 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 104, section 15. The declaration is in my view a clear delegation of what is undoubtedly judicial power, exercisable by the Court itself, to the Registrar who is not constituted a Judge as to the matter of granting leave under clauses (a) and (c), section 18 of Act XV of 1882, while he is in regard to some others (see section 14 of the Act). Such a delegation of judicial authority, I should think, cannot take place except under express and specific statutory provisions such as are contained in section 33 of Act XV of 1882. But, as has been already shown, that section does not cover the case under consideration.

[248] For the reasons stated above I hold that the declaration made by the High Court in 1885, that granting leave to sue a defendant out of the jurisdiction under clauses (a) and (c) of section 18 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, is one of the acts which may be done by the Registrar of the Small Cause Court under section 33 of the Act, is ultra vires, and the leave given by the Registrar in the case under reference is not a valid leave within the meaning of the said Act.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 10th and 28th August, 1894.

PRESENT:

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE PARKER.

Rama Reddi.....(Plaintiff No. 1) Appellant

versus

Appaji Reddi and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Interest Act—Act XXXII of 1839—Transfer of Property Act—Act IV of 1882, s. 88—Mortgage—Interest 'post diem.'

The plaintiff sued in December 1891 upon a registered mortgage dated 1875, in which it was provided that interest should be paid at the rate therein mentioned, and that the principal should be repaid on 10th April 1880, but in which there was no provision for payment of interest post diem :

Held, that interest post diem should be awarded under the Interest Act, 1839, at a reasonable rate :

Semle : the amount so awarded would constitute a charge on the mortgage premises.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of W. F. Grahame, District Judge of South Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 36 of 1893, affirming the decree of P. S. Gurumurti, District Munsif of Cuddalore, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1892.

Suit instituted on 18th December 1891 to recover principal and interest due on a mortgage, dated 19th June 1875. The principal sum was repayable under the terms of the instrument on 10th April 1880. With reference to the plaintiff's claim for interest, and also to a plea of limitation raised by the defendant, the District Munsif said :—"As regards interest, plaintiffs have claimed Rs. 1,583 under this head from 19th June 1875 to the date of suit. Under the bond (Exhibit I) the interest is payable at $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per mensem on the 30th Ani (12th July) of each year, while the principal is made payable on 30th Panguni, Paramathi (10th April 1880), and in default, the obligor agreed to pay interest at one per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond. No payment was made under Exhibit I, and though Lakshmana Reddi died in November 1877, third plaintiff, as a major, could have sued for the interest at once, and both the principal and interest could have been claimed when the principal fell due. The suit having been filed on 18th December 1891, the interest due under Exhibit I prior to twelve years before this date is barred by limitation; and plaintiff cannot claim interest after 10th April 1880, the date fixed for payment of the principal of Exhibit I, as there is no provision there for such payment and more than six years have elapsed between the said date and the date of suit. Even if compensation be intended to be paid in lieu of interest as ruled in Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand (I. L. R., 10 All., 85), Bhagwant Singh v. Daryao Singh (I. L. R., 11 All., 416), Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19), the higher rate, i.e., one per cent. in lieu of $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. per mensem, claimed from the date of the bond, cannot be viewed as penal and disallowed, in view of the ruling of the Madras High Court in Basavayya v. Subbarazu (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 294). I therefore allow Rs. 30 only towards interest."

* Second Appeal No. 1546 of 1893.

The District Munsif accordingly passed a decree for the principal due on the mortgage, together with Rs. 30 only by way of interest.

The District Judge affirmed this decree, dismissing the appeal preferred against it under Civil Procedure Code, section 551, agreeing in the view that the mortgage sued upon, on its right construction, contained no provision for payment of interest post diem.

The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Subramanya Ayyar and Ranga Ramanujachariar for Appellant.

Bhashyam Ayyangar and Krishnasami Ayyar for Respondents Nos. 6, 7 and 8.

[230] Judgment :—The District Judge has dismissed the appeal under s. 551, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that post diem interest cannot be given. The terms of Exhibit I are not very clear, and it is possible that they may mean only that 12 per cent. interest is chargeable instead of 9 per cent. from the date of the bond to the date fixed for the repayment of the principal, and that in case of default the mortgagee should at once proceed to recover the principal and interest at the enhanced rate.

But, though we are not able to hold that the interpretation put upon the bond, Exhibit I, by the Courts below is incorrect, we may point out that under the Interest Act XXXII of 1839, the Court has power to give interest upon mortgage money, as it is money payable at a certain time and under a written instrument. Interest post diem may, therefore, be awarded at such rate as is reasonable, if not always at the rate mentioned in the contract. The joint effect of the Interest Act and of section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act is in favour of the award of interest post diem as interest till date of payment, at a reasonable rate and as a charge upon the mortgaged property—Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 274)

As the District Judge has disposed of the appeal upon this point only, and without hearing the respondents, we must reverse the decree and remand the appeal for disposal. The costs in this appeal will abide and follow the result.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 7th August and 20th December, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Brahmanna.....(Defendant) Appellant

Ramakrishnama and others.....(Plaintiff's heirs) Respondents.*

Defamation—Imputation on a wife—Sue by husband.

In a suit for damages for defamation, it appeared that the words complained of were spoken by the defendant to the plaintiff in the presence of a third party and [231] were to the effect that the plaintiff's wife had committed adultery with a pariah and that her children had been born to the pariah :

* Second Appeal No. 107 of 1894.

Held, that the suit was not maintainable by the plaintiff.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 1335 of 1892, affirming the decree of Ramasami Sastri, District Munsif of Gudivada, in Original Suit No. 37 of 1892.

Suit for damages for defamation. The plaintiff averred and proved that the defendant had said to him, in the presence of a constable, "your wife has committed adultery with Mala Murti and your three children are Murti's issue," or words to that effect which constituted the defamation complained of.

The District Munsif passed a decree for Rs. 200 which was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge.

The defendant preferred this second appeal.

Venkatarama Sarma for Appellant.

Naraina Rau for Respondents.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—I do not think that this is a case in which we should depart from the rule that it is the person who is slandered that ought to sue. The plaintiff's wife is sui juris and she may sue for the slander. No other person is permitted to sue, because however closely he may be related to the person slandered and whatever pain of mind he may suffer from the slander of his relation, the injury caused to him is mediate or remote and not immediate or proximate. If the rule were otherwise, the defamer might be liable for as many actions as there are near relations of the persons defamed. It is said that the defamer's object was to vilify the plaintiff. But the slanderous words spoken do not impute any personal misconduct to him. They do not state that the plaintiff knew of his wife's want of chastity, and with that knowledge lived with her. The language used is consistent with plaintiff's belief in his wife's chastity. The object was no doubt to cause intense pain of mind to the plaintiff, and to insult him in the heat of altercation, but it was part of that object to do it only by slandering his wife and children.

Suppose the wife brought an action against defendant, would it be a good defence to say that though she was the person slandered, it was intended only to insult her husband? If not, the rule that a slanderer should not be liable to as many actions as there are relations would be violated. I would follow the [252] principle laid down in Subbaiyar v. Kristnaiyar (I. L. R., 1 Mad., 383), Luckumsey Rowji v. Hurbun Nursey (I. L. R., 5 Bom., 580), and Daya v. Param Sukh (I. L. R., 11 All., 104). Setting aside the decrees of the lower Courts, I dismiss the suit; but, under the circumstances, there will be no order as to costs throughout.

Best, J.—Though most unwilling to disturb the decrees of the Courts below in this case, I am constrained to come to the conclusion that the authorities cited leave us no option and that the plaintiff's suit must fail. I concur, therefore, in the decree proposed by my learned colleague.

NOTES.

Hindu law—Stridhanam—Gift, construction of—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act—Act IX of 1887, sch. II, art. 18—Suit relating to a trust.

A Hindu executed in favour of his daughter an instrument in the following terms :—
“ I have hereby given to you to be enjoyed as stridhanam after my death 2,320 fanams out of 6,000 fanams which remain as kanom on the land T. . . . The proportionate rent on 2,320 fanams is 365 paras. This quantity of paddy shall be enjoyed by you and your sons and grandsons hereditarily by receiving the same from my sons.” After certain clauses restricting the mode of enjoyment and the power of alienation the instrument proceeded, “ in the event of the said kanom being paid, that money shall be received by my sons and shall be invested on some other property, which may be approved of by you and your sons and by my sons, and from that property you may receive income yearly and enjoy the same.” In a suit by a grandson of the donee to recover his share of the income :

Held, (1) that the suit “ related to a trust ” within the meaning of Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, schedule II, article 18 ;

(2) that the instrument was not invalid under Hindu law and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

[253] SECOND APPEAL against the decree of E. K. Krishnan, Subordinate Judge of South Malabar (Palghat), in Appeal Suit No. 842 of 1892, affirming the decree of V. Kelu Eradi, District Munsif of Palghat, in Original Suit
No. 53 of 1892.

The plaintiff was the great grandson and the defendants also were descendants of one Subramania Sastri, and this suit was brought to recover the plain-tiff's share of the income derived from certain funds comprised in an instrument executed in September 1841 by Subramania Sastri in favour of his eldest daughter Shalakshi, who was the plaintiff's paternal grandmother. The instrument was as follows :

“ I have hereby given to you to be enjoyed as stridhanam after my death
2,320 fanams out of 6,000 fanams which rest as kanom exclusive of further charge on the land Tottakara. Out of the puttom (rent) of 950 paras, deducting nigudi and micharam, arising out of the said property, the proportionate puttom on 2,320 fanams is 365 paras. This quality of paddy shall be paid to you by my sons to be enjoyed hereditarily by you and your sons and grandsons. The said puttom of 365 paras of paddy shall be enjoyed by you and your sons and grandsons hereditarily by receiving the same from my sons. On the security of the said property, no debt shall be contracted by you or by your husband or by your children or by my children. If debt is so contracted, it shall not be valid. In the event of the said kanom being paid (by the mortgagor), that money shall be received by my sons and shall be invested on some other property which may be approved of by you and your sons and by my sons, and from that property you may receive (income) yearly and enjoy the same. Let your family be a support to my family."

It appeared that the plaintiff's share of the income of the funds in question had been paid to him up to 1887-88.

The District Munsif passed a decree for the plaintiff, and it was affirmed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge.

Certain of the defendants preferred this second appeal.

Sundara Ayyar for Appellants.

Subramanya Sastri for Respondent.

Judgment.—We agree with Courts below that the suit is one relating to a trust, and is therefore one over which a Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction.

[234] It is next urged that the gift is invalid, since it is not one known to the Hindu law as stridhanam and since it lays down a course of descent inconsistent with the descent of stridhanam property. It is admitted that the Transfer of Property Act does not apply, but we are referred to the Tagore case [Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (9 B. L. R., 377), Chandi Churn Barua v. Sidheswari Debi (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 71) and Kristoromoni Dasi v. Narendro Krishna Bahadur (I. L. R., 16 Cal., 388)].

We are of opinion that although the term stridhanam is used in Exhibit A as describing the gift, it is used in its primary sense of property given to a woman under coverture. We must look to the terms of the instrument to discover the intention of the donor. Though the donor intended that, after the lifetime of his daughter, the property should succeed in the line of sons and grandsons, it cannot be said that such a course of succession is unknown to Hindu law. The words, however, are words of inheritance and not of limitation, and may be used in connection with grants to females as well as to males.

Nor again can we hold that the gift is void, because it is in favour of persons not born. The intention of the donor appears to have been not to convey the property to his sons upon trust for his daughter and her descendants for ever, but that the latter should take an absolute interest from the date of his (the donor's) death. The testator, no doubt, intended that the money should not be handed over to Shalakshi at the date of the gift; the capital was out on kanom, and it was provided that, in the event of the kanom being paid off, the money was to be re-invested in the same manner by the donor's sons and with the approval of Shalakshi and her sons. But the donor could not have contemplated that Shalakshi would live for ever, and as the conveyance was absolute to Shalakshi and her sons after the donor's death, the estate must have vested, and plaintiff, as the descendant of the original donees, will be entitled by inheritance to his share. The restrictions on the mode of enjoyment and the power to alienate would be simply inoperative; but they would not avoid the gift.

It appears from Exhibit B that when the kanom was paid off, the capital was not re-invested by defendants, but, on the contrary, they spent it and came to an agreement with the plaintiff's family [255] to pay 300 paras of paddy annually to Shalakshi's heirs. The plaintiff is entitled to his share in this income, and on this ground the decrees of the Courts below can be supported.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 13th and 21st December, 1894

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE PARKER.

Balambal Ammal.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Arunachala Chetti.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Registration Act—Act III of 1877, s. 77—Compulsory registration—Execution of document admitted—Cancellation pleaded.

On 26th January 1892 the defendant executed a conveyance of certain land to the plaintiff. On 26th May 1892 the plaintiff presented the conveyance for registration, but registration was refused. The plaintiff now sued for a decree directing that the conveyance be registered under Registration Act, 1877, section 77. The defendant pleaded that the conveyance had been cancelled :

Held, (without determining the question of cancellation) that the plaintiff was entitled to the decree prayed for.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of W. F. Grahame, District Judge of South Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 184 of 1893, affirming the decree of K. Rangamannar Ayyangar, District Munsif of Villupuram, in Original Suit No. 369 of 1892.

The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had sold her certain land and executed a conveyance thereof, dated 26th January 1892, and had received the purchase money, and she brought this suit to compel the defendant to register the conveyance and deliver the land to her. The prayer for possession of the land was withdrawn. The defendant admitted the execution of the conveyance, but pleaded that it had been since cancelled. The conveyance had been presented for registration on 26th May 1892, when the Registrar refused to register it.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit and his decree was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge.

[256] The plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Ranga Ramanujachariar for Appellant.

Krishnasami Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sued to compel the defendant to register a conveyance executed by him to her on 26th January 1892 and to recover possession of the property comprised therein. In consequence of objections raised to the frame of the suit the plaintiff withdrew the prayer for delivery of possession and the sole point tried was whether the plaintiff was entitled to a decree that the deed should be registered. The instrument was presented for registration on 26th May 1892.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that the contract of sale was cancelled after execution of the instrument and the earnest money returned. On appeal the District Judge confirmed the decision on a different ground, which he allowed to be argued though it does not appear to have been taken before the District Munsif or in the grounds of appeal. The Judge held that the question of the cancellation of the contract of sale was immaterial in the suit; that the only question was whether plaintiff had observed the formalities entitling her to registration of the instrument; but that, as she had taken no steps to compel defendant to appear at the registration office, she was not entitled to have the document registered, and that her suit was rightly dismissed.

As the prayer for the performance of the contract, viz., the delivery of the property, was withdrawn, we agree with the District Judge that the only question was whether, under the provisions of the Registration Act, the plaintiff was entitled to demand that an instrument, the execution of which was admitted, should be registered. The document was presented in time, and it has been held in Hasanalli Khan Bahadur v. Ekambaram [Second Appeal No. 1541 of 1893 (unreported)], that the question to be considered in a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act is limited to the factum of execution. No time is fixed by law within which the registration of an instrument presented and accepted within four months of its execution must be completed. Sah Makhun Lall Punday v. Sah Koondun Lall (L. R., 2 I. A., 210), Shama Charan Das v. Joyenoolah (I. L. R., 11 Cal., 750), Satcourie Pyne v. Luckey Narain Khettry (I. L. R., 15 Cal., 538), and In re Shaik Abdul Aziz (I. L. R. 11 Bom., 691).

[257] We must reverse the decrees of the Courts below and give plaintiff a decree directing the document to be registered under section 77 of the Registration Act. The plaintiff is entitled to her costs in this Court and in the Lower Appellate Court, but we direct that each party pay her and his own costs in the Court of First Instance since this point was not there taken.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 18th, 21st, 22nd and 23rd March, 1892.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR, AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Badi Bibi Sahibal and others..... (Defendants Nos. 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 15, 16, 18, 39 and 49) Appellants
Sami Pillai..... (Plaintiff) Respondent.*

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 13, 43—Res judicata—Court of jurisdiction competent to try subsequent suit—Suit for interest on a bond waiving right already accrued to sue for principal—Second suit for principal and interest subsequently accrued—Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 116—Mortgage—Interest post diem in absence of covenant—Muhammadan Law—Shares of males and females in subject of altumga grant—Hypothecation by gosha women—Rule as to proof of bonâ fides.

Certain Muhammadans hypothecated to the plaintiff to secure repayment of a debt, their interest in lands, which had been enfranchised as a personal inam—a claim that the lands constituted the endowment of certain mosques having been rejected at the inam enquiry. The hypothecation deed was executed in 1875 and registered, and it contained the following terms with regard to interest and the repayment of the debt :—“ We (the obligors) shall pay interest at 7 per cent. per annum before the 30th October of each year ; we shall pay in full the principal amount on 30th October 1878 after clearing off the interest and redeem this deed : should we fail to pay the interest regularly according to the instalments, we shall at once pay the principal, together with the amount of interest.” Default was made in the payment of interest in 1876 ; and in 1877 the plaintiff sued in a District Munsif's Court for the interest then due, expressly stating in the plaint that he agreed to accept payment of the principal and the subsequent years' interest at the times fixed in the deed, and he obtained a decree as prayed. The plaintiff in 1888 now sued the executants of the above instrument and their heirs and [258] representatives to recover the principal, together with interest up to date. The Court of First Instance held that the claim for a personal decree was barred by limitation, but passed a decree directing the sale of the hypothecated land in default of payment of the principal, together with interest up to date. On appeal :

Held, (1) that this suit was not barred by Civil Procedure Code, section 43, although the creditor's election not to seek a decree for the full amount in the suit of 1877, had not been communicated to the debtors before that suit ;

(2) that since the instrument did not provide for interest post diem any claim in the nature of a claim for such interest could be allowed by way of damages only and was not a charge on the land, and in the present case such claim was barred by limitation ;

(3) that under the circumstances of the case the rule as to the equality of the shares of males and females in the subject of an altumga grant was inapplicable ;

* Appeal No. 88 of 1891.

(4) that those of the defendants, against whom the District Munsif had wrongly | a decree in 1877, were not precluded from the right to have their shares in the land exonerated in the present suit ;

(5) that two gosha women, who had executed the instrument in conjunction with their son and brother, respectively, were not, under the circumstances, entitled to have their shares exonerated, for want of proof that the transaction had been explained to them. Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banoo Begum, I.L.R., 3 Cal., 324, distinguished.

APPEAL against the decree of H. H. O'Farrell, Acting District Judge of Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 5 of 1888.

Suit to recover principal and interest due on a hypothecation bond, dated 30th October 1875, and executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 11 and the ancestors and predecessors in title of the other defendant to the plaintiff to secure a loan of Rs. 19,000. The principal, together with interest calculated at the contract rate up to the date of suit, and a small sum claimed as having been paid by the plaintiff for kist in respect of the land hypothecated, amounted to Rs. 33,541-6-0. The bond (Exhibit A) after the description of the land and the words of hypothecation recited that the principal was borrowed to pay off certain judgment debts, etc., and proceeded as follows :—

"Since we have received this sum of rupees nineteen thousand as detailed above, we shall pay interest accruing on the said sum at 7 per cent. per annum from this date within the 30th October of each year and endorse payment on this. We, or those who are entitled to our assets and liabilities, shall pay in full the principal amount stated above on the 30th October 1878 after clearing off the interest, and redeem this deed and the hypotheca. Should we fail to pay the interest regularly according to the [259] instalments, we shall at once pay in ready money the principal, together with the amount of interest accruing, irrespective of the subsequent instalments for payment of the principal amount."

The defendants put the plaintiff to the proof of the bond and of their liability thereunder : and among other defences they pleaded that the lands in question, having been the subject of a religious endowment, were incapable of being hypothecated : the District Judge, finding that they were enfranchised inams, overruled this defence.

They also pleaded limitation, and the District Judge held with regard to this plea, that the claim for a personal decree was barred by limitation.

A question was also raised under Civil Procedure Code, section 43. It appeared that the obligors had made default in the payment of interest on 30th October 1876 : in the following year the plaintiff instituted Original Suit No. 845 of 1877 on the file of the District Munsif of Trichinopoly to recover the amount due on account of interest at that date and obtained a decree. The plaint in that suit contained the following clause :—

"Although it is mentioned in the said document that, if default be made in the payment of interest even in one year, the whole amount shall be recovered irrespective of the subsequent instalment, yet as the plaintiff has agreed to receive every year the interest payable in that year and the principal within the period stipulated therefor, this suit has been brought only for the interest of the past one year. Plaintiff has agreed to receive the subsequent interest and the principal according to the instalment."

Among the defendants, against whom that decree was passed, were the present defendants Nos. 15 and 16, who now pleaded that their shares in the land were not affected by the hypothecation. It was further pleaded on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 5, who were gosha women, that their shares were not validly hypothecated, as they did not understand the nature of the transaction when they executed the instrument in suit. The District Judge overruled the last-mentioned pleas also and in the result passed a decree for Rs. 31,381-6-0 with further interest from the date of the plaint to be recovered from the shares of certain of the defendants (exonerating those of others of the defendants) and dismissed the claim for a personal decree.

[260] Defendants Nos. 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 15, 16, 18, 39 and 49 preferred this appeal to the High Court, and the plaintiff filed a memorandum of objections.

Bhashyam Ayyangar for Appellants.

Subramanya Ayyar, Ramachandra Ayyar and Rajagopala Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Trichinopoly by some of the defendants Nos. 1, 3, 5 to 7, 15, 16, 18, 39 and 49. The suit was brought by the respondent on the hypothecation bond, Exhibit A, dated 30th October 1875, executed to the plaintiff by defendants Nos. 1 to 11 and four others to recover Rs. 33,541-6-0 made up of Rs. 19,000 principal, due under Exhibit A, and Rs. 14,934-12-8 interest thereon, together with Rs. 94-8-4, amount of kist paid by the plaintiff in December 1886 and interest thereon. The plaintiff asked for a decree for the above amount on the responsibility of the hypothecated property and also that defendants be held personally liable.

The Judge held the personal remedy to be barred, but passed a decree in plaintiff's favour for Rs. 31,381-6-0 with interest thereon at 7 per cent. per annum from date of plaint to date of payment, plus Rs. 94-8-4 and interest thereon at the same rate from December 1886, and directed the sale of the hypothecated property (with certain exceptions) in default of payment.

The first objection argued before us is that the suit was barred by section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure by reason of Original Suit No. 845 of 1877, instituted by plaintiff to recover the first year's interest due under the document A. The document provides that interest accruing on the principal sum of Rs. 19,000 at 7 per cent. per annum shall be paid by the 30th October of each year, that the principal itself shall be repaid on the 30th October 1878, and that, in default of payment regularly each year, the plaintiff shall be at liberty at once to claim payment of the principal and interest in arrears. The first year's interest not having been paid on the 30th October 1876, the suit No. 845 was brought on the 29th October 1877. The plaint therein stated (paragraph 3) that plaintiff had agreed to receive yearly the interest due for each year and the principal at the stipulated time, and that he would accordingly receive the interest for 1877 and 1878 and the principal at the time stipulated in the [261] document. The Judge held that the plaintiff having expressly waived his right to claim the principal and interest at once at the date of the former suit, had no cause of action to sue for more than the interest then due, and that section 43 of the Code of Civil Procedure was no bar to the present suit.

It is argued before us that no evidence has been adduced to show that plaintiff had, prior to the date of the plaint in the former suit, waived the right he had to sue for the principal as well as the interest, and that the statement in the then plaint, that he was willing to accept the principal and subsequent years' interest at the times originally fixed in Exhibit A, did not amount to a waiver within the meaning of section 43.

We are unable to accede to this contention. The alternative provision in Exhibit A is one that was inserted for the exclusive benefit of the plaintiff. He had, therefore, an option to sue either for the first year's interest only or for the same, together with the principal amount. It was only necessary that he should manifest his intention of waiver by some overt act which could not be recalled. This he did by instituting the suit of 1877, and obtaining the decree for the first year's interest alone, expressly stating in the plaint in that suit that he exercised the option. We are unable to accept the argument for the appellants that in order to save section 43, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to have previously communicated to the defendants the election made by him. The real test appears to us to be not whether the option was exercised with the privity of the defendants, but whether it was so exercised as to determine the plaintiff's locus penitentiae. The first contention must, therefore, be overruled.

It is next contended that the Judge was in error in awarding interest on the principal amount subsequent to the 30th October 1878, as Exhibit A does not provide for interest post diem. We are of opinion that this contention must prevail. The document contains no provision for the payment of interest after the 30th October 1878. We cannot, therefore, treat the interest claimed for the period subsequent to that date as a charge on the hypothecated property. As observed by Lord CAIRNS in Cook v. Fowler (L. R., 7 H. L., 27) "any claim in the nature of a claim for interest after the date up to which interest was stipulated for would be a claim really not [262] for a stipulated sum and interest but for damages, and then it would be for the tribunal before which that claim was asserted to consider the position of the claimant, and the sum which, properly and under all the circumstances, should be awarded for damages." As was also stated by Lord SKLBORNE in the same case interest is given post diem "on the principle not of contract but of damages for the breach of contract." This principle has been followed by the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad. Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19) and Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand (I. L. R., 10 All., 85). Treating the claim as a claim for damages for failure to pay the principal on the 30th October 1878, we must hold it to be barred under article 116* of schedule II of the Limitation Act.

It is next urged that defendants Nos. 1 and 5 were gosha women, and that there is no evidence to show that the transaction under A was explained to them. Both these defendants admitted the execution of A, and first defendant did not deny her knowledge of its contents. Although they are gosha ladies, they executed the document, the former in conjunction with her son and the latter in conjunction with her brother. We do not, therefore, think that the present case falls within the scope of the Privy Council's decision in the case of Ashgar Ali v. Delroos Banoo Begum (I. L. R., 3 Cal., 324). Moreover, we observe that this objection was not taken in the former suit of 1877. *

Another contention is that fifth defendant was a minor at the date of Exhibit A. She does not appear to have pleaded minority in her written statement or applied for an issue with regard to it. Neither did she appear in the former suit and take this objection. The contention appears to be an attempt to take advantage of a statement made by the plaintiff's second witness in his cross-examination. The witness was called merely to prove his father's signature in the document A, and we are not prepared to attach much importance to the indefinite statement made by him as to fifth defendant's age twelve years prior to this suit. We must, therefore, overrule this objection also.

* [Art. 116 :—

Description of Suit..	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
For compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered.	Six years.	When the period of limitation would begin to run against a suit brought on a similar contract not registered.]

The next contention is that in computing the shares of thirty-ninth and forty-ninth defendants the Judge has made a mistake. This objection appears to be well founded. The share of thirty-ninth defendant is $7/480$ and that of forty-ninth defendant $7/960$, [263] making together $21/960$ or $7/320$. The contention that as the grant was altumga, no distinction ought to be made between males and females in computing their shares, is found to be untenable on referring to the passage in MacNaghten (page 329) on which appellants rely. It is clear from that passage that the rule relied on is applicable in the award of shares to persons entitled to participate in the benefit of an endowment of which the profits alone can be divided, the endowment itself being impartible.

It is clear from Exhibit III that though the village was claimed at the inam enquiry as jointly endowed for two mosques, the claim was rejected and the defendant's family enfranchised the village as a personal inam. This contention, therefore, also fails.

The next objection is that the shares of defendants Nos. 15 and 16, who are the brothers of defendants Nos. 39 and 49, should also be exempted from liability for the plaint debts. The mere fact of defendants Nos. 15 and 16 having been parties to the former suit, does not estop them from claiming the exemption in this suit, which the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain. We must, therefore, exonerate their shares which amount to $28/960$ or $7/240$.

It is next urged that the Judge is in error in omitting to exclude the share of the eighteenth defendant from liability for the debt. It is not denied that eighteenth defendant is in possession, and in the absence of proof that he inherited the share in his possession from those who executed the document A, such share ought not to have been made liable for the debt. This share $7/240$ must, therefore, be exempted.

The next contention is that under the lease E the plaintiff received more than what was sufficient to cover the interest for the two years 1876 to 1878, and that the Judge was in error in not ascertaining the actual amount received and giving defendants credit for the excess. There is no evidence to show that the receipts were in excess of the interest. Moreover, the document E does not contemplate any such excess. It is admitted that the first year's receipts were not sufficient to cover the interest for that year, and it appears, from the remark made by the Judge in paragraph 67 of his judgment, that defendants abstained from calling evidence on the point on the understanding that the claim for those two years' interest was to be set off against the receipts. This objection, therefore, also fails.

[264] It is next urged that defendants are entitled to be credited with two sums,—Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 300—received by the plaintiff. As regards the Rs. 1,000, there is nothing to contradict the plaintiff's evidence that it was received by him prior to the date of Exhibit A, and that the amount was deducted in 1873, when a previous bond was executed. As regards the Rs. 300, plaintiff has accounted for only Rs. 200, and for the remaining Rs. 100, credit must be given to the defendants.

The decree of the lower Court will be modified to the extent indicated above, and the costs of the appeal assessed proportionately.

As regards the memorandum of objections filed by the respondent, it is first argued that there is no reason for exempting the shares of defendants Nos. 99 and 149. Although they intervened in the suit, it is not denied that their relationship to the owners of the village entitles them to shares. This being the case, we cannot allow the objection in the absence of evidence of their having forfeited their shares.

The objection with regard to the revenue sales is not pressed, as the purchasers are not parties to this appeal.

With regard to the remaining objection, it is conceded by defendants' pleader that the kudivaram right of the three persons named in document A in items Nos. 2 to 10 of the plaint schedule was included in the property hypothe- cated. We shall, therefore, direct that the kudivaram right of the first, third and sixth defendants in the said items be also held liable for the plaint- debt.

There will be no order as to the costs of this memorandum of objections.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE SHEPARD.

Munisami Reddi.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Arunachala Reddi and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sched. II, art. 11—Civil Procedure

Code—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 278, 281—Disallowance of claim to property under attachment—Subsequent suit.

In 1879 the plaintiff purchased at a Court sale the first defendant's interest in certain land, but did not obtain possession. In 1888 the same property was purchased by the fourth defendant in execution of another decree against the same judgment-debtor. It appeared that the plaintiff raised an objection by petition in the course of the proceedings in execution of the last-mentioned decree, but his petition was dismissed on his vakil stating that he was not in possession. The plaintiff now sued in 1891 for the property purchased by him :

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of E. J. SEWELL, District Judge of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 126 of 1891, affirming the decree of V. Cuppusami Ayyar, District Munsif of Sholinghur, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1891.

Suit in 1891 for possession of the first defendant's share in certain land. A decree having been passed against the present first defendant in Original Suit No. 604 of 1875, his share in the land now in question was sold in execution and bought by the present plaintiff in 1879, who, however, failed to obtain possession. Subsequently the same property was attached in execution of another decree passed against the same defendant in Original Suit No. 747 of 1875 and was purchased by the present fourth defendant. The plaintiff raised an objection by petition which was however in effect abandoned on 23rd June 1888, on which date the following order was made:—"Petitioner's vakil states that the petitioner is not at present in possession of the property. The petition is accordingly dismissed as he can recover his rights in a suit."

[266] The lower Courts both held that the present suit was barred under Limitation Act, schedule II, article 11, as having been instituted more than one year from the last-mentioned date.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Jivaji for Appellant.

Krishnamachariar for Respondent No. 4.

Judgment.—The question is whether there was any order under section 281 of the Code. When a claim is preferred under section 278 and duly prosecuted, it is incumbent on the Court after investigation of the facts to satisfy itself either that the facts are as stated in section 280 or as stated in section 281. Without being satisfied either way, no order can properly be passed. Chundra Bhusan Gangopadhyaya v. Ram Kanth Banerji (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 108). In this case the claim was practically withdrawn and there was no investigation.

There being no order within the meaning of section 281, the one year's rule does not apply.

We reverse the decree and remand the suit for trial by the District Munsif. The respondents must pay costs of this appeal, other costs to be provided for in the revised decree.

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Sathianama Bharati.....(Plaintiff No. 2) Appellant

Saravanabagi Ammal and others.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Religious endowments—Gosami mutt—Grant by the head of the mutt to his brother for his maintenance—Suit by a successor to recover the land—Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, s. 10—Evidence—Yadasts from revenue officials.

In 1544 a village was granted to the head of a Gosami mutt to be enjoyed from generation to generation and the deed of grant provided that the grantee was "to improve the mutt, maintain the charity and be happy". The office of head of the mutt was hereditary in the grantee's family. In 1866 an inam title-deed was issued to the then head of the mutt, whereby the village was confirmed to him and [267] his successors tax-free, to be held without interference so long as the conditions of the grant are duly fulfilled. Yadasts addressed by Tahsildars to the then head of the mutt in 1872 and 1882 were put in evidence to show what the object of the grant was. It was found, regard being had to usage, that the trusts of the institution were the upkeep of the mutt, the feeding of pilgrims, the performance of worship, the maintenance of a watershed and the support of the descendants of the grantee. From before 1840 it had been usual for the head of the mutt for the time being to make grants to his brothers or younger sons for their maintenance. In 1842 the father of the present plaintiff, being then the head of the mutt, granted certain lands in the village above referred to to his younger brother, the deed of grant being in terms absolute. The grantee died about thirty years before the suit and the lands in question came into the possession of his widow (defendant No. 1) and a mortgagee from her (defendant No. 2), respectively. In 1863 the plaintiff's father placed certain other lands in possession of defendant No. 3 who paid rent therefor and received pattas for some years from the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff for possession of the lands in the possession of the defendants it was pleaded, inter alia, that the grant of 1843 was binding on him and that defendant No. 3 had a right of permanent occupancy :

Held, (1) that the suit was not barred by limitation ;

(2) that the yadasts above referred to were admissible as indicating the general consciousness as to the nature of the grant of the village ;

(3) that the grant was an endowment in trust for the mutt and the charities connected therewith, and not merely a grant of property to the original grantee, on which certain trusts were engrafted so as to impose on him an obligation to apply a portion of the income of the village to those trusts ;

(4) that the grant of 1843 was valid for the lifetime of defendant No. 1 (who had become by marriage part of the family of a descendant of the original grantee) but that the property comprised therein was liable to revert to the representative of the mutt on her death ;

(5) that the plaintiff, although he had issued pattas, was entitled to recover possession of the lands occupied by defendant No. 3 and not to receive rent from him merely.

APPEAL against the decree of P. Dorasami Ayyar, Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 46 of 1886.

* Appeal No. 109 of 1892.

The first plaintiff claimed to be the chief of a mutt situated in the village of Mantithope and he sued to recover possession of certain lands and houses as the property of the mutt. The second plaintiff was his son and the third plaintiff his brother. The first plaintiff died during the pendency of the suit and the proceedings were prosecuted by the second plaintiff.

It was admitted that the property in question originally formed part of the endowment of the mutt, but the defendants claimed title from a previous head of the mutt. The original grant, which comprised the village where the property in question was situated, was dated 1544, and it provided that the grantee was "to improve the mutt and maintain the charity and be happy", but [268] otherwise it was absolute in its terms. By an inam title-deed, dated 1866, the village was confirmed to the then manager and his successors to be held as long as the conditions of the grant are duly fulfilled. Certain yadasts, subsequent in date to the last-mentioned document, addressed by Tahsildars to the father of the plaintiff, then the head of the mutt, were put in evidence together with other exhibits to show what the object of the grant was. The Subordinate Judge overruled an objection taken to the admissibility of these yadasts; and he recorded the findings, which are summarised by the High Court, as to the objects of the grant.

The first and second defendants claimed title to the land in question under Exhibit XIV, which was an instrument described as a kararnama, dated the 22nd of May 1842, and executed in favour of the plaintiff's father, therein described as "by hereditary right the successor and chief of the mutt", by his younger brother, who was the husband (since deceased without male issue) of defendant No. 1. The instrument was in the following terms:—

"In accordance with the practice of our adinam, agreements were executed by one Rama Bharati Gosamiyar and (another) Visvanatha Bharati Gosamiyar in favour of their elder brother Bheema Bharati Swamiyar who was our father: also my elder brother Visvanatha Bharati Gosamiyar Avergal has executed a kararnama in favour of you, which you have (thus) obtained from (him). In accordance with these agreements, I have executed now in your favour this kararnama, and the particulars whereof is as follows:—As I have accepted from your hands six varaikkottais of nanjai land, six kayarus of karisal punjai, three kayarus of sevval punjai, ten pons (in cash), one garden, nine (?) oxen for ploughing, and thirty pons for the price of sheep, etc., you shall hold this itself as my receipt in respect of them all. Moreover, as no house has yet been built and given to me, and as I am yet unmarried, and as no jewels, utensils, etc., have been given to me for the present, I shall soon after I am married and am provided with a house, take from you the jewels, utensils, cows, etc., as stated above, and which were (as in my case) settled upon Visvanatha Bharati Gosamiyar, my elder brother. I shall (thenceforwards) continue to enjoy the aforesaid properties from generation to generation, and for ever shall conduct myself in accordance with your wishes and orders. You shall hold this stamped document itself as a kararnama or written agreement from me, also as a [269] declaration on my part that I shall have no disputes whatever with you in regard to this settlement, and as a receipt from me for the properties which I have accepted from you. To this effect this agreement has been executed to Sivaprakasa Bharati Gosamiyar, the head of the mutt by his younger brother Nataraja Bharati Gosami."

Defendant No. 2 held the land on a mortgage from defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 3 claimed title under a conveyance for value from the plaintiff's father said to have been since ratified by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's case was that the land had been granted to his uncle merely for his maintenance in consideration of his performing certain services in the mutt on the understanding that the land should revert to the mutt on the event of his failure to perform the services or on his death without male issue. Defendant No. 1, on the other hand, pleaded that the land had passed to her husband as his share on a partition of ancestral property. She also pleaded, inter alia, that the suit was barred by limitation.

In the first instance the Subordinate Court dismissed the suit, but a re-trial having been ordered, a decree was passed declaring the plaintiff's right of collecting the rents of the lands in suit under the provisions of the Rent Recovery Act, 1865, for the benefit of the mutt and charitable and religious institutions thereto attached; the claim for ejectment being refused.

The plaintiff preferred this appeal and the defendants took objection to the decree appealed against so far as it was prejudicial to their interests.

Bhashyam Ayyangar for Appellant.

Krishnasami Ayyar for Respondent No. 1.

Anandacharlu and Varadayya for Respondent No. 2.

Judgment:—This was a suit to recover with mesne profits possession of the properties specified in the plaint from the defendants. The ground of claim is that they are comprised in the endowment of a Gosami mutt and that they are improperly alienated to, or retained by, the defendants. The plaintiff was the chief or representative of the institution, and upon his demise the second plaintiff was brought in as his legal representative.

The mutt is situated at the village of Mantithope, in the Ottappidaram taluk, of the district of Tinnevely. After its founder [270] it is known by the name of Srimat Sankara Bharati Swami Adinam. In the village of Mantithope there are about twenty families of Gosamis, who claim to be descendants of the original grantee and several of them are in possession of small portions of the endowments. The entire village was granted free of assessment to Sankara Bharati according to the plaintiff for the support of the matam and its charities. A Gosami is not a religious ascetic like a Sunniyasi or Tambiran who abjures the world and its pleasures and lives a life of celibacy, but a married man who is considered to live a pious life affording religious instruction to those who seek it from him, performing religious charities and delivering lectures on religious subjects and on the duty of man to God and to his fellow creatures. The specific trusts, to which the income of the village is applicable according to the usage of the institution, are found by the Subordinate Judge to consist (i) in the distribution of sadavarthi (rice and condiments were supplied in lieu of cooked food) in the mutt to Gosayi and other pilgrims who pass through Mantithope; (ii) in the maintaining of puja or worship in the temple called Sankara Bharati Swami kovil; (iii) in supporting a watershed or pandal at a place near the village called Ellandope, and (iv) in providing maintenance to the descendants of the grantee. The eldest male representative of the eldest son of the grantee succeeds to the dignity of the chief of the mutt, and holds the village save such portions of it as have been alienated to others.

The properties forming the subject of this litigation are those parts of the matam endowment which have passed into the possession of the defendants. The first defendant's husband, Nataraja Bharati Gosamiar, was the brother of the first plaintiff's father Sivaprakasa Bharati Gosami and on the 22nd May 1842, the latter executed in favour of the former the agreement, Exhibit XIV, by way of making a provision for him and his family. The document purports to have been executed in accordance with the practice of our 'Adinam.' It gives first defendant's husband certain lands and promises to give him a house and some jewels, utensils and cows, etc., soon after he is married. In return for this settlement, the first defendant's husband covenants to the following effect: "I shall continue to enjoy the aforesaid properties from generation to generation and for ever shall conduct [271] myself in accordance with your wishes and orders." After marrying the first defendant her husband left the village about thirty years ago and has not since been heard of, and the land granted by Exhibit XIV passed into her possession. On the 4th September 1885, she mortgaged it for Rs. 1,200 to the second defendant Anandanada Pillai, a stranger to the families of the descendants of the original grantee. As regards this land, the plaintiff's case is that the agreement, Exhibit XIV, is invalid that the land was granted in consideration of certain services which the first defendant's husband was to render in the mutt and on the understanding that it was to revert to the mutt either in case he failed to render those services or died without male issue. On the other hand, the first defendant's contention is that the grant was not a service grant, that Exhibit XIV granted an absolute estate, and that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation. The second defendant's contention was to the same effect, except that he also set up against the plaintiff the mortgage in his favour.

As regards items of lands Nos. 1, 2, 15 to 17 and 19 to 21, the plaintiff's case was that the third defendant obtained them from the first plaintiff's father on a patta for cultivation about nine years ago, and that he was bound to give them up on demand. But the third defendant alleged that the original first plaintiff's father granted the lands in perpetuity for valuable consideration, and that the first plaintiff ratified that grant by issuing pattas for the same for Andus 1053, 1054 and 1055 or the years 1863 to 1865.

Five issues were originally framed in this case. On the first issue, a former Subordinate Judge found that the lands in dispute belonged to the matam. On the second issue, he held that the land, which passed into the possession of the first defendant's husband, was not held by him on service tenure. On the third issue, he was of opinion that the claim was barred by limitation. On the fifth issue, he found that the settlement made by the first plaintiff's father was binding on his successors, and upon those findings he dismissed the suit with costs.

On appeal, however, this Court set aside the decree, on the ground that the investigation was defective, and remanded the case for re-trial. With reference to the order of remand, four more issues were framed, and the defects in the original enquiry [272] remedied. On the sixth issue, the Subordinate Judge found that the specific trusts of the Gosami mutt were as already mentioned. On the seventh issue, he held differing from his predecessor, that the maintenance of the descendants of the original grantee was a legitimate charge only on the income of the endowment, and that the allotment of land made over to the first defendant's husband was not valid. On the eighth issue, he was of opinion that document XIV was genuine, but that it was not valid so far as it related to allotment of land. He found, however, that the head of the mutt was entitled to the rent, but not to possession of the lands sued for. As for the ninth issue which related to the occupancy right set up by the third defendant, the Subordinate Judge found in his favour. In the result he passed a decree declaring that the head of the mutt possessed only the right of collecting rents due on the lands sued for under the provisions of the Rent Recovery Act for the benefit of the mutt and the charitable institutions attached thereto, and dismissing the rest of the plaintiff's claim, he directed the plaintiff to pay the costs of the third defendant and first and second defendants and plaintiff to bear his own costs. Against this decree the plaintiff has appealed, and the first and second defendants have objected to it under section 561, Civil Procedure Code, in so far as it is against them.

The first objection taken in appeal is that the suit is barred by limitation, and that section 10* of the Limitation Act is not applicable to a suit brought by a person succeeding to the office of trustee. Reliance is placed on 3 and 4 William IV, cap. 27, section 25. Section 10 of the Indian Act of Limitations specifies as exempt from its operation suits against a person, in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns not being assigns for valuable consideration, for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property. Unlike the provision of the English Act, section 10 does not state that the plaintiff ought to be a beneficiary or beneficiaries whilst, according to section 437 † of the Code of Civil Procedure, a trustee represents the persons beneficially interested when the suit is concerning property vested in a trustee and the contention is between the persons beneficially interested and a third party. It must be remembered that the plaintiff is not the alienor, and as the present manager of the mutt, he is [273] entitled to sue the assigns of his predecessor in office, on the ground that the assignment was in violation of his trust. This view is in accordance with the decisions in Mahomed v. Ganapati (I. L. R., 13 Mad., 277, 280) and Jamal Saheb v. Murgaya Swami (I. L. R., 10 Bom., 34). It is next urged, on appellant's behalf, that the Subordinate Judge is in error in holding that appellant was only entitled to rent and not to actual possession of the land in dispute. The Subordinate Judge considers that if pattas are issued under Act VIII of 1865, landholders are not entitled to eject their tenants, but can only claim rent. He appears to have misconstrued section 12, which regulates the mode of ejectment and provides that the land-holders specified in section 3 are not empowered to eject their tenants from their lands except by a decree of Court or under section 10 or 41 of the Act. On the true construction of section 12, the issue of a patta is clearly not intended to do more than prevent arbitrary ejectment of tenants or to give them a right of permanent occupancy, though the grant or contract, under which their possession commenced, creates either a limited estate or a terminable holding. The Subordinate Judge refers in paragraph 31 of his judgment to an admission by plaintiff that third defendant has been in possession under a lease granted by first plaintiff's father for nine years, but this circumstance is not sufficient to support the finding that the former has a permanent right of occupancy. In our judgment the appellant's contention must prevail.

The real question, then, is whether having regard to the grant or contract under which the defendant's possession commenced, they are entitled to continue in possession and can legally resist plaintiff's claim to eject them.

[Sec. 10 :- Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration) for the purpose following in his or their hands such property, shall be barred by any length of time.]

when the contention is between the persons beneficially interested in such property and a third person, the trustee, executor or administrator shall represent the persons so interested, and it shall not ordinarily be necessary to make them parties to the suit. But the Court may, if it thinks fit, order them or any of them to be made such parties.]

Exhibit XIV is the kararnama on which first defendant's title rests, and we agree with the Subordinate Judge that that document is genuine. There is no doubt that it is not a mere maintenance grant, but a grant of an absolute estate as alleged by first and second defendants. The words "from generation to generation" and the absence of any clause prohibitive of alienation are consistent only with the view that the intention was to create an absolute estate, not a limited one merely. That this is the proper construction to be put on the document XIV is confirmed by the terms of similar grants made by some of the plaintiff's predecessors to their [274] brothers. As recited in document XIV it appears to have been customary in the adinam for the head of the mutt, for the time being, to make a provision for his younger brother by grant of land to him and his heirs. This brings under our consideration the contention on respondent's behalf that the original grant of the village of Mantithope was not a grant of an endowment in trust for the mutt and the charities connected therewith, but a grant of property to the original grantee on which certain trusts were engrafted, so as to impose on him an obligation to apply a portion of the income of the village to those trusts. We do not consider that this contention is tenable. The Subordinate Judge discusses the evidence on the subject under the first issue and decides that issue in plaintiff's favour. But the first and second respondent's pleader draws our attention to Exhibits W, R, T, Q, 27, 31, 32, 14, 17, 28, 29 and 30; to Exhibits 15, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 25 and 26, and to the oral evidence of plaintiff's witnesses 1, 2, 7, 10 and 4 and of defendant's witnesses 2, 3, 8, 9 and 10. Exhibit W is the original grant, dated Andu 719 (1544) and purports to be a grant of the village of Mantithope made by Visvanatha Nayak's Dewan Tiruvengadanadha Naicker to Sankara Bharati Tambiran to be held and enjoyed free of assessment so long as the sun and moon endure from generation to generation. It says that the grantee is thus "to improve the mutt, maintain the charity and be happy." There is no allusion in the inscription to maintenance, and the grant contemplates the improvement of the mutt and the maintenance of the charity as its primary object. Stress is laid on the words "from generation to generation" and on Sankara Bharati instead of the mutt being named as the grantee. But this is not conclusive. The subsequent usage of the institution and several other exhibits in evidence are inconsistent with this contention, and show that Sankara Bharati was probably named as the grantee because the mutt was his mutt.

Exhibit R is the inam title-deed, dated 1st February 1866. It was issued to the manager, for the time being, of Sankara Bharati Tambiran mutt by the Inam Commissioner on behalf of the Governor in Council. It confirms the village to the manager and his successors tax-free to be held without interference "so long as the conditions of the grant are duly fulfilled." It is not possible to reconcile this document with the respondent's contention. Exhibit B is the register of inams prepared by the Inam Commissioner. [275] In that it is recorded that the grant was made for the support of the Gosai matam at Mantithope and that the matam is well kept up. Exhibit C is the inam statement put in by the first plaintiff's father and the grant is described in it as made by the former Government for the maintenance of the charities conducted in Sankara Bharati Tambiran's matam.

Exhibits T and Q are yadasts addressed by Tahsildars to plaintiff's father, which tend to show that the object of the grant was as found by the Subordinate Judge. They are dated, respectively, in 1872 and 1882. It is contended, on behalf of first defendant, that they are not evidence against her. They are admissible, however, as indicating the general consciousness as to the nature of the grant.

Exhibit 27 is the yakat account of 1803 in which the village of Mantithope is entered as "Sudda maniam village belonging to Gosamiars." There is nothing to indicate that the object with which it was prepared was to show the precise nature of the grant and it is not safe to attach weight to it.

Exhibits 31 and 32 only show that it was customary for the chief of the mutt for the time being to allot lands for the maintenance of his junior sons when he has several sons and to his brothers, and that this practice was followed in 1879 and 1877.

Exhibit XIV under date May 1842 which is the grant relied on by first and second defendants shows that prior to it there had been similar grants.

Exhibit XXVIII is a jamabundy account and gives no useful information.

Exhibit XVII, which was a grant for maintenance made in 1888, describes the usage of the mutt as regards such grants in the following terms:—"As among the hereditary descendants of our adinam, be the number of brothers what it may in each generation, when the eldest of them who is the heir apparent to the dignity comes to be the head of the mutt, it has been the practice with such eldest brother to allot to his younger brothers for their maintenance certain lands, maniyams, houses and grounds and such other properties as may be sufficient therefor and thus to separate them after obtaining from them written agreements for the same."

Exhibits XXIX and XXX are the razinamah in Original Suit No. 381 of 1861 and the written statement in Original Suit No. [276] 139 of 1860. They also show that maintenance grants were usually made and no partition was allowed.

The other exhibits to which respondent's pleader has drawn our attention are hypothecation bonds and mortgages executed by those to whom lands were granted for maintenance.

The effect of the oral evidence is sufficiently stated by the Subordinate Judge and it is unnecessary to recapitulate it.

Neither the oral nor the documentary evidence proves the respondent's case, that the village was originally granted as private property and not as an endowment. The evidence, taken as a whole, points to the conclusion that the village was granted as an endowment for the mutt and the charities connected therewith. Having regard to the usage of the institution the specific trusts are (1) the up-keep of the mutt, (2) the distribution of sadavarti to Gosayi pilgrims, (3) the performance of puja in Sankara Bharati Swami kovil, (4) the maintenance of a watershed at Ellandope, and (5) the support of the descendants of the grantee. The evidence does not show that at each generation the village was divided subject to the obligation of contributing to the cost of maintaining the charities, or that any portion of the village was specially set apart as trust property and the rest as partible property as would ordinarily be the case if the villages were granted for the personal benefit of the grantee and his heirs, subject to the fulfilment of certain trusts annexed to the grant. The conclusion to which we come is that the village was granted as an endowment for the mutt and the charities connected with it, and that what might remain after the due execution of those trusts was intended to be applied to the maintenance of the grantee or his descendants. It has, no doubt, been usual from before 1840 for the head of the mutt for the time being to make provision for his brother or junior sons, but such grants would be valid, only if they were real maintenance grants. The Subordinate Judge considers that only money payments should have been made and that no lands ought to have been allotted. We do not concur in this opinion; whether maintenance is provided by an assignment of land or paid in cash from time to time there is no difference in principle, provided that the allotment is purely by way of providing maintenance. That which vitiates the allotment is its character as an absolute grant and the grant is bad to that extent only. The first defendant [277] being by marriage part of the family of a descendant of the grantee, the grant should be declared to be valid during her life and liable to revert to the representative of the matam on her death. The decree of the Subordinate Judge must, therefore, be set aside so far as it declares that the plaintiff is entitled to rent and a decree be passed declaring him entitled to hold the lands on and after the demise of the first defendant.

Each party will bear his or her own costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 11th and 12th March and 10th April, 1895.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD AND MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Annapurni Nachiar... (Defendant No. 2) Appellant

versus

Collector of Tinnevely and another.....(Plaintiff and Defendant
No. 1) Respondents.*

Hindu law—Inheritance—Impartible estate—Adoption by a Zamindar in conjunction with one of his two wives—Right to succeed to adoptive son.

The holder of the impartible Zamindari of Uthumalai, who married two wives, subsequently made an adoption in conjunction with his junior wife. The Zamindar died in August 1891, and the adopted son died an infant without issue in December of the same year.

Held, that the junior wife having taken part in the adoption was entitled to the impartible estate in preference to her co-wife.

APPEAL against the decree of F. H. Hamnett, Acting District Judge of Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 15 of 1892.

This was an interpleader suit relating to the rival claims of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to succeed to the impartible estate the property of the infant adoptive son of their late husband. The facts of the case was [sic] stated sufficiently for the purposes of this report in the judgment of BEST, J.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson), Ramachandra Rau Saheb, Gopalosami Ayyangar and Ranga Ramanujachariar for Appellant.

[278] Bhashyam Ayyangar, Krishnasami Ayyar, Ramakrishna Ayyar, Desikachariar, Seshachariar, Natesa Ayyar and Subramania Ayyar for Respondent No. 2.

Best, J.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether the appellant (second defendant) or the second respondent (first defendant) is entitled to possession of the impartible Zamindari of Uthumalai in the Tinnevely district.

* Appeal No. 70 of 1894.

The first respondent is the Collector of the district, by whom the suit was instituted for the purpose of obtaining a decision as to which of the rival claimants was entitled to the zamindari, of which possession had been taken by him as Agent of the Court of Wards on behalf of a minor named Navanita Krishna Marudappa Tevar as adopted son of the zamindar Irudalaya Marudappa Tevar, who died on 12th August 1891. The minor also died on 16th December 1891.

The fact and validity of the adoption of the boy Navanita Krishna by the late zamindar Irudalaya, whose widows both appellant and the second respondent claim to be, were denied by the appellant and formed the subject of several issues (5 to 8) settled for trial in the suit. These issues are considered by the Judge in paragraphs 60 to 71 of his judgment, and the conclusions arrived at by him are stated in paragraph 72, namely, that there was in fact an adoption and that no reason appears for holding it to be other than valid.

The correctness of the finding is not disputed at the hearing of the appeal, and the evidence on record amply supports the conclusions arrived at by the Judge as to the fact of the adoption.

Another fact that is not disputed is the marriage of the appellant with the late zamindar Irudalaya. But the fact of second respondent being also a wife was denied and formed the subject of the first issue. The Judge has found on the issue in favour of second respondent, and his finding as to the fact of second respondent being a wife of the late zamindar is supported by Exhibit UUU—a statement filed by appellant's own father and brothers in criminal proceedings against the zamindar, in which second respondent is expressly spoken of as the second wife of the zamindar, and also by Exhibit F which contains an admission of the fact by appellant herself. In the face of this evidence the learned Advocate-General, who appeared for the appellant, has been unable to contend that second respondent was merely a concubine and not a wife of the late zamindar. He has contended, however, [279] that the Judge is not warranted by the evidence in finding that second respondent's marriage took place at the same time as that of appellant at the latter's village of Kurukalpatti. This was clearly not the second respondent's case—the whole of whose evidence on the point is directed to showing that second respondent's marriage took place at Virakeralampudur, some 14 miles from Kurukalpatti. The story told by second respondent's witnesses is that, after the marriage of the zamindar with second respondent in the morning at Virakeralampudur, the zamindar started off on horseback accompanied by a couple of servants on foot and proceeded to Kurukalpatti to marry appellant, then a girl aged six or seven years. On hearing of which his mother followed him in a palanquin; and on her arrival at Kurukalpatti the zamindar hastily left, not however till after the marriage with appellant had been performed, and returning to Virakeralampudur went on with the ceremonies of the marriage with the second respondent on the next and following days. The Judge has assigned sufficient reasons for disbelieving this story of second respondent's witnesses.

The Judge's reason for finding that the marriage of second respondent must have taken place at Kurukalpatti is the statement by the zamindar in his petition, Exhibit DDD, that he married both appellant and second respondent "at one and the same time." But in the same petition the zamindar has stated that he had divorced appellant, which is found by the Judge to be not true. There is thus no good reason for accepting as true the statement that the two marriages took place "at one and the same time," especially when that statement is opposed to the evidence of second respondent's own witnesses and of second respondent herself.

It being found that second respondent's marriage did not take place on the same day as that of appellant, and it not being pretended on behalf of second respondent that it took place on any previous day, the only possible conclusion is that it must have taken place on a subsequent day. From the finding that the marriage did not take place at Virakeralampudur at the time alleged by second respondent and her witnesses, it follows that there is an entire absence of evidence as to where and when it took place, and were it not for the admission contained in Exhibits UUU and F, there would be no reliable evidence of second respondent being in fact a wife of the zamindar, for the statements made by [280] the zamindar himself in the description of second respondent as a wife in official reports pending the dispute between the appellant and the zamindar are clearly not sufficient to place the matter beyond doubt. But the statement in Exhibit UUU by appellant's father and her brothers and in Exhibit F by appellant herself seem to justify the finding that second respondent was also a wife of the zamindar, but only a junior wife, i.e., a subsequently married wife.

The alleged divorce of appellant is found to be untrue not only by the Judge in the present suit, but also by the Subordinate Judge in Original Suit No. 17 of 1889—a suit filed by the late zamindar against appellant and which is the subject of Appeal Suit No. 152 of 1891, which is also now before us for decision.

The evidence as to the alleged divorce has been carefully considered by the District Judge in paragraphs 46 to 49 of his judgment, and there is no reason for holding that he has come to a wrong conclusion.

As already stated, the Advocate-General no longer contests the fact or the validity of the adoption of Navanita Krishna Marudappa by the late zamindar Irudalaya with the second respondent.

The real question for decision, therefore, is whether second respondent as the receiving mother is entitled to succeed to the estate as heir of the boy Navanita Krishna in preference to appellant, though the latter is the first married wife of Irudalaya. It is first contended on behalf of second respondent that she has a preferential right to succeed to the zamindari on the admitted fact of her seniority in age to the appellant. But as has been contended on behalf of appellant, seniority in the family of the husband must be calculated from the date of the entry of each wife into that family by marriage and so calculated the appellant is clearly the senior wife—the Dharmapatni—the wife married from a sense of duty—see 2, Colebrooke's Digest, page 124, and Strange's Hindu Law, page 137; cf. also Padajirav v. Ramrav (I. L. R., 13 Bom., 160). However, the question here is not as to the succession of wives to a husband, but of the mother to an adopted son.

The Judge has found that second respondent as the receiving mother is entitled to succeed in preference to the appellant. In support of this finding he has cited the case of Kasheeskuree Debia v. Greesh Chunder Lahoree [W. R. (1864), 71], also a dictum in Teencowree Chat-[281]terjee v. Dinonath Banerjee 3 W. R., 49, and the opinion of Sir Francis MacNaghten at page 171 of his Hindu Law where he says, "the boy could not be received by three widows jointly. He must be received by one of them and would then be considered as the son of the widow by whom he had been received." See also the answer of a Pandit in the appendix to the same book, which says, "The widow adopting will be called the mother and the others the step-mothers." So also West and Bühler in Vol. 1, page 1132 (third edition) of their Hindu Law say, "The importance of the right to adopt as between two or more widows becomes evident when it is borne in mind that the one taking the place of mother succeeds first to her son on his death without child or widow." No doubt the writers above referred to have cited no authority for the views expressed by them, and the rule enunciated in Dattaka Mimamsa, VI, v. 50, and Dattaka Chandrika, III, v. 17, to the effect that the "forefathers of the adoptive mother only are also the maternal grandsires of the sons given" differentiates between the adoptive and natural mothers, and not between an adoptive mother who actually joins in the ceremony of adoption and her co-wives. But if it is allowable to a Hindu to authorise one of several wives to take a child in adoption after his death, and in such case the widow so appointed can alone exercise the power as admitted by Mr. W. H. MacNaghten (see page 12 of his introduction), it is difficult to understand why he should have no discretion in selecting one of his wives to join with him in making an adoption during his lifetime.

The only authority cited in support of appellant's contention is the passage at page 12 of the introduction to Mr. W. H. MacNaghten's book on Hindu Law, but he expressly states that his remarks have reference only to the rights and privileges accruing to the adopting widow "from the simple fact of her having made the adoption, independently of any intention expressed or implied by the deceased, that such widow alone should be considered as the mother of the adopted child," and adds "if he declared this explicitly, the case would be different; or if such may be reasonably gathered to have been his intention, from some unequivocal indication of his will that his other wives should have no concern with the adoption."

[282] In the present case there can be no doubt as to the fact of the adoption of the boy Navanita Krishna Marudappa having been made by the late zamindar in association with second respondent alone. She was the wife with whom he had lived since 1866 at least, whereas (as has been rightly found by the Judge) the appellant never lived with her husband; for there can be no doubt that the evidence adduced by appellant to prove that she ever cohabited with her husband or even went to the palace prior to March 1889 has been rightly disbelieved by the Judge—see paragraphs 50 to 54 of his judgment. It is equally beyond doubt that the deceased's intention was that second respondent and not appellant should occupy the position of mother to the boy adopted, and second respondent, and not appellant, was the 'receiving' mother, which is the literal meaning of the word 'pratigrahitri' which is translated 'adoptive' in Dattaka Mimamsa, VI, 50, and Dattaka Chandrika, III, 17. The fact that adoptions under the Hindu law are for the benefit of the man and can be made independently of any wife, does not appear to be a circumstance from which it can be inferred that the man is not at liberty to select one of several wives to be the receiving mother of the boy to be adopted; and as to Manu, chapter IX, v. 183, it certainly does not prove the appellant's contention, for notwithstanding the statement there made that if among all the wives of the same husband, one bring forth a male child, they are all declared, by means of that son, to be mothers of male issue: nevertheless the actual mother succeeds to the son in preference to her co-wives. There is, therefore, no reason why the mere fact of all the wives being considered as mothers of an adopted son should preclude the wife who is actually associated in the adoption from being considered as the mother, and the other wives merely co-wife mothers (Sapatnimata).

The preponderance of authority clearly supports the Judge's finding that where only one of several wives is associated with the husband in making an adoption, she is the preferential heir to the boy.

I would therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Shepherd, J.—I concur with Mr. Justice BEST in his conclusion on the facts of this case.

It being assumed then that the late zamindar died, leaving him surviving two widows and a son adopted by him in conjunc-[283]tion with one of them, namely, Meenakshisundara, and that son having since died, the question to be decided is whether the widow Meenakshisundara or the other widow Annapurni has a preferential right to the zamindari, which being impartible can only be enjoyed by one of them.

Meenakshisundara's claim is based on the ground that she took part in the adoption and that in point of age—whether or not she was first married—she is the eldest of the two widows. On the other hand, the contention on behalf of the appellant Annapurni Nachiar is that she was the elder wife in the sense of having been first married, and that her rights in that capacity were not affected by the action of the zamindar in preferring to associate his other wife in the ceremony of adoption.

The question which arises is what is the precise relation between the co-wives of a Hindu who adopts a son and that adopted son? Are they all to be regarded as mothers of the son or does one of them only, and, if so, which of them stand in that relation?

It was conceded by Mr. Bhashyam Ayyangar, and there can be no doubt that the act of adoption inasmuch as it concerns the husband alone may be performed independently of his wife. Her consent is unnecessary. Nevertheless she, if she is the only wife, undoubtedly comes to be regarded as mother of the adopted son, and her parents come to be regarded as his maternal grandparents. (Dattaka Mimamsa, sec. VI, v. 50.) To those parents of the adoptive mother he presents oblations. Generally his position in the family is assimilated to that of a natural-born son. In the case supposed, that of an adoptive father with one wife, the law itself designates the adoptive mother and no difficulty arises. Where, however, there are several wives it is said that the husband is at liberty to designate the one who shall take the place of mother, and that by this means the anomaly of assigning several mothers to the adopted son may be avoided. Otherwise, the adopted son having several mothers would have as many sets of maternal grandparents from whom he might inherit and to whom he must offer oblations. The two chief authorities on the law of adoption throw no distinct light on the question. The expression 'adoptive mother' used in the verses cited from the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa is not used in reference to the case of several mothers; and evidently no distinction is intended to be drawn between the wife who has taken part in [284] receiving the child and any other wife. It would appear, however, that these texts have been treated as supporting the proposition that where there are more wives than one, she who has received the boy should be regarded as his mother. In a case cited by Sir F. MacNaghten in his Considerations (page 171), published in 1824, the point is treated as beyond dispute. Authority had been given by the husband to his three wives to adopt a son, and if they could not agree he directed that a boy should be chosen by his first and second widows, or if they could not agree by his second and third widows. The widows not having agreed, the mother to whom the matter was referred selected one Taracomar, who had been nominated by the second widow. The question then arose which of the three had a right to receive him. "The law is clear and was undisputed," says the author, "the boy could not be received by the three widows jointly. He must be received by one of them, and would then be considered as the son of Luckinarrain and the widow by whom he had been received; about this there was not, because there could not be any dispute."

In 1864 the question was raised in Bengal in a case where, as in the present case, a claim was made by one of two widows whose husband had adopted a boy who had subsequently died. It was found as a fact that the deceased Kallee Kant had adopted the boy not as the son of the plaintiffs, but as son of his second wife Mon Mohinee. It was held that the latter was as adoptive mother, the heir of the adopted son, [Kasheershuree Debia v. Greesh Chunder Lahoree (W. R. (1864), 71)].

In another Bengal case decided in the following year, it seems to have been assumed by the High Court that the co-wife would stand in the relation of step-mother to one adopted as the son of another wife. The point, it is true, did not arise for decision, and the remark upon it is only an obiter dictum [Teencowree Chatterjee v. Dinonath Banerjee (3 W. R., 49, 50)].

The opinion thus expressed in Bengal, while it does not appear to have been questioned in subsequent cases, has been adopted by commentators, (Vyavastha Chandrika, page 161, v. 348, West and Buhler, 1131)

[285] The rule cited by West and Buhler, "The adopted son succeeds to all his step-mothers," is not at variance with the notion that one wife only is regarded as his mother. They cite, however, a passage from Colebrooke's Digest, which favours the opposite contention. In that passage (page 394) it is said that "if a son be adopted by a man married to two wives, he would have two maternal grandfathers and would claim as maternal ancestry both their lines of forefathers." The writer goes on to speak of this as a seeming difficulty and to suggest a mode of dealing with it. Having regard to the way in which the point is raised and the absence of authority cited, I do not think that this pronouncement of Jagannatha can be allowed to weigh against the authorities already cited. Another and more distinct authority, on which the Advocate-General relies, is to be found in the preliminary remarks forming an introduction to W. MacNaghten's Principles of Hindu Law. Dealing with the case of a husband leaving three widows, to one of whom he has given authority to adopt, he says the three widows of the same man are held to be in a legal point of view one and the same individual. The widow to whom the permission was given may indeed have the privilege of selecting the boy to be adopted, but the adoption being once made, he necessarily holds the same relation to all the three widows of his adopting father. He goes on, however, to say that the case would be different, if the husband declared his intention that the other wives should have no concern with the adoption, see page XII. This latter observation supports the view advocated by Mr. Bhashyam Ayyangar. The proposition that the three widows, alike the one who has been commissioned to adopt and the other two, stand in the same relation to the adopted son is in direct contradiction of the statement made by Sir F. MacNaghten. The author does not refer to this statement, nor indeed in the body of his work does he discuss the question.

It is contended that the opinion of the Bengal lawyers in favour of allowing a husband to constitute one of his wives the mother of his adopted son, is in some way connected with the notion entertained by Sir F. MacNaghten and others that plural adoptions were permissible. I fail to see, however, how the weight of his opinion expressed with reference to a case where one adoption was in question is lessened by this circumstance. And seeing that the Judicial Committee pronounced against plurality of [286] adoptions as early as 1846, the contention clearly does not touch the case decided by the High Court of Bengal in 1864. Moreover, the liberty of the husband to make a second adoption was not founded on any right or interest supposed to be possessed by the wife, but on the absence of authority to the contrary and on the principle that many sons are to be desired. See Rungama v. Atchama (4 M. I. A., 1, 67-95).

In my opinion there is no inconsistency between the recognized principles of the law with regard to adoption, and the position that one of several wives may be selected as the adoptive mother. The maintenance of this position does not militate against, but is rather in consonance with, the principle that the adoption is made solely for the benefit of the husband. It is a mistake to assume that the husband in thus selecting one of two wives necessarily intends to give her any material benefit. Ordinarily it might be expected that the adopted son would survive both the wives, and the fact that, in the other event, the favoured wife would succeed on the son's death would not be taken into account. What may be supposed to be contemplated is that the son will succeed on the death of that wife. It cannot be denied that a Hindu having two wives may confer on one of them an authority to take a child in adoption after his death, nor can it be doubted that the selected widow would alone and to the exclusion of her co-widows have discretion in the matter (2, Strange's Hindu Law, page 91). What would be the relation between the co-widow and the son adopted by the other widow under the authority so given does not appear to have been decided except in the case cited by Sir F. MacNaghten. Indeed, the question is not distinguishable from that raised in the present case. But it certainly would seem reasonable to hold that the widow, who being duly authorised, has taken a boy in adoption, and without whose act the adoption could never have taken place, is the mother of the boy rather than the others who had no concern in the matter. At any rate the case of a husband giving one of his two wives authority to adopt is an instance in which he, for his own purposes, is at liberty to give preference to one of them and thus enable her to defeat the expectations of the other.

The proposition that both wives or both widows together constitute the mother of the adopted son, notwithstanding any declaration of the husband to the contrary, gives an importance to the wives in the matter of adoption for which there is no justification. The institution of adoption requires that the son adopted should be deemed the son of the person who has taken him. It is only consistent with this theory that the wife of the adoptive father, if there happen to be one, should also be deemed the mother of the boy. But, in the case of several wives, the theory does not require that they all should be deemed to be his mother.

To hold this rather than to hold that this relation is that of step-son to the co-wives other than the one who has been associated in the act of adoption is to introduce a quite unnecessary fiction.

We are invited to consider the case in which a husband has made an adoption independently of both his wives and to answer the question which would then arise. The case is not one which is likely to happen, and it seems to me sufficient to say that, because a certain mode of designating the adoptive mother fails, it does not follow that no other exists.

In the present case it is sufficient to hold that where the husband has associated one wife with him in adopting a child, that wife is to be deemed mother of the child. This conclusion appears to me to be justified as well by principle as by authority.

It follows that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.The 2nd, 4th and 5th October and 14th December, 1894.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE MUTTUSAMI AYYAR AND MR. JUSTICE SHEPHARD.

Sivasubramania Naicker and others.....(Plaintiffs)

Nos. 1 and 3 to 12) Appellants

versus

Krishnammal and others.....(Defendants Nos. 2 to 9) Respondents.*

Hindu law—Impartible raj—Custom of inalienability, evidence of—Dayadi pattam.

The holder of the impartible palayam of Ammayanayakanur transferred his estate to his wife by a deed of gift. The transferor had besides a son numerous dayadis, and some of the latter now sued for a declaration that the gift was not [288] binding on them. The law of succession admittedly applicable to this palayam was the rule of dayadi pattam, according to which the person entitled to succeed on the death of a palayagar is the senior in age of his dayadis descended from one of three brothers, who originally formed a joint family together and were the founders of three lines in the family. The person entitled under this rule to inherit on the death of the transferor was one of the plaintiffs in the suit. It was contended that the palayagar had no proprietary right in the estate, but held the office of manager merely; but this contention was overruled.

It was further contended that the estate admittedly impartible was by custom inalienable also :

Held, on the oral and other evidence adduced in the case, and with reference to admissions made by the transferor and to his conduct, and on its appearing that eight out of the nine predecessors of the transferor had left either sons or widows, but nevertheless that for three centuries there had been no sale or gift, that the custom of inalienability was established, and that the gift in question was accordingly invalid as against the plaintiffs. Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (1. L. R., 10 All., 272) discussed and explained.

APPEAL against the decree of P. Narayanasami Ayyar, Subordinate Judge of Madura (West), in Original Suit No. 30 of 1892.

Plaintiffs were the dayadis of the palayagar of Ammayanayakanur, the first defendant, who, on the 30th November 1891, had transferred his palayam to his wife by way of gift. The prayer of the plaint was for a decree that that alienation was void. The other defendants were the wife and an infant son of the palayagar and other members of his family. The first defendant died during the pendency of the proceedings. The Subordinate Judge held that the alienation in question was not invalid and passed a decree dismissing the suit.

The plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Subramanya Ayyar, Bhashyam Ayyangar and Gopalasami Ayyangar for Appellants.

The Advocate-General (Hon. Mr. Spring Branson) and Parthusaradhi Ayyangar for Respondent No. 1.

Sundara Ayyar for Respondents Nos. 3 to 8.

Muttusami Ayyar, J.—The contest in this appeal is as to alienability of the palayam of Ammayanayakanur in the district of Madura. The first defendant,

* Appeal No. 29 of 1894.

Bommachi Nayak, now deceased, was the last palayagar; the second defendant is his widow, and the third defendant is their minor son aged three years. On the 30th November 1891, the first defendant transferred to his wife, the second defendant, by an instrument of gift marked as Exhibit VIII, the estate of Ammayanayakanur with all its appurtenances. [289] The question which we have to determine is whether the palayagar was competent so to alienate the palayapat.

Admittedly Ammayanayakanur is an ancient impartible estate, and it appears from Exhibit D that Visvanada Nayak, the founder of the Nayak dynasty of Madura, granted it. Since the grant, it has been in the enjoyment of appellants' family for a period of about 386 years. In Nelson's Manual of the District of Madura it is mentioned as "one of the 24 palayams of the Dindigal group. Though it is assessed with a peishoush, no sannad seems to have been granted: hence it is spoken of as one of the unsettled palayams."

It is also an undisputed fact that a peculiar custom called 'dayadi pattam' regulates the succession to this palayam. On the demise of the palayagar for the time being, the estate devolves not on his heir according to the Mitakshara law, which, in the absence of a special custom, governs this part of Southern India not on the eldest son according to the rule of primogeniture, which obtains in the other palayams in the district owned by persons of the Kamblar caste, but on the dayadi or cousin of the deceased palayagar who is senior in age and who is descended from one of the three brothers who originally formed a joint Hindu family. These three brothers were named, (1) Petala Nayak, (2) Chakala Nayak, and (3) Chinna Nayak, and of the three branches springing from them, the second is now extinct. Thus, the class of kindred in which the heir has to be found is that of the descendants of the two branches and the person to be selected as palayagar from that class is the one who is the oldest or senior in years.

There are a few special facts relating to this estate, which it is desirable to remember in connection with this appeal:

(i) The first is a statement made by the palayagar of 1822, that in his family the estate originally descended from father to son, but that owing to the curse of some person, that mode of succession was found not to prosper and that the present peculiar custom was established to regulate devolution of property. Exhibit D contains that statement, but it gives no information as to when this change was made. Whether this family tradition is true, or whether the custom is the mere expression of the notion that in a coparcenary family the senior coparcener in age ought, in times of turbulence, to take the impartible estate, cannot now [290] be ascertained. However this may be, the fact remains that the custom of dayadi pattam has furnished the recognized rule of succession in the family from time immemorial.

(ii) Another fact is that the palayagar for the time being is known as the 'periya' or senior Nayak, the next in the line of succession is called the 'siru' or junior Nayak, and the one who is next to the heir-apparent is designated 'talakarta Nayak' or commander of the forces. Exhibit JJ, which is copy of a judgment of the Zillah Court, dated 1819, shows that the Siru Nayak had then some land attached to his rank or status and that he was entitled to hold it so long as he had that status.

(iii) The third fact is that there are now 18 members in the family and that the first plaintiff who is 57 years old is the senior in age. Apart from the palayapat which is considered to be common to all dayadis for purposes of succession, each has separate property which is partible among his sons and descends in accordance with the Mitakshara law as applied to ordinary Hindu property.

(iv) The next special fact is that, since 1800, there have been 10 palayagars including the first defendant and there have been nine cases of succession as shown in the pedigree, Exhibit BB. It appears that in five cases the deceased palayagar left sons and in three left widows, but in all the senior dayadi took the estate to their exclusion. It appears further that when the son who is superseded becomes in his turn a senior coparcener, he succeeds in that capacity. The pedigree, Exhibit BB, shows how each of the 10 palayagars was related to one another and to the first defendant and to which of the two branches he belonged.

The substantial question in this appeal is whether the estate of Ammayanayakanur is alienable as alleged by the second defendant. The Subordinate Judge, who tried the suit, has upheld her contention and rested his decision on the ground that the decision of the Privy Council in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (I. L. R., 10 All., 272) governed this case, no family custom being in his opinion proved in support of inalienability. It was part of the appellants' case that each palayagar succeeded simply to the management of the estate, that he had no proprietary interest therein, and that he was in the position of an office-bearer with the net income of the [291] zamindari attached to that office as emolument during his incumbency. The Subordinate Judge has declined to adopt this theory of the zamindar's status and held that Ammayanayakanur is a proprietary impartible estate devolving in accordance with the special custom of dayadi pattam. In the result, he dismissed the suit with costs; hence this appeal.

The first question argued before us is as to the palayagar having no proprietary interest in the palayapat and as to his succeeding merely to the office of manager for the time being. Appellants' pleader is unable to refer us to any positive evidence in proof of his contention, save Exhibit A, which lends no support to it. That exhibit is a report made in 1822 to the Collector by an amin who was deputed to attach the house of the then palayagar for arrears of kist. It states that the heir-apparent executed a kararnama promising to pay the arrears in certain instalments, that he prayed that orders might be issued for him to 'manage the affairs,' as he was entitled to the 'zamindar's kariyam' after the then palayagar, and that his prayer was in accordance with custom. I fail to see how this document negatives any proprietary interest in the palayapat. It does not contemplate a case of inheritance, but at the best it implies that the then palayagar might be superseded in management according to the custom of the family as such management was found inefficient. The words 'next entitled to the zamindar's affair or kariyam' signify nothing more than next entitled to exercise the functions of the zamindar or to his position. An attempt is next made to compare the position of the palayagar with that of the managing coparcener of a joint Hindu family, but in doing so, the learned pleader for appellants overlooks the fact that the managing coparcener has no separate property in the income of the family estate, whereas the palayagar takes the income of the palayapat as beneficial owner for the time being. Again, the correspondence which took place on the demise of each palayagar from the commencement of this century treats the case as one of inheritance to an ancestral estate by virtue of a peculiar family custom. It is not explained whether according to the theory that the palayagar, for the time being, is a mere office-bearer, the estate vests in any one, and whether if it vests in the coparcenary family constituted by all the dayadis, why it does not vest in the senior coparcener for the time being as the sole representative capable according to the family custom of [292] enjoying it as an impartible estate. If this contention were to prevail, it would equally apply to every zamindari in this presidency belonging to a joint Hindu family in which the zamindar's power of alienation is restricted by the custom of the family. I agree with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that the contention is one which cannot be upheld.

The second question argued in this appeal is as to the law applicable to the case. The Subordinate Judge has held that inalienability cannot be inferred from impartibility and it must be proved by family custom. In support of his opinion he relies on the decision of the Privy Council in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (I. L. R., 10 All., 272). Appellants' pleader contends that the law to be applied to this case is that contained in Naragantri Achammagaru v. Venkatachalapati Nayanivaru (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 250) and that the decision of the Privy Council is not applicable, because the question of inalienability was there considered as between a Hindu father and his son, whereas the controversy in this case is between cousins or coparceners. There is no doubt that this distinction exists, but when regard is had to the principle on which the Judicial Committee decided the Allahabad case and to the opinion of the High Court at Allahabad which their Lordships overruled, I am unable to accede to this contention. The law as administered both at Allahabad and in Madras prior to that decision was that when an impartible estate belongs to a joint Hindu family consisting of father and son, the latter acquired a coparcenary right therein by birth, and that though, in consequence of the estate being impartible and capable of enjoyment but by one member of the family at a time, there was no joint enjoyment, yet the coparcenary right was not extinct but lay dormant, and generated a right of survivorship in the son on the death of the father and that the co-ownership which is of the essence of a coparcenary right existed in the case of impartible estates belonging to a joint Hindu family in the form of a right of survivorship. The grounds on which the Lords of the Judicial Committee rest their decision are that, in order to prevent alienation by the father, there must be co-ownership in the son, that the property in the paternal or ancestral estate acquired by birth under the Mitakshara law is in their opinion so connected with the right to a partition that it does not exist where there is no right to par-[293] titution, and that though an impartible estate may for some purposes be joint family property, the coparcenary in it, which under the Mitakshara law is created by birth, does not exist. Thus the ratio decidendi of the Privy Council decision is that there is no coparcenary right so as to generate co-ownership in the form of a right of survivorship and in the absence of co-ownership there can be no restraint on alienation. It is then said that, though such may be the law as between father and son, it is not so as between brother and brother. This view does not seem to me to be tenable. When the impartible estate is paternal, the coparcenary in contemplation is referable as regards its origin to the date of the son's birth; when the impartible estate belongs to the paternal grandfather, the coparcenary is referable to the date of the father's birth and when the estate belongs to a remoter ancestor, the coparcenary is referable to the date of the birth of a son to that ancestor. Whether the coparcenary is referable to the first generation or to the second or third, it is alike no cause of co-ownership on which the power to restrain alienation depends for its existence. The effect of the Privy Council decision is that inalienability is, like impartibility or a peculiar mode of succession, a special independent incident which lies outside the ordinary Hindu law and can only attach to an impartible estate by family custom and cannot be deduced from a theory of dormant co-ownership. If the contention of the appellants' pleader were to prevail, the following anomaly would be the result. Take, for instance, an impartible estate belonging to a coparcenary family and descending in accordance with the rule of primogeniture and the coparcenary family to consist of a father, his sons and brothers. If a suit were brought against an alienee by the son, we should have to hold that there is no restraint on alienation; but if the same suit were brought by the brother, we should then hold there is no unrestricted power of alienation, though in both cases the impartible estate and the person alienating it are one and the same.

The next question argued in this appeal has reference to the evidence adduced in proof of family custom. Three objections are urged on appellants' behalf against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, viz., (1) due effect has not been given to absence of alienation for several centuries; (2) no due effect is given to several documents which prove a consciousness in the family that by custom its alienation is forbidden except for necessity or for [294] purposes binding on all the dayadis; (3) in determining the weight to oral evidence, due regard is not had to the probabilities of the case and to the admissions of the first defendant. As regards the first ground, there is no doubt that throughout the history of the palayapat, there had been no instance of sale or gift of any portion of the zamindari prior to the gift in dispute. The Subordinate Judge has apparently attached no value to it, as it is only negative evidence. But it is a settled rule of law that though mere absence of alienation is of itself no proof of inalienability, yet such absence when it is coupled with special facts that would render alienation probable is relevant evidence, though its probative value may depend on the special circumstances of each case.

Eight of the nine zamindars who held the estate prior to the first defendant either left sons or widows for whom they would ordinarily desire to make some provision, and the peculiar custom which is shown to prevail in regard to succession must have imparted to that desire more than its ordinary strength as an inducement to alienation. Notwithstanding this, there has been no sale or gift for more than three centuries, and I am of opinion that this fact is relevant evidence and ought to be considered together with such other evidence of inalienability as there is on record.

The second objection taken on appeal is as to the weight attached by the Subordinate Judge to the documentary evidence in this case, and it appears to me to be entitled to weight. In paragraph 14 of his judgment, the Subordinate Judge refers to four important Exhibits, viz., R, T, U and Z, and refuses to give effect to them on the ground that the admissions they contain, viz., that the palayapat was common property for purposes of alienation, were made under an erroneous impression as to the law applicable to alienability and could not, therefore, operate as an estoppel. There is nothing in the documents themselves to show that the admissions were made with reference to the law as laid down in any particular case.

The Subordinate Judge considers that all the decisions of the Indian Courts prior to the recent decision of the Privy Council were erroneous, that all that was said or done in a family concerning an impartible estate was said or done under the influence of those decisions, and that as evidence of consciousness in the family that the estate is inalienable, they have no probative value. The [295] flaw in this reasoning is this, that if evidence of consciousness in the family that an estate is impartible or inalienable is thus to be explained away, there can be no proof of any custom either as regards impartibility or inalienability. But their Lordships of the Privy Council observe that the estate may be shown to be inalienable by custom. All that they say in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (I. L. R., 10 All., 272) is that inalienability is not to be inferred as an incident of coparcenary right on the ground that an impartible estate belongs to a joint family for purposes of succession. They do not say that the practice or custom of the family as evidenced by its acts or declarations is to be assumed to be due to error of law and to be rejected. The Subordinate Judge should have considered each exhibit and tried to see how far it discloses a consciousness in the family that the estate is inalienable by custom. Several documents are relied upon on appellants' behalf as showing that the estate is inalienable and I proceed to consider them. The first document to which our attention is drawn is Exhibit JJ, which is a copy of the judgment of the Zillah Court of Madura, dated 1817. It shows that some land was attached to the status of the Siru Nayak who enjoyed it only so long as he retained that status. Hence it is argued that the land being attached to the status of Siru Nayak, it could not be alienated and its inalienability renders it probable that the palayapat is likewise inalienable. It is not unfrequently the case that a principal estate is alienable whilst subsidiary estates carved out of it for special purposes such as maintenance are inalienable. I am therefore not prepared to accede to the appellants' contention. The second document on which appellant relies is Exhibit P, which is copy of an explanation furnished in 1868 by the then zamindar Kamala Nayak with reference to a complaint addressed to the Government against his management of the zamindari by the heir-apparent. Kamala Nayak is the seventh zamindar named in the pedigree, Exhibit BB, and he succeeded to the estate in 1827 and died in 1871 after administering it for a period of forty-four years. It is clear from Exhibit N that his management began hardly with any debts at all, and ended with a debt amounting to a lakh and-a-half of rupees though his rent roll gradually rose from Rs. 15,000 to Rs. 50,000. It appears that Kamala Nayak's [296] growing indebtedness alarmed the heir-apparent Muthuchinnama Nayak, who complained to the Government of maladministration on the part of the zamindar and prayed for the appointment of a commission, and that the zamindar entered into an elaborate explanation in vindication of his management. As argued by appellants' pleader, this document discloses a belief in the zamindar of 1868 and his heir-apparent that the former was not at liberty to contract unnecessary debts so as to imperil the succession.

The next document is Exhibit IV, which is a copy of the judgment of the District Court in Original Suit No. 4 of 1876. It shows that, in March 1870, Kamala Nayak agreed to grant a lease of the zamindari in view to clear his debts to two persons named Venkatasami Nayak and Adimulam Pillai and that the dayadis attested that agreement in token of their consent. This suggests the inference that there was no necessity for their consent if the zamindar could alone alienate his estate at his pleasure. It appears further that in adjudicating on the validity of the agreement, the Judge considered the circumstances under which Kamala Nayak contracted the debts which it was desired to liquidate by the lease and came to the conclusion that they were not binding on the palayapat. This again indicates a belief in 1870 that the palayagar could only bind his estate by debts contracted for purposes binding on his dayadis.

The fourth document upon which appellants' pleader lays stress is Exhibit R, dated 24th March 1870, and all the adult dayadis were parties to it, save the heir-apparent Muthuchinnama Nayak, whose relations with the palayagar were not cordial and who declined then to recognize Kamala Nayak's debts as family debts. This document evidences a family arrangement made in view to discharge the existing debts and to ensure efficient future administration of the estate. The provisions which it contains distinctly negative the theory that the zamindari is alienable at the pleasure of the zamindar for the time being and treat it as common property for all purposes. It is, however, open to the observation that it is tainted with an attempt to make it appear that Muthuchinnama Nayak, the real heir-apparent, who was reluctant to acknowledge Kamala Nayak's debt as binding on the dayadis and to subscribe to the lease for thirty years, was not the heir-apparent and that the one next to him in the line of dayadis was his senior. Though there is this taint in the document, yet it [297] does not appear to touch its probative value as a family arrangement evidencing inalienability of the estate.

Another document to which we are referred is Exhibit Z, which is a copy of a claim petition, dated 1868. Eight villages forming part of the zamindari were then attached in execution of the decree passed against the zamindar Kamala Nayak in Appeal Suit No. 1 of 1867 and were advertised for sale. By the claim petition the first defendant and the first plaintiff asserted that the zamindari was their joint property and that of the other dayadis though impartible and was not therefore liable to be sold for the personal debts of the palayagar.

The next document relied on is Exhibit T, which is a bond executed in 1883 by the first defendant who was the zamindar, by the first plaintiff and four other dayadis for Rs. 43,000 and odd. The document was executed in order to avert the attachment of the zamindari and the appointment of a receiver in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 4 of 1876. It provides for repayment of the debt by certain instalments and for the creditor proceeding on default against the 16 villages of the zamindari, for the benefit of which the debt is said to have been contracted. This shows that the zamindari was treated as common property for the purpose of the palayagar contracting debts, and that the family arrangement contained in Exhibit R was acted upon.

Three other documents are referred to as containing admissions by the first defendant that the zamindari is inalienable. Exhibit N is copy of a deposition made by the first defendant in Calender Case No. 309 of 1890. Exhibit W is copy of another deposition made in Calender Case No. 178 of 1887, and Exhibit G is copy of another deposition made in Sessions Case No. 107 of 1879. He stated in Exhibit N that the zamin property was common, that it was under the belief that succeeding claimants had equal rights in the estate, that they had to join in executing the bond, Exhibit T, that among the dayadis then living the first plaintiff had the preferential right to the pattam and that the first defendant has been paying money to the first plaintiff as per the family arrangement, Exhibit R, and that the kists had been remitted to the heirs. These admissions by the first defendant warrant the contention that the zamindari was not self-acquired property at the disposal of the zamindar.

[298] Our attention is next drawn to two other documents (Exhibits CC and VIII), and on comparing them and Exhibit DD in the light of the oral evidence, it appears that the provision which the zamindar first intended to make for his wife and children on the 4th June 1890 was to settle upon them his self-acquired properties and to leave the zamindari to devolve on the dayadis according to custom, that in November 1891 he changed his intention and cancelled Exhibit CC on pretext of fraud on the part of the person who drew it up and made a gift of the zamindari in supersession of the prior deed of settlement in favour of his wife at the expense of his heirs, and that this change was probably due to the advice he obtained from vakils and agents as to the effect of the decision of the Privy Council.

The foregoing is the material portion of the documentary evidence on both sides. It is clear that throughout the history of the palayam, there was no instance in which any palayagar alienated any portion of the zamin by sale or gift to the prejudice of the dayadis entitled to succeed to it, that from 1868 there is clear evidence of consciousness in the family that the property is not alienable at the pleasure of the palayagar. The contention that the practice of the family is the result of a mistaken view of the Hindu law which prevailed in India before it was corrected by the Privy Council is one to which I cannot accede. There is no evidence that it was the result of any such mistake and not of family custom founded on the character of the estate as an ancient palayapat. Why should not a similar mistake be set up in regard to impartibility? The argument, if it were to prevail, would unsettle rights of property founded upon the usage of centuries. At all events, there is no presumption that when the evidence discloses a long-standing practice, it is founded upon a mistake and in the absence of clear evidence to that effect, the conclusion ought to be that it is the custom of the family having a legal origin. As I read the decision of the Privy Council, I am unable to conclude that this proved custom of the family is intended to be precluded by their Lordships as evidence of inalienability.

Turning to the oral evidence, 10 witnesses give evidence for the plaintiffs on this point.

The second witness is one Muttusami Jotala Nayak, and he is the zamindar of Jotalanayakanur and the son-in-law of the first defendant. His evidence is that "it is not usual to alienate the [29] zamin by gift or otherwise; there has been no such instances of gift." He states that the same is the case with the Kambla palayapats in the district of Madura and with his own palayapat. The witness is aged 63 years, and there is no reason to think that he is either not acquainted with the usage or that his evidence is not bona fide.

The third witness is Balamukunda Adivalusami Nayak. He owned a village named Sukkampatti which was annexed by the Government and he is now in receipt of a money allowance. He is related to the first defendant and plaintiffs by marriage and he is 42 years old. He deposes that "in the Ammayanayakanur Zamindari, the zamindar cannot alienate the zamin even when the eldest son should succeed to it." He adds, in cross-examination, that no zamindar can alienate, because the zamin is the common property of the family and that the first defendant and his predecessor told him that the Zamindari of Ammayanayakanur was common to the family.

The fourth witness is one Arumugasami Nayak, aged 45 years. He is related to first defendant. His evidence is that it is not the custom in the Kambla Zamindaris in Madura to alienate their zamins and that the zamindar of Ammayanayakanur cannot alienate his zamin.

The fifth witness Tirumala Muthu Veera Tiruvengadasawmi Nayakkar, the Zamindar of Malur, one of the Kambla palayapats, was the first defendant's agent for some time and is related to the first plaintiff. He deposes that the zamindari is inalienable by custom and that the first defendant told him of it.

The seventh witness Thataya Nayak is a Village Munsif in the zamindari. He deposes that no Kambla Zamindar can alienate the zamindari by gift, whilst there are dayadis and that he knows the custom of Ammayanayakanur and of three other palayapats.

The eighth witness is a raiyat attached to the zamindari of Ammayanayakanur, and he knows the practice prevailing in it from the time of Kamala Nayak's predecessor. His evidence is that the zamindari is the common property of the dayadis, that it is custom not to alienate the zamin whilst there are dayadis and that nobody has done so.

The eleventh witness is a raiyat aged 85 years, and he was for some time the vakil or agent of the zamindar Kamala Nayak, and [300] he deposes that no zamindar has alienated the zamin by gift or otherwise and that Kamala Nayak told him that the zamindari was common to all the dayadis.

The twelfth witness is related to the parties, and he also states that Ammayanayakanur is common to all the dayadis and that no zamindar has alienated any portion of it.

The thirteenth witness also states that the zamindari cannot be alienated.

The foregoing is the oral evidence adduced for the plaintiff. There is also oral evidence for the defence—witnesses Nos. 3, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13 and 15. They all depose that the zamindar can alienate the zamindari at his pleasure, that the dayadis have no right to it, that, as he is the istinirar zamindar, he is the sole owner, that he pays no portion of his income to dayadis, that he does not remit kists due on their separate property, that they should also obtain licenses to cut wood in the palayagar's forests, that the palayagar has granted cowles of waste land, and that if there has been no gift or sale hitherto, there has been no occasion for it.

Thus, the oral evidence is conflicting. But on comparing it, I find that there are some palayagars among plaintiffs' witnesses and that the witnesses for the defence depose to several matters which are inconsistent with the documentary evidence which has been set out and with undisputed facts of the case. On the other hand, the oral evidence for the plaintiffs receives an accession of strength from its agreement with the documentary evidence.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that the custom of inalienability is proved, and that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be reversed and the claim decreed with costs.

Shephard, J.—The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit on the ground that it was competent to the late zamindar Bommachi to make, and that he did make, a gift of the zamindari in favour of his wife. At the time when the suit was filed, the plaintiff, a cousin of the late zamindar, was, in virtue of the custom admittedly prevailing in the family, entitled to succeed on his death, and now that Bommachi has died since the decree, he is the person entitled to actual possession if the gift in question is invalid.

The sole contention on the hearing of this appeal before us was that the Judge's ruling as to the powers of disposition possessed by the late zamindar was wrong, for the reason that the decision [301] of the Privy Council in Sarta Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (I. L. R., 10 All., 272) was inapplicable in the circumstances of the case. In that case, as in the present, the donor whose alienation was challenged was the holder of an impartible estate and belonged to a family governed by the Mitakshara law. The alienation was challenged by the son who, by the custom of primogeniture, was entitled to succeed on the donor's death. The decision in that case appears to me to amount to this. The proprietary or coparcenary right ordinarily possessed by the son under the Mitakshara law does not exist except in conjunction with the right to partition; the existence of the proprietary right is the cause of the restriction on the father's powers of alienation; therefore in the absence of a right to partition there is no restriction on the father's powers of alienation. While it is allowed that an impartible estate held by one member of the family may, in a sense, be said to be the common property of the family and that for purposes of succession the estate may so be treated, the proposition that the withdrawal of the right of partition is consistent with the maintenance of a restraint upon alienation is denied. The Judicial Committee, as I read the judgment, disapprove the doctrine stated in the passage from the judgment of the High Court quoted on page 287 [cf. statement in Naraganti Achammagaru v. Venkatachalapati Nayanvaru (I. L. R., 4 Mad., 250, 266)]. In conclusion their Lordships observe that " if the eldest son, where the Mitakshara law prevails and there is the custom of primogeniture, does not become a co-sharer with his father in the estate, the inalienability of the estate depends upon custom which must be proved or, it may be in some cases, upon the nature of the tenure."

The contention of the appellants' vakil with regard to this decision was rested on certain features in the present case, which it is argued take it altogether out of the range of the authority, and secondly was directed to the evidence relied on in proof of the custom of inalienability alleged to prevail in the family to which the parties belong. It was said, and this is a point strongly insisted upon, it would seem, in the Court below, that the zamindar for the time being was nothing more than a manager not possessed of any proprietary interest in the zamindari. I fully agree with the Subordinate Judge in his conclusion on this point. There is [302] really no evidence in support of it except a doubtful phrase used by an amin in a report of some statement said to have been made by the claimant to the succession in 1816 (Exhibit A). Then it is said that the decision of the Judicial Committee must be taken as confined to the case of father and son, and that it does not follow from it that a brother entitled according to custom to succeed in virtue of seniority, is devoid of a right to control alienations made by the zamindar for the time being. It appears to me, however, that, while allowing the importance of the peculiar mode of succession in this case, we cannot put such a narrow construction on the judgment of the Judicial Committee. The reasoning of the judgment indicates no intention to distinguish between the rights of a brother and those of a son. Otherwise the case of Periasami v. Periasami (L.R., 5 I. A., 61) could hardly have been cited as it is in the judgment (see page 285). It would certainly seem to be an anomaly to hold that the owner of an impartible zamindari having one son and a brother might make a free grant of his estate according to his pleasure and so defeat the son's right of succession, but that on his son's death the power of disposition became subject to the control of his brother. No doubt the son is under certain circumstances in a less favourable position than the brother; but this is due to the operation of a peculiar rule of Hindu law under which the father is empowered to alienate property in order to satisfy debts which his son is equally bound to discharge. In the case supposed, that rule clearly would not apply, and the brother's possession of a right to restrain alienations, uncontrollable by the son, would be unaccounted for.

It remains to deal with the question whether a custom of impartibility is proved by the evidence. The evidence clearly shows that for many years the zamindari, which is an ancient one, has descended not to the eldest son of the last holder, but to the eldest member of the family. What is called 'dayadi pattam' has prevailed (see especially Exhibit D). A pedigree was put in evidence, the accuracy of which is not disputed. According to it the defendant Bommachi, who succeeded in 1875, was the eighth zamindar in succession to the fisal zamindar who died in 1814. It is obvious that with this peculiar descent the reigning zamindar is under great temptation to provide for his wife or [303] children by gifts out of the zamindari property. The fisal zamindar himself left no son, only a widow and a daughter, but his successor left sons, as also did the third in succession and the sixth and the eighth. The fourth and fifth left widows. There is no evidence of any alienation by any of these zamindars either in favour of sons, wives or daughters (see the evidence in Exhibit XX of third witness for defendants, page 197). The zamindari remains now as it was originally constituted. Not only is it shown that no alienations (except for temporary purposes) have been made, but there is also proof of circumstances rendering it likely that alienations would, in the absence of a restricting custom, have been made. The appellants' vakil relies on this evidence as satisfying the test laid down by the Judicial Committee. In 1870, and for some years previously, Kamala Nayak, who had held the zamindari since 1827, was in pecuniary difficulties. Loans had been raised, the zamindari had been leased out, and a sale had been threatened. In February 1870, the defendant Bommachi intervened to protest against an impending sale. His petition describes the zamindari as belonging to the dayadis in common (Exhibit Z). On the 24th March 1870, an agreement was entered into between Kamala Nayak, Bommachi, the defendant, and six other members of the family. Ponni Chinna, who in fact succeeded Kamala, was not a party to the agreement. His right to succeed had been denied (see Exhibit P), but was established in the suit brought against him by the defendant Bommachi. The Subordinate Judge remarks that the agreement of 1870 does not recite any custom and was an arrangement "brought about for the first time and for a particular purpose." The expressions about the zamindari in this and subsequent documents are referred by the Judge to the idea commonly prevalent at the time, that the mindar, for the time being, had only a life-interest. The evidence of the witnesses called to prove the custom of alienability he treats in the same way. If, however, the conduct of the members of the family shows that they were under the belief that the zamindar, for the time being, was not competent to alienate the family property, that is clearly evidence in support of the alleged custom. Evidence showing that they guided themselves by a certain rule is evidence of their consciousness that this rule was obligatory. In this view the agreement of 1870 is of the greatest importance. [304] Six days previously Kamala had, with the concurrence of his kinsmen who attested the document, executed a lease in favour of Adimulam Pillai and another. The agreement recites this fact and proceeds to make provision to guard the zamindari against danger in the future. It declares that none of the executants are for the next thirty years, the period of the lease, to pledge the zamindari property, that bonds and other documents executed by any zamindar are to be attested by the adult members entitled to succeed, and it provides that the dayadis shall, according to the original custom and mode of enjoyment of the zamindari, obtain the title of zamindar and exercise all powers one after the other according to seniority of age. The zamindari is described as common property. It is natural that Adimulam should, for his own security, have required the attestation of his lease by Kamala's immediate successors. But the execution of this agreement was not required to protect Adimulam (see evidence of the twentieth witness for the defendant). It is not alleged that there was any fraud practised either upon Kamala or Bommachi in the execution of this agreement. (See Exhibit AA, deposition of Bommachi). The object of it was clearly to protect the zamindari by restricting the powers of the reigning zamindar. The acquiescence of Kamala Nayak and of his probable successors in such an arrangement is inconsistent with belief on their part that the zamindar, for the time being, might dispose of the zamindari as he pleased. Unless it was believed that the zamindar was not possessed of absolute powers of alienation, it is not intelligible why care should have been taken to say that the admitted debts were binding on the zamindari or why Kamala and Bommachi, as his intended successors, should have consented to have their hands tied. The object of this evidence is not impaired by the subsequent proceedings. As already stated, Bommachi Nayak succeeded Kamala on his death in 1871 and died in 1875. In 1876 the lessees brought a suit against Bommachi and the other members of the family. As far as the lease was concerned the lessees failed, but they obtained a decree for a larger sum found to be due to the plaintiffs. The judgment in the suit assumes that the zamindar Kamala was not competent to make a valid alienation of the estate save for debts binding on the estate according to ordinary Hindu law. It was Bommachi's case that Kamala could not lawfully deal with anything but his life-interest [303] in the property. For payment of this sum provision was afterwards made by the execution of an instrument, dated May 1883, in favour of Arunachella, who had taken an assignment of the decree. In this instrument the zamindari is described as "belonging to us" and the transaction is said to be entered into "for the welfare of ourselves and of our zamindari." The instrument is executed by Bommachi and five members of the family. In addition to this evidence of the conduct of the family, there is the evidence of several witnesses including the plaintiffs themselves and other neighbouring zamindars who speak to the custom said to obtain among the Kambla zamindars. This evidence cannot be disregarded. The Judge does not say he disbelieves the witnesses, but he appears to think the task of proving the custom a hopeless one. He seems to have been greatly influenced by a passage in Mavne's Hindu Law, § 315. Against this evidence in support of the alleged custom really no evidence is adduced by the defendant. The defendant Bommachi was not called, although a deposition made by him on previous occasions, which required explanation, was put in. There is no explanation of his conduct with regard to the agreement in 1870, or of his action in 1890 and 1891 in first making a gift in favour of his wife and daughter dealing with the self-acquired property only, then revoking it eight months later, and finally, in November 1891, making a gift of the zamindari in favour of his wife (Exhibit VIII). It would appear from the issues framed and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, that, although the custom of inalienability was set up and insisted upon, more prominence was given to the contention that the zamindar, for the time being, was a mere manager and perhaps to other contentions which have now been abandoned. This circumstance, coupled with the erroneous idea entertained by the Judge as to the possibility of proving the alleged custom, may account for the cursory notice which the judgment gives of the evidence bearing on the question of custom. In my opinion there is a body of evidence pointing to the conclusion that the zamindari has, for a long course of years, been treated as inalienable at the mere will of the reigning zamindar. There is the peculiar mode of succession, and the fact that although occasions were frequent on which alienations might have been expected, no absolute alienation of any part of the estate is proved to have been made before 1890. There are admissions of the defendant Bommachi wholly [305] unexplained. There is his conduct and the conduct of the other members of the family with reference to the agreement of 1870 and to the suit of 1876 brought by Adimulam Pillai. Again, there is his conduct immediately preceding the gift now impugned. Added to all this, there is a mass of evidence given by witnesses who are in a position to know the facts and who, with the exception of those belonging to the family, are not said to be interested or untrustworthy. I think that the custom has been sufficiently proved and that the appeal ought, therefore, to be allowed.

NOTES.

APPELLATE CIVIL—FULL BENCH.

The 11th and 25th March, 1895.

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, MR. JUSTICE PARKER, AND MR. JUSTICE SUBRAMANIA AYYAR.

Eshoor Doss.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Venkatasubba Rau.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Contract Act—Act IX of 1872, s. 30—Wagering contract—Contract for differences.

A on various occasions agreed to sell to B certain amounts of Government of India promissory notes, amounting in all to the nominal value of four and a quarter lakhs, for delivery on the following 30th of November. On the 28th of November, B agreed to sell to A Government of India promissory notes of the nominal value of four and a quarter lakhs for delivery on the 30th of November. A did not perform his contract to sell, and B now sued to recover, by way of damages, the difference between the prices at which A had agreed to buy and sell. It appeared that it had been the intention of both plaintiff and defendant that no delivery should be made under the agreements, but that the differences only should be paid :

Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, for the reason that the agreement sued on was void under Contract Act, section 30,† as being a gambling transaction.

APPEAL under Letters Patent, section 15, against the decree of the High Court in the case of Eshoor Doss v. Venkatasubba Rau already reported (I. L. R. 17 Mad., 480).

[307] Mr. R. F. Grant for Appellant.

Mr. E. Norton for Respondent.

Collins, C. J.—The only question to be decided in this appeal is what was the intention of the parties when they entered into the transaction in question. The appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice DAVIES was originally heard by the late Sir T. MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and Mr. Justice BEST, and there was a difference of opinion between the two learned Judges as to the intention of the parties at the time the contract was entered into. The plaintiff, a sowcar, alleges that he entered into a contract with the defendant to buy from him Government 4 per cent. paper, that it was an honest commercial transaction, and that he expected the defendant to deliver to him the amount he bought, viz., Rs. 4,25,000 on the date named in the contract, and he would have been ready to pay for the same. The defendant, a retired vakil, on the other hand contends that it was a gambling transaction, that neither he nor the plaintiff intended that any paper should be delivered, but that the differences only should be paid. The law on this subject appears to be clear that agreements between buyers and sellers of shares and stocks, to pay or receive the differences between their prices on one day and their prices on another day, are gaming and wagering transactions, and in India are void under section 30 of the Contract Act.

The plaintiff Raja Eswara Doss was called on his own behalf and deposed that he in October and November 1891, through a broker, had bought the Government paper from the defendant to be delivered on the 30th November 1891, that he also sold the defendant on the 28th November Rs. 4,25,000, and that therefore he claimed the difference in the price of the Government paper, the value of the paper being higher on the day he sold than it was in October when he bought.

The plaintiff's second witness was a Mr. Berry, who describes himself a stock-broker; he has had dealings in Government paper with both plaintiff and defendant, but he does not say that he ever delivered any paper to either of them; he says there is a settling day for completing transactions on the principle of a banking clearing house; he admits there are many transactions in Government paper in which no paper changes hands, and native dealers generally meet their contracts by asking the purchasers to take delivery from somebody else, and paying or receiving the [308] difference or by selling back—that is their custom. The plaintiff's third witness was Venkatachella Chetti, a dealer in Government paper and a shopkeeper; he is largely indebted to plaintiff; he had dealings with the defendant in Government paper and tried to obtain his differences; he describes the methods employed in these transactions; he says there is no intention at the time of purchase that Government notes should be actually delivered or money paid, but at the time of settlement a letter is given authorizing the vendor to deliver to the purchaser and the purchaser to take from the vendor; he says he has bundles of such letters; he also says that, when plaintiff went to defendant's place on the 30th November, he did not ask for delivery of the paper, but only for differences. It is worthy of remark that the plaintiff, who deals in many lakhs of Government paper, gives no instance in which he either delivered or received Government paper, except on one single occasion just before he brought this suit.

The defendant's evidence was to the effect that the differences were only to be paid and no paper was to be delivered; the plaintiff's broker said plaintiff was a good man and would pay the differences, and he said the plaintiff had made similar enquiry about defendant.

The defendant's second and third witnesses are brokers, and the third negotiated some of the plaintiff's sales, and it appears from their evidence that gambling in Government paper is very common in Madras; one witness says it has been going on for twelve years; the entry in the contract of a date for delivery is merely nominal and differences only are paid and received.

The evidence satisfies me that both plaintiff and defendant intended that differences only should be paid, and were perfectly aware that they were entering into a gambling transaction.

I would dismiss this appeal and with costs.

Parker, J.—The judgments of the learned Judges proceed on the basis that the intention must be mutual, and the only point on which they differ in opinion, is as to whether, at the time of making the contract, the plaintiff regarded and intended it as a contract for the payment of differences only. That this was the intention of the defendant is not disputed, but it is urged that the plaintiff fully intended and was prepared to accept and deliver the Government paper if necessary.

[309] It is contended that this case is exactly similar to Tod v. Lakhmidas Purshotamdas (I. L. R., 16 Bom., 441). In that case as in this the contracts were in the usual mercantile form and were made through brokers, the principals not being brought into contact with each other at the time the contract was made. In the Bombay case, however, it was found that, though the transactions were highly speculative and usually cancelled one another, it was not proved to be the intention of both the contracting parties, under no circumstances, to call for and give delivery from or to each other.

In the present case it is observable that the same broker acted for both parties, and that, though they were not brought into contact at the time defendant contracted to sell Government paper to plaintiff, each had made enquiry beforehand of the broker, not whether the other would be able to deliver Government paper, but whether he would be able to pay differences. When, on November 28th, it was rumoured that defendant was in difficulties, plaintiff with others, who had bought paper from defendant, went to his office and asked not whether the paper would be forthcoming, but whether differences would be paid. This was before the execution by plaintiff to defendant of a sale note for the amount bought. The evidence as to this conversation shows that it was never even suggested that defendant should perform his contract by the delivery of paper. The sole question discussed was the payment of differences. Defendant offered 8 annas premium, which plaintiff would not accept, and finally it was arranged by Vencatachella for plaintiff that the full amount of differences should be paid, but that six months' time should be given.

Though plaintiff has been engaged in these transactions for a considerable time, there is evidence that he only passed paper on one single occasion. This was in 1892 about two months before the present suit was brought and after defendant had, by Exhibit B on 3rd December 1891, repudiated his legal liability to pay the differences. In 1892 the plaintiff must of course have realized the importance of being able to show that paper did sometimes change hands at settling day in settlement of these transactions.

I agree in the conclusion of the late Mr. Justice MUTTUSAMI AYYAR that plaintiff fully understood the contract was for the payment of differences only. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

[310] Subramania Ayyar, J.—I also agree in the conclusion that the plaintiff fully understood that the contract was for the payment of differences only. I have nothing to add to the reasons for this conclusion so fully stated by the late Mr. Justice MUTTUSAMI AYYAR or to the observations of PARKER, J. in his judgment. The appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 1st, 2nd and 19th April, 1895.

PRESENT:

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE AND
MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Edward Clarke.....(Defendant) Appellant

versus

The Chairman, Ootacamund Municipal Council.....(Plaintiff)
Respondent.*

District Municipalities Act (Madras)—Act IV of 1884, ss. 47, 63—Land tax—Land unappropriated to buildings.

A municipal council under the Madras District Municipalities Act has no power to levy a tax on any land exceeding seven-and-a-half per cent. on the annual value of such land.

The meaning of the term "lands unappropriated to any building" in Madras District Municipalities Act, section 63, clause (2) considered.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of T. Weir, District Judge of Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 33 of 1894, reversing the decree of A. F. Elliot, Acting Subordinate Judge of Nilgiris, Ootacamund, in Original Suit No. 67 of 1893.

The plaintiff, who was the Ootacamund Municipal Council, sued by its chairman to recover Rs. 559-14-0 alleged to be due from the defendant, in respect of three half years ending the 30th September 1893, on account of a tax imposed under the Madras District Municipalities Act, section 63, clause (2). The defendant denied that the land in question was unappropriated to any [311] building, and claimed that he was only liable to assessment in respect of his land under sections 47 and 50.

The Subordinate Judge held that the lands in question were not unappropriated to any building within the meaning of the Act and dismissed the suit.

The District Judge reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and passed a decree as prayed, holding that the lands in question were unappropriated to any building, and that the imposition of the tax was not ultra vires. As to the first point he expressed the opinion that the expression "appropriated to buildings" signified "set apart for the use and enjoyment of the buildings."

The defendant preferred this second appeal.

Mr. G. P. Johnstone for Appellant.

Mr. J. G. Smith for Respondent.

Collins, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decree passed by the District Judge of Coimbatore reversing a decree of the Acting Subordinate Judge (Mr. Elliot) of Ootacamund.

The suit was brought by the chairman of the Municipal Council of Ootacamund against Mr. Edward Clarke, the owner of certain lands within the municipal limits, called Bishopsdown and Belmont, for certain taxes levied under the authority of the Madras Act IV of 1884.

The municipal council on the third of March 1892 resolved that a tax on all lands unappropriated to buildings be imposed according to area under section 63, clause (2) of the above Act, and that it be fixed for 1892-93 at

* Second Appeal No. 1788 of 1894.

Rs. 1-8-0 per acre or 4'76 pies per 80 square yards. The council allege that about 248'83 acres of the defendant's holding comes within the definition of land unappropriated to any building and therefore becomes subject to the tax of Rs. 1-8-0 per acre.

Two questions arise—(1) Has the municipal council power to levy a tax on any land exceeding $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the annual value of such land? (2) Is the defendant's 248'83 acres unappropriated land within the meaning of section 63, clause (2)?

The first question depends upon the construction of Act IV of 1884, sections 47 and 63, clause (2).

Chapter III is headed "taxes and tolls, and mode of realizing them," and section 47 enacts that "the taxes and tolls to be levied, for the purposes of this Act, shall be as follows"—clause (ii)—"A yearly tax on lands and buildings, not exceeding [312] $7\frac{1}{2}$ per centum on the annual value of such lands and buildings." Section 48 authorizes the council to raise funds with the approval of the Governor in Council from any of the sources mentioned in section 47 at a rate or rates not exceeding those specified in section 47.

Section 50 enacts that, when the municipal council shall have determined, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to levy any tax or tolls, it shall be notified in a particular manner and such tax or tolls shall be levied in the manner hereinafter provided. Section 63 is the section declaring how such tax or tolls shall be levied; it enacts that if the municipal council notify, under section 50, that an annual tax shall be levied on buildings and lands, the chairman shall impose such tax at the rate specified in such notification on all buildings and lands, with certain exceptions immaterial to this case.

Clause (2) states that "in the case of any lands unappropriated to any building, or occupied by native huts, the chairman may, subject to the approval of the municipal council, impose such tax at an annual rate, not exceeding annas four for every eighty square yards of such lands, in lieu of the rate specified in the said notification."

It is contended by the plaintiff that clause (2) authorizes the chairman to impose a tax of annas four for every 80 square yards amounting, it is said, to over Rs. 15 per acre on all lands unappropriated to any building, or occupied by native huts, even though the sum levied be far in excess of the sum to be levied under the authority of section 47, clause (ii).

I think this contention cannot be supported. Section 47 limits the yearly tax on lands and buildings to $7\frac{1}{2}$ per centum on the annual value of such lands and buildings. No land, therefore, can be taxed beyond $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the annual value of such land.

In section 63, clause (i), the tax is to be levied on buildings and lands (the words used in section 47 are lands and buildings) and such tax shall be imposed at the rate specified in the notification under section 50.

Sub-section (2) deals with lands unappropriated to any building or occupied by native huts, but the words in section 47 are large enough to include all land in the municipality. It may be that sub-section (2) was drafted for the purpose of enabling the municipality to deal with the waste land in the municipality in the [313] occupation of persons not being owners thereof, and the words "or occupied by native huts" lend some colour to the suggestion; it is to be observed that section 64 enacts that the tax imposed under section 63 shall be payable by the owners of such "buildings and lands," using the words in section 63, clause (1), and omitting the description in clause (2).

It would be unreasonable to hold that it was the intention of the Legislature, after enacting that a tax should be levied on lands and buildings not exceeding $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on their annual value, to allow the chairman of the municipality to tax lands at a rate greatly exceeding the amount provided for in section 47. If the chairman taxes what is termed "lands unappropriated to any building, or occupied by native huts," he is controlled by section 47 and in whatever sum he assesses the amount of the tax, such tax must not exceed the amount specified in section 47.

It was stated at the bar that clause (2) of section 63 remained a dead letter as far as the Ootacamund Municipality was concerned for many years and it would seem that former chairmen exercised a wise discretion in forbearing to put in force a section which undoubtedly is very difficult to construe consistently with the plain intention of the Legislature as evidenced by section 47.

I am of opinion that the action of the municipality in taxing the lands of the defendant in the manner described in the plaint was ultra vires.

This finding is sufficient to dispose of the appeal and renders it unnecessary to consider the second ground; but I must not be taken to agree with the District Judge in his construction of the words "lands unappropriated to any building."

This appeal must be allowed and the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge restored and the respondent must pay the appellant his costs in this and the Lower Appellate Court.

Best, J.—The question for decision in this appeal is whether the District Judge of Coimbatore is right in holding the lands in question to be "unappropriated to any building" and consequently liable to be taxed under clause (2) of section 63 of the District Municipalities Act No IV of 1884 (Madras).

Section 47 of the Act states what "the taxes and tolls to be levied, for the purposes of this Act, shall be" and among them is [clause (ii)] "a yearly tax on lands and buildings not exceeding [314] $7\frac{1}{2}$ per centum on the annual value of such lands and buildings." Section 48 authorizes the municipal council "with the approval of the Governor in Council," to raise funds for the purposes of the Act from all or any one or more of the sources before mentioned, at a rate or rates not exceeding those specified in the last preceding section. Section 50 provides for notification of the rates at which such taxes or tolls are to be levied, and also directs that they "shall be levied in the manner hereinafter provided," i.e., in section 63, clause (1), which is as follows:—"If the municipal council notify, under section 50, that an annual tax shall be levied on buildings and lands in the municipality, the chairman shall impose such tax at the rate specified in such notification, on all buildings and lands, excepting lighthouses, public piers, wharfs, jetties," and certain other buildings and places set apart for charitable or religious purposes with which the present appeal is in no way concerned.

Clause (2) of the same section is as follows:—"In the case of any lands unappropriated to any building, or occupied by native huts, the chairman may, subject to the approval of the municipal council, impose such tax at an annual rate, not exceeding annas four for every eighty square yards of such lands, in lieu of the rate specified in such notification."

No doubt, as observed by the Judge, the tax to be imposed under this last clause is directed to be in lieu of the rate to be specified in the notification issued under section 50, but that circumstance does not warrant the conclusion that it may be in excess of the $7\frac{1}{2}$ per centum on the annual value which is the maximum fixed by clause (ii) of section 47.

Clause (2) of section 63 appears to have been intended for mitigation of the tax on small holdings. It gives power to the chairman, with the approval of the municipal council, to impose on lands "unappropriated to any building, or occupied by native huts," a tax at a rate different from that sanctioned by Government as the ordinary rate to be charged on lands and buildings within the municipal limits. In this connection it is to be remarked that the remaining clause (3) of the same section directs that "the chairman shall exempt from tax under this section any building or land, the annual value whereof is less than rupees six if it be the owner's sole property liable to tax under this Act."

[315] It is unreasonable to suppose that it was intended to confer on the chairman and councillors, without the sanction of Government (such sanction not being provided for in clause (2) of section 63), the power of assessing lands at a higher rate than that sanctioned by the Governor in Council under section 48 which happens in the case of the Ootacamund Municipality, the respondent in the present case, to be the maximum rate chargeable under the Act, namely, 7½ per cent.

If the above view of clause (2) of section 63 is correct, as I think it is, it is not very material for the purposes of taxation under the Act whether the plaint lands are held to be, or not to be, "appropriated" to the houses to which they respectively belong; for, under clause (1) of the same section, both buildings and lands are chargeable with the tax at the rate notified under section 50, which, as already observed, is in this particular municipality the highest possible under the Act. But, in my opinion, the land which forms the compound of a house and is let with the house when the house is let, is appropriated to that house, and the mere fact of the owner obtaining profit therefrom by selling laterite and granite quarried from such land, or the milk of cattle grazed thereon, or firewood obtained from trees grown on the land, does not render the land unappropriated to the buildings; nor will the fact of a portion of the land being planted with tea necessarily make it land unappropriated to the house. In the present case, however, it is admitted that 15 acres of the Belmont property, which is cultivated with tea, are reserved when the house is let; and of the Bishopsdown property, some 5 acres are admittedly leased to tenants separately. These portions may be held to be no longer appropriated to the buildings called, respectively, 'Belmont' and 'Bishopsdown,' but the other lands cannot be so considered merely because, instead of using them as pleasure grounds, the owner utilizes them for the purpose of grazing cattle, etc., with a view to pecuniary profit. If, in consequence of the profit thus derived, the annual value of the lands is enhanced, it is open to the municipality to assess the land at such enhanced value, but that is no reason for taxing it under clause (2) of section 63 at a rate higher than is permissible under the Act.

I would therefore allow this appeal, and, setting aside the decree of the Lower Appellate Court, restore that of the Court of [316] First Instance, and direct the plaintiff to pay defendant's costs throughout.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 14th and 19th February, 1895.

PRESENT:

MR. JUSTICE BEST AND MR. JUSTICE SUBRAMANIA AYYAR.

Pullamma.....(Defendant No. 6) Appellant *versus*Pradosham and others.....(Plaintiff's heirs and Defendants Nos. 7, 8 and 9) Respondents.Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, ss. 280 to 283—Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sch. II, art. 11.—Mortgage.*

Land having been granted to several persons jointly, disputes arose among them with reference to its allotment. The disputes having been settled by arbitration, one of the grantees sold his share to the plaintiff. Before the arbitration, another of the grantees mortgaged 7 acres of the land to A, who did not become a party to the arbitration. A subsequently obtained a decree on his mortgage and proceeded to execute it by attachment. The plaintiff intervened in execution, but in 1884 the Court passed an order stating that the plaintiff's land was not attached, and in fact his possession then remained undisturbed. A subsequently executed his decree and purchased the land brought to sale by the Court. The plaintiff's possession was disturbed under colour of this purchase, and he now sued in 1889 to recover the land sold to him :

Held, (1) that the order of the 1st of March 1884 was not an order within the meaning of Civil Procedure Code, section 283, and accordingly that the suit was not barred by the one year's rule of limitation ;

(2) that the plaintiff's vendor had, after the arbitration, a good title against both A and his mortgagor, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of G. T. Mackenzie, District Judge of Kistna, in Appeal Suit No. 546 of 1891, affirming the decree of O. V. Nanjundayya, District Munsif of Masulipatam, in Original Suit No. 685 of 1889.

Suit to recover certain land. Certain persons, including the plaintiff's vendor and defendant No. 5, had certain lands allotted to them and disputes arose among them with regard to the allotment. During the continuance of these disputes defendant [317] No. 5 mortgaged 7 acres and 76 cents to defendant No. 7. After the disputes had been compromised and a settlement made by arbitration between the allottees, one of them sold to the plaintiff his share including the land in question in this suit. Subsequently defendant No. 7 obtained a decree on his mortgage and proceeded to execute it by attachment. The plaintiff intervened claiming that the property attached belonged to him, and the Court, thereupon, made an order, dated 1st March 1884, filed in the suit as Exhibit I, stating that the land of the plaintiff was not attached ; and the possession of the plaintiff was not disturbed. Subsequently, however, defendant No. 7 brought certain lands to sale in execution of his decree; became himself the purchaser, and sold the lands purchased by him to defendants Nos. 8 and 9. These persons together with defendant No. 6 alleged to be their tenant ousted the plaintiff inducing his tenants to take part against him.

The District Munsif passed a decree for the plaintiff and his decree was affirmed by the District Judge.

* Second Appeal No. 799 of 1898.

Defendant No. 6 preferred this second appeal.

Narayana Rau for Appellant.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondents Nos. 4 and 5.

Judgment.—Burra Surya Narayana, the fifth defendant, one Thamma Narasimman and certain others jointly applied to the revenue authorities and obtained from them some waste lands which belonged to the Government. They proceeded to make a division of the property. But disputes having arisen among them they submitted their differences to the arbitration of Mr. Koralla Subrayudu, a Deputy Collector. According to the settlement made by this officer, the lands in question, 776 acres, were allotted (with other lands) to the share of the said Thamma Narasimman, who sold the share thus obtained by him to the plaintiff. The plaintiff, however, failed to get possession. He brought a suit in 1882 against the fifth defendant and others, got a decree in his favour, obtained possession of the lands and leased them to first and second defendants.

The fifth defendant, under whom the other defendants claim, as will presently appear, had, however, mortgaged to the seventh defendant the lands in question before the submission to arbitration referred to above, and the seventh defendant was not a party either to the settlement by the Deputy Collector or to the suit of 1882 just alluded to.

[318] In 1883 the seventh defendant sued the fifth defendant upon his mortgage, got a decree and caused the lands in dispute to be sold for his decree debt and himself purchased them at that sale, and subsequently sold them to eighth and ninth defendants. The sixth defendant, claiming through the eighth and ninth defendants, ousted the plaintiff from the lands in collusion with first and second defendants. Hence this suit.

It should be observed that no attempt is made by the defendants to impeach the partition made under the Deputy Collector's award on the ground of any fraud or collusion to the prejudice of the mortgagee, the seventh defendant, or any other party.

The lower Appellate Court gave plaintiff a decree holding in substance, that the seventh defendant had no right to proceed against the property in question, since it was allotted on partition to the plaintiff's vendor Thamma Narasimman. The sixth defendant appeals, and it has been argued before us on his behalf that the decision of the Courts below is wrong. But we are unable to accept this contention.

At the time the fifth defendant mortgaged the 776 acres in question he had no specific or exclusive right to them. He then possessed but an undivided interest in the whole of the lands granted to him and others jointly, including those in dispute and the mortgage made by him was clearly subject to the conditions and liabilities which at the date of the transaction affected his undivided interest in the property mortgaged.

It is quite clear that each and every one of the persons, who held such undivided interest, was entitled to claim a division and obtain his share of the common property free from any incumbrances created by any of the other co-owners, provided, of course, no fraud was committed in obtaining the share. The general principles applicable to the question under consideration are thus stated in Domat's Civil Law, section 1671, cited by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose in his work on mortgages. "If in an estate belonging in common, without any division or partition, to two or more persons, such as co-partners, co-heirs or others, one of them has mortgaged to his creditor either all his estate or the right which he had to that estate, this creditor will have his mortgage upon the undivided portion of his debtor as long as the estate shall remain in common. But after the partition, the right of this debtor being limited to the portion that has fallen to his lot, the mortgage of his creditor [319] will be also limited to the same. For, although before the partition, the whole estate was subject to the mortgage for the undivided portion of the debtor, and though a right which is acquired cannot be diminished, yet seeing the debtor had not a simple and immutable right of enjoying his share of the estate always undivided, but that his right implied the condition of a liberty to all the proprietors to come to a partition in order to assign to every one a portion that might be wholly and entirely his own, the mortgage which was only an accessory to the debtor's right, implied likewise the same condition and affected only that which should fall to the debtor's share, the portions of the others remaining free to them. But, if in the partition there was any fraud committed, the creditor might procure a redress of what has been done to his prejudice."

This is the view adopted by the Privy Council in Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodzen Chowdry (L. R., 1 I. A., 106), and followed by MACPHERSON and BEVERLEY, JJ., in Hem Chander Ghose v. Thako Muni Deb (I. L. R., 20 Cal., 533), a case very similar to the present. The lower Courts were therefore right in holding that the plaintiff's vendor, by the partition made under the settlement of the Deputy Collector, obtained a good and valid title to the lands in question not only against the fifth defendant but also against the seventh defendant, his mortgagee.

Another point raised by the appellant is that the plaintiff is precluded from maintaining this suit by reason of the order (Exhibit I) of the District Munsif, dated the 1st March 1884, passed on a claim petition filed by the plaintiff on an attachment made in execution of the decree obtained by seventh defendant against fifth defendant in Original Suit No. 1027 of 1883. This contention also is unsustainable. The findings of the lower Appellate Court in the present litigation is no doubt that the disputed lands were in fact attached and sold in execution of that decree. The order relied on by appellant merely says "there is nothing to show that the petitioner's lands have been attached." It does not appear to have been an order passed after investigation as required by section 278 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Consequently, it is not an order within the meaning of section 283 to which the limitation of one year is applicable. Cf. Chandra Bhusan Gangopadhya v. Ram Kanth Banerji (I. L. R., 12 Cal., 108).

[320] It was next argued that the plaintiff's vendor Thamma Narasimman stood by and allowed the fifth defendant to deal with the lands in question as his own exclusive property and that plaintiff is consequently estopped from questioning the mortgage to the seventh defendant or the proceedings taken to enforce it. This point is taken for the first time in the argument in second appeal and without any materials whatsoever on the record to support it. Under these circumstances we cannot permit such a contention to be taken at this stage.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Easement by custom.—Water rights—Landlord and Tenant.

The plaintiffs were lessees from a zamindar of his entire zamindari and were in occupation of lands depending for irrigation on a tank into which a natural stream emptied itself. The defendants were tenants in the zamindari, holding (under a lease prior to that of the plaintiffs) land supplied with water by an irrigation channel from the stream. The defendants erected a dam across the stream when it was low, and this had the effect of diverting all the water into the irrigation channel supplying their land. In a suit for an injunction that the dam be removed, the lower Appellate Court upheld a plea by the defendants that the dam had been erected in exercise of an established customary right of easement :

Held, that the customary easement asserted by the defendants was not unreasonable, and was enforceable by them against the lessees of the zamindar.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of P. Narayanasami Ayyar, Subordinate Judge of Madura, West, in Appeal Suit No. 337 of 1891, reversing the decree of S. Dorasami Ayyangar, District Munsif of Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 15 of 1890.

Suit by the plaintiffs for the removal of a dam placed by the defendants across the Palar river. This river rises in the Karan-[321] damalai hills, and, after flowing through certain Government villages, enters the Sivaganga zamindari, and ultimately empties itself into the tank of the village of Tirupatore, an ayan village in the zamindari. The defendants were in possession under a lease from the zamindar of the village of Surakudi, which did not abut on the river, but was irrigated by a channel from it, and claimed to be entitled by right of customary easement to erect the dam complained of. The plaintiffs were the lessees of the entire zamindari under a lease subsequent in date to that last mentioned, and they complained that the defendants' dam interfered with their supply of water.

The District Munsif passed a decree as prayed. On appeal the Subordinate Judge reversed this decree and dismissed the suit. With reference to the objection that as tenants of the zamindar, the defendants were not entitled to set up a right of easement as against either him or his representatives. The Subordinate Judge in paragraph 11 of his judgment, which is referred to by the High Court, made the following observations :—

"The next question is, whether this is also a customary easement. This is one of those customary rights of easement which the villagers of Surakudi have acquired under section 18 of the Easements Act. The District Munsif is wrong in considering that this is unreasonable user. It is reasonable with reference to the evidence in the case. He has quoted Mathura Naikin v. Esu Naikin (I. L. R., 4 Bom., 545). That case refers to adoptions by dancing girls. It was dissented from in Venku v. Mahalinga (I. L. R., 11 Mad., 393). Neither case is applicable, in my opinion, to this suit. This easement refers not only to the parties but also to the raiyats of the village. The right to the enjoyment does not vest exclusively between the zamindar and the lessees. The District Munsif is not correct in saying so. There are the raiyats of the village who are permanent occupancy tenants, and who are entitled to the soil subject to payment of tirwa. Their right to the tank channel and the flow of water is co-extensive with that of the zamindar, and there is no unity of interest in him, Madras Railway Co. v. Zamindar of Carvatenagarum (L. R., 1 I. A., 364, 385). In Kristna Ayyan v. Venkatachella Mudali (7 M. H. C. R., 60) the interest of the tenant in insisting [322] upon the condition of the supply of irrigation, as it had existed before, was confirmed."

* Second Appeal No. 1471 of 1892.

The plaintiffs preferred this second appeal.

Mr. K. Brown and Tiruvenkatachariar for Appellants.

Subramania Ayyar for Respondents.

Judgment.—Appellants are the lessees of the zamindari of Sivaganga in the district of Madura and respondents are the prior lessees of a village in that zamindari called Surakudi. There is a river called Palar, which rises in the Karandamalai hills in the district and runs, first, through a number of Government villages and feeds the tanks situated therein. It then enters the zamindari and, after feeding a number of tanks through supply-channels, empties itself into the tank of the Tirupatore village.

Appellants represent the villages which depend for their irrigation on the Tirupatore tank, and respondents represent the Surakudi village. In November 1888, respondents put up a sand dam across the river, 94 yards in length, 1 yard in width, and $\frac{1}{2}$ yard in height at the spot E in the plan, and thereby diverted all the water flowing down the river Palar into their supply-channel C, diminishing thereby the quantity which would otherwise be available for the Tirupatore tank.

Hence this litigation. The appellants' case is that respondents have no right to put up a sand dam across the river, that they are entitled to take into their channel C only so much water as naturally flows into it from the river, and that there is a masonry calingula at the head of the channel C to regulate the supply from the river.

Appellants prayed in their plaint that respondents might be directed to remove the sand dam at their own cost, and further to pay to plaintiffs Rs. 1,143, with interest thereon, as compensation for the loss sustained by them in fasli 1298 and subsequent mesne profits.

For respondents it is contended (i) that they have a right to put up the sand dam in question, and that such right is their natural right; they urge further (ii) that it is customary for owners of channels supplied by the river Palar and other rivers in the district to put up dams whenever the rivers run low and to divert the water into their channels; (iii) that, otherwise, no water will flow into those channels; (iv) that they used to put up such dams across the river Palar for more than twenty years and [323] divert the water into their channel; (v) that the dimensions of the dam are not correctly stated in the plaint, and (vi) that appellants have sustained no damage as alleged.

Six issues were tried in this case, the first three as to the right to put up the dam at E in the plan and to divert the river water into channel C, the fourth relating to the dimensions of the dam, and the fifth and sixth referring to the damages alleged to have been sustained by appellants.

The District Munsif considered that, as lower riparian owners, appellants had the natural right to the flow of the stream from the Palar into the Tirupatore tank without diminution, and that respondents had no right by custom or prescription to throw up a dam at E and divert the water into channel C when the river was low. He found that the damages sustained by appellants amounted to Rs. 150 and accordingly decreed payment of that amount by respondents. He also directed respondents to remove the dam.

Respondents appealed from this decision. On appeal the Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that by custom and user as of right for more than twenty years, respondents had acquired a right to put up a dam of the kind mentioned in the plaint, and, reversing the decree of the District Munsif, dismissed appellants' suit with costs.

From this decree appellants (plaintiffs) have preferred this second appeal

The first objection taken to the decree of the lower Appellate Court is that the Subordinate Judge has virtually re-settled the issues and has omitted to come to a finding on the first issue. That issue raises the question whether the river Palar empties itself into the Tirupatore tank and whether plaintiffs have a right to the uninterrupted flow of the water of the said river into their tank. Referring to the undisputed fact that the river falls into the Tirupatore tank and flows over lands in Tirupatore, and to the rule of law as to the natural right of a lower riparian owner, the District Munsif determined the issue in the affirmative. In noting the points for determination on appeal in paragraph 5 of his judgment, the Subordinate Judge did not allude to the natural right of riparian owners. He evidently presumed that the river is a natural stream, and that the decision must depend mainly on the customary and prescriptive right set up by respondents. There [324] is sufficient ground for the presumption. The plaint does not describe the river as being an artificial watercourse. A natural stream is one which has a natural source and flows in a natural channel; such is the case of the Palar. It has its source in a hill and flows down in a defined natural channel till it falls into the Tirupatore tank. There is no suggestion in the plaint that any person had anything to do either with the creation of the supply of water at its source or with its flow in a defined channel. On the other hand, there is an admission in the plaint that respondents are entitled to so much of the river water as may naturally flow into their supply-channel C. In Miner v. Gilmour (12 Moore P. C., 131), Lord KINGSDOWN has explained the law on this point in these terms:—"By the general law applicable to running streams every riparian proprietor has a right to what may be called the ordinary use of the water flowing past his land; for instance, to the reasonable use of the water for his domestic purposes and for his cattle, and this without regard to the effect which such use may have in case of a deficiency upon proprietors lower down the stream. But, further, he has a right to the use of it for any purpose or what may be deemed the extraordinary use of it, provided that he does not thereby interfere with rights of other proprietors either above or below him. Subject to this condition, he may dam up the stream for the purpose of a mill, or divert the water for the purpose of irrigation; but he has no right to interrupt the regular flow of the stream, if he thereby interferes with the lawful use of the water by other proprietors and inflicts upon them a sensible injury." As to what is a reasonable, though extraordinary, use, Lord CAIRNS propounded the law on the subject in Swindon Waterworks Company v. Wilts and Berks Canal Navigation Company (L. R., 7 H. L., 697). "Undoubtedly the lower riparian owner is entitled to the accustomed flow of the water for the ordinary purposes for which he can use the water; that is quite consistent with the right of the upper owner to use the water for all ordinary purposes, namely, as has been said ad lavandum et ad potandum, whatever portion of the water may thereby be exhausted and may cease to come down by reason of that use. But, further, there are uses no doubt to which the water may be put by the upper owner, namely, uses connected with the tenement [325] of the upper owner. Under certain circumstances, and provided no material injury is done, the water may be used and may be diverted for a time by the upper owner for the purpose of irrigation. . . . Whether such a use is a reasonable use would depend, at all events, in some degree, on the magnitude of the stream from which the deduction was made for this purpose over and above the ordinary use of the water."

We see no reason to think that the Subordinate Judge intended not to adopt the finding of the District Munsif on the first issue. The substantial question, therefore, is that raised by the second and third issues, viz., whether the customary right and the easement set up by respondents are established.

As regards the second issue, the Subordinate Judge explains it as raising for determination two subsidiary questions, viz., (i) whether there has been a usage of throwing a temporary sand dam across the river Palar, so as to divert the river water into the channel C as alleged by respondents, and (ii) whether there has been a similar usage with reference to other channels above and below the channel irrigating Surakudi.

We see no reason to think that as argued on appellants' behalf, the framing of the issue is substantially defective. It sufficiently directs the attention of the parties to the question of usage as the foundation of a right of easement controlling the natural right of a lower riparian owner.

We are of opinion that due regard was had to the distinction between custom as the source of an easement, and an easement as a distinct right in itself. An easement is a right existing in a particular individual in respect of his land, whilst custom is a usage attached to a locality. Though a customary right belongs to no individual in particular, yet it is capable of being enjoyed by all those who for the time being own land in the locality to which the right attaches. The distinction is explained in Mounsey v. Ismay (3 H. & C., 486), and the rule of law is that if a custom is shown to exist under which individuals of a class may obtain independent rights in respect of their land which would be easements if acquired by grant or prescription, those rights are nevertheless easements, though acquired by reason of the custom.

[326] On the question of custom or usage, the District Munsif found that it was not proved; but the Subordinate Judge, after discussing the evidence, both oral and documentary, relied on by both sides, comes to the conclusion that it is well established. His finding is that the usage is proved to have existed in respondents' village from before 1838, and that a similar usage has been proved to prevail in regard to thirty channels having dams across the Palar river, permanent or temporary, for irrigating lands in some thirty villages. This is a finding of fact which we must accept in second appeal. Several objections are urged against the finding on appellants' behalf, and we proceed to consider them.

The first objection is that the lands in Surakudi do not abut on the river Palar, and are not, therefore, riparian lands. The Subordinate Judge does not rest his decision on natural rights, which respondents, as riparian owners, possess, but on the right of easement founded on custom and user for more than twenty years.

The second objection is that the custom found by the Subordinate Judge is unreasonable, since the right claimed is a right to obstruct the whole stream. It is not unusual in this country for each of those who own lands adjacent to streams depending upon them for irrigation to take water by turns either for a certain number of days or hours. The Subordinate Judge observes that the evidence shows that even when the dam is put up, water oozes through it and flows down the stream beyond the dam to the height of half a yard, and that the user is reasonable with reference to the evidence in this case. Even assuming that such user is not an incident of the natural right of a riparian owner, it cannot be treated as unreasonable as an incident of the right of easement based on custom and long user. It is quite possible that the villages depending for irrigation on the river Palar came under cultivation in times past subject to the custom.

The remark of the Subordinate Judge that there are two calingulas across the river so as to obstruct the whole stream when it is low is not without significance.

The third objection taken for the appellants is that the custom is indefinite, and that Subordinate Judge has recorded no finding as to the dimensions of the dam. But he observes that appellants denied respondents' right to put up a dam at all, and did not take any objection to the dimensions of the dam mentioned in the plaint, and considers that no finding is necessary. [327] It appears, however, that the fourth issue was recorded and the question was thereby distinctly raised. The Subordinate Judge must be requested to submit a finding on the fourth issue.

Another objection is that as tenants of the zamindar, respondents are not entitled to set up a right of easement by custom. The Subordinate Judge has dealt with this objection in paragraph 11 of his judgment, and we consider that he has properly disallowed it.

There is nothing in the Easements Act to invalidate customary easements, and we are of opinion that the decision of the Subordinate Judge is right except as regards the fourth issue.

Before finally disposing of this second appeal, we shall call upon him to submit a finding on the fourth issue upon the evidence on record within six weeks from the date of receipt of this order, and seven days will be allowed for filing objections after the finding is posted in this Court.

[In compliance with the above order the Subordinate Judge submitted a finding, which was not accepted. On his submitting a revised finding, the High Court passed a decree dismissing the suit with costs throughout.]

PRESENT :

SIR ARTHUR J. H. COLLINS, KT., CHIEF JUSTICE, AND
MR. JUSTICE BEST.

Sivaraman Chetti.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Iburam Saheb.....(Defendant) Respondent.*

Foreign judgment—Decree “in absentem” —Submission to jurisdiction.

The plaintiff brought a suit in the French Court at Karikal against the defendant, a British subject, resident in British India. The defendant employed a Vakil to defend the suit, but on the case coming on for hearing the Vakil stated he had no instructions, and an ex parte decree was passed. An application by the defendant [328] to have the decree set aside was held to be time-barred. The plaintiff now brought a suit on the judgment of the French Court to recover the amount decreed to him :

Held, that the suit was not maintainable for the reason that the decree had been passed against the defendant in absentem by a foreign Court, to which he had not submitted himself.

Semle : even if the foreign judgment had not been entirely invalid as against the defendant, the British Court would have had jurisdiction to disallow an item of claim allowed by the foreign Court on account of prospective damages which was unsupported by evidence.

SECOND APPEAL against the decree of V. Srinivasacharlu, Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suit No. 485 of 1893, modifying the decree of A. Kuppusami Ayyangar, District Munsif of Negapatam, in Original Suit No. 77 of 1893.

The plaintiff sued to recover the sum of Rs. 1,262-15-9 upon the judgments of the French Court at Karikal affirmed by the Court of Appeal at Pondicherry.

The Subordinate Judge stated the facts giving rise to this suit as follows :—

“ On the 12th August 1887, the plaintiff and another living and trading in Karikal, a French port, chartered a native brig belonging to the defendant living at Nagore, a British Indian port, for carrying certain goods from Karikal to Moulmein. The vessel was, however, attached by the French Court at Karaikal at the instance of a third party after plaintiff shipped his goods, and it could not, therefore, leave Karikal for Moulmein. The plaintiff then chartered another vessel at Karikal to which his goods from the other vessel were removed. After all this was done, he sued the defendant, a British subject, in the Karikal Court for recovery of (i) loss sustained by him by reason of some of his goods being missing from the first vessel at the time of re-loading, and some damaged and broken while they were transhipped, (ii) the charge of transhipping goods from one vessel to the other, and (iii) loss sustained by him by the defendant not carrying his goods to the port of destination within the time appointed by the charter-party. He complained to the French Court that the defendant broke his contract and that he sustained the damages he sought to recover by that breach and obtained a decree ex parte for all the sums sued for by him. The defendant appealing to the appeal tribunal in

* Second Appeal No. 1780 of 1894.

Pondicherry, that Court refused to interfere and confirmed the judgment of the lower Court. He sued now in the District Munsif's Court of Nega-
[329] patam, upon these foreign judgments to recover from defendant Rs. 1,262-15-9, being the aggregate of sums awarded by the French Court and all costs incurred in the two Courts of Karikal and Pondicherry."

The further facts of the case are stated sufficiently for the purpose of this report in the judgment of the High Court.

The District Munsif passed a decree as prayed. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held (i) that the Court of Karikal had jurisdiction over the suit, (ii) that the defendant was entitled to plead that the judgment pronounced by the foreign Court was wrong on the merits, (iii) that the foreign Court had passed a decree for Rs. 700 more than the defendant was liable to pay, and he modified the decree of the District Munsif accordingly.

The plaintiff preferred this second appeal, and the defendant took objection to the decree under Civil Procedure Code, section 561.

Venkataramayya Chetti for Appellant.

Pattabhirama Ayyar for Respondent.

Judgment—Appellant sued the respondent in the District Munsif's Court at Negapatam for the recovery of Rs. 1,031-13-10 as due to him from respondent under a decree obtained by appellant in the French Court at Karikal. The District Munsif gave appellant a decree for the whole amount, but on the defendant's appeal the Subordinate Judge modified the decree by disallowing the present appellant's claim to a sum of Rs. 700, which had been awarded as damages.

Hence the present appeal with regard to this sum of Rs. 700, while respondent has objected under section 561 to the rest of the decree on the ground that the decree of Karikal Court was a nullity in consequence of its being passed against one who was a British subject over whom the French Court had no jurisdiction.

First, as to the appeal, there can be no doubt that the Subordinate Judge was right in disallowing the Rs. 700 claimed as damages, which were altogether prospective at the time when the suit was instituted in the Karikal Court and as to which no evidence was adduced as to their having been actually incurred. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs in any case.

The objection filed by respondent questions the validity of the entire decree as passed without jurisdiction against a foreigner, non-resident in French territory.

[330] As observed in the recent judgment of the Privy Council in Gurdial Singh v. Rajah of Faridkote (L. R., 21 I. A., 171; s.c., I. L. R., 22 Cal., 222) "Territorial jurisdiction attaches (with special exceptions) upon all persons either permanently or temporarily resident within the territory, while they are within it; but it does not follow them after they have withdrawn from it, and when they are living in another independent country. It exists always as to land within the territory and it may be exercised over moveables within the territory; and, in questions of status or succession governed by domicile, it may exist as to persons domiciled, or who, when living, were domiciled within the territory. . . . No territorial legislation can give jurisdiction which any foreign Court ought to recognize against foreigners, who owe no allegiance or obedience to the power which so legislates." Consequently, "in a personal action. . . . a decree pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court, to the jurisdiction of which the defendant has not in any way submitted himself, is by international law an absolute nullity."

The question for consideration in the present case is, therefore, did the defendant submit himself to the jurisdiction of the French Courts? It appears that he employed a vakil to defend the suit in the Court of First Instance, but on the case coming on for hearing the vakil stated he had no instructions, and consequently a decree was passed as prayed for by plaintiff, apparently without any evidence being taken. Subsequently, defendant applied to the French Courts to have the ex parte decree set aside and a decree to be given on the merits. This application appears to have been acceded to, but on the case coming on for hearing, the order so passed in defendant's favour was set aside on the ground that the application was barred as not having been made within eight days "of the notice of the decision."

The result is that the defendant had no hearing in the French Courts and the mere fact of his having employed a vakil is not sufficient to justify our holding that the decree was not passed in absentem.

Had defendant been allowed a hearing and the case then decided against him, we should have held—following Kandoth Mammi v. Abdu Kalandan (8 M.H. C.R., 14) and Fazul Shau Khan v. Gafar [331] Khan (I. L. R., 15 Mad., 82)—that having taken the chance of a judgment in his favour, he could not now, when an action is brought against him on the judgment, take exception to the jurisdiction; but on the facts of the present case we find that the defendant is not precluded from pleading want of jurisdiction in the French Court which passed the decree.

Allowing this objection of the respondent, we direct, in supersession of the decree of both the Courts below, that plaintiff's suit be dismissed and that he do pay defendant's (respondent's) costs throughout including the costs both of the appeal to this Court and of the objections filed under section 561 of the Code.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

The 28th March and 18th April, 1895.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BEST AND MR. JUSTICE SUBRAMANIA AYYAR.

Thayar Ammal and others.....(Plaintiffs) Appellants

Lakshmi Ammal and another.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Mortgage—Interest 'post diem'—Limitation Act—Act XV of 1877, sched. II, art. 116.

The plaintiff sued in 1893 to recover principal together with interest due up to date on a mortgage which provided for the repayment of principal and interest in December 1892, but contained no covenant for the payment of interest post diem :

Held, that the claim for interest post diem was barred by limitation.

* Appeal No. 81 of 1894.

APPEAL against the decree of S. Russell, District Judge of Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1893.

Suit to recover principal and interest due on a mortgage, dated the 16th February 1880. The instrument sued on contained a covenant for the payment of principal and interest "within December 1882," but there was no covenant for the payment of interest post diem.

The District Judge passed a decree for the principal together with interest up to the 31st December 1882. As to the claim for further interest he treated it as a claim for damages for the breach of contract, and held that it was barred by limitation on [332] the ground that it was not litigated until more than six years after the date fixed for the repayment of the debt.

The plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Bhashyam Ayyangar and Desikachariar for Appellants.

Sundara Ayyar for Respondent No. 2.

Best, J.—The sole question for decision in this appeal is whether plaintiffs (appellants) are entitled to interest post diem. The Judge has given them a decree for the principal amount with interest at the rate stipulated in the bond to 31st December 1882, the date mentioned in the bond as that on which the principal amount was to be paid and the property redeemed.

The Judge is right in holding that Exhibit A contains no provision for interest post diem and that Exhibit B cannot be said to contain any admission of liability to pay such interest.

It has been held by the Allahabad High Court in Mansab Ali v. Gulab Chand (I. L. R., 10 All., 85) and Bhagwant Singh v. Daryao Singh (I. L. R., 11 All., 416), also by the Calcutta High Court in Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19), and two other cases therein referred to—one of which is reported as a note at page 23,—and also by this Court in Badi Bibi Sahibal v. Sami Pillai (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 257), that post diem interest is awarded in such cases only by way of damages, and can only be awarded if the suit is brought within the period allowed by the Limitation Act for a suit for damages, i.e., in a case like the present (where the document is registered) within six years from the date on which the principal amount became payable.

Our attention has been called by appellants' Vakil to Act XXXII of 1839 and the decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 274), and of this Court in Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 248).

The provisions of Act XXXII of 1839 were considered in Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19) at page 25 with reference to the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchund (7 M. I. A., 263, 279), and in Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 274), the Judges expressly distinguish that case from the case of Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19) and the case reported in the note, by saying "the only [333] question in those cases was the question of limitation—a question which is entirely different from that which is now before us" which was merely whether post diem interest can be made a charge on the property. Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 248) purports to follow Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 274) without noticing, however, that the question of limitation did not arise in that case. Moreover, this Court's decision in Badi Bibi Sahibai v. Sami Pillai (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 257) does not appear to have been brought to notice.

Act XXXII of 1839 extends to India the provisions of 3 and 4 Will. IV, cap. 42, section 28, and on referring to that statute it is clear that what is awarded in such cases is damages. As observed in Juggomohun Ghose v. Manickchund (7 M. I. A., 263, 281)—“The Act supposes a party to have been sued for breach of a contract for the payment, by virtue of a written instrument, of a sum certain at a certain time;” and as held by the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts the breach takes place when the defendant fails to pay the money due in accordance with the terms of the contract and it is from that date that the time begins to run. There can be no recurring cause of action.

I would therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Subramania Ayyar, J.—The substantial question in this case is, when the mortgage instrument does not provide for the payment of post diem interest, whether the plaintiffs' claim for it is barred under article 116 of the Limitation Act; the plaint having been presented more than six years after the date when the principal amount due under the mortgage became payable. Now if the claim for interest here is one for mere “compensation for breach of a contract” to pay money, the claim is undoubtedly barred under that article which is applicable to suits for compensation for breach of a contract in writing registered. But, if on the other hand, the interest in question is “money charged on land” the claim is not barred as the article applicable to such a case is 132* and not article 116.

In determining the question whether post diem interest, in a case like this, is or is not mere “compensation” for breach of a contract to pay money on the due date, the two senses in which the word “interest” is now commonly used in law, according as it [334] is or is not payable under a contract express or implied, should be borne in mind. When it is payable under a contract it is said to be recoverable as a part of the debt itself, but when it is not so payable it is recoverable only as damages for the detention of the debt. (See Mayne on Damages, 5th Edition, page 160.) In other words, when interest is agreed to be paid, it is treated as the value promised for the use of money, but when, in the absence of such promise, a Court awards interest, it is given as “compensation for withholding money.” (Compare Sedgwick on Damages, 8th Edition, Vol. I, page 418.) In the present case there being no promise to pay post diem interest, there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs' claim for it can be sustained only on the ground that it is compensation for the detention of a debt due under a contract in writing registered and consequently article 116 must apply.

On behalf of the plaintiffs (appellants) it was however argued that the said article does not apply and great stress was laid on the provisions of

*[Art. 132 :—

Description of Suit.	Period of limitation.	Time from which period begins to run.
To enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property. Explanation.—The allowance and fees respectively called malikana and haqq shall, for the purpose of this clause, be deemed to be money charged upon immoveable property.	Twelve years...	When the money sued for becomes due.]

Act XXXII of 1839 and sections 86* and 88 of Act IV of 1882, as if they were inconsistent with the position that interest awardable by a Court under Act XXXII of 1839 is compensation for the detention of a debt and nothing more. That it is hardly possible to come to any other conclusion than that at which I have arrived will be perfectly plain if the state of the Common Law of England as to interest in cases similar to the present, before the passing of the statute 3 and 4 Will. IV, cap. 42, sections 28 and 29 (which are substantially the same as the provisions of Act XXXII of 1839) and the changes introduced by those sections are carefully considered. What the old law was will be seen from three decisions pronounced not long before the passing of the said statute.

"In Higgins v. Sargent (2 B. & C., 348, 351), decided in 1823, HOLROYD, J., said, "It is clearly established by the later authorities, that unless interest be payable by the consent of the parties express or implied from the usage of trade (as in the case of bills of exchange) or other circumstances, it is not due by Common Law."

Again, in Shaw v. Pictou (4 B. & C., 715, 723) decided two years later, ABBOTT, C.J., observed, "The general rule is that interest is not due by law for money lent, unless from the usage of trade or other dealings between the parties, a contract for interest is to be implied."

[335] And especially Page v. Newman (9 B. & C., 378, 380) decided in 1829, but four years before the statute was passed, is very instructive on this point. There the claim was for money lent, but which was not repaid on the day appointed for the purpose* by the written instrument between the parties. At the trial Lord TENTERDEN, C.J., was of opinion, there being no agreement to pay interest, that the plaintiff was not in law entitled to recover any interest. On the motion for new trial, it was argued for the plaintiff that interest was recoverable on the authority of Arnott v. Redfern (3 Bing., 353, 359) where BEST, C.J., was reported to have said:—"However a debt is contracted if it has been wrongfully withheld by a defendant, after the plaintiff has endeavoured to obtain payment of it, the jury may give interest in the shape of damages for the unjust detention of the money." Lord TENTERDEN refused to accede to the contention and said, "It is a rule sanctioned by the practice of more than half a century, that money lent does not carry interest." As to Arnott v. Redfern (3 Bing., 353, 359) cited before him, the Chief Justice observed, "If we were to adopt as a general rule that which some of the expressions attributed to the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in Arnott v. Redfern (3 Bing., 353, 359) would seem to warrant, viz., that interest is due wherever the debt has been wrongfully withheld after the plaintiff has endeavoured to obtain payment of it, it might frequently be made a question at nisi prius whether proper means had been used to obtain payment of the debt and such as the party ought to have

*[Sec. 86:—In a suit for foreclosure, if the plaintiff succeeds, the Court shall make a decree, ordering that an account be taken of what will be due to the plaintiff for principal and interest on the mortgage, and for his costs of the suit, if any, awarded to him, on the day next hereinafter referred to or declaring the amount so due at the date of such decree, and ordering that, upon the defendant paying to the plaintiff or into Court the amount so due, on a day within six months from the date of declaring in Court the amount so due, to be fixed by the Court, the plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant, or to such person as he appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property, and shall transfer the property to the defendant free from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, or, where the plaintiff claims by derived title, by those under whom he claims; and shall, if necessary, put the defendant into possession of the property; but that, if the payment is not made on or before the day to be fixed by the Court, the defendant shall be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property.]

used. That would be productive of great inconvenience. I think we ought not to depart from the long established rule, that interest is not due on money secured by a written instrument unless it appears on the face of the instrument that interest was intended to be paid or unless it be implied from the usage of trade as in the case of mercantile instruments."

It was to remedy the disadvantages that creditors were thus subject to under the common law, that the provisions of the statute 3 and 4 Will. IV, cap. 42, sections 28 and 29, were enacted empowering juries to allow interest in the cases specified therein.

It will thus be seen that in cases like the present, Courts had, under the common law, no power to give damages for wrongful [336] detention of money, but by the statute they were enabled, through the instrumentality of juries, to give interest which, as already stated, is only another name for "compensation for money withheld." It is therefore difficult to see how it can be rightly contended that interest awarded under the corresponding Indian Act XXXII of 1839 is not such compensation so as to make article 116 inapplicable to the case.

It was next urged for the plaintiffs, so far as I have been able to follow the argument on this point, that under sections 86 and 88 of Act IV of 1882 when interest is awarded by a Court under Act XXXII of 1839, on account of money due under a written instrument creating a mortgage of immoveable property, such interest becomes, ipso facto, a charge on the property. Granting for argument's sake that this is so, it stands to reason that that can happen only when a claim for interest under Act XXXII of 1839 is not barred by the law of limitation, which is not the case here if the view taken by me above is correct.

Such is the conclusion at which I have arrived independently of the decided cases, English and Indian. As to the former it was argued on behalf of the respondents, that a mortgagor in England is not obliged to pay post diem interest up to date of redemption unless as plaintiff he wants to redeem, and consequently, English decisions, in which such an equity has been imposed on mortgagors, are inapplicable to this case where the mortgagor is not seeking to redeem as plaintiff but is only a defendant. But though there are dicta to be found here and there in the English reports in support of the contention that the obligations of a mortgagor in the matter under consideration vary with his position as plaintiff or defendant in a suit upon the mortgage instrument, yet the better opinion is against the validity of such contention. In Sober v. Kemp (6 Hare, 155, 160), Wigram, V. C. said, "It has always appeared to me that the terms on which a mortgagor or those claiming under him are entitled to redeem must be the same whether they are to be ascertained in a suit for redemption or for foreclosure. It is truly said that a plaintiff seeking equity must do equity; but in determining what is equity, the question is what are the duties and liabilities which his situation at the time of instituting the suit imposes, and not whether he is [337] "plaintiff or defendant on the record." (See also Coote on Mortgages, 5th Edition, page 981). The ground, therefore, on which the respondent tries to distinguish the present case from the English decisions on the point, does not seem to me to be sustainable.

Nevertheless, I think that those authorities form no useful guides for determining the present question, owing to important differences which exist between the provisions of article 116 of the Indian Act and the rules of limitation governing similar cases in England.

The difference is most marked as to mortgages of personalty, for under the English law no specific period of limitation is prescribed for the recovery of interest due on moneys secured by such mortgages, Mellersh v. Brown (L. R., 45 Ch. D., 225). No doubt it is otherwise as to interest on any sum of money charged upon or payable out of any land or any damages in respect of such interest, as these cases are provided for by 3 and 4 Will. IV, cap. 27, section 42, according to which none is recoverable, but within six years next after the same shall have become due. But obviously there is no real analogy between the provisions of this section and those of article 116, notwithstanding the coincidence that six years is the limit under both the enactments. And even if there were any analogy between them, I have not been able to find any decisions on section 42 of the Statute which are opposed to the conclusion arrived at by us. On the contrary, it is with reference to this very section that Sir EDWARD SUGDEN held, it applied to every remedy for the recovery of money falling within its provisions, observing, "when the Act of Parliament says no action shall be maintained after a given number of years for the recovery of such sum or such interest, how can a man after that period bring any action in respect of the debt?" Henry v. Smith (2 D. & W., 381, 390). And the language of KAY, J., in Mellersh v. Brown (L. R., 45 Ch. D., 225), referred to above, implies that if 3 and 4 Will. IV, cap. 27, section 42, had applied to that case, the mortgagee could not have recovered more than six years' interest. As to Indian cases, the decision of MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and BEST, JJ., in Badi Bibi Sahibal v. Sami Pillai (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 257), and the cases therein referred to fully support my view.

We have, however, been referred on behalf of the appellant to Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 248) and *Krishna Reddi v. Varad- [338] rajulu Reddi in which it appears post diem interest was awarded under Act XXXII of 1839, notwithstanding that the plaints therein were presented after the lapse of six years from the dates fixed for the payment of the principal amounts. But in neither of these decisions is the question of limitation noticed at all. On the contrary, in the judgment in Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 248), the learned Judges expressly follow Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 274), which in its turn quotes with approval Gudri Koer v. Bhubaneswari Coomar Singh (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 19), where MACPHERSON and AMIR ALI, JJ., held that a claim like the present is barred unless instituted within six years from the date of the breach of contract. In these circumstances, the decisions in the second appeal and the original side appeal, relied upon by the appellant, can hardly be said to be in conflict with that of MUTTUSAMI AYYAR and BEST, JJ., referred to above.

I concur therefore in holding that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

NOTES.

[See the notes to 18 Mad., 248; 257 supra; also (1897) 24 Cal., 699; (1898) 22 Bom., 107.]

* Original side appeal No. 19 of 1894. Before COLLINS, C. J., and PARKER, J.

JUDGMENT.—Although no contract for post diem interest can be inferred from Exhibit A, we think interest from 30th December 1884 can be given under the Interest Act XXXII of 1839 under the principle laid down in Bikramjit Tewari v. Durga Dyal Tewari (I. L. R., 21 Cal., 274), which case has been followed by this Court in Rama Reddi v. Appaji Reddi (I. L. R., 18 Mad., 248). We will therefore allow Rs. 696 as interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the due date of plaint and make it a charge upon the mortgaged property.

The decree of the learned Judge will therefore be modified by adding this sum to the principal sum adjudged and decreeing Rs. 2,598 instead of Rs. 1,902 with costs and further interest at 6 per cent. per annum. The appellants are entitled to proportionate costs on this appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL,

The 28th February and 29th April, 1895.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BEST AND MR. JUSTICE SUBRAMANIA AYYAR.

Venkatesa Tawker and others.....(Plaintiffs) Appellants

Ramasami Chettiar and another.....(Defendants) Respondents.*

Civil Procedure Code—Act XIV of 1882, s. 54—Rejection of plaint already registered—Specific Relief Act—Act I of 1877, s. 56—Injunction to restrain proceedings—Multiplicity of proceedings.

Certain traders having failed in business, and being indebted to the defendant [339] under a decree of the District Court of Trichinopoly, entered into a composition with their creditors, and a deed was executed to which the defendant became a party in respect of his judgment-debt. The defendant subsequently applied for execution of this decree. The trustees, to whom the debtor's assets were made over under the deed, together with the debtors now brought a suit in the same Court for an injunction restraining the defendant from executing or proceeding to execute his decree. The plaint was rejected by the District Judge after it had been registered and numbered and a written statement had been filed :

Held, (1) that the Court had jurisdiction to reject the plaint under Civil Procedure Code, section 54 ;

(2) that the injunction sought for was not necessary to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings within the meaning of Specific Relief Act, section 56†, clause (a).

Semble : the suit for the injunction prayed for was not maintainable with reference to Specific Relief Act, section 56, clause (b).

APPEAL against the decree of J. P. Fiddian, District Judge of Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 18 of 1892.

The plaint set out that defendant No. 1 had obtained a decree in Original Suit No. 10 of 1888 on the file of the District Court of Trichinopoly for Rs. 4,739 against plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 ; that plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 had been declared insolvent in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Madras, but the vesting order made thereon had been cancelled on the execution of a creditor's composition-deed ; that plaintiffs Nos. 3, 4 and 5 and defendant No. 2 were appointed trustees by that deed ; that defendant No. 1 concurred in the composition-deed, the terms of which included the judgment-debt above referred to ; that defendant No. 1 in fraud thereof applied on the 25th September 1889 for the execution of his decree against the moveable properties of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. The plaint proceeded as follows :—“ The plaintiffs are, they submit, entitled to an injunction restraining the first defendant from executing the said decree instead of allowing him to proceed with such execution and Injunction when refused. †[Sec. 56 :—(a) & (b). An injunction cannot be granted

(a) to stay a judicial proceeding pending at the institution of the suit in which the injunction is sought, unless such restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings ;

(b) to stay proceeding in a Court not subordinate to that from which the injunction is sought ;

trusting to the chance of their recovering damages from him, and are so entitled on the ground (among other reasons) that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief, and for the purpose of preventing a multiplicity of judicial proceedings and because of the uncertainty and improbability of their being able to recover back the value of such property, if sold." And the prayer of the plaint was, "for a perpetual injunction against the first defendant restraining him from executing or proceeding with the execution of the said decree in Original Suit No. 10 of 1888 on the file of this Court."

[340] The District Judge rejected the plaint on the grounds that the suit was not maintainable under Specific Relief Act, section 56, clauses (a) and (b), after it had been numbered and registered and a written statement had been filed.

The plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Mr. R. F. Grant for Plaintiffs.

Krishnasami Ayyar and Sundara Ayyar for Respondents.

Judgment :—This suit was instituted in the District Court at Trichinopoly for an injunction restraining first defendant from executing a decree obtained by him against first and second plaintiffs, on the ground that the debt in question is included in a composition-deed executed by the general body of first and second plaintiff's creditors (including first defendant) appointing the other plaintiffs and second defendant trustees for the realization of the debtors' assets and payment of their debts, including the judgment-debt in question, in consideration of which all the debtors' assets were made over to the joint trustees.

The suit was dismissed by the District Judge under section 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure as being opposed to section 56, clauses (a) and (b) of the Specific Relief Act, No. I of 1877.

Hence this appeal by the plaintiffs, on whose behalf it is contended (i) that the Judge was wrong in dismissing the suit under section 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure after it had been registered and written statement filed, and (ii) that the suit is not opposed to section 56 of the Specific Relief Act.

In support of the first of these contentions we are referred to Valiya Kesava Vadhyar v. Suppannair (I.L.R., 2 Mad., 308), where it is stated : "section 54 applies only to the initial stages of a suit before a plaint has been registered" and, again, "the proceedings had passed the initial stage and section 54 of the Civil Procedure Code was no longer applicable." The suit then in question was, however, held to have been rightly dismissed under section 10 of the Court Fees Act. The remarks with reference to section 54 may therefore be treated as mere obiter dicta. Moreover, it does not appear that the decision to the contrary in Chetti Gaundan v. Sundaram Pillai (2 M. H. C. R., 51) was brought to the notice of the learned Judges who heard the case of Valiya Kesava Vadhyar v. Suppannair (I.L.R., 2 Mad., 308). Both the above cases were considered in the more recent case of [341] Kishore Singh v. Sabdal Singh (I. L. R., 12 All., 553), wherein it was decided that section 54 of the Code of Civil Procedure "is capable of being, and is intended to be, applied at any stage of the suit." With this opinion and the reasoning on which it rests we concur. The first objection is therefore disallowed.

As to the second contention, it is urged on behalf of appellants that section 56 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply, as the injunction asked for is "against the defendant personally" and in support of this contention we are referred to Dhuronidhur Sen v. The Agra Bank (I. L. R., 5 Cal., 86). That case is, no doubt, authority for distinguishing between a suit to set aside an order and a suit to restrain defendants from enforcing the order. But it is clearly no authority for the proposition that the injunction referred to in section 56 of the Specific Relief Act is an injunction to the Court and not to the party. In fact the Specific Relief Act is not even referred to in that judgment, nor, as far as can be seen, was it referred to in the arguments. The decision of this Court in Appu v. Raman (I. L. R., 14 Mad., 425) seems to favour the distinction relied upon by the plaintiff; but even in that case the decision proceeded on the ground that the effect of the injunction granted was "to prevent the appellants from applying for execution of the decree" and it is added "no application for execution has yet been made and so long as the injunction is in force none can be made and therefore no pending proceeding of a Court is restrained by the injunction." This is quite consistent with clause (a) of section 56 of the Specific Relief Act, which provides against the grant of an injunction to stay a judicial proceeding "pending at the institution of the suit in which the injunction is sought," unless such restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings.

With reference to the remarks in Appu v. Raman (I. L. R., 14 Mad. 425), it is, however, as well to notice here that the injunctions issued by the Courts of Chancery in England for controlling proceedings in other suits are not orders issued to such other Courts but to the party, such party being amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court granting the injunction, and capable of being acted on by the process of contempt of Court and they are in fact orders in personam.

The question then is, is the injunction sought for in the present suit "necessary to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings?" It is [342] difficult to see how it is necessary for such purposes more than in any ordinary case in which execution of the decree is resisted.

It is also impossible to say that the Judge is wrong in holding this suit to be in contravention of clause (b) of section 56, as the proceedings sought to be stayed are proceedings in his own Court and not in a Subordinate Court. Such being the case, it is unnecessary to consider the question whether this suit is barred by section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appeal fails therefore and is dismissed with costs.

PRESENT :

MR. JUSTICE BEST AND MR. JUSTICE SUBRAMANIA AYYAR.

Subbaramayyar.....(Plaintiff) Appellant

Limitation—Adverse possession—Mortgage by previous owner out of possession for twelve years.

In a suit on a mortgage, dated 19th June 1888, and executed by the superintendent of a mosque, the endowments of which were comprised in the mortgage, together with defendant No. 1, therein described as his disciple, it was admitted that the first mortgagor had occupied the position of superintendent up to 1871 and that in that year he had executed an instrument authorizing defendant No. 2 to take possession of the properties on behalf of defendant No. 3 whom, as was recited, the executant had taken in adoption and appointed to be his successor. In 1874 the first mortgagor purported to cancel the instrument above referred to, but it appeared that he never actually resumed the management, and that defendant No. 2 resisted various attempts then and subsequently made to interfere with his possession, and held the properties together with defendant No. 3 up to the date of the suit :

Held, that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were in adverse possession of the mortgage premises from 1871, and that the mortgage [was] consequently invalid whatever the purpose of the debt intended to be secured thereby.

APPEAL against the decree of T. Ramasami Ayyangar, Subordinate Judge of Negapatam, in Original Suit No. 48 of 1892.

[343] Suit to recover principal and interest due upon a mortgage, dated the 19th June 1888, and executed in favour of the plaintiff by Nidashah therein described as Audinastar of Thas Brak Thaikal, and defendant No. 1 therein described as his disciple. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were, respectively, the brother and nephew of Nidashah, and it appeared that, on the 11th of January 1871, Nidashah executed an instrument authorizing defendant No. 2 to manage the mosque together with its endowments of which he was superintendent on behalf of defendant No. 3, then an infant, whom Nidashah had taken as his son and successor and to whom they were to be delivered on his attaining majority. Quarrels arose in 1873 between Nidashah and defendant No. 2, and in 1874 Nidashah revoked the instrument of 1871, but the endowments, which had been handed over to defendant No. 2 under that instrument, remained with him, and there was evidence that he resisted various attempts then and subsequently made to disturb his possession, and that he and the third defendant held the properties up to the date of the suit. It was asserted by the plaintiff that the debt secured by the mortgage sued on was one binding on the institution. The Subordinate Judge recorded a finding on this point in favour of the defendants, and on that ground dismissed the suit. The third and fourth issues, which are referred to by the High Court, were as follows :—

(3) Whether second defendant, since the date of the transfer, has been managing the mosque and its endowments ?

* Appeal No. 28 of 1894.

(4) Whether, at the date of the plaint bond, Nidashah was entitled to mortgage the property therein contained?

The plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Pattabhirama Ayyar and Tyagaraja Ayyar for Appellant.

Rama Rau for Respondents Nos. 2 and 3.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sues for recovery of Rs. 10,528, principal and interest said to be due to him upon a mortgage bond executed on the 19th June 1888 by one Nidashah, deceased, and the first defendant jointly for Rs. 5,000.

The defendants Nos. 2 to 5 have been made parties as being persons in possession of or claiming interest in the village of Ponmanatham mortgaged under the document sued on.

The first defendant admitted the plaintiff's claim. The second and third defendants contested the suit. Seven issues were raised [344] and evidence was adduced by the parties on the various questions in controversy between them.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the bond sued on and the previous transactions which led up to it were unsupported by any consideration, and had been got up collusively in the names of the plaintiff and certain others who are his relations by the plaintiff's seventh witness, Subramania Ayyar, formerly the agent of Nidashah.

The plaintiff appeals and the important question for our determination is whether the plaintiff is entitled to proceed against the mortgaged property. We think that he is not; for, we find that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 held, as pleaded by them, possession of the village in question adversely to Nidashah through whom the plaintiff and the first defendant claim, for more than the statutory period prior to the date of the bond sued upon; and that, consequently, neither Nidashah nor the first defendant had any right at the time the bond was executed to mortgage the village so as to bind it in the hands of the second and third defendants.

Issues Nos. 3 and 4 taken together raise the point under consideration. The Subordinate Judge did not formally record a finding upon the third issue regarding possession. But in dealing with the question whether there was consideration for the bond, he has fully discussed the evidence on the question of possession also, and arrived at the conclusion that the village in dispute was never in the occupation of Nidashah or the first defendant after it was handed over by the former to the second defendant in January 1871 under Exhibit II, and that the second and third defendants have ever since held the property claiming to be entitled thereto under it.

Up to the execution of this document (Exhibit II), Nidashah was admittedly the manager of a Mahomedan religious institution called Thas Brak Thaikal in Tiruvalur. He held the village in question, which forms part of the endowments belonging to that institution, with the rest of the properties attached to the Thaikal. Being very old and infirm Nidashah executed on the 11th January 1871, Exhibit II, to the second defendant, his nephew, authorizing the latter to take possession of the Thaikal and its properties on behalf of the third defendant, who is second defendant's son. The instrument after reciting that Nidashah had taken the third defendant in adoption and had brought him up as his son, provides [345] that the second defendant should assume the management of the Thaikal and its properties on behalf of the third defendant, who was then a minor, receive the rents and profits accruing from the endowments and account for the same to the third defendant when he becomes a major. Under this document the second defendant entered into possession at once, and continued to manage the properties without any dispute for some time. In 1873 quarrels appear to have arisen between Nidashah and the second defendant. The following year Nidashah issued notices purporting to cancel the arrangement made under Exhibit II and stating that he had resumed the management. The second defendant, however, resisted these attempts to interfere with his possession of the Thaikal and its endowments including the village in question. It is admitted on behalf of the plaintiff that the second defendant held possession from 1871 till the end of 1884. But it is urged on his behalf that in 1885, the second defendant voluntarily restored the village to Nidashah who held it till his death in November 1888. The second and third defendants deny this alleged restoration, and contend that they have been in uninterrupted possession not only from 1871 up to 1885, but also subsequently to the present time. The story of surrender by the second and third defendants to Nidashah in 1885 was discredited by the Subordinate Judge and, we think, rightly. From the time quarrels arose in 1873 between Nidashah and the second defendant various judicial proceedings to which it is unnecessary to refer here in detail were set up and conducted at the instigation of Nidashah or his adherents, for the purpose of depriving the second and third defendants of their possession and management of the Thaikal and its properties. It is not denied that the latter succeeded in maintaining their possession for ten or eleven years after the dispute began. No adequate explanation is assigned for their voluntarily giving up the village—which forms the most important portion of the endowments—after having kept it for so long a period. And the reason given for such alleged conduct on their part is that when the third defendant made in 1882 a claim to certain produce of the value of Rs. 30, attached at the instance of a person who had obtained a decree against Nidashah, and such claim was disallowed by the Courts, he and second defendant came to believe that they had lost their rights and consequently gave up possession to Nidashah. This [346] is an incredible story and is opposed to the weight of evidence in the case. There is no doubt that one Annasami Vandayar who held the village under Exhibit VII as lessee of the second and third defendants, enjoyed the village up to July 1884 when the term of that lease expired. In that month the third defendant leased the village to the plaintiff's fifth witness under Exhibit I for nine years. But in January 1885 one Sivasankaram Pillai claiming to be the lessee of Nidashah and the first defendant under Exhibit J, dated May 1884, tried to interfere with the enjoyment of the plaintiff's fifth witness, who, either because he was unwilling to involve himself in such a dispute, or because his brother Narayanasami Vandayar had joined Nidashah (see Exhibit K) relinquished under Exhibit L, dated the 5th January 1885, his (the fifth witness) rights as lessee. Thereupon the third defendant at once granted the village on lease under Exhibit VIII for three years to the defendants' fourth witness and others who were able to overcome the opposition of Nidashah and the first defendant and their agents. The evidence clearly shows that these new lessees enjoyed the village for the whole period of their lease, and that neither Nidashah nor the first defendant nor anybody else on their behalf succeeded in regaining possession. The evidence of the defendants' fourth witness, one of the parties that had possession under Exhibit VIII between 1885 and 1888 is corroborated by that of the karnam and pattamanigar of the village, who further prove that the assessment due to Government was paid by the second and third defendants. This is not met by any reliable evidence on the part of the plaintiff. The testimony of Subramania Ayyar, the plaintiff's seventh witness, who is the plaintiff's relation, is entirely unsupported on this point. He says that Sivasankaram Pillai to whom Exhibit

J was executed enjoyed for one year and Narayanasami Vandayar, his sub-lessee, for the remaining two years of the lease. But neither of them was called by the plaintiff. The evidence of the defendants' fifth witness is equally unsatisfactory.

We have no hesitation therefore in coming to the conclusion that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were in adverse possession of the village in question from 1871, that Nidashah's right thereto was extinguished by lapse of time and neither he nor the first defendant had in 1888 when Exhibit A was executed, any right [347] to mortgage it to the plaintiff: (see Balwant Rao Bishwant Chandra Chor v. Purun Mal Chaube (L. R., 10 I. A., 90), and Jagan Nath Das v. Birbhadra Das (I. L. R., 19 Cal., 776); also Karimshah v. Nattan Bivi (I. L. R., 7 Mad., 417), and Sunkaran v. Krishna (I. L. R., 16 Mad., 456). In this view it is unnecessary for us to consider the contention urged on behalf of the second and third defendants that the debt for which Exhibit A is said to have been executed was incurred for purposes binding upon the institution.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Construction of will—Condition—Request to daughters—Meaning of the words 'have issue.'

The testator, after providing that his two daughters should, after their marriage, remain in his family taking the income of his property without dividing it, and that, if they should disagree, the income only should be shared between them, added the following:—"If both the said daughters shall have issue, they shall divide the said properties equally. Those who have no issue shall, as aforesaid, enjoy the income for their lives, and those who have issue shall enjoy the whole property."

Held, to be the applicable principle, that, where the language of a will is clear and consistent, it shall receive its literal construction, unless there is something in the will itself to suggest a departure from it. Accordingly, the true construction was that the birth of issue was the event on which the absolute gift of a half share to either daughter was to take effect; and that there was no reason for construing the words 'have issue' to mean 'leave issue.' Therefore, under the will, one of the daughters, whose only issue died before her, took a heritable share, and that share did not go over, on her death, to her surviving sister, who had children.

APPEAL from a decree (21st December 1888) of the High Court reversing a decree, 28th March 1887) of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore.

[348] The testator, Guranadha Pillai, made his will on the 19th October 1864 and died on the 29th. He left no son, but left two daughters, the elder Pichayi Ammal, aged seven years, and the younger Sinnattal Ammal, aged three. To them he bequeathed his property, providing also for their mother Sivagangai Ammal. He directed that the daughters should jointly take the income and that, after their marriage, the share of either one of them dying without issue should go over to her sister, the latter having issue. The elder was married in 1868, the younger in 1869. In 1885 the younger died. The elder brought this suit on the 29th September 1885 against Subbaraya, her late sister's husband, joining with him Sivagangai Ammal, claiming her sister's moiety as having devolved upon herself.

The principal questions now raised were : whether the will required that a daughter, unless her share on her death was to pass to her surviving sister, if the latter had a child, should not only have had, but should have left issue ; and whether Sinnattal Ammal had, in fact, ever had issue. Subbaraya having died in 1889 Sivakami, his widow, was brought on to the record ; and, on the death of Pichayi Ammal in 1892, the suit was revived by her representatives. The material parts of the will, as well as all the facts of the case, are stated in the Lordships' judgment.

In 1877 an arrangement for a partition was entered into by Sivagangai, her daughters and their husbands. The land forming the estate was divided, the portions to be assigned to each daughter were ascertained, and agreements were drawn up. Separate documents, embodying this arrangement were executed by Sivagangai and the sisters. Each daughter, with her husband, was aware that her mother had executed an agreement to the other, but was not a party to it.

It was asserted, on behalf of the respondent, that, at the time of this arrangement, Sinnattal Ammal had a son who was then a few months old, and who died soon after. Also, that she had previously had a child, which lived only a few days, and that she gave birth to a third child, which died in a few days, its mother also dying.

The issues in effect were :—whether Sinnattal Ammal, who admittedly died childless, was entitled, by reason of her having had issue, which predeceased her, to an absolute interest in her moiety, so that this would pass to her husband on her death. Had she at any time a living child ? Did the plaintiff, by the agreement [349] executed by her to her mother on the 13th June 1877, abandon any right she had under her father's will ?

The first Court held that Guranadha's will was entitled to full operation, and was not affected by the agreements in June, 1877 ; that Sinnattal had not a living child at the time of the execution of the agreements in June 1877 ; and that the defendants' witnesses, who had alleged that she then had living issue, were not credible. The Subordinate Judge specially adverted to the fact that neither of those agreements stated that she then had a son, although the existence of such issue was a fact most material as a cause of their coming to an agreement in the matter in hand, and was the cause of the partition being effected by those agreements. He decreed the claim.

The High Court (KERNAN and WILKINSON, JJ.) were of opinion that the principal fact to be decided was whether Subbaraya's wife Sinnattal ever bore a living child.

The evidence of the mother of the wife was clear that her deceased daughter had not only one child, but certainly two,* and perhaps three. This was supported by witnesses who had opportunities of knowing the facts. Contrasting the evidence for the plaintiff with that for the defendant, the Judges arrived at the conclusion that the wife had, at all events, two children born alive. The plaintiff had admitted that, after the execution of the agreement in June 1877, Sivagangai Ammal, her mother, gave over to her her moiety of lands in that month; and, after this partition, the sisters were in possession of their shares. This vested an absolute estate in each of the sisters in no way contrary to what was contemplated by the will of their father. The testator had intended that there should be no partition so long as one, or both, of the daughters had no issue, but that, in case of both daughters having issue, they should take his property in equal shares.

This was what had taken place. Up to 1877 the parties lived in harmony; then, having children, and being unable to agree, both daughters applied to their mother, who, since the death of the testator in 1864, had been in possession of the property, to give them their shares. She did so, retaining with their consent, for her own life time, three and odd velis of land for her maintenance. It could not be argued that the plaintiff, as her sister had died without making any disposition of her property, succeeded as the heir of her father. There was no authority to show that a gift to [350] an unmarried daughter, undisposed of, went back to her father's heirs. It was to be regarded as her stridhanam and descended as stridhanam. That being so, the plaintiff was not the heir, but the husband of her sister, Sinnattal Ammal, was the heir. The judgment of the first Court was reversed, and the suit was dismissed.

The representatives of Pichayi Ammal having appealed:

Mr. R. V. Doyne for the Appellant.—The true construction was that the testator intended that, in the event of a daughter dying leaving no issue, her surviving sister having issue should take the whole estate. The conditions in the will remained in force notwithstanding the agreement of 13th June 1877; no agreement having effect to get rid of the condition. The will should have been construed with regard to those rights, according to Hindu law, which a testator must be understood to have in contemplation. He referred to Moulvie Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (L. R., 2 I. A. 7), and to Hirabhai v. Lakshmibai (I. L. R., 11. Bom., 69; on appeal, ib., p. 573.) The father apparently hoped that the sisters would remain joint until the death of one; he intended that, on the death of either leaving issue, her issue should succeed to their mother's interest in his property; and that, if either should die without leaving issue, the survivor, if she had issue, should take the whole estate. Till the death of either, the estate was to continue in the testator's name. The argument came to this that by the expression 'have issue,' the testator meant 'leave issue.' If, however, the Appellate Court below had been right in its construction of the testator's language, and had rightly held that the birth of a child conferred on the mother an absolute interest in one-half of the estate, the first Court had still been right in finding that it had not been established that Sinnattal Ammal ever had a living child. The High Court had been wrong in finding this fact in favour of the defendant, and the judgment should be reversed.

Mr. J. D. Mayne for the Respondent.—The evidence established that Sinnattal, wife of Gurusami Pillai, at the time when the agreement and the partition were made in 1877, had already then had issue. The contingency had happened under which she has taken absolutely, and she and her sister were in a position, in regard to their father's will, which enabled them to act upon what had [351] taken place. To proceed as they did was in accordance with the testator's provisions; and when the partition had been acted upon, the clause in the will had no effective operation to make the share of either daughter, both of them having had issue, and the estates in both having become absolute, go over upon the decease of either. Doubtless, this depended on the fact that there had been issue born alive; the decision, however, of the High Court was fully borne out by the evidence that Sinnattal had one, or more, living children, who lived but a short time. The words in the will relating to the daughters' interests were to be taken in their literal sense. According to the will, survivorship between the sisters was to result from the state of things referred to therein, viz., where the one sister might have had issue and the other not. That state of things had not arisen when the death of Sinnattal occurred; both had had issue; there was nothing to occasion survivorship between the sisters, and the descent of the property was regulated by the Hindu law of inheritance, which gave it to the husband. Therefore the judgment of the first Court had been rightly reversed.

Mr. R. V. Doyle replied.

Their Lordships' judgment was, afterwards on the 30th March, delivered by Lord Hobhouse.

Judgment.—This is a family dispute, arising out of the will of Gurunadha Pillai, which was made on the 19th October 1864. The plaintiff, who is now represented by the appellants, was the testator's elder daughter Pichayi. The principal defendant, now represented by the respondent, was the husband of the testator's younger daughter Sinnattal.

By his will the testator states that he is dangerously ill, and has no male issue, but has two daughters, Pichayi, aged seven years, and Sinnattal, aged three, born of his fourth wife Sivagangai; and that by means of this will he has given away his estate, which he describes, to the said two daughters. Then occur the following sentences:—

"The aforesaid two daughters after their marriage shall with their husbands remain in this family and enjoy as one family the income of the aforesaid properties without division and without alienating by sale, etc."

"If in so doing there should be disagreement between them, the income thereof minus the just expenses, shall be enjoyed by them both in equal shares. If both the said daughters have issue, they [352] shall divide the said properties equally. Those who have no issue shall as aforesaid enjoy the income for their lives, and those who have issue shall enjoy the whole property. Till then the miras shall continue in my name. In case your mother and you disagree and live separately you shall pay 21 kalams of paddy and 7 rupees a year for her maintenance."

He further provided that if he should recover and get a male child, the entire property should go to that child. He died, however, a few days afterwards, and there has been no male child born.

Pichayi married and had issue, the present appellants, and Sinnattal also married one Subbaraya, and died on the 20th January 1885. Whether or no she had a child is matter of dispute. She had none living at the time of her death.

In the year 1872 there was litigation between Pichayi's husband purporting to sue as her guardian, and Sivagangai, which was ended by an agreement of the 2nd October of that year. It was agreed that the entire family property should remain, as it had been, in the management of Sivagangai, the family living together as one family. But in case they could not agree to live together, then Pichayi, being entitled under the will to one-half of the property, was to receive from Sivagangai half the net income of the immovables, without making division of them; and each was to take half the movables and pay half the debts.

Disagreements soon arose, and in June 1877 two deeds were executed by which Sivagangai agreed, first with one of her daughters and then with the other, upon a partition of the property.

The first deed (marked No. I) bears date the 11th June 1877. It is expressed to be made between Sivagangai, Sinnattal, and Subbaraya. It refers to the will of Gurunadha and states the joint enjoyment of his property by the three parties. Then, stating that disagreement has arisen, it provides a maintenance for Sivagangai, and subject thereto allots a moiety of the estate for the half share of Sinnattal and Subbaraya. The lands so allotted which were then registered in Sivagangai's name are to be registered in Subbaraya's name. And he and his wife undertake to bear a moiety of the family debts.

The second deed marked as Exhibit B bears date the 13th June 1877. It is expressed to be made between Sivagangai and [353] Pichayi. It refers to the will of Gurunadha, and states that the two parties have been living together as one family in conformity with the will and with the agreement of the 2nd October 1872. Then, stating that disagreements had arisen, the deed goes on to provide for Sivagangai's maintenance, and to allot to Pichayi her moiety of the property and the charges in a way corresponding in substance to the partition with Sinnattal. This deed, however, differs in expression and arrangement from No. I, and it contains one passage which is not found in No. I, and which has been the subject of a great deal of comment. Immediately after declaring Pichayi's reversionary right to a moiety of the lands allotted for Sivagangai's maintenance, and her right to a moiety of the lands and other things held in common (apparently a repetition and quite superfluous) the deed proceeds as follows :—"In continuing to enjoy (as aforesaid), those who have no issue shall in conformity with the terms of the will left by the said Gurunadha Pillai remain in enjoyment so long as they live and those who have issue shall enjoy the whole property inclusive of the property of those that are issueless."

Why the family should have chosen to effect their partition by the circuitous method of treating each daughter in turn as if she and her mother were joint owners, is not explained. There can be no doubt that they intended a partition binding on the two daughters. The stipulated mutations of names were duly effected, and the benefits of the family estate were received in moieties from that time to the institution of this suit. It is not now disputed by either party that the two deeds embodied one family arrangement. The peculiar position taken by Sivagangai does not affect the validity of the transaction as between the others, though it probably accounts for differences of expression in the two deeds.

In September 1885 Pichayi brought the present suit. She states the will as providing that "I and my said sister should, till we get issue" enjoy the property in moieties "and that if either of us die without issue" the other shall take the whole." She then states that Sinnattal "died without issue," and she claims the estate accordingly.

In his written statement Subbaraya rests his title on the partition of 1877. He introduces the matter thus :—"At the time when the two daughters of Gurunadha Pillai mentioned in the plaint had issues and were living together as one family it was arranged [354] etc., etc." Sivagangai also put in a written statement to the same effect.

Now it is a remarkable thing that if the story of Sinnattal having a child was an invention after her death, it should have been introduced in this casual and indirect way by her husband and her mother, and that the plaintiff should not at once have denounced it as a fraud and claimed to have it tried.

But what happened was that directly after the defendants' statements were filed, the first hearing for settlement of issues took place, and that there is no issue directed as to the birth of a child. When the parties came to put in their evidence, the plaintiff asserted that Sinnattal never had a child born alive; and she brought an uncle of Sivagangai and some residents in the village to say the same thing. On the other hand, Sivagangai, who was called by the plaintiff, adhered very clearly to her statement that Sinnattal had children. Subbaraya stated that at the time of partition he had a son, and a number of witnesses were called to support them. On that evidence the case came to trial.

The Subordinate Judge held that unless the partition had been made in accordance with the will it would not have the effect of barring the plaintiff's right to recover. That view, the correctness of which has not been impugned in the High Court or here, brought the case to turn on the question whether the events had happened in which the will directed a partition; which, as the plaintiff's children were living, was in effect the question whether or no Sinnattal had a child. The Subordinate Judge found that she never had any.

His mind was very strongly impressed by the terms of the partition-deeds. If it were true that Sinnattal had a child, it must, he says, have been mentioned in the deeds as the cause of the partition, whereas disagreement is the cause mentioned; and it is impossible, on the same supposition, to account for the insertion in Exhibit B of the clause above quoted which expresses a contingent gift to the daughter who has issue. In the face of this written evidence he disbelieves the whole of the defendants' oral evidence. He does not so much as mention the evidence of Sivagangai or Subbaraya, nor indeed that of the plaintiff, and he hardly discusses the other witnesses.

The High Court took a different view. They considered the evidence of Sivagangai to be of paramount importance. She and [353] the plaintiff and Subbaraya are the only persons of whom it may be affirmed with certainty that they knew the truth; and the High Court considered that Sivagangai was free from the bias of pecuniary interest, and, according to all appearance, of all other bias or unfairness. Mr. Justice WILKINSON also points out that her evidence is supported by the statements of other persons who were in a position to know the facts.

As to the passages in the partition-deeds which so strongly affected the mind of the Subordinate Judge, the learned Judges discuss them, not with reference to their bearing on the disputed question of Sinnattal's children, but apparently with reference to other arguments as to the effect of the partition which have not been brought before their Lordships. Their conclusion is that the partition-deeds, followed as they were by mutation of names, possession, and continued enjoyment, vested an absolute estate in each of the sisters, such as was contemplated by Gurunadha's will.

On the question of fact their Lordships have to express agreement with the High Court. It appears to them that the Subordinate Judge exaggerates the effect due to the partition-deeds. It is fair matter of observation that both deeds are silent about the birth of children to either sister, and mention disagreement as the cause of partition. But it does not go very far. There was disagreement in fact, and it gave a motive for separating at that time. Both the will and the deed of October 1872 mention disagreement as a reason for partition of a less complete kind, viz., of the net income; but not as a reason for that complete partition of the corpus which was actually intended, and actually effected so far as the parties had power. It would have been more obvious, and more workmanlike, to state the birth of children and the directions of the will as the ground of partition; but the omission to do so is hardly a reason for rejecting a body of positive testimony.

With respect to the passage in Exhibit B which repeats the will, it is certainly difficult to say why it should be there. Whether it should be entirely connected with the property allotted for Sivagangai's maintenance, as Mr. Justice KERNAN thinks; whether the plaintiff had a notion that the gift-over turned on the contingency of issue living at the death, as seems to be indicated by her plaint; or some vaguer notion that she might somehow gain some advantage by putting into her deed what is not to be found in No. I; is all [356] guess-work. At best the presence of the clause only raises some probability in her favour.

It should also be remembered that there is a probability in the other direction, arising from the proceedings in the suit before observed on, that the plaintiff used language compatible with the birth of children who died in Sinnattal's lifetime as well as with the entire childlessness; that the defendants stated the birth of children incidentally, as they might have stated any undisputed matter; and that the plaintiff did not treat the statement as she would have been likely to treat a falsehood called up to oppose her. It would be easy to make too much of such a matter, just as too much has been made of the statements in the partition-deeds. It seems to their Lordships that the High Court have been right in fixing their attention on the positive testimony to the exclusion of mere conjectural matter.

That testimony preponderates largely in favour of the defendants. Their Lordships have referred to the opinion of the High Court upon the evidence of Sivagangai, which they think must be taken with the qualification that she is not wholly free from pecuniary interest, because the amount of her maintenance might be affected by the suit. But their Lordships have the opinion of the High Court as to her apparent fairness, and no adverse opinion from the Subordinate Judge who examined her. She is supported by three household servants of the defendants against whose testimony the Subordinate Judge says nothing except that they are servants. But in such a matter as the birth of a child in the house servants are persons having means of knowledge; and to pass over their evidence not otherwise impeached, as worth nothing, is somewhat too sweeping. The defendants' eighth witness, Narayana Pillai, gave his evidence, as the Subordinate Judge states, so as to allow no room for unfavourable observations. He was a neighbour and a friend of the family, and he deposed to having seen Sinnattal's child several times at the house of Sivagangai and at the house of one Chidambara Pillai, another neighbour and friend, who was ill and could not attend the Court. The defendants' first witness attested Exhibit B and on that occasion he says that Sinnattal's child was shown to him by the grandmother. On this witness the Subordinate Judge has no remark to make except that his opportunities for knowledge have not been accounted for. But his opportunity was going to the family house to attest Exhibit B.

[357] It has been observed that the Subordinate Judge does not so much as mention the evidence of the plaintiff or that of either of the defendants. Probably he thought that they were all tainted by self-interest. But if they are to be set aside, what remains? On the defendants' side, several persons, with means of knowledge, affirming a definite fact; on the plaintiff's side, four witnesses who are all outside the household, of whom only one is related to the family, who speak to a negative, and that very loosely, since they take on themselves to deny, not only the birth of a child, but Sinnattal's pregnancy, of which they could know nothing. It is evident that the Subordinate Judge has not balanced the oral evidence, but has dismissed it in a summary way by reason of the excessive effect which he has ascribed to the language of the partition-deeds.

It remains to construe the will with reference to the fact that both daughters had issue. The High Court have held that on the birth of children to both, the will gave them absolute interests in severalty. The Subordinate Judge apparently acted on the same view, though on his view of the facts, it was not necessary to decide the point. Mr. Doyne contended first that the testator's intention was to let the estate devolve as joint family property. That however is manifestly inconsistent with the position assigned to his widow, and with the gift first of the income and afterwards of the property to his daughters in moieties. Then Mr. Doyne contended that the contingency on which the absolute gift is made must be taken to be not the birth of issue, but having issue who survive the parent.

Their Lordships must take the will as it stands in the English translation. Indeed it is not suggested, except as an argument ad ignorantiam, that the plaintiff's case would be strengthened if they could have before them, and could be made to understand, the Tamil original. It is clear that great pains have been taken to ensure accuracy, because the sentence relating to joint enjoyment has been re-translated, though it is difficult to perceive any substantial difference between the two translations. And their Lordships observe that the Subordinate Judge, who would know the Tamil language, states the critical terms in a way even less open to the suggested modification than the term "have issue." He says that if both the daughters "beget issues" the property is to be [338] divided; and again that it is not to be divided until they "beget issues."

Taking the words "having issue," as the true words, there can be no dispute as to their literal meaning in any of the three contexts in which they occur. In the first two the testator contemplates the continued existence of those who "have issue," and in the second it is almost impossible to construe the words as "leave issue." There is absolutely nothing on the face of the will to suggest any secondary meaning. The words "have issue" are often read as meaning "leave issue," but not without some reason derivable from the will. Here the reason suggested is that their Lordships are construing a Hindu will, and that a Hindu testator could not have meant that if his daughter had a child who lived for a day, she should take the estate as stridhan and pass it to her husband. That is pure conjecture and quite inadmissible to control the clear expressions of the will. Even as conjecture, it fails. How can their Lordships tell that this Hindu gentleman did not feel the simple distinction, which is widely felt, between a barren woman and one who bears a child? Or how can they tell that any conjectural emendation would have pleased him better? Mr. Doyne's suggestion is made to suit the events which have happened; but it would be easy to show that on his hypothesis another set of events would produce consequences just as untoward. Fortunately their Lordships are precluded from all this guessing by the sound principle of construction that where the language of a will is clear and consistent, it shall receive its literal construction unless there is something in the will itself to suggest departure from it. The result is that in their Lordships' judgment the view of the High Court is right, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs. They will humbly advise Her Majesty accordingly.

Appeal dismissed.
